

3 1761 11649189 5

Canada. Parliament. House of Commons. Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections Limits of proceedings
and evidence

1968/69 no 1-12

1969/70 no 1-21

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from University of Toronto

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

PROCEEDINGS

No. 1

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1968

ORGANIZATION

Including

APPENDIX A

The items listed in the Revised Main Estimates for 1968-69, relating to the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner.

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1968

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme¹

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Aiken,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
Downey,
Fortin,
Howard (Skeena),

MacGuigan,
Marceau,
Mazankowski,
Peddle,
Portelance,
Prud'homme,

Richard,
Ritchie,
Ryan,
Sullivan,
Trudel,
Valade—20.

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,

Clerk of the Committee.

¹ Mr. Laflamme replaced Mr. Kaplan on October 16, 1968.

HOUSE OF COMMONS
TUESDAY, October 8, 1968.

Resolved,—That the following Members do compose the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Messrs.

Aiken,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
Downey,
Fortin,
Howard (Skeena),
Jerome,

Kaplan,
MacGuigan,
Marceau,
Mazankowski,
Peddle,
Portelance,
Prud'homme,

Richard,
Ritchie,
Ryan,
Sullivan,
Trudel,
Valade—(20).

WEDNESDAY, October 16, 1968.

Ordered,—That the name of Mr. Laflamme be substituted for that of Mr. Kaplan on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, October 16, 1968.

Ordered,—That, saving always the powers of the Committee of Supply in relation to the voting of public moneys, the items listed in the Revised Main Estimates for 1968-69, relating to the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner, be withdrawn from the Committee of Supply and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, October 18, 1968.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of Bill C-16, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Students Franchise), be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, October 24, 1968

(1)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 10.38 a.m., for organization purposes.

Members present: Messrs. Cafik, Fortin, Laflamme, MacGuigan, Marceau, Mazankowski, Portelance, Richard, Ryan, Sullivan, Trudel, Valade (12).

The Clerk of the Committee attending and having called for nominations, Mr. Ryan moved, seconded by Mr. Marceau, and Resolved,—That Mr. Laflamme be the Chairman of the Committee.

The Clerk of the Committee, having declared Mr. Laflamme duly elected Chairman, requested him to take the Chair. Mr. Laflamme took the Chair and thanked the members of the Committee for the honour bestowed upon him.

Moved by Mr. Portelance, seconded by Mr. Cafik, and Resolved,—That Mr. Jerome be elected Vice-Chairman.

Moved by Mr. Ryan, seconded by Mr. Richard, and Resolved,—That the Committee print 750 copies in English and 350 copies in French of its Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Moved by Mr. Ryan, seconded by Mr. Cafik, and Resolved,—That a Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure be comprised of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and five other members appointed by the Chairman after consultation with the Whips of the different parties.

Moved by Mr. Marceau, seconded by Mr. Trudel, and

Resolved,—That the items listed in the Revised Main Estimates 1968-69 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner referred to the Committee on October 16, 1968, be printed as an Appendix to the Committee's Proceedings. (See Appendix A)

The question of obtaining authority to sit while the House is sitting was referred to the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure.

At 10.55 a.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee

APPENDIX "A"

SECRETARY OF STATE

REVISED ESTIMATES, 1968-69

No. of Vote	Service	1968-69	1967-68	Change
				Increase	Decrease
		$	$	$	$
	F—OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER
(S)	Expenses of elections including the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer (Details, page 451)...	14,262,680	121,000	14,141,680
45	Salaries and Expenses of Office (Details, page 451).....	165,500	140,900	24,600
		14,428,180	261,900	14,166,280
	SUMMARY
	To be voted.....	165,500	140,900	24,600
	Authorized by Statute.....	14,262,680	121,000	14,141,680
		14,428,180	261,900	14,166,280

Positions (man-years)		Details of Services	Amount
1968-69	1967-68		1968-69	1967-68
		F—OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER	$	$
		Approximate Value of Major Services not included in these Estimates
		Accommodation (provided by the Department of Public Works).....	75,400	71,400
		Accounting and cheque issue services (Comptroller of the Treasury).....	19,800	16,200
		Contributions to Canada Pension Plan Account and Quebec Pension Plan Account (Treasury Board)....	2,200	2,000
		Contributions to Superannuation Account (Treasury Board).....	13,200	11,000
		Employee surgical-medical insurance premiums (Treasury Board).....	500	1,400
		Employee compensation payments (Department of Labour).....	2,300	1,100
		Carrying of franked mail (Post Office Department).....	5,300	4,800
			118,700	107,900
		Statutory—Expenses of Elections including the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer
1 (1)	1 (1)	SALARY OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER (CHAP. 39, STATUTES OF 1960).....(1)	22,680	21,000
		EXPENSES OF ELECTIONS (CHAP. 39, STATUTES OF 1960) .. (12)	14,240,000	100,000
		Total, Statutory Item.....	14,262,680	121,000
		Expenditure
		1965-66..... $ 12,725,443
		1966-67..... 734,802
		1967-68 (estimated)..... 602,000
		Vote 45—Salaries and Expenses of Office
		Salaried Positions:
		Administrative and Foreign Service:
2	1	($10,000-$12,000)
2	3	($ 8,000-$10,000)
1	1	($ 6,000-$ 8,000)
		Technical, Operational and Service:
1	1	($ 6,000-$ 8,000)
5	3	($ 4,000-$ 6,000)

Positions (man-years)		Details of Services	Amount
1968-69	1967-68		1968-69	1967-68
			$	$
		F—OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER (Continued)
		Vote 45 (Continued)
		Salaried Positions: (Continued)
		Administrative Support:
		($ 6,000-$ 8,000)
2	2
6	5	($ 4,000-$ 6,000)
2	2	(Under $ 4,000)
21	18
(21)	(18)	Continuing Establishment.....	129,800	117,700
(3)		Casuals and Others.....	8,900
(24)	(18)	Salaries and Wages.....(1)	138,700	117,700
		Travelling Expenses.....(2)	3,500	1,200
		Freight, Express and Cartage.....(2)	100	100
		Postage.....(2)	300	200
		Telephones and Telegrams.....(2)	2,900	2,900
		Commissionaire Services.....(4)		11,900
		Office Stationery, Supplies and Equipment.....(7)	4,300	2,000
		Furniture and Furnishings.....(9)	14,500	3,800
		Sundries.....(12)	1,200	1,100
			165,500	140,900
		Expenditure
		1965-66.....$ 107,500
		1966-67.....165,867
		1967-68 (estimated).....150,300

De- tails page		Estab- lishment 1968-69	1967-68		1966-67
			Estab- lishment	Strength (Oct. 1, 1967)	Estab- lishment	Strength (Oct. 1, 1966)
		Man-Years	Man-Years	(Numbers)	Man-Years	(Numbers)
451	Chief Electoral Officer.....	25	22	(22)	18	(18)

No. of Vote	Service	1968-69	1967-68	Change
				Increase	Decrease
		$	$	$	$
	N—OFFICE OF THE REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER
(S)	Salary of the Representation Commissioner (Details, page 466).....	27,000	25,000	2,000
(S)	Expenses of Representation Commission (De- tails, page 466).....	98,000	135,000	37,000
		125,000	160,000	35,000

Positions (man-years)		Details of Services	Amount
1968-69	1967-68		1968-69	1967-68
			$	$
		N—OFFICE OF THE REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER
		Approximate Value of Major Services not Included in these Estimates
		Accommodation (provided by the Department of Public Works).....	8,200	11,100
		Accounting and cheque issue services (Comptroller of the Treasury).....	3,300	3,600
		Contributions to Superannuation Account (Treasury Board).....	9,600	9,200
		Contributions to Canada Pension Plan Account and Quebec Pension Plan Account (Treasury Board)....	1,300	900
		Employee surgical-medical insurance premiums (Treasury Board).....	100	300
			22,500	25,100
1 (1)	1 (1)	Statutory—Salary of the Representation Commissioner (Chapter 40, Statutes of 1963, as amended)..... (1)	27,000	25,000
		Statutory—Expenses of Representation Commission (Chapter 40, Statutes of 1963)
		Salaried positions:
		Administrative and Foreign Service:
		($14,000-$16,000)
1	1	($12,000-$14,000)
1	1	($10,000-$12,000)
1	1	($6,000-$8,000)
		Administrative Support:
3	3	($6,000-$8,000)
5	8	($4,000-$6,000)
	2	(Under $4,000)
11 (11)	16 (16)	Salaries..... (1)	82,500	98,200
		Travelling Expenses..... (2)	2,000	12,000
		Freight, Express, Cartage and Postage..... (2)	150	150
		Telephones and Telegrams..... (2)	2,050	2,050
		Professional Services..... (4)	2,000	7,500
		Office Stationery, Supplies and Equipment..... (7)	3,000	3,000
		Materials and Supplies..... (7)	6,200	12,000
		Sundries..... (12)	100	100
			98,000	135,000

De- tails page		Estab- lishment 1968-69	1967-68		1966-67
			Estab- lishment	Strength (Oct. 1, 1967)	Estab- lishment	Strength (Oct. 1, 1966)
			Man-Years	(Numbers)	Man-Years	(Numbers)
466	Representation Commissioner.	12	17	(12)	17	(13)

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1968

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 2

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1968

The items listed in the Revised Main Estimates for 1968-69, relating to the Chief Electoral Officer

WITNESS:

Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1968

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Aiken,	Marceau,	Ritchie,
¹ Brewin,	Mazankowski,	² Rose,
Cafik,	Peddle,	Ryan,
Downey,	Portelance,	Sullivan,
Fortin,	Prud'homme,	Trudel,
MacGuigan,	Richard,	Valade—20.

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

¹ Mr. Brewin replaced Mr. Howard (Skeena) on October 24, 1968.

² Mr. Rose replaced Mr. Benjamin on October 28, 1968.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

THURSDAY, October 24, 1968.

Ordered,—That the name of Mr. Brewin be substituted for that of Mr. Howard (Skeena) on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, October 28, 1968.

Ordered,—That the name of Mr. Rose be substituted for that of Mr. Benjamin on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

REPORTS TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be authorized to sit while the House is sitting.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

(Presented October 31, 1968)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of Wednesday October 16, 1968, your Committee has considered the items listed in the Revised Main Estimates for 1968-69 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Your Committee commends them to the House.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues No. 1 and 2) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

(Presented October 31, 1968)

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, October 31, 1968
(2)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 10.08 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Cafik, Jerome, Laflamme, MacGuigan, Mazankowski, Peddle, Portelance, Richard, Rose, Sullivan, Trudel, Valade—(12).

Also present: Messrs. Mather, Peters.

In attendance: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer; Mr. R. M. Favelle, Chief Examiner of Elections.

Moved by Mr. MacGuigan and

Resolved,—That the Committee seek the permission to sit during sittings of the House.

Moved by Mr. MacGuigan and

Resolved,—That a message be conveyed to the Committee on Procedure of the House asking that Committee to investigate the question of providing sufficient interpreters to satisfy the requirements of all committee meetings.

Item I of the Chief Electoral Officer's revised budget for 1968-69 having been called and a copy of the Chief Electoral Officer's Report dated September 11, 1968 being tabled, members of the Committee questioned the witness.

The Chief Electoral Officer was requested to provide a breakdown of election costs at a later date.

The Committee agreed to report and commend the Revised Estimates 1968-69 for the Chief Electoral Officer to the House.

At noon, the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, Oct. 31, 1968

• 1010

The Chairman: At the start I would like to mention that we have had the co-ordinating meeting of the different committees. It has been decided that we might sit during the evenings next week, and for this we will need a motion from any one of you. We need a motion to sit while the House is sitting. During the Private Members' hour, maybe.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Valade: Before submitting this proposal, I feel the Committee should give some thought, especially after the meeting of the committee chairmen, to the possibility of an agreement about early morning sessions. I have no objections to evening sittings but they do create problems. It means a twelve or thirteen-hour working day and I wonder if we can work effectively if we have evening sittings in addition to a normal day's work in other committees, in the House and in our offices.

The Chairman: Mr. Valade, at the co-ordinating committee meeting, which included members from all parties, the External Affairs Committee, the Broadcasting Committee, the Privileges and Elections Committee and even the Finance committee, it was found necessary that some committees agree to evening sessions to make it possible to sit at all. I take it then that you have no objections to evening sittings? It was also expected, I think, that most members would limit themselves to membership in two committees.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, three committees of which I am a member sit at intervals of half an hour in the morning, so there is obviously a conflict here. However, I do not want to object formally, but I wonder if the committee would give my suggestion some serious thought.

[English]

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Mather: I do not have any interpretation here.

Mr. Cafik: That is correct. There is none.

Mr. Richard: Is it the intention of the Committee to sit all the time in the evening, and never during the day? All the meetings will be in the evening?

The Chairman: No. Yesterday the co-ordinating meeting decided to correct the situation you found yourself in this morning, Mr. Valade, having to attend two different committees at the same time. This is to correct the situation. And in accepting the schedule proposed by the co-ordinating meeting, we would sit during the evenings next week, and with sitting during that time we will not have two different meetings at the same time.

Mr. Valade: Do you mean that this will be only a temporary arrangement?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Cafik: Do you need a motion on the floor in order to allow us to sit while the House is sitting? Is this the object at the present moment?

The Chairman: Yes. This is the object. We need a motion from this Committee to put the motion before the House, to ask its permission to sit while the House is sitting.

See Minutes of Proceedings.

• 1015

The Chairman: Have you gentlemen received this report from Mr. Hamel? Do you have a copy of this report in your hands? We have here with us today Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, who is the Chief Electoral Officer. With him is Mr. Fauvell, and Mr. Fournier. Mr. Fauvell is the Accountant for the Office.

We deeply regret that this morning we do not have interpretation here.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, why do we not have interpretation?

The Chairman: This is what I tried to find out myself. It is lack of personnel, maybe.

Mr. MacGuigan: It seems to me it shows lack of respect for this Committee on the part of those who are administering this.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I understand that another committee had that problem the other day—I forget which committee it was—and they passed a motion referring the problem to the Committee on Procedure of the House to rectify the situation as soon as possible, which I think is a very sensible idea, I imagine the problem is physical, that there are perhaps not that many interpreters available, but it is essential. I think we should have interpretation.

The Chairman: It is up to you to decide if we accept to go on without interpretation.

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, what language are we going to speak?

The Chairman: Both, I think.

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Chairman, most of us here are French-speaking but understand English. There is no problem.

The Chairman: Well, I personally agree with every one of you that we should have, and we must have interpretation in our deliberations. The only thing we will have to decide—I will try to find out myself—is how it happened that we did not have any, and to make sure that it is not going to happen again. But for the time-being and for this meeting, if there are any objections to continuing our deliberations without interpretation, then we will just adjourn this meeting. But if we can go on this way...

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, I think that if somebody will repeat in English what they said in French, I think it will be fine, but otherwise...

Mr. Mather: I would agree to proceed as best we can, Mr. Chairman, but it might be a point in line with what I have said earlier that another committee faced the same problem and they took the action of referring the matter to the Committee on Procedure to urge them to rectify this. It may add strength to that representation if our Committee were to do the same thing.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, on that point, we sensed that this was developing when we started because I spoke French to my good friend here Barry Mather who claimed that there was no translation and could not understand what I was saying. I do not mind speaking English because I can do it, but there are some technical expressions sometimes and technical words which are difficult to translate into French, or into English. This is the difficulty. I do not mind going on myself, but I assure the Committee that I intend to speak in French sometimes. If this creates a problem for other members...

Mr. Mather: It seems to me that the thing to do is to try to rectify the present problem rather than stop the meeting. And I would move, if I had a seconder, that this committee urges the Committee on Procedure of the House to take up the matter of proper provision of interpretation to all the committees.

The Chairman: This is, I think, a good suggestion. We were not advised that we were not going to have interpretation this morning. We were only advised when we asked where the interpreter was. He was not here. I think we should try to carry on, but if there are objections or if there is something that anyone has to object to, we will adjourn.

• 1020

Mr. Mather: Would you accept the motion which I made?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Valade: Just on that point, I see that there is a report from the Chief Electoral Officer here. Is this report going to be read in French? I have a French copy. Is it going to be read in French or in English?

The Chairman: Well, I had it in both languages.

Mr. Valade: Yes, I know, but is it going to be read by the Chair or by Mr. Hamel in French or in English? I want to follow it one way or another. If it is read in French, those members who only speak English may have difficulty in following it. If it is read in English, we can follow it in French.

Mr. Trudel: Do you intend to table the report, Mr. Chairman, or just read it?

An hon. Member: This will answer Mr. Valade's question.

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Valade, you must have received a French and an English copy.

Mr. Valade: I have a French report. I am sorry, I have a—

The Chairman: You have the English copy as well?

Mr. Valade: No, I am just asking if the report is going to be read or tabled?

The Chairman: This report has already been tabled in the House and referred to this Committee for consideration. This is the reason we have Mr. Hamel here. If you have any questions to put to him with regard to the matters raised by this report, he is here to give all the information he can.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, if I may say so, I think we should go ahead with this meeting. I think it would be very difficult to come back to another meeting and have the same situation.

The Chairman: I agree.

Mr. Richard: I think we should go ahead. I do not think we would have the same situation another time.

Mr. Mather: Then the motion still stands to refer this to the Parliamentary Committee on Procedure of the House. To try to rectify the situation for all committees as soon as possible. Is there a question on the motion?

The Chairman: This is a motion and I think it has already been seconded. Is anyone opposed to this motion?

Mr. Mather: It has been moved and seconded. It is a motion and I think we should have a vote on it.

The Chairman: We will have representations made to the Committee on Procedure of the House.

Mr. Hamel, do you have a statement to make?

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. No, I do not have any statement. I am here to answer any questions you may wish to ask me. As the Chairman said, this report was tabled in the House at the beginning of this session, together with the report of the representation commissioner. So, I am at your disposal.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Hamel, I noticed in a couple of places in your report you indicated that you will be submitting further commentary later on about some of the aspects of the election, and that your detailed report will be finalized sometime in March of next year. Will your further commentary on the last election come forward at that time or are you anticipating that you will be submitting something between now and then?

Mr. Hamel: There are two matters here. First of all, the report, which should be ready by March, is what we call the poll-by-poll report of the election. This is the report I have to submit after each election pursuant to Section 58 of the Act. This is being prepared and I understand that part of it is now with the printer. As I say, it should come out, about March. This is still our target date.

Mr. Jerome: I believe that is section 56.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct. As I say, this will be ready in March. This is the big blue book.

The second thing I refer to here is a series of amendments to the Canada Elections Act. As you know, under the Act I am expected to make recommendations to Parliament for the better administration of the Act.

• 1025

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: You may recall that in 1963 the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections considered a series of amendments, which were never enacted because of the dissolution of Parliament before they were actually considered by the House. Since then we have discovered there are a few other amendments which we feel should be submitted to you for the better administration of the Act. This is something else we are presently working on and it will be ready whenever the Committee decides to consider amendments to the Canada Elections act.

Mr. Jerome: So that your material is virtually ready at any time given reasonable notice?

Mr. Hamel: Oh, yes.

Mr. Jerome: Thank you.

Mr. Hamel: Although I must admit that this series of amendments to the Canada Elections Act is a fairly big task. It will have to be completely prepared with a new format. In 1963 it was prepared in the format which was in use at the time. It now means an English and a French version. We will now have to prepare it in bilingual form, which means that we will have to have a completely new printing of the whole series of amendments whatever we feel should be added to it in light of the last two elections.

The Chairman: Mr. Sullivan?

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, will this Committee be supplied with office copies of the Canada Elections Act as it is presently amended and any other material, any studies made, for recommendations for amendments?

The Chairman: This is supposed to be referred to this Committee, but until it is referred to us by the House of Commons we have no right to study it. However, I am inclined to believe that it is going to be sought very soon. Do you have any other questions, Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: No, Mr. Chairman, I have no further questions.

The Chairman: Mr. Valade?

Mr. Valade: What is the work of the Committee before we get references from the House? What are we going to...

The Chairman: This is the budget of the whole office of the Chief Electoral Officer. If you want to examine the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer, it has already been referred to this Committee and Mr. Hamel, Mr. Fauvelle and Mr. Fournier are here for this reason. If you have the Blue Book of the Estimates it is at page 441, Vote 45—office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

45. Office of the Chief Electoral Officer
(S) Expenses of elections including the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer
45 Salaries and Expenses of Office
$14,428,180

Mr. Valade: Does Mr. Hamel have any general comments to make on this before we go into the estimates?

Mr. Hamel: No. The only comment I may make is that this is the budget that was prepared last year about this time and which was amended to include the approximate cost of the election. This is why it is called the Revised Estimates for 1968-69. So, this is the budget as submitted last year.

The Chairman: For your information, Mr. Valade, on this item of estimates you are allowed to ask Mr. Hamel any question you wish on any matter relating to his office.

Mr. Valade: Yes. On this question, Mr. Chairman I would like to ask Mr. Hamel to indicate to the Committee if he intends to change the representation in the poll workers—although "poll workers" is perhaps not the correct term—or does he intend to cover up some expenses to the effect that parties will have electoral expenses paid by the government? Is this foreseen?

• 1030

Mr. Hamel: As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Valade, my obligation under the Act is to make recommendations for the better administration of the Act. I have a feeling that if I were to make a recommendation along these lines I might exceed my terms of reference. This would be a fundamental change in the Act, so I do not think I have the authority to make these kinds of recommendations to the Committee.

Mr. Valade: This is where we seem to be boxed in in our discussion. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, these changes must be considered seriously by the Committee. Certainly, on this topic, we should have the Director General's opinion and an estimate of what would be the cost of such an amendment to the law.

In the documents tabled here there is such a recommendation in Appendix C which was submitted to you by Mr. Lizotte, the official agent for a candidate. He suggested that the electoral law be amended to bring it somewhat closer to that of the electoral law of the Province of Quebec which defines very clearly the ministerial and opposition parties' representation.

Certainly one of the objects of this Committee is to look into that possibility. If we do that there will have to be a forecast of, or some provision made for, what the cost will be and how it will be met. I think that information could be given by the Director General, who has vast experience, and whether it is feasible on a national scale.

Mr. Hamel: Perhaps it would be of interest to you gentlemen to know that whenever the Committee wishes to consider the Act I intend, at its first meeting, to table a copy of every suggestion received from the public and from different groups. Practically every week we receive, either directly or through some members or cabinet ministers, recommendations for amendments to the Act which would involve fundamental changes in the concept or in the philosophy of the Act. These I intend to table for the consideration of the Committee, without any specific recommendations in some cases.

If it involves my own responsibility for making amendments or recommendations for the better administration of the Act, I may make a recommendation that this be, or be not, followed.

On your other point, about how much it might add to the total cost, this, I presume, would be quite easy to establish. If the Committee intended to make a certain change in the Act we could, on the basis of the number of polling stations we have, establish an approximate cost for the coming election.

One final comment I would like to make on that subject is that if you refer to the committee which prepared the amendments to the Act of 1960, the Act that is now in force, you will see that a number of amendments originated from that committee. I am thinking of one at the moment regarding the use of English French in New Brunswick.

In 1963 the same thing happened. Although these were never enacted, a number of amendments to the Act were recommended on the initiative of the committee and not on the initiative of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Therefore, amendments could come, as I say, from your Committee, on the one hand, and also from recommendations emanating from my own office.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Hamel, do you feel that in the last election you had sufficient personnel and that the arrangements were such as to meet the obligations of your office in an efficient way, or were you short of personnel? Were there any problems in communications and materials?

• 1035

I put this question because I complained to the returning officer in my area that they were lacking some materials. His reply was that they had been asking for this in Ottawa, through your office, and that they were not supplied enough material. Were you short of personnel or material?

Mr. Hamel: We were certainly not short of material, and I do not think we were short of personnel. This might have been only an excuse. I think every returning officer was provided not only with enough material but usually with some additional supplies just in case he would need more than we had expected.

As I say, I cannot understand how this could happen, because generally I think we were quite fast in answering any request for additional supplies. By and large, and judging by the return we had of unused material from the districts, I think most of the returning officers had much more than they actually needed.

Mr. Valade: On another subject, because this particular problem may have been a local one, did you receive many complaints during the campaign, Mr. Hamel, on the conduct of the election in ridings? Were you subject to many demands for inquiries. Were there complaints about the activities of returning officers throughout Canada, or was it regionalized?

Mr. Hamel: I did not receive any official complaint under section 58 of the Act. I received, of course, the odd oral complaint or, at times, some letters but never specifically accusing an election officer of having contravened some section of the Act. Neither did I receive any complaint specifically pursuant to section 58, in which case I would have had to take action in conjunction with the Representation Commission.

Mr. Valade: You say "specifically", Mr. Hamel. I remember sending a telegram to your office complaining of the activities of my returning officer. During an election, when a candidate is busy with his campaign, I know it is technically difficult to ask him to make an official written accusation to your office, with all the requisite information, but I know that I have sent many telegrams to you and have telephoned many times to protest against certain irregularities.

This brings me to the following question: How do you deal with the complaints that are made to your office by an official candidate during an election?

Mr. Hamel: Every complaint, be it oral or in writing, under section 58 of the Act has to appear in the report that is tabled in the House. However, we follow up on every other complaint and write the returning officer and ask for his explanation and in all cases, as you probably remember, we send copies of the reply of the returning officer to whoever complained against him.

Mr. Valade: I want to be more specific and I am asking these questions because perhaps they will assist the Committee later on when it is discussing proposed amendments.

Do you consider your office has the necessary tools to make inquiries in vivo—de visu, if you wish me to use this word—on the spot when a serious complaint is made about a returning officer not doing his job properly?

• 1040

As an example of this, I complained that the locale used by the returning officer was not suitable for the ordinary conduct of an election. I remember your office informed me that, after having inquired, they found the premises to be in accordance with the regulations. I still maintain they were not in conformity with the spirit of these regulations.

Now I ask the question whether, with a view to clearing this matter up, your office could not have a better arrangement by which it could inquire into these complaints on the spot? If you rely on a report which can be made by an RCMP officer or an investigator of some sort who may have no idea of the complaint or the situation, do you not think this is a very important matter for an election? This caused a lot of problems in my area. The premises were not even in accordance with the requirements of City Hall because there was a hazard in the stairs used to reach the premises. It was a hazard that could have caused accidents. The space was so narrow that no more than two persons could accommodate themselves in that office when the regulations state that the premises should allow all the functions of an election to go smoothly. Now, the answers I received, after inquiry, were that the premises met the requirements.

I am asking the question, based on an example, if there is no way these complaints could be more efficiently investigated. In any complaint that is made, of course, the person responsible for investigating should at least have contact with those who make the complaints.

Mr. Hamel: Well, we have many ways of establishing whether the premises selected by the returning officer to use as his own office are adequate or not. I may say that during the last election we forced a few Returning Officers to move because it was demonstrated to us that the premises were not adequate. However, in the particular case in point, all the information I had was to the effect that this was suitable.

In fact, in large cities reports are presented to me even before any complaint is received, to make sure that the premises are adequate, not only from the physical point of view, that is from the point of view of allowing the people to go and come easily, but also from the security point of view. Apparently everything was in order. I for one, consider that our present way of investigating these complaints is quite efficient.

Mr. Valade: How do you go about having the complaints investigated. Maybe that will help me to put my suggestions later on. How do you go about investigating a complaint? Do you have a regular staff or a special staff for investigation, particularly during an election period?

Mr. Hamel: We mainly use the facilities of the RCMP.

Mr. Valade: The RCMP?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, and this has been done for years as far as I know.

Mr. Valade: I will pass.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary to this specific question. Are there any restrictions on the returning officer about choosing a site? Why do they have to choose a cheap site or something that would not be decent? What are the restrictions on choosing a proper office? Why should they not choose something good? Are there limitations?

• 1045

Mr. Hamel: No. We cannot establish a flat rate or a flat rent because conditions vary too much from one end of the country to the other. The only advice we give them is to try to get something reasonable, at a reasonable cost. I have heard that some returning officers were establishing their offices in pretty shabby places, in old stores and so on. This is something we may have to look into more carefully next time. It is a question of cost for an area. We are trying to keep the cost down as much as we can, but on the other hand, some people might be satisfied—I may add that in same places it is not easy to find a decent place for two months or two and a half months because it is just not possible to find something adequate for that period.

Mr. Richard: It is not due to any restriction that you put on cost or anything?

Mr. Hamel: No, we do not impose any ceiling because this would be unrealistic. Perhaps for $200 a month you could find something very good in a small town, while in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver you would not even get a shack for that.

Mr. Richard: There is really no reason for using all these shabby places that we use in most cases as offices for returning officers during elections?

Mr. Hamel: Another thing you have to remember is that the returning officer cannot afford to take a week or two weeks to find a place. He has to do it in a matter of hours because under the law he has to open an office immediately after the election is called. So at times he may only have a day or two days or three days.

Mr. Richard: I will come back later.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am just wondering whether some terms of reference should not be outlined in this case. For example, in my constituency the returning officer operated out of his own home. While I am not complaining about it, he was very accommodating and he co-operated in every way, shape or form, but it seems rather strange that one should have to operate out of a basement in his home and in rather cramped quarters. Now, if there is a restriction, in a town of 4,000 people certainly some accommodation could be made available, you would think. Do you have any restrictions in so far as that is concerned?

Mr. Hamel: Under the law the returning officer is responsible for selecting his own office space and the only advice we give him is to try to keep it to a reasonable cost. Many of them, for a number of reasons which I do not have to explain because they have a basement or a couple of extra rooms in their house, will rent this for election purposes. In some cases, as I say, we had to force them to rent something else either for briefing the enumerators or for election night, because there was just no way to move TV cameras in or for the press people to go in.

As I say, it is very difficult under the terms of the present law to tell a returning officer: "You are not going to use your own house." We ask them two questions when they come to use for an office. First, the number of square feet, is it large enough for the kind of work you intend to do, and second, how much does it cost? If it is 400 square feet and he is asking us $1,000 for two months, well, we will say: "Well, be reasonable," or, "Maybe 400 square feet is not enough." However, as I say, there is no—I do not think there could be any fast rule on this because of local conditions, even in the same city. For example, in Edmonton, some of the Edmonton returning officers had no problem at all but one of them, as I understand it, had a heck of a time finding a place. In Montreal, and in Toronto, it is the same thing.

Mr. MacGuigan: I would just like to follow up on this. First of all, do I understand that they may rent from themselves? You rent from them? I mean, they can profit financially from it?

Mr. Hamel: In that case we would pay them rent for that portion of their house which they will use as their election office.

Mr. MacGuigan: Fine. I understand there is now a permanent group of returning officers who remain with you from election to election. Did you find there was a need to replace many of these returning officers before this election? Is this a fairly stable group?

Mr. Hamel: This is not new. Returning officers under the Canada Elections Act for quite a while have been appointed almost for an indeterminate period. Before the last election a number had to be appointed, not because they resigned, and so on, but because under the new electoral map there were 258 new electoral districts. The Representation Order of 1966 made tremendous changes in the representation in Canada and only six electoral districts remained unchanged. The mandate, the returning officer who was in function before which he had terminated with the life of his own electoral district and for the new district a returning officer had to be appointed and, by the way, as you know returning officers are appointed by the government and not by me, so we had—I do not know—over 200 returning officers who were pretty new to the job for the last election.

• 1050

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes. Do you train these people? Do they just get materials or do you actually have an oral training session for them?

Mr. Hamel: We feel that it would be unfair for these people just to throw the book at them and say, "Well, this is your job and you try to do it the best you can."

Usually we had a three-day course for these people as soon as they are appointed. They are called to Ottawa and they spend a couple of days on the Canada Elections Act, on the practices, on procedures and so on, and then one day on the financial aspect of conducting an election, what is allowed and what is not allowed and which accounts you pay and which accounts we pay from Ottawa, and so on.

Unfortunately, when an election is called usually a number of people get scared, or a number of people are not available. In the last election, for instance, we had two in Europe. One of them could not come back on time. We had one who was involved in a car accident the week before and was in hospital and was not due to be out of the hospital before July.

So these people had to be replaced and the election had been called and as you know there is a period of about 10 days between the day the writs are issued and the beginning of the enumeration. During that period of time the returning officer has to select and appoint his enumerators, select an office for his own use, have his proclamation printed and a number of other chores, you know. So every day is very important. In those cases we gave them only a very condensed course of no more than about a day and fortunately, with the exception of one, they were all from places not too far from Ottawa. It meant they could come here in the same day.

Mr. MacGuigan: Do they in turn instruct their deputy returning officers orally as well as giving them materials?

Mr. Hamel: They are expected to train them.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am wondering how the early counting of ballots could have occurred in a number of polls. Is there a feeling that the deputy returning officers were not adequately instructed in these polls? This would seem to be fairly elementary.

Mr. Hamel: Do you mean mistakes in the counting of the ballots in the poll itself, or in the compilation in the office of the returning officer?

Mr. MacGuigan: No. Apparently it was ballot papers cast at advance polling stations that were counted early in this case. I am referring to your report on page 3. Nine deputy returning officers made a count before the allowed time.

Mr. Hamel: On that point—and I am not divulging any secret because this was part of the series of recommendations made in 1963—there will have to be some amendment to the Canada Elections Act if we want to avoid this in future because, if you look at my predecessor's reports after the 1965 election, 1963 and 1962, this is not new. This happened at every election. In fact, in 1965 the number was less than in 1968, but in 1963 the number was much higher than in 1968 and this in spite of specific instructions issued.

I investigated each case and in each case the deputy returning officer acting at the advance poll received very specific instructions. Now, why did they do it? I do not know. In all cases, as you know, the pay is forfeited. They lose their $50.

• 1055

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: I cannot go any further than that at the moment.

Mr. MacGuigan: On the other matter you mentioned that some DRO's were reluctant to accept responsibility for the custody of the ballot boxes for the period from the close of the advance polls until 9.00 p.m. on the ordinary polling day, do you expect the DRO's individually to keep these boxes.

Mr. Hamel: Under the law they have to.

Mr. MacGuigan: That seems not to be a very secure proceeding in any case. It leads to a proliferation of depositories for the ballot boxes.

Mr. Hamel: In essence this is the recommendation I intend to make to you people. Instead of asking DRO's to keep custody of boxes between the close of the advance poll and the polling day, they should be transmitted to the returning officer for custody.

Mr. MacGuigan: I have just one final question. At Appendix C, is one suggestion for change in the Canada Elections Act. Why is this the only suggestion for amendment which you append to your report?

Mr. Hamel: This is the only recommendation received that is specifically pursuant to section 58 of the Canada Elections Act. We received a number of other suggestions from associations, other handicapped people, blind people and so on, and these will be submitted to the Committee at the beginning of its first session. This will be tabled.

Mr. MacGuigan: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose?

Mr. Rose: My question is supplementary to something that Mr. MacGuigan said. He said that you and your office do not appoint the returning officers; that is done by the government.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Rose: You see, this brings up all kinds of interesting aspects of political patronage and that kind of thing in the appointment of these various returning officers, and I am interested in knowing what kind of recommendations you might have in this connection.

Mr. Hamel: I do not have any recommendations. If you go back, I think to about 1930, the Chief Electoral Officer was responsible for the appointment of the returning officers. I do not think this would be efficient because I do not have the machinery, having my office in Ottawa, if at the beginning of an election a returning officer drops dead or decides not to take the job away out in British Columbia, Alberta or in Saskatchewan, to try to find a replacement.

Mr. Rose: Do I understand, then, that the returning officers are appointed by the province or some organization within the province?

Mr. Hamel: That I do not know. This is the responsibility of the government. How they go about getting their names I do not know.

Mr. Rose: It seems very strange, sir, that no one knows something as vital and as basic as this and I just cannot conceive its happening. It is like the answer we got yesterday concerning the political affiliations of appointees. I am not laying this at the door of any one political party, because I think this certainly has happened under both of the major political parties, but I think we could certainly look to some other kind of method for appointing these people, because I am convinced that not always are the best people appointed for this purpose and further, that there have been some very capable ones that have been replaced regardless of the changing of the boundaries.

I will not pursue this any further because I think we must be loyal to the kind of supplementary privileges we are allowed here. I have other points, but I know there are other people who had their hands up to be next. Do you have any further comments on this?

Mr. Hamel: This has been in the Canada Elections Act since 1937, so far as I know, and it was again put in the Canada Elections Act in 1960 when it was last amended. In other words in 1960 when the Canada Elections Act was amended, if you read section 8, it says that every returning officer holding office at that time shall be deemed to have ceased to be a returning officer and new appointments will be made. This has been the case so far as I know since 1937.

Mind you, a number of returning officers—not too many—have been in office for quite awhile. I have one appointed in 1938 who has acted at every election since then except the election of 1945 while he was serving, and there are two or three I can think of at the moment who have been in office since 1950, 1949, 1952. There is a small group. . .

• 1100

Mr. Rose: They are in the minority, are they not?

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

Mr. Rose: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Mather?

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary related to that same question.

The Chairman: Mr. Valade?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Valade: I should first like to ask a question.

What authority does the Director General have to lay off a returning officer against whom official complaints have been made? Must he apply to the governor-in-council, and wait for the governor-in-council to make other recommendations to replace him?

Mr. Hamel: No authority, either for appointments or suspensions or for laying off any returning officer. According to section 8 of the Act, the governor-in-council has full authority. The only thing I can do, if the returning officer does not do his work in a competent way, is to recommend to the governor-in-council that he should be dismissed. I have done that only once over the past 2 and a half years. Although the man concerned had been appointed a year and a half ago, I could not get him to sign the papers. So, I recommended that he be replaced.

Mr. Valade: This procedure is valid in a normal election period, but I am speaking of the period of time when the list is issued. Under this procedure can you replace a returning officer during that short period of time, if you have a very serious grievance against him, and if you recommend this dismissal to the governor-in-council? Do you have enough time to make a replacement in such a short time, or will the decision be made only after the elections?

Mr. Hamel: Well, if something very serious were to happen during an election, the recommendation would go to the Secretary of State, who is responsible to the governor-in-council for the application of this Section of the Act, and I imagine that a decision would be made immediately.

Mr. Valade: Is it physically possible to make such a change during election time?

Mr. Hamel: Well, of course, we would have very serious problems.

Mr. Portelance: According to the Act, the returning officer of the riding would have to deal with the problem.

Mr. Hamel: If the returning officer is unable to carry out his duties, dies, or resigns, the election secretary becomes acting returning officer for the riding.

Mr. Valade: On an interim basis. But not necessarily for the election period.

Mr. Hamel: He will carry out his duties until replaced. This means that the problem is serious. Because of the provisions of the Act, it is impossible to ensure the replacement of a returning officer during election time without an order from the Governor in Council.

Mr. Valade: Do you intend to submit a sub-amendment to the Committee with respect to this?

Mr. Hamel: No, for the same reason I gave a while ago, I do not feel that I have the authority to make such a recommendation. This would be a radical change in the Act, and I am only entitled to recommend changes which would facilitate the administration of the Act.

Mr. Valade: This is exactly the question which was posed by my colleague, awhile ago. If this returning officer, whether it be the clerk or some other person in charge of the polls, were to become "ipso facto" the returning officer, this would solve the problem without having recourse to the governor-in-council.

Mr. Hamel: We would of course need a change in the present Act.

Mr. Valade: Yes. That is why I am asking you whether you actually intend to recommend such a change in the Act?

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a supplementary question. At present, the secretary replaces the returning officer until the latter is appointed. Actually, the secretary himself can also be appointed, can he not?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, it happened in Prince Edward Island, the returning officer died two days after the elections. So, his wife, who was his secretary during the elections, became, "ipso facto," the acting returning officer, and was appointed to this post in due course.

Mr. Portelance: Apparently, Mr. Lizotte states in Appendix VI, that the Act is not very clear. Regarding the appointment of returning officers, clerks, and secretaries, I believe however, that the Act is clear, but one may not always be in a good position to judge it. Of course, this may not be very pleasant to all parties participating in the campaign. The Act is not very clear, where paying the secretary is concerned. I believe the Quebec Act is much clearer. The secretary knows exactly where he stands with regard to his salary. But the Federal Act does not provide any such clear information.

Mr. Hamel: I think we have to make two distinctions. There are two procedures concerning the choice of enumerators, rural procedure and urban procedure.

• 1105

For instance, in the urban procedure, the candidate elected in the preceding election, i.e. the member who sat in the previous parliament, and the candidate who had the largest following number of votes, in the preceding election are to recommend the enumerators to be appointed by the returning officer.

In the rural procedure, it is the returning officer who, according to the act, chooses and appoints the enumerators, and deputy-returning officers.

As far as the secretary is concerned, two points must be mentioned: according to the Act, the secretary should know his exact duties at appointment. He must be present on nomination day, during the provisional days, and on the official polling day. Provision is made for his fee. But, the returning officer occasionally uses the same person as chief office clerk or private secretary. If he uses him as a messenger, there is no problem: we pay him. But if he uses him in his office to write his correspondence we pay him a given amount based on the number of names on the voters' register. That person is paid according to an agreement between the returning officer and himself. And that's where we occasionally have some problems. But, this is completely beyond our control.

Mr. Portelance: I feel, however, that some suggestions should be made so that under the new Act, the secretaries can be remunerated according to an established rate.

Mr. Hamel: Well, of course, he then ceases to be an election secretary and becomes a mere employee of the returning officer.

Some returning officers, for instance, instead of hiring people for the office, ask schools for the blind or retarded children's schools to help addressing envelopes in which the lists of electors are sent to the electors. Others have hired from 1 to 6 girls to do the job.

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Hamel, on that same point: a returning officer must have someone to replace him when he is away. This requires a responsible person. That is where the Provincial Act allows the returning officer to appoint a secretary to replace him when he is absent. Someone has to be in the office all the time. If the Act does not provide for the returning officer to be able to appoint someone to replace him occasionally, he is not entitled to do so.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, he can do it. For instance, I know of a returning officer who was paid $3,200 for his expenses, for clerical help. Which means all the clerical work done in his office. The person appointed claims she has not received a cent! Unfortunately, I heard about it when the returning officer had already been paid.

Mr. Portelance: Does this person have any recourse?

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Mather?

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner has indicated that he has several recommendations to make later, I think, in regard to improving the electoral system. I hope one of those recommendations will be in an area where reform is very long overdue, and that is, the situation as affects the industrial worker, particularly in the part of the country I come from, the lower mainland of British Columbia. We have hundreds if not thousands, of industrial workers, loggers and fishermen who, during any summer election, are away for several days and maybe weeks prior to the advance pool, on the fishing grounds, in the logging camps, in the mining areas of the province, hundreds of miles away from their own voting constituency. These people by means of not being able to vote at the advanced poll and not being able to get back to vote in their own riding, in effect are disenfranchised, and in many cases have been for some years. I do not know whether the Commissioner can make recommendations in that field. I do know that different election committees of this House over many years, have studied this same problem and have made recommendations toward reforming it. I think it is really an issue that we should concern ourselves with, if not now, perhaps later on.

• 1110

In the case of the members of the armed services, we have in effect absentee voting. It is not just because members of the armed services usually vote very much against the party I happen to represent that I am raising this, or that members of the industrial workers usually vote very much in favour of our party that I am raising this, but there is a disparity there, an imbalance. My question is whether the Commissioner would consider, or if he is considering, bringing in recommendations to change and improve that situation. If he is not, I can tell the Committee that if I am a member of the Committee I will be doing so later on.

The Chairman: I do not want to answer this question, Mr. Mather, but I may say at this point that at the beginning of his remarks Mr. Hamel stated his terms of reference and he is here within his administrative responsibilities as Chief Electoral Officer. I do not think he has any authority at this time to make recommendations except for the improvement of the administrative part of the law.

Mr. Mather: I think this would be a considerable improvement in the operation of the law.

Mr. Hamel: I just want to mention that at the very beginning of this session you had Mr. Castonguay's report which he tabled pursuant to the Representation Commissioner Act. I see a copy of that report over there, and this kind of situation is covered in it. I presume the Committee will consider this matter whenever it studies that report.

Mr. Mather: Thank you. It is not in your province to make that type of recommendation at this time?

Mr. Hamel: No, the Representation Commissioner was asked by Parliament in 1964 to make a specific study of this problem. This is one of many problems, this is one facet of...

The Chairman: At a subsequent meeting we will have Mr. Castonguay here and then you can ask him questions.

Mr. Mather: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Mazankowski?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary with respect to the matter of returning officers. Who does, in fact, make the appointments of returning officers, and upon whose recommendations, and upon what qualifications are such appointments made?

Mr. Hamel: Well, the appointment is made by way of an Order in Council on the recommendation of the Secretary of State. Beyond that, well, this is completely outside my own jurisdiction.

Mr. Mazankowski: Legally, you do not make the appointments officially?

Mr. Hamel: The first I know of a returning officer is when I get a copy of the Order in Council giving me the name and the address of the man, then I get in touch with him to see what he looks like.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you.

• 1115

[Interpretation]

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Hamel. When you happen to learn the names of the deputy returning officers recommended by the governor in council, are you able to judge whether they include candidates who are not qualified. If you feel that the person is not qualified, do you have the authority to intervene? Have you any discretionary powers to enable you to ensure that the election is properly conducted. Have you the authority to make recommendations to the governor-in-council in this regard? Because you might find cases where the person is unable to do the job, is not competent. In that case, are you helpless. You must accept a recommendation which is inconsistent with efficient performance of the job.

Mr. Hamel: This is very difficult to establish. Among our returning officers, we have people from nearly all professions, all walks of life,—farmers, foremen, doctors, lawyers and so on.

Mr. Valade: Excuse me, Mr. Hamel this is not a "red herring" and I do appreciate your difficulty.

Mr. Hamel: Well, these people come to the office for three days. It is very difficult, in three days, to decide whether a fellow is able or unable to do the work. What we have tried to do, is to show them that this is not an easy job. Many think that it is a kind of a job which takes an hour or two per day, even during election time. So we try to impress upon them that their work involves serious responsibilities, is time consuming, and calls for a lot of effort.

Occasionally, some returning officers may give us the impression that they will have serious difficulties because of a lack of education or resourcefulness but these sometimes turn out to be the best we have. So until a man has actually been put to the test, it is very difficult to find out whether he is able or unable to do the work.

Mr. Valade: Well, it may be that my question was not very clearly put. What I mean is this. When as director-general, you actually find out that a returning officer is not up to the job, you do not then seem to have the discretionary authority to replace him or even to recommend his replacement.

Mr. Hamel: Only if there is some violation of the Act. Competence is certainly included among the conditions in the returning officer's oath of office.

Mr. Valade: But apparently, your terms of reference do not seem to give you the discretion to recommend a change.

Mr. Hamel: Well, as I said a while ago, I did so in one case. If I am convinced that a man is not competent to do the job, this is of course a very serious matter and we must have very serious reasons before making such a recommendation, of course.

Mr. Valade: Well, I am amazed at the scope of your authority. It seems that you are subject to rather strict control concerning your freedom, to seek out the best possible staff to run an election. And you always seem to be bound by an order-in-council in such decisions. Well, I have no wish to keep anyone else from speaking...

The Chairman: No, go ahead.

Mr. Valade: I wanted to ask another question concerning the number of spoiled ballots during an election. Often, during an election, perhaps in some ridings only, there is a large number of spoiled ballots. When a candidate feels there is an undue number of spoiled ballots in an election, his only way to verify to find out whether these ballots are for him or against him, is to ask for a judicial recount. Do you not think that there should be some sort of mechanism which would allow for a recount of such ballots, without resorting to judicial recount, legal recount. Do you not think that we should have some sort of machinery to consider the spoiled ballots only? My own case is a special one. I checked with your office and apparently, in my constituency, 3.8 p. 100 of the ballots were spoiled. I think the national average was about 1.3. So if I lost an election, I would have to take legal steps, legal measures to ask for a judicial recount, which of course, involves considerable expense, which might be between fifteen hundred to three thousand dollars or even more.

Do you not think that there could be some sort of machinery by which wasted ballots could be counted during the official recount without resorting to a judicial recount? That would apply only to wasted ballots.

Mr. Hamel: Well the protection which you have at present is through the agent of the candidate who is present in the office during the counting of the ballots. I admit that we have not tallied the total ballots rejected during the 1968 election. I know that in some districts, including yours, the number of rejected ballots is larger than average. The average of the whole country is about 1 per cent or a little above 1 per cent. I have three districts in mind where the number was well above that average. The same occurred in 1965. I do not have the figures here but if you look at Quebec, in general, the number of rejected ballots has been higher than in the rest of the country. We must say that there have been quite big discrepancies. However, in Quebec, there is little difference in the average number of rejected ballots in provincial elections and federal elections. Why is this so? I'm afraid I don't know.

• 1120

Mr. Valade: Mr. Hamel, my point concerns the recount machinery of such ballots. During elections, candidates have no way of finding out whether the rejected ballots are actually ballots which should be rejected according to the letter and meaning of the Act.

I wonder whether the Committee could not upon your recommendation, devise a process whereby it would be possible, during the official recount, to set aside the envelopes of rejected ballots which may not be opened at the time of the official counting. You have the returning officers' report, but you are not allowed to open the envelopes of rejected ballots to find out, in the presence of those concerned, whether or not such ballots should actually have been rejected. I wonder whether you intend to propose or recommend any changes...

The Chairman: Mr. Valade, I think that Mr. Hamel has already answered that question. As far as the possibilities of amending the Act are concerned, except for administration questions which concern him, I do not think that the question you ask is actually under his authority.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I thought I was in line with our discussion, to find out the kind of suggestions which Mr. Hamel could make in order to amend the Act.

At this stage of our work, I think we are simply looking into the various difficulties which arise from the Act. This I consider an extremely serious problem because a candidate has no way of finding out whether rejected ballots were actually rejected in strict accordance with the various causes stipulated in the Act. In order to do this, the candidate must request a judicial recount. I should like to ask the Director General whether this is not a case where an Act ought to be amended because I think this is an administrative matter.

The Chairman: I believe the question has already been answered. Actually, the amendment of the Act is under our jurisdiction and not that of the Director General.

Mr. Valade: Naturally on the recommendation of the Director General.

Now, to switch to something else...

[English] Mr. Hamel:

The Chairman: With your permission, Mr. Valade, I will now call on Mr. Peters.

• 1125

Mr. Peters: Mr. Hamel, is a service being provided similar to that in Ontario where they have an electoral court composed of a judge and a number of people who review specific offences that may take place in an election? I think they call it an electoral board.

Do we have this method of reviewing Federal elections, and can an offence or an omission that may be committed by the returning officer be brought before an agency in the area concerned?

I am thinking of the example you used a few minutes ago, of a person not being paid where there appears to have been a service rendered. Can this be referred to an electoral board in the area?

Mr. Hamel: Under the Canada Elections Act there is no election board, or electoral board, as it might exist in certain other provinces.

When an election officer is alleged to have been guilty of an offence under the Act it is up to the Chief Electoral Officer, or, under the terms of the present Act, up to the Representation Commissioner, to take action.

If any person other than an election officer is alleged to have been guilty of an offence any individual can take action, and it is a private action in that case. It is up to whomever is aware of the action to lay charges with the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Peters: In Ontario it seems to be of dubious value, and I do not really know what finally happens when an individual has to lay a charge, but have you considered the different systems that the provinces may use?

It seems to me that every Member of Parliament is in a position in his own area to correct some of the problems that develop, and will continue to develop. I have seen a number of these problems recur. Are any of the provinces using machinery better suited to correcting some of these local difficulties or problems that arise with deputy returning officers, or that develop in the election machinery, rather than doing it through the Act? Have you considered any alternative ways of doing this?

Mr. Hamel: No, not at the moment. I am not aware of any provision in provincial legislation about this.

Mr. Mather: May I ask a supplementary question?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Mather.

Mr. Mather: Can the Commissioner say whether other countries, such as Australia or Britain, have any sort of court, to which Mr. Peters has referred in the provincial sense, for dealing with problems, on protests, arising out of an election? Does any machinery, different from our own, exist in say, Australia?

Mr. Hamel: Not on this matter, no.

The Chairman: Mr. Peddle?

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Hamel, the result of the election in Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe is being contested before the Court. Can you tell the Committee the background to that situation?

Mr. Hamel: The information I have I got from the copy of the brief submitted to the judge.

It is alleged that a number of polls worked on daylight saving time instead of on standard time; in other words they opened one hour too early in the morning and closed one hour too early in the evening. I understand this is the basis of the action. I understand about 15 polls closed at 7 o'clock daylight saving time instead of at 8 o'clock daylight saving time.

Mr. Peddle: Did this happen anywhere else in Canada?

Mr. Hamel: Not that I know of; I know of a number of polls in sections of rural Quebec and rural Ontario which opened at 8 o'clock daylight saving time. I heard about it in the afternoon and I told them to stay open until 8 o'clock because the opening time is far less important than the closing time.

• 1130

It is very important to me that they all close at the same time. Therefore, they were open for 12 hours, but at least they closed at the same time as the others.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Hamel, do you have an assistant during elections, for instance, in Montreal or in large centres?

Mr. Hamel: No.

Mr. Portelance: Which means that even before the returning officer can have the ballots printed, no one is authorized to have this printing done without him.

Mr. Hamel: According to the Act, this is the responsibility of the returning officer. All elections are conducted from my office in Ottawa.

But if you look at the meaning of the Federal Act, the returning officer, in his constituency apparently has all the responsibility. The returning officer has powers which I myself do not have. He has duties which I cannot perform on his behalf. He is supplied with all the material necessary and with necessary controls, but from thereafter he is on his own. With modern communications we can settle some problems, for instance, we have several cases in isolated places where we found errors on the ballot paper two days before the advanced poll, and we were able to replace them in time.

Mr. Portelance: A further question. I know that Quebec is smaller than Canada, if you like, but the Chairman of the Election appoints an assistant in the large centres. For instance, no returning officer can order the printing without the higher official's signature. This eliminates many errors and the letters are uniform. In a word there is a standard guide-line.

Mr. Hamel: It should be remembered, too, that in this regard the Quebec ballot paper is different and that the Quebec Act restricts the printing which must appear on the part of the ballot paper so that there is no blank where people might write their cross, while the Federal paper is required by the Act to be open.

There is a big blank space where the name and address of the candidate are printed and the cross must be made at the end. All that is required to leave sufficient space, I think it is an inch, between the end of the name of the candidate and the end of the ballot paper so that there is enough space for the cross to be marked.

But according to the present Act, I have no authority to appoint or to delegate a representative or an assistant in Montreal, Toronto or Winnipeg.

Mr. Portelance: Do you think this would be a help from your point of view?

Mr. Hamel: It all depends on the kind of powers to be delegated. According to the present Act, there is no delegation authority.

• 1135

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the estimates of the Secretary of State concerning the election, that in excess of $14 million was estimated for the cost of the election as per statute, and I was wondering if the Chief Electoral Officer will be tabling, for the consideration of this Committee, a detailed report of the distribution of the actual cost of the 1968 election?

Mr. Hamel: We usually do. What we had last time was a breakdown by district, by province, and under a certain number of headings, such as preliminary duties, and the revision of the boundaries of the polling divisions. I have the report for the last election here—returning officer's services and expenses, printing, cost of polling stations, cost of enumeration, and finally the total for each electoral district in Canada. Then the sub-total for each province; as well as the sub-total under each of the main headings, such as. . .

Mr. Jerome: Are you required to complete and file that report with Parliament?

Mr. Hamel: No.

Mr. Jerome: So unless we request you to table it before this Committee, you are not required by any statute to do so?

Mr. Hamel: No. We will do it in any event. If you wish to have a look at it we would be pleased to table it. Exactly when we will be in a position to do it, I really do not know. We still have a number of returning officers who have not submitted their personal account.

Mr. Jerome: Right. I am very anxious that at some time during the course of the work of this Committee we examine that detailed breakdown. If you would be good enough to go ahead and make copies available for the members of the Committee or something of that sort I do not know whether a motion is required to that effect, if it is I so move.

The Chairman: It is a good suggestion. Do you have an idea of when it would be feasible?

Mr. Hamel: I am told that sometime towards late December we could have this ready, fairly complete.

Mr. Jerome: Yes. If, Mr. Chairman, you feel that it requires a motion I would be prepared to so move.

The Chairman: It does not require a motion.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I have one small question. I had a number of complaints from election workers after the election. My recollection is that it was from workers in the advance polls, perhaps it is in the course of revision, but they had not been paid as promptly as those who worked on election day, which seemed a bit incongruous in view of the fact that their duties ended earlier. The explanation I had at the time was that because they were paid from Ottawa their cheques were necessarily longer in coming, but there was a rather lengthy delay it seemed this year. Is this usual, or can anything be done to speed up this process of payment?

Mr. Hamel: Well, this could be due to one of many factors or a combination of many factors.

First of all, we cannot pay earlier than the date we receive the account through the returning officers office and some of them were pretty slow in sending their accounts out.

Second, we had the postal strike, which kept the whole thing at a standstill for a while. Finally, in some cases some people were paid but forgot about it. We receive at times complaints either from you people or from individuals complaining that they have not received any cheque. One day we received 18 complaints like this, and we referred 18 complaints to the Comptroller of the Treasury to find out whether the cheque had been issued and so on. Out of 18, 16 had been cashed by the right person.

Mr. Mather: They are so small, they did not notice them.

Mr. Hamel: One even said the cheque was so attractive that he thought it was some publicity material.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Hamel, my question is in connection with the preliminary work done by the returning officer to prepare a map showing the polling divisions. I have always found that it was a pretty cheap job. We get a map that is outlined in red pencil or something, and I have always thought that your office, after receiving this map showing the divisions, should be able to produce a decent map showing these divisions so we would understand exactly what the divisions are, by streets; I am talking about cities.

At election time, one of the great difficulties we have in enumeration, as you know, is that the enumerators are not properly instructed. That is the big—irregularities in elections do not exist very much—I mean, those are local complaints. However, the machinery, the instruction of enumerators by the returning officer is done in great numbers, 20 or 25 people in 15 minutes, and with a statement describing the poll in writing. Very few people understand a geographical description of a poll. If they had a proper little map showing them each poll, what the limitations of that poll are on a map, and if our own map was a proper map it would help. You know very well the maps we receive are copies of a map that was outlined in red pencil by some amateur cartographer, and I think it is the machinery, the tools that are lacking at the beginning. We do not have proper maps and the enumerators do not receive proper instructions, and the mistakes are honest mistakes by enumerators because they do not know what they are doing.

• 1140

Mr. Hamel: Well, you are undoubtedly right with this question of poor training on the part of the returning officers when it comes to the enumerators. With respect to preparing those maps, there certainly is a physical problem in the sense that I certainly could not do it with my present staff because we have about 50,000; particularly if we were to prepare maps for each polling division. This may be beyond human possibility, preparing this here in Ottawa. If each returning officer could be given the tools to do that, it might be the best way to do it.

Now, as to our preparing or reproducing in a more expert way, the map prepared by the returning officer, well, there is no doubt that it could be done, although I do not think I could do it with my present personnel resources.

Mr. Richard: It would be a great help.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: Are the maps you mention, Mr. Hamel, supplied to the returning officer so that he can establish some kind of division? Apparently, the man, in my district, had to draw up the map of his own riding. Apparently, he was unable to get a proper map from you.

Mr. Hamel: Well, the only maps we can supply them are the maps which have been drawn up by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. These maps are not always very detailed, are not always very useful. And we found out that a large number of such maps have accurate boundaries only for districts as a whole. But when it comes to the interior of the district, i.e. parishes, municipalities, rural areas and so on, the detail is not as well given. Very often, returning officers have to ask for more detailed maps on the spot. They are allowed a modest amount for the purchase of more detailed maps.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Hamel, what happens very often, as during last election, is that we have a map which shows nothing at all. There was a poll in the area covered by the map where, according to the returning officer's last report, many new streets had been laid out and areas built up. There were two or three hundred people living on new streets not even shown on the map.

Mr. Hamel: Well, one of the problems is that our population is very mobile. If you look at Mr. Castonguay's report, the Representation Commissioner's report, it is estimated that 4,800,000 Canadians change domicile every year. This represents 25 p. 100 of the population. In urban centres, there are urban renewal programs and projects, blocks of houses are destroyed, and new developments built.

It is always fairly difficult to make a revision of electoral districts the week before the election. As we do not always know when it is going to take place, it is very difficult to have very up-to-date information. At the time of the last general election, most markings had been made about one year before the election. In one year, there were many changes. I can give you a thousand instances of places and fields being discovered, and at enumeration time, we found more than 980 voters at a place where there was not one single building marked a year before.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Mazankowski.

Mr. Mazankowski: I would like to ask Mr. Hamel how the advance polls are established and upon what requirement they are based? Is it geographic location or location according to population? The reason for my asking is that I believe this pertains particularly to rural areas. I know in my own constituency it cost us a lot of money to get one vote. We operated an advance poll for two days and it was taken advantage of by one person. Of course, we have to bear in mind that we cannot deny the rights of anyone to vote. However, I was just wondering upon what basis the advance polls are established. Does that come directly under your jurisdiction or does it come under the jurisdiction of the returning officer?

Mr. Hamel: In urban areas, well, you mentioned rural, though, this is left to the returning officer, except in a centre with a population of one thousand or more, under the law you have to establish an advance poll. For the other areas it is left to the returning officer. The only criterion we can give him is to try to provide reasonable facilities.

• 1145

If a person has to travel more than 25 or 30 miles, particularly in the Eastern part of Canada, it is getting pretty far. So at times we have complained that people had too far to go to cast their vote at the advance poll; other times some people claim that we have too many. We may have a recommendation on this but we have the perennial problem of advance polls where there was one vote cast or two votes cast, or no vote at all. Where there is no vote at all it is a waste of money, but it is not a big problem. However, when you have one or two votes, the vote is no longer secret.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, are aspects of this taken into consideration when the next election rolls around?

Mr. Hamel: I will have a recommendation on this because it is an administrative problem. I may have a series of recommendations with respect to the advance polls not necessarily to try to avoid this question where we have one advance poll where no vote at all was cast. I agree, as I say, that this is a waste of money, but on the other hand I think the obligation that we have to provide reasonable facilities to the elector is more important than the $120 or $125 that we may save.

I am much more concerned about the polls where only a very small number of votes were cast. One of the solutions might be to count these votes in a different way. Instead of counting each advance poll as a separate poll, we could put them all together, or, if we have five advance polls, we could put three in one and two in the other.

Mr. Richard: I hope Mr. Hamel has considered the situation in the cities where you limit the number of advance polls by the number of voters, if I understand the situation well, and that is unjust because sometimes due to the geographical location, as in my area, you straddle the river with people from the opposite side. You assemble them in such a way that they have to go terrible distances out of their way to vote. So I think you should provide more advance polls in the cities.

Mr. Hamel: We ask each returning officer to group approximately 35 polling stations in one advance poll in urban areas. Now, we believe that the returning officer is much more aware of local conditions than we can be here. So, we leave the actual grouping of the polling divisions pretty well up to him.

Mr. Richard: You do not give him much latitude outside of that 35.

Mr. Hamel: No.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters?

Mr. Peters: I would like to ask a supplementary. Have you made any recommendations as to the accounting of the advance polls. It seems awfully stupid to me that they should have to wait before they can open this advance poll which they have had for a period of two days. It seems to me that there is no legitimate reason—or at least I do not see any legitimate reason—for not counting those at least at the same time as the other ballot boxes are opened.

Mr. Hamel: I asked myself the same question, Mr. Peters. I understand one of the reasons it was put in the Act—that the votes cast at the advance polls could not be counted before nine-o'clock standard time on polling day—was that many deputy returning officers who act at the advance polls also act at the ordinary poll, and the intention was for them to count the votes cast at the regular poll before tackling the counting of the advance poll.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps your recommendation could be that they count these ballots as soon as possible rather than at nine o'clock. And I do agree there is a duplication and there probably has to be because of the limited number of people, but it seems rather a shame, particularly on that night, for them to have to wait for these advance polls when nothing but the Act is stopping them from being counted. I agree they should not be counted two days before or anything like that, but as long as the other polls are closed, I do not see why the Act does not allow them to be counted. If it said "at the same time", then they could count the other ones first and count the other ones right after. I do not see the reason for the specific delay because it is not always true that the same people are involved.

• 1150

Mr. Hamel: I must admit that I am inclined to agree with you. In fact I received a recommendation from the police force in one city. A returning officer had asked for some surveillance—not exactly protection but that the polls be watched by the police. Because of that request the police had to maintain people there until about 9.30 p.m. or 10.00 p.m.—until the last ballot box had reached the returning officer's office, and, as far as we are concerned, that increased our manpower costs.

Mr. Peters: Do you know what percentage of deputy returning officers clerks and scrutineers who served in the advance poll also served in the regular poll?

Mr. Hamel: We could find out that information for you but it would not be easy because we would have to go through 50,000 names.

Mr. Peters: Is there really any reason that we should not write into the Canada Elections Act a provision that a person should act only in one poll—in other words, if they have served in an advance poll they are not eligible to serve in a regular poll.

Mr. Hamel: It could be done although I do not think it is necessary to achieve what you are trying to achieve. On the other hand, in some cases I understand that a returning officer had some problems in getting competent people to act as DRO's. So this would still limit the choice of people they could tap for this kind of work.

Mr. Peters: Is the machinery more expensive for an advance poll than it is for a regular poll because of the longer period?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, for the advance poll it is $50.00 for the DRO and $36.00 for the poll clerk, because there are two days involved, and for the regular poll it is $24.00 and $17.00.

The Chairman: Do you have anything further?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: Just one question: in the report which you will bring to the Committee, do you contemplate limiting the electoral expenses of the candidates?

Mr. Hamel: No, this would be way beyond my authority.

Mr. Portelance: But it could be done in this committee here if the act came here for study.

Mr. Hamel: I already made a report which was submitted in the Fall of 1966. A Committee chaired by Mr. Barbeau—I believe—submitted a report which was tabled in the House in October 1966 which offers a series of recommendations for the payment of electoral expenses.

Mr. Valade: My final question Mr. Hamel. You must surely have studied the feasibility of having permanent electors' lists. I know that this matter has already been suggested. Did you look into the possibility of having permanent lists of voters; do you wish to do a comparative study of...

Mr. Hamel: Well, the work has been done by Mr. Castonguay and the report which you had at the beginning of the election, was the report he made in the light of the experience gained in the United States, France, Australia, and so on.

Mr. Valade: Would such a permanent list help avoid this accumulation of work during election time? Would that be one of the recommendation you envisage? Or, do you not propose to express an opinion on that matter?

Mr. Hamel: The recommendations have already been made by Mr. Castonguay and one of the opinions or the advice he gives, is that permanent lists would probably reduce the electoral period to 30 days because the enumeration and the revision would not be necessary any longer.

• 1155

Mr. Valade: In the cost, would there be a large difference?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, according to Mr. Castonguay, the cost would be considerably higher than the present cost.

Mr. Valade: Another question: Have all the members of Parliament and the candidates complied with the requirement to submit election report in the required time, do you have any comments on this?

Mr. Hamel: Well, as a rule, I do not know about that. If you look at the Act, the tabling of the expenses report is strictly the responsibility of the returning officers, who must keep it for 6 months and at the end of that six-month period he either destroys it or returns it to the candidate. In the present case, there was an order by the House of Commons on the initiative of Mr. Knowles that we table a list of the candidates who have submitted an expense report and candidates who have not done so. I think that most statements from the returning officers have come in, and there are only one or two missing so we should be able to table in the House the information within 2 weeks perhaps.

Mr. Portelance: Does a defeated candidate have to submit a report of his expenses, does the Act provide for a penalty if he fails to do so? It does not. So he makes no report unless he wishes to.

[English]

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the Committee to report the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer back to the House or do you want to have another meeting to put more questions to Mr. Hamel? If not, we will report the estimates back to the House and perhaps have at our next meeting Mr. Castonguay, the Representation Commissioner. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: This meeting is adjourned until next Tuesday evening.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968-69

Government Publications

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 3

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1969

Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport
and Communications

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Forest,	Nesbitt,	Skoberg,
Fortin,	Peddle,	Sullivan,
Hogarth,	Portelance,	Trudel,
Kaplan,	Richard,	Valade,
MacGuigan,	Ritchie,	Woolliams,
McGrath,	Rose,	Weatherhead—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edward Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Note—The above list is current as at January 22, 1969 and includes substitutions made by Order of Reference or pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b).

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

Mr. Kaplan replaced Mr. Hogarth on January 21, 1969.

Mr. Hogarth replaced Mr. Marceau on January 22, 1969.

Mr. Weatherhead replaced Mr. Cafik on January 22, 1969.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

MONDAY, November 4, 1968.

Ordered,—That the name of Mr. Mather be substituted for that of Mr. Brewin on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, November 5, 1968.

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to sit while the House is sitting.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1968.

Ordered,—That the name of Mr. Skoberg be substituted for that of Mr. Mather on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, December 16, 1968.

Ordered,—That the names of Messrs. Nesbitt, Woolliams, McGrath, Hogarth and Forest be substituted for those of Messrs. Aiken, Downey, Mazankowski, Prud'homme and Ryan on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1968.

Ordered,—That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the Committee on November 28th, from the Second Report of the Committee presented to the House on November 29th, and which reads as follows:

Resolved,—That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, January 23, 1969.

(3)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.09 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Forest, Fortin, Hogarth, Jerome, Laflamme, McGrath, Nesbitt, Peddle, Portelance, Richard, Ritchie, Skoberg, Sullivan, Trudel, Weatherhead—(15).

Also present: Messrs. Carter, Isabelle, Lessard (LaSalle), Mahoney, Thomas (Moncton).

In attendance: Mr. Robert Normand, Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Clerk of the Committee, on instruction, read the names of the current members of the Committee as follows:

Messrs. Forest, Fortin, Hogarth, Jerome, Kaplan, Laflamme, MacGuigan, McGrath, Nesbitt, Peddle, Portelance Richard, Ritchie, Rose, Skoberg,
Sullivan, Trudel, Valade, Woolliams and Weatherhead.

The Chairman advised the Committee that the meeting was held to discuss its Order of Reference given by the House of Commons on December 10, 1968.

The Committee agreed to table the following exhibits:

Exhibit I—Order of Reference before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications dated October 16, 1968;

Exhibit II—Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons No. 56 dated December 3, 1968, containing the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to the House;

Exhibit III—Issues Nos. 6 to 9 inclusive of the printed Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Moved by Mr. Skoberg and Agreed,—That the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure consider those items discussed at this meeting in preparing the list of witnesses to be called.

Moved by Mr. Jerome at 11.41 a.m. and Agreed,—That the Committee adjourn to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, January 23, 1969.

• 1108

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see that we have a quorum.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, prior to proceeding with today's business, it is somewhat difficult to determine who is actually on these committees from day to day. Might we have the Clerk of this Committee read out the names of members who are now officially members of this Committee.

The Chairman: This is what I was going to request the Clerk to do right away.

Mr. Hogarth: Thank you, sir.
(Names of members read.)

The Chairman: As you all know, gentlemen, there was an order of reference by the House of Commons to us on December 10. If you have not already received copies of the terms of reference, I would ask the Clerk to have them distributed right away to all the members.

Yes, Mr. Nesbitt.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is just a small thing but I think perhaps it might save problems in the future. I have before me the minutes of the proceedings of the Steering Committee meeting that was held before the Christmas recess and I note that it says in there that the date was set for Tuesday, January 21, and it was my understanding that we would perhaps have another meeting of the Steering Committee after our return. I have no objections to having the meeting this morning but I just thought perhaps for further meetings of the Committee that the Steering Committee might meet in advance because there are so many committee meetings going on now and it might make it more convenient.

• 1110

The Chairman: I understand your point, Mr. Nesbitt because I realize that at the Steering Committee meeting on December 18, it was proposed that we would sit on Tuesday. But unfortunately, I could not be here personally on Tuesday and this is the reason we felt it appropriate to have a preliminary meeting this week.

Mr. Nesbitt: As I say, I would like to make it clear that I do not have any objection at all to meeting this morning, Mr. Chairman. I just thought it might be better if perhaps the Steering Committee could meet so that we can know when the meetings will be held because there are so many meetings going on now and some of the committees are not even going to be meeting in Ottawa—they will be meeting elsewhere—that it might save us quite a few problems in future.

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a point of order. I notice that the member for St. John's East and the member for Calgary North are now members of the Committee. My objection to this is that I understand we are to rule upon this question of privilege and that the complainant or the mover in the House was Mr. McGrath, the member for St. John's East, and the seconder was Mr. Woolliams. I think it is highly irregular and improper that they now become members of this Committee which is acting as judge and jury, and I am absolutely at a loss to understand why this procedure was allowed to happen when we have now the prosecutor and the complainant a member of the court who is going to decide it and the question of privilege. I think "impropriety" is probably the mildest word I can think of. I just do not understand that this can go on, in all fairness to the people here. It is even a reflection on this Committee. I do not know what this Committee or you can do about it but I have never heard of this in my life. Mr. Woolliams uses the expression "hanky-panky" all the time, and this motion...

Mr. Nesbitt: You have not been around here very long.

Mr. Sullivan:...used the expression "a true-rooted democracy". To have a complainant sit on the same committee that is going to make the decision I think is grossly unfair and also very improper.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I support my honourable friend's remarks. I have not been around here very long either, as Mr. Nesbitt has pointed out to my honourable friend, but it appears to me that if we are to judge the conduct of any member of a committee or of a committee itself, any person who is on that committee—and I would extend my friend's suggestion to those persons—any person who is on that committee or any person who is a potential witness before this Committee with regard to that person's activities should, surely, in the interests of good ethics, withdraw from this Committee and see that somebody else is appointed in his stead. It would be a most embarrassing situation if we wanted to hear from Mr. McGrath as to the nature of his complaint if we had to call a member of this Committee to give evidence. That would be an absurd situation and it might well develop in these particular proceedings. I would respectfully suggest that these gentlemen consider their positions, just in the light of the common, natural justice of the situation.

Mr. McGrath: I am not concerned with the fairness of the situation. I am certainly concerned with what is technically right or wrong. Certainly it is not my conduct that is under examination here. I think the honourable gentleman who made that remark did not mean to imply that, but that is what he said. It is not my conduct that is under investigation. It is the conduct of those people who are responsible for compiling the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. Consequently I have every right to sit on this Committee to cross-examine witnesses and to suggest to the Committee what witnesses should be called. I would suggest, since I raised the complaint in the first instance, that it would be most appropriate that I be in this position to do so.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I would like to correct the suggestion that the honourable member has just made that I referred to his conduct. I said that we are investigating the conduct of a committee. We do not know yet whose conduct we might be investigating, and surely the members of that committee in decency, would not expect to sit in judgment of what happened there, and at the same time would not expect to give evidence before this Committee, sitting on this Committee.

The Chairman: First I would like the honourable members to read the terms of reference. Some additional copies will be distributed right away.

In answer to the point of order raised by Mr. Sullivan I must refer the honourable members to the terms of reference of the House which simply say:

That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the Committee on November 28th, from the Second Report of the Committee presented to the House on November 29th, and which reads as follows:

• 1115

I do not need to read it now, but as far as we are concerned, at the beginning of the deliberations I do not see how, in those circumstances, we could ask some honourable members to readjust or to think about their own position on this Committee and I would like to refer the honourable members to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms in the fourth edition, page 54, section 66, which simply deals with what we may call the interest which qualifies or disqualifies a member from voting, either in the House or in committees.

Article (1) says that :

66. (1) The interest which disqualifies a member from voting in the House must be immediate and personal, separately belonging to the person whose vote is questioned.

I think, Mr. Sullivan, in fairness to Mr. McGrath, that this simply disposes of the point of order you have raised and I believe, as far as I am concerned right now, that I have to rule this point of order not founded on those grounds and I think if there is any other matter that has to be raised, we will deal with the precise purpose of this meeting today.

As Mr. Nesbitt has mentioned, we had a Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure meeting on December 18 and it was agreed at that time that we would have this meeting this week to have all the exhibits filed and then discuss together what witnesses we would like to hear, relevant to the terms of reference referred to us by the House of Commons, and I do not believe it would be very appropriate to engage in a very wide debate on those matters. I want to read the report of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure that was prepared by Mr. Thomas, our Clerk.

The Sub-committee agreed that, owing to the illness of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, Mr. Gustave Blouin, the next meeting of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections should be held after the Christmas recess. The date was tentatively set at Tuesday, January 21, 1969.

The Chairman stated that the first item of business would be to have the Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, Mr. Robert Normand,...

who is here to my right,

...appear and table as exhibits certified copies of

(1) The Order of Reference before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications;

(2) The printed Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

I was informed that those Minutes have been circulated among all the members of this Committee and if there is anyone here who has not already received the Minutes of the Proceedings and Evidence of the Transport and Communications Committee, we will have them distributed right away.

(3) The second report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to the House.

which is precisely the report on which there has been the motion by the House referred to us for study. Is it agreeable to the members that we have Mr. Normand file those exhibits and that the exhibits except, of course, the printed Minutes of Proceedings, appear in the minutes of today's proceedings? The Order of Reference has already been circulated and would be considered Exhibit No. 1.

The printed Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee would be considered as Exhibit No. 2.

Mr. Sullivan: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Then we would like to have Mr. Normand, who acted as the Clerk of the Transport and Communications Committee. Mr. Normand, do you have the true copy of...

Mr. Robert Normand (Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications): Yes, Mr. Chairman, these are official copies.

The Chairman: Is it the second report of the Standing Committee that you are filing now?

Mr. Normand: The second report is right under the printed issues, Mr. Chairman, in French and English as was printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

The Chairman: Is it understood, then, that when we refer to the second report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which was discussed in the House of Commons, we refer to the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, No. 56, where this second report has been printed? Is it agreed?

• 1120

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Then while we have the meeting of this Committee right now, I would request your advice on the way we should proceed, how we should deal with this matter. I will hear suggestions of every hon. member who wishes to speak. Mr. Nesbitt?

Mr. Nesbitt: It is just a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, but since we have just had the Minutes tabled by Mr. Normand it might be an opportunity for members to look over the exhibits. Also, I understand that Mr. Blouin is still ill, and perhaps having gone this far—after hearing other suggestions, of course—it might be well, perhaps, to adjourn after the evidence and the exhibits are tabled until we have had a chance to look at them.

The Chairman: I think this suggestion is very well taken, referring to Mr. Blouin. I have received a letter from him. He left the hospital a few days ago and he will be available here by February 10, but not before that time. Mr. Blouin got in touch with me and requested the opportunity of being heard before the members of this Committee.

Since he was the Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee, I think we owe him the opportunity of appearing here and being in a position to answer any questions that could be asked him. Mr. McGrath?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, since you mention Mr. Blouin as certainly one of the principal witnesses, I think consideration by the Committee should also be given to calling the government House Leader to ask him to explain his references on page 3587 of Hansard for December 6. He was replying to my question which reads as follows:

Would the house leader advise the house what is the position of the resolution that was passed by the committee dealing with the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission allowing the Canadian National to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland, which was not incorporated in the first report of the committee to which I referred in my original question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have not studied this; I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

I would like to know where Mr. Macdonald got this advice and in order to determine that I think the Committee should call Mr. Macdonald as a witness.

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, this is a purely political football. That is far outside the terms of reference as I see it.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, I suppose every member should have the privilege of stating how we should proceed in this matter. I do not care how you proceed, but there is an awful lot of time between now and February 10, and since you have a steering committee I am sure the steering committee should meet and decide on the procedure. If we are going to do it here and now before the steering committee meets that is not very good.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I make these suggestions because I am not a member of the steering committee. Certainly it is my understanding that the steering committee will consider what witnesses they will call and what procedure we will follow. I merely make this suggestion for the consideration of the steering committee when it does meet.

• 1125

The Chairman: The idea of asking you gentlemen for suggestions is so that we can take those suggestions into consideration and study every one of them in the subcommittee when we meet after this meeting.

Mr. McGrath: There are a number of other suggestions I would like to make as well, Mr. Chairman. In calling witnesses, I suggest that the Clerk of the Transport and Communications Committee be called as a witness. I suggest also that the Chief of the Committee and Private Legislation Branch be called as a witness to explain what seems to be the unusual delay in printing the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 6. There was a considerable delay in that evidence being printed and I would like to have an explanation of this unusual delay.

The Chairman: Mr. McGrath, I do not want to interfere with your remarks but...

Mr. McGrath: It is a suggestion, Mr. Chairman; that is all.

The Chairman: I know that it is a suggestion, but I would not like you to say that it is an "unusual delay" since we did not hear the evidence.

Mr. McGrath: That is merely my opinion and that is why I want to call the witness.

The Chairman: I would accept your phrasing, in saying "the delay for", but "the unusual"—it might be usual after you hear the evidence of those people.

Mr. McGrath: Well, you can delete the word "unusual".

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, of course we are just making suggestions of how we would proceed, but I was under the impression that we were inquiring into the reason for the omission of a certain resolution in the Committee. I cannot understand how it would seem relevant to that question to look into the impressions of the government House Leader, or of the impressions of anybody else for that matter, nor do I see how it would be relevant to that question to look into the length of time that was involved in printing the reports of the Proceedings of that particular Committee.

Neither of those questions appear to me to be relevant. I assume that we would proceed to examine the Chairman of the Committee who, one would expect, would be in a position either to assume responsibility for what goes in the reports or at least to indicate to us whose responsibility it is to control the contents of the reports. Once we are able to isolate the area of responsibility in that regard, we should then be able to find out the reason for the omission of the resolution.

Having found that out, it would appear to me that the work of this Committee in respect of this particular matter is complete.

The length of time that it takes to report the Proceedings, or the impressions of any other members of this House or other people as to what took place or what did not take place have, in my opinion, absolutely no relevancy whatsoever to the question that is before us, which is absolutely and clearly defined by the terms of reference that have been circulated here this morning.

If we are talking about suggestions for the steering committee, it would seem to me that the first suggestion would be to arrange a meeting where we examine the Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee, and if at the end of that meeting there appears to be any loose ends that have to be covered through any other proceedings, we might then proceed, but I would certainly not consider it relevant to have any other witnesses at the first meeting until after we have heard from the Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Skoberg?

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I think it is very clear and I can not understand the position taken by some of the members that we should not ask for, say, the House Leader to be present. It says:

...to determine the reason for the omission.

• 1130

and if you read what Mr. McGrath said on page 3587 of Hansard of December 6th, there is an indication there that this may be the real reason why it never appeared in so far as the second report is concerned. I am of the opinion that the Chairman's position is very clear as recorded in the Transport and Communication's Minutes, and I have no hesitation in saying that his position is absolutely clear and there is nothing wrong with his position in this regard. We examine the evidence that we see before us.

As far as suggesting that we have the Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee as a first witness only is concerned, I believe this really has nothing to do with it because very clearly before us in print is the position he has taken and the action that was taken in that Committee. However, what is not clear—nor is it in print—is the action that was taken by the House Leader. I believe this is a more important witness to have before this Committee than the Chairman of the Transport Committee in this particular situation.

I do appreciate the position you have taken, Mr. Chairman, in asking for suggestions from the Committee about who should be called. I think it is a remarkable position for you to take, and to criticize the suggestions that are being made really is a disservice to this Committee at this particular time.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to comment briefly on the question of relevancy regarding the suggestions I made. I think it is very relevant that the House Leader be called to give evidence before the Committee. For example, I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman—certainly Dr. Ollivier will agree—that the procedure was most unusual for a Committee Report to be tabled in the House and for concurrence; there was no concurrence moved in the Report which is the normal procedure. I would like to know why concurrence was not moved in the Report, and surely the House Leader would have something to do with this.

Regarding my suggestion on the printing of the evidence that certainly is relevant because how could I examine the resolution which I moved and which was passed by the Committee until I had a chance to examine a transcript of the evidence? My suggestion is that there was a delay in the printing of the evidence, what seemed to me to be an unusual delay. I want to find out the reason for this delay in the printing of the Evidence, especially when the evidence contained certain contentious issues.

The Chairman: I will let Mr. McGrath know right away the answer to this, but I think it would be relevant for us to have the evidence of the delay it takes for those people to print all the Minutes of Proceedings of all the committees of the House, but I do not see any... Yes, Mr. Southam?

Mr. Southam: I think we should try to keep within the terms of this reference or we are going to be here on this one thing until June if we are going to let all these little side issues come into the thing. We have the complainant here so he should have worded his motion a little bit differently if he wanted to go into all these things.

The Chairman: We are still on suggestions from the hon. members and those will be scrutinized by the steering committee. Yes, Mr. Richard?

Mr. Richard: There is only one thing, Mr. Chairman, and that is to remind Mr. McGrath that it is not correct to say that when the Chairman of a Committee presents a report to the House he asks for concurrence. That does not happen in half of the cases. But that is just...

Mr. McGrath: Do you mean it is not usual to ask for concurrence in the Committee Report?

Mr. Richard: Not a report that is going to raise... You know very well if you have been chairman that chairmen have the privilege of moving concurrence. They ask their Committees for direction usually; I did anyway. When it was felt that moving concurrence would give rise to a debate and the Committee was of the opinion that this was not the time because they had further reports to put in later, they moved concurrence at the appropriate time when it was felt that it was going to be discussed and it should be.

Mr. McGrath: But when the Report contains a recommendation for the Committee to do certain things, surely then the committee chairman must ask for concurrence of the House because, in effect, he must ask for permission of the House for the committee to do what is incorporated in the Report.

Mr. Richard: Well, you have many instances, Mr. McGrath. The Chairman for example, wanted to sit in the afternoon and they did not move concurrence because they knew that would give rise to a debate and they waited for an opportune time to do it.

• 1135

The Chairman: This is a very interesting point that could be discussed later on, but I believe it is not quite relevant to the kind of suggestions I would like to hear from hon. member as to...

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Jerome's suggestion is extremely sound. If we hear from the Chairman of the Committee in question first, it might well be that the whole matter and the terms of reference will be cleared up without the necessity for calling any further witnesses.

There are some things that concern me, naturally, about this matter, but it would appear to me that if there is a simple explanation for it the Chairman can come forward and give it, and then the Committee can file its report. If, after hearing his evidence, we decide that the matter should be broadened or pursued further, surely it is open to the Committee to make suggestions to the Chair that this be done.

For instance, it may be that if we call the government House Leader to explain his remarks in Hansard, we might also want to call Mr. McGrath who evidently pressed the Committee Chairman to put a motion before the Committee that was not seconded, according to my reading of the exhibit, and it would appear to me that we should hear from the Committee Chairman first.

Mr. McGrath: A motion in Committee does not have to be seconded, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hogarth: All these things can come out during the discourse in this Committee; whether it does or does not I do not think we should argue today. It can all come out during the discourse with respect to the activities in question.

The Chairman: Mr. Skoberg?

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move at this time that the suggestions made by the members of this Committee be referred to the steering committee for their recommendation for a future meeting.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Are there any other suggestions?

Mr. McGrath: I have one suggestion, Mr. Chairman. The outcome of this examination may have a bearing on the work of the Committee on Transport and Communications. This Committee met this morning and decided that it was going to begin its tour of the Atlantic Provinces on February 16 and I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the steering committee bear this in mind in laying down its schedule of meetings for this Committee.

The Chairman: We will discuss the matter with the steering committee. I think you have raised a very appropriate question. If we are to hear some witnesses other than Mr. Blouin then I believe we do not need to have Mr. Blouin here while we hear the other witnesses. He can give evidence and later on have a look at the Minutes of Proceedings. If, as was requested, the steering committee decides to hear Mr. Normand who was the Clerk of this Committee, then we may have a meeting next week. Then the steering committee will decide whether the Leader of the House should appear before us and if so this could be next week.

When Mr. Blouin is back here about February 10 we may dispose of the whole matter between February 10 and February 15. In my view it is not a very complicated one because the only thing we have as terms of reference, I just remind hon. members, is the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted on November 28. It is simply this. We must know all the relevant facts, but I would remind hon. members that when we start our deliberations we will have to refer to these terms of reference and stick to them.

Mr. Sullivan: I move we adjourn then, Mr. Chairman, if it is in order.

The Chairman: Committee adjourned?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 4

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1969

Respecting

Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Forest,
Fortin,
¹ Goode,
Hogarth,
² Lundrigan,
MacGuigan,

McGrath,
³ Murphy,
Nesbitt,
Richard,
Ritchie,
Rose,

Skoberg,
Sullivan,
Trudel,
Valade,
Woolliams,
Weatherhead—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

¹ Mr. Goode replaced Mr. Portelance on January 30, 1969.

² Mr. Lundrigan replaced Mr. Peddle on January 30, 1969.

³ Mr. Murphy replaced Mr. Kaplan on January 30, 1969.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

TUESDAY, December 10, 1968.

Ordered,—That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the Committee on November 28th, from the Second Report of the Committee presented to the House on November 29th, and which reads as follows:

Resolved,—That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER

The Clerk of the House of Commons.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, January 30, 1969.

(4)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.09 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Forest, Fortin, Goode, Hogarth, Jerome, Laflamme, Lundrigan, MacGuigan, McGrath, Murphy, Nesbitt, Richard, Sullivan, Trudel, Weatherhead, Woolliams—(16).

Also present: Messrs. Bell, Carter, Marceau, Pilon, Prud'homme.

Witnesses: Mr. Antonio Plouffe, Chief of Committees and Private Legislation Branch; Mr. Robert Normand, Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Chairman read a memorandum addressed to him by the Chief of the Committees and Private Legislation Branch on the delays in the printing of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, in particular, Issues Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

On a motion by Mr. Richard, the Committee agreed to table as Exhibit IV the memorandum dated January 29, 1969 from the Chief of Committees and Private Legislation Branch "Delay—Printing of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence".

The questioning of the Chief of Committees and Private Legislation Branch being completed, the Committee then questioned Mr. Normand on the Minutes of Proceedings and the Second Report to the House of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Moved by Mr. Jerome at 12.27 p.m. and

Agreed,—That the Committee adjourn to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, January 30, 1969.

The information relating to the French edition is as follows:

• 1109

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see that we have a quorum.

Among the suggestions that were made at the last meeting—we had a steering committee meeting last Tuesday—I think first among the questions raised there is one that could be disposed of regarding the matter raised by Mr. McGrath concerning what he called the unusual delay in the printing of the Minutes of the Transportation and Communications Committee.

We have here Mr. Plouffe who is Chief Clerk of Committees for the printing of the Minutes. I would first like to read the memorandum that was prepared by his staff and signed by Mr. Plouffe which simply reads as follows:

• 1110

I refer to the proceedings of your Committee at the meeting of Thursday, January 23rd, in the course of which Mr. McGrath mentioned that the delay in the printing of minutes of proceedings and evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was "unusual".

I have had a check made from my printing register for all committees at this session and on the list hereunder you will see the number of days which elapse between the date of the meeting and the printing of each issue for five (5) committees:

	English
Public Accounts	12.3
Indian Affairs and Northern Development	11
National Resources and Public Works	7
Transport and Communications ..	8
Health, Welfare and Social Affairs	6

French

Public Accounts	34
Indian Affairs and Northern Development	24.5
National Resources and Public Works	19
Transport and Communications ..	13
Health, Welfare and Social Affairs	22

Mr. McGrath, after having looked at this report, if you have or anyone has any relevant questions to ask of Mr. Plouffe who is in charge of this Committee...

Mr. McGrath: I would just like to ask one question.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. McGrath.

Mr. McGrath: I would like to ask him how long it took to print each set of evidence of the Transport and Communications Committee? Can you find that out for us?

Mr. Antonio Plouffe (Chief, Committee and Private Legislation Branch): Mr. Chairman, I have this information. Concerning Issue No. 6 of Transport, the date of the meeting was November 28, 1968. It was sent to the Printing Bureau on December 9, 1968, and it was received on December 13, 1968.

Mr. McGrath: May I interrupt you here? Does that not seem to be a bit of a delay in getting the evidence to the printer, from November 28 to December 9? Did you say that it did not go to the printer until December 9?

Mr. Plouffe: That is correct, sir.

Mr. McGrath: All right. Will you just proceed with the others and then we can make comparisons.

Mr. Plouffe: The reasons for all delays cannot be all attributed to the Committee Reporting services. This service is a related service to our branch and I am informed that it varies from one committee to another because they run into some difficulties. As you know, all evidence is taped and sometimes they have difficulty in listening to the questions and answers; it is not always very clear. Another reason would be the interpretation. It has to be revised and integrated.

Mr. McGrath: Well, could we perhaps get on with this and could you tell us how long it took to have Issues No. 7 and No. 8 printed?

Mr. Plouffe: For Issue No. 7. The meeting of December 3, 1968 was sent on December 11, 1968 and received on December 13, 1968. For Issue No. 8, the meeting of December 6, 1968 was sent on December 11, and received on December 13, 1968. For Issue No. 9, the meeting of December 9, 1968 was sent on December 13, 1968 and received on December 13, 1968.

• 1115

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Nesbitt?

Mr. Nesbitt: Could Mr. Plouffe give us any indication—I know perhaps it is not his direct responsibility—why on some occasions the tapes were sent to him the day that they were produced, as in the last case mentioned, and other days there was a delay of 12 days in receiving the printing?

Mr. Plouffe: As I stated before, from one meeting to another the Reporting services who transcribe the tapes do not have the same problems. Apparently at the last three meetings everything went fine. There might have been less French spoken and, therefore, less translation and revision. The copy went to the Printing Bureau earlier and it came back earlier.

Mr. Nesbitt: I think there is one thing perhaps some of the members are a little hazy on. When you at the Printing Bureau receive things for printing, are they in typewritten form or do you receive the tapes and then take the material off the tapes?

Mr. Plouffe: Sir, all proceedings are taped downstairs at the Reporting services. The tapes are transcribed and the evidence is in typewritten form; then it is revised and sent to the Bureau in typewritten form by my staff.

Mr. Nesbitt: Who does the revising?

Mr. Plouffe: The Reporting Services have a staff of editors and they do the editing.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: When our witness spoke of translation, he inferred that when there are few French-speaking members who speak during Committee meetings, the transcription goes faster. Does he mean that this is so because there are too few translators from French into English and from English into French?

Mr. Plouffe: Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances, there is no doubt that since we have interpretation there have been personnel problems. I am told that there have been more translators and interpreters hired and that more will be hired, in order to speed up the preparation and the printing of the text.

All these personnel, these equipment, printing workload and accommodation problems for personnel are now under review by the officials of the House including, I suppose, the Speaker. I am under the impression that everything possible is being done to obtain satisfactory results.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to inflict any injury on our witness and throw blame on his work, but I am highly interested in this subject and this may be why this impression is mistaken, if such is the case. Since when has the study been undertaken concerning the revision of the translation and reporting services staff and personnel?

Mr. Plouffe: I cannot give you a precise date but these matters that I have outlined for you have been under study since quite some time and are under thorough consideration since the adoption on December 20, of the new Standing Orders.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, will Mr. Plouffe's memorandum, that you read to us a while ago, be included among the minutes of today's proceedings?

[English]

The Chairman: Do you think it appropriate that we have this memorandum printed as an Appendix to today's Proceedings?

• 1120

Mr. Hogarth: We have Exhibits 1, 2 and 3. Could this not be Exhibit 4?

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: The members of the Committee must put forward a motion.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I have a question. The figures you have given indicate that it takes less time for the transcription of the proceedings of the Committee on Transport and Communications. I think you said eight and a half or nine and a half days. Is this an average calculated on the basis of past experience?

Mr. Plouffe: It is a fairly accurate average that might vary by a day, more or less, but it is rather accurate.

[English]

The Chairman: I believe Mr. Plouffe has prepared the time taken to print minutes of many committees so that we can have a notion of the time it takes to have the printings. I believe that after having had this memorandum we can excuse Mr. Plouffe.

I do not think we are out of our jurisdiction if we want to inquire into the kind of work that has to be done at the printing office since we have the answer to the question raised by Mr. McGrath, but if there are no other relevant questions...

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to ask a question. With reference to the Transport and Communications Committee, were all the proceedings taken by tape or was there a shorthand reporter there?

Mr. Plouffe: As you know, on November 28, the House did not sit. I am subject to correction, but at the meeting of November 28 I believe there were shorthand reporters, that is, those shorthand reporters who work on the floor of the House. They were assigned to committees. All the other meetings were taped.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it that on November 28, the evidence was not only taped but recorded by shorthand reporters?

Mr. Plouffe: I believe, it was not taped.

Mr. Woolliams: Well then, really the proceedings did not come from a tape. It came from a shorthand reporter.

Mr. Plouffe: As I say, subject to a check, but that is my impression.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if you could check on that. It seems like a very simple thing. I think we are spending a little time. I do not know just why we are dealing with that unless there is something in the proceedings that has been left out. That is the only thing

I am concerned about and once it is covered, that ends it. But if it was taken by shorthand then surely all we have to do is ask the shorthand reporter if that is a proper statement of the evidence taken at the Committee on November 28, and if it was not taken by shorthand, then we should be able, if anybody has any question about anything being left out, to have the tape played.

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, that could be a very interesting matter, but I do think at this time that we should consider just the simple question of asking if it was incorrectly reported or not. If there is anyone who thinks or believes that something was said that is not in the report, then we can perhaps inquire. But we could say this of any report that could be made.

Mr. Plouffe: I must say I am now informed that all four meetings were taped.

Mr. Woolliams: Is the tape still in existence?

The Chairman: This will be checked.

Mr. Woolliams: Have you any objections if anybody on this Committee wanted to have the tape played to have that tape played, if they wanted to go in privately and hear it to make certain whether it is correctly recorded or not. Anybody can make an error. Sometimes even the most able people in the Hansard reporters can make an error. And if somebody has any suggestions that something was left out, Mr. Chairman, would they have the privilege and the right to go in and hear the tape played? And then they could check the report of November 28 which is No. 6, so there would not be any problem in that regard.

• 1125

The Chairman: Yes, I believe such, but if there is any member who believes that as a member of this Committee he was incorrectly reported in the proceedings, then he could raise the matter. But on general grounds like this, I believe that we are quite far from our jurisdiction and the terms of reference in which we have to operate right now.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, of course, the terms of reference, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, are these. The terms of reference are clear, and the fact is if anybody has any suggestion, and I have not, because I was not on the Committee so I do not know what took place, but there must be some reason for this line of questioning. And with the greatest respect, if someone does feel that way, all I am asking is could they go in and hear the tape?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, Mr. McGrath was present at the meeting on November 28, as appears in Exhibit 2, and I was just wondering if he has any observations as to whether or not, so far as he is concerned, to his memory there was anything left out that we should perhaps have included if there were mistakes made.

Mr. McGrath: No. That is not the evidence as far as I can see.

The Chairman: Mr. Hogarth, are you through?

Mr. Hogarth: Yes, I am through. I am just asking Mr. McGrath...

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have no comments to make. The evidence was accurate as far as I am concerned. My questioning was merely to see if there was any reason for the delay in printing the evidence. I have heard from Mr. Plouffe, and that is all.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Plouffe. Mr. Fortin?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what has been decided, with regard with Mr. Woolliams' suggestion, because the interpretation is a little slow?

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams made a suggestion that if any Member sitting on the Committee on Transport and Communications considers that he has been incorrectly reported, he would be able to listen to the tape. But no member has complained of having been incorrectly quoted in the report of the Committee on Transport and Communications. If someone brings up the matter or considers that he was incorrectly quoted, he will then be able to listen to the taped proceedings. But, no one has raised the question.

[English]

We have here Mr. Robert Normand, who is the Clerk of the Transport and Communications Committee. I would invite Mr. Normand who is here, to receive the relevant questions that you would ask of him.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps, to save a bit of time, Mr. Normand could tell us first of all, did he prepare a draft report, a draft of the second report of the Committee for eventual submission?

Mr. Robert Normand (Clerk, Transport and Communications Committee): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I prepared a draft.

Mr. Nesbitt: At whose request did you prepare the draft?

Mr. Normand: I prepared the draft according to the instructions received from the Committee at the meeting held on November 28.

Mr. Nesbitt: How were these instructions given to you, Mr. Normand?

Mr. Normand: The Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure recommended—may I read this Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Nesbitt: That would be better.

Mr. Normand:

The Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications met at 11 o'clock this morning. The Chairman, Mr. Blouin, presided.

I will dispense with the members.

Your Committee agreed unanimously to the following decisions and recommendations.

The first four points dealt with agenda.

5. That the Committee report to the House asking that the scope of the Order of Reference dated October 16, 1968, be enlarged authorizing the Committee to study:

(a) Transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

(b) Claims of the Great Slave Railway Company against the Canadian National Railway Company.

• 1130

This report of the steering committee was approved, and I prepared the second report according to this.

Mr. Nesbitt: Did you prepare the report automatically, or were there any specific instructions from the Chairman or the members of the Committee to draft it?

Mr. Normand: There were no special instructions, Mr. Nesbitt. I prepared this according to the instructions from the Committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: After you prepared this draft report, to whom did you submit the report?

Mr. Normand: I put this in a file, and I deposited this on Mr. Blouin's desk.

Mr. Nesbitt: To the best of your memory, what took place after that as far as the report is concerned? Was it brought before any group of members, as far as you can recall? What happened to it then?

Mr. Normand: I would like to be nailed down a little tighter, Mr. Nesbitt. This question implicates a few things. If you mean this report was studied by the steering committee, it was.

Mr. Nesbitt: It was, with those two recommendations in it.

Mr. Normand: That is right.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can you recall the date when this took place?

Mr. Normand: Yes, sir. On November 26. That is correct, November 26. The steering committee held its meeting on November 26, and the report was concurred in on November 28.

Mr. Nesbitt: I just want to take one step at a time. Who was present at the Steering Committee on that occasion?

The Chairman: On the Steering Committee on the 26.

Mr. Normand: Mr. Blouin, Mr. Mahoney, Mr. Schreyer, Mr. Serré and Mr. Thomas from Moncton.

Mr. Nesbitt: I see.

Mr. Normand: A total of five.

Mr. Nesbitt: And then you say after that the report was submitted to the Standing Committee on Transport. When was this submitted to that Committee?

Mr. Normand: November 28 sir.

Mr. Nesbitt: November 28. Was the report prepared originally by yourself, and then, having been, as you say, approved by the Steering Committee, was it discussed by the Standing Committee on Transport?

Mr. Normand: I prepared the second report to the House following the meeting which was held on November 28 and then I submitted the whole thing to Mr. Blouin. It was deposited on his desk for his signature and tabled in the House on December 3.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is some confusion as far as I am concerned; perhaps it is my misunderstanding of it. Originally you prepared a draft second report of the Committee which you automatically would do as secretary of the Committee. That was submitted first of all to Mr. Blouin, the Chairman. Then on November 26, as I recall you saying, this was examined by the Steering Committee of which certain members were present, as you have told us.

Mr. Normand: No, that is not right sir. May I please go through this again. On November 26 the Steering Committee held a meeting and recommended to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the following decisions and recommendations. In its report the four first items were naturally just agenda for forthcoming meetings. Item No. 5 was read as follows:

That the Committee report to the House asking that the scope of the order of reference dated October 16, 1968 be enlarged authorizing the Committee to study...

And here we have the two points.

(a) Transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

and (b) the Great Slave affair.

Now, this report of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure was typed and then I submitted it to the Committee on Transport and Communications which was held on November 28 two days later.

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes.

Mr. Normand: And it was approved. Following this I prepared the second report to the House exactly as the report of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure read.

Mr. Nesbitt: And that report was approved at the commencement of the meeting on November 28?

Mr. Normand: Well, the report of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure was approved, yes that is right.

Mr. Nesbitt: At the commencement of the meeting of the Committee on the 28?

Mr. Normand: That is right.

• 1135

Mr. Nesbitt: Then at the conclusion of the Committee meeting on that day you then drafted a report for the Chairman, Mr. Blouin?

Mr. Normand: That is right.

Mr. Nesbitt: Did you discuss the contents of the report with Mr. Blouin?

Mr. Normand: No, sir. I prepared the report according to instructions that I received at the Committee and I put this on his desk for his signature.

The Chairman: Would you refer—I am sorry, Mr. Nesbitt.

Mr. Nesbitt: It is all right, certainly, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I would just like you to refer to the kind of instructions that you received from the Standing Committee. You said that you received instructions from the Committee to prepare this report. Could you read it?

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, if I may go through this on page...

The Chairman: Simply refer to the page.

Mr. Normand: Yes. On page 72, Issue No. 6, right hand column. Maybe I should start with the statement that was made—by Mr. Douglas.

Mr. Douglas: That is what I was going to ask. I understood you were going to ask for an order of the House to permit us to deal with these claims.

We were talking about claims at this time.

The Chairman: Yes, we are. Next Tuesday a report will be presented to the House.

Following this Mr. Nesbitt:

Mr. Nesbitt: I presume, then, that between now and Tuesday, Mr. Chairman; the first report of this Committee will be prepared for submission to the House and that it will contain a request to have a hearing on the claims against the CNR concerning the Great Slave Lake Railway and also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces?

Now the Chairman:

The Chairman: That is correct. That report will be presented to the House on Tuesday. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Hogarth.

Mr. Hogarth: I notice on page 108 of the same volume of the proceedings of the Committee on November 28 that the resolution with which we are concerned in these proceedings was moved by Mr. McGrath. On page 109 it was voted on by the Committee. Just for the record that resolution was:

That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

Was there ever a resolution of the Committee that that be reported to the House?

Mr. Normand: I never had any precise instruction from the Committee; that is to say, I did not receive any precise resolution for the Committee to report this resolution to the House.

Mr. Hogarth: When resolutions are passed in Committee, is it the normal procedure when they have further resolutions that such resolutions be reported to the House if they want them included in any report?

The Chairman: I am just asking myself, Mr. Hogarth, if this question could be asked of the witness.

Mr. Hogarth: I will withdraw the question, because I appreciate that might have legal implications.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Woolliams: I just want to bring this to your attention, and I think I can come to grips with this problem very quickly so we can expedite this matter. I do not see any reason to play around the edges. On Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of Canada No. 56 on December 3, 1968 at 2.30 o'clock p.m. it says:

Mr. Blouin, from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the Second Report of the said Committee, which was read as follows:

Your Committee recommends that its Order of Reference be enlarged allowing it to consider the following:

I am not going to worry about anything but the thing we are here concerned with.

1. The problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces.

I suggest to you, Mr. Witness, that the problems in reference to transportation in the Atlantic Provinces certainly are connected with this resolution which my friend Mr. Hogarth has already read in, which in brief says:

That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation...

Was this resolution and its recommendations left out, in your opinion, in the Second Report which was filed and became part of the record of the House of Commons?

Mr. Normand: No.

Mr. Woolliams: All right. Would you now read from the Second Report where the resolution is in that report.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I think the witness is not responding to the question, because you see the report was obviously left out. The resolution was obviously left out of the Report and I think my friend wants to know why. Is that correct?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes. First of all I want to know if it was left out. I think it is correct the answer would be "yes"; and secondly, if it was left out, which is very good and I appreciate Mr. Hogarth who has come to very serious grips with the problem, why it was left out?

The Chairman: This is the matter, but you can draw your own conclusion, Mr. Woolliams. First, I would say—

• 1140

Mr. Woolliams: I am asking if he knows. We can draw inferences as long as we like, but if this witness said it was left out because the Steering Committee wanted it left out, or because the Steering Committee did not meet and they wanted it in but the Chairman left it out, or somebody in the Committee said it should be left out, I want to find out that evidence. If the answer is that it was suggested by the Steering Committee and the Steering Committee was composed of members of all parties, I think then we have come to grips with the matter. But here is what the member said, and this is why the Speaker ruled. Mr. James McGrath said this:

My question of privilege is based on the fact that the resolution adopted by the committee on November 28 was, in my view, deliberately omitted from its report to the house on November 29; that it constitutes an important part of the committee's recommendation to visit the Atlantic provinces, and thereby infringes upon the rights and privileges of myself and the other members of that committee who by majority vote moved its adoption.

That is the reason I have asked the question. Now I would like to re-state that question. Was it left out in the second report?

Mr. Normand: I did not receive any instructions from the Committee to report the resolution to the House.

Mr. Woolliams: And is that the reason it was left out?

Mr. Normand: It was not left out; I simply did not receive any instructions to report it in.

Mr. Woolliams: Who gave you those instructions?

Mr. Normand: Nobody—I did not receive any instructions from the Committee to report this resolution to the House.

Mr. Woolliams: Is it not a fact, with our knowledge of committee workings, that gentlemen in your capacity who hold such jobs—and you do an excellent job—generally prepare the report and then the report is examined by the steering committee? Actually, the hard work of drafting is done by yourself.

Mr. Normand: It has been studied by the steering committee, Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Woolliams: All right but before you drafted the report did the steering committee make suggestions to you, or did you just draft a report without any instructions whatsoever?

Mr. Normand: I drafted the report according to the instructions received from the Committee on November 28.

Mr. Woolliams: And what were those instructions?

An hon. Member: He has already referred to them.

Mr. Woolliams: Now I want to hear this.

The Chairman: This is the precise point. I do not mind if the witness repeats what he has already said.

Mr. Jerome: This is the third time we have been over it.

Mr. Woolliams: All right. Where are those instructions found, and what were they?

Mr. Normand: Page 72, right-hand column, starting with the Chairman:

Yes, we are. Next Tuesday a report will be presented to the House.

Then Mr. Nesbitt says:

I presume, then, that between now and Tuesday, Mr. Chairman; the first report of this Committee will be prepared for submission to the House and that it will contain a request to have a hearing on the claims against the CNR concerning the Great Slave Lake Railway and also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces?

The Chairman: That is correct. That report will be presented to the House on Tuesday. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: All right. Now you have established that and I thank you very much.

This motion that we are talking about that was omitted does deal with transportation of the Atlantic Provinces, does it not?

Mr. Normand: Yes, sir.

Mr. Woolliams: And that resolution was moved subsequent to those proceedings that you have read from on page 72, was it not?

Mr. Normand: Three hours later, yes.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right. And you would agree with me, I am sure, that the resolution in question does concern the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces—because Newfoundland is a part of the Atlantic Provinces and there is no doubt about it that when we are dealing with transportation the railways are an important part of transportation for Newfoundland.

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, I have no objection to your asking any relevant questions of the witness but I do not think you should argue the subject itself with him.

● 1145

Mr. Woolliams: I am not being argumentative; I am asking. This is my question: Do you consider the resolution requesting that the Committee visit Newfoundland before there is any change in transportation in so far as the railways are concerned a part of the problems of transportation of the Atlantic Provinces.

Mr. Normand: The resolution is worded in such a way, yes, sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Right. So that the instructions you read from on page 72 really instructed this Committee to deal with the Atlantic Provinces' problem as to transportation, and as this resolution is dealing directly with transportation then I would say that your instructions were such that it should have been included in that report. Is that not correct?

The Chairman: I am not going to allow such questions to be asked of the witness. It is part of our duty to make this decision, Mr. Woolliams, not the Clerk.

Mr. Woolliams: Well I am asking his opinion. He drafted the report.

The Chairman: I will not allow these questions. We are not here to ask of this witness any questions of opinion.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, let me put it this way. He is an expert witness but let me put it this way—and if you rule me out of order...

Mr. Hogarth: Wait a minute.

The Chairman: No, Mr. Woolliams. You can rephrase your questions but I will not allow you to ask of the witness any questions regarding his own opinion. He is not here for that reason.

Mr. Woolliams: Well having drafted the report to assist the Committee did you consider in drafting it that that resolution dealt with the problem of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces?

Mr. Normand: I realized that this resolution deals with problems of the Atlantic Provinces but, furthermore, I also realized that I did not receive any instructions to report it to the House from the Committee.

Mr. Woolliams: But your instructions did say that the Committee's second report should include the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces, and the stopping of railroads or a decision in that regard would be a matter dealing with the Atlantic Provinces. In drafting the report did you take that into consideration?

Mr. Normand: I only acted upon instructions received from the Committee, Mr. Chairman, which is clearly defined in what I read a while ago.

Mr. Woolliams: I take it then that the resolution, as far as you are concerned was not reported because you did not feel it was part of your instructions.

The Chairman: I am not going to allow these questions.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, good gracious, that is the whole point.

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, the witness is not here to express his own feelings about what should be done or not. On many occasions Mr. Normand has answered very precisely to precise questions you asked, but I would think that you personally believe too that he is not here to give his own opinion.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, may I speak on a point of order?

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have a resolution which instructed the Committee—found on page 72, and we have another resolution, on the same date of November 28—and of course it is very broad in its sense: the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces. Now the problem meeting the Committee at that moment, from reading the reports very carefully, was not the question of ships and harbours—not even the question of busses; the whole problem was that the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of a decision to abandon railway service. There was a suggestion, and it may have gone as far as an order, that the railway service in Newfoundland be abandoned. Now what surely the Committee passed, and it was approved by the majority of the Committee at that time, was that before that decision be made, affecting the transportation in the Atlantic Provinces, that the Committee visit Newfoundland. Now if that is not important and if that is not in the terms of reference in reference to Votes and Proceedings, then I do not know why we are sitting here—we are wasting our time. I am merely asking the witness, with the greatest respect—and I mean this, sir. He drafted the Committee report. It is my experience over the years that those gentlemen who do that do an excellent job. Sometimes we may not agree with it—we may want to delete something or add something. I am merely asking him if, in his instructions he received on page 72, he considered that resolution a problem of the transportation in the Atlantic Provinces; if he did, that was part of his instructions, therefore why was the resolution left out? That is all I am asking him. Surely that is a relevant question, surely that is necessary so that we here can come to a proper decision on reasonable evidence as reasonable men.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, is my understanding correct, that this is a point of order?

The Chairman: No, no.

Mr. Hogarth: He made it a point of order.

The Chairman: I am going to allow the question as rephrased.

• 1150

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, and before he answers I want to say that you are being most fair and courteous.

Witness, you have heard the question. Can you tell us in Committee then why the resolution was omitted from the report when I have suggested it is part of the problems of transportation of the Atlantic Provinces? Can you give us the answer to that?

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, I can only state that I did not receive any instruction from the Committee to report it in the House?

Mr. Woolliams: Did you consider it part of the Atlantic transportation problem in preparing the draft of the report?

Mr. Normand: Well, I had to because it was in the minutes, although I also considered that I did not receive any instructions to report it in.

Mr. Woolliams: Now this may not be a proper question for you to answer, but in preparing your report—there are motions adopted and passed by every committee and, of course, they are important parts of the proceedings—do you consider an instruction or a motion carrying instructions important enough to include in a report when you are drafting it? Is that your general practice?

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, this might be a matter of law but I think, as in a council of war or committee, they speak by resolution. However, as Clerk of this Committee you must realize, I believe, that he has to follow the instructions he receives from this very Committee—and the only instructions that can be given to a Clerk is by a resolution.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, the instructions were given before the Committee heard the evidence. Then, after the evidence—may I finish, Mr. Hogarth, and then I am prepared to listen to you.

Mr. Hogarth: I do hope you do.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not finished. I have never been sarcastic with you, and I do not intend to start this morning.

Mr. Hogarth: That is fine.

Mr. Woolliams: I would appreciate your giving me the kind of hearing that I intend to give you.

Mr. Hogarth: I was merely going to...

Mr. Woolliams: I am now going to speak on a point of order. Here we have instructions, and again I say they are very clear—"Request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces". Subsequent to page 72, some hour or half an hour later, a resolution was passed dealing with the very instructions and yet it was not included in the report. It was not included, with the greatest respect to the witness, in the draft report. He said he followed instructions. If the abandonment of the railways in Newfoundland is not a problem of the Atlantic Provinces then nothing is a problem.

I submit that it is certainly a part of the instructions. If it is not, then I am at loss to understand.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams, you are indicating to the witness that he should have considered the importance of the problem. The testimony he has already given before us has given no indication whatsoever relative to the importance of the relevant facts that could have been put in some further resolutions passed.

The Clerk has simply stated that he received instructions to prepare a draft report that was submitted to the Chairman for tabling in the House. This is what he says.

I do not think it is appropriate to ask of him any questions relative to judging the importance or the non-importance of such other matters as could have been discussed later on.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I could add it in my next question. I take it it was left out of the report because you did not feel you were instructed either by the instructions given at page 72 or later, or at any time, that it should be included in the report? Is that your evidence?

Mr. Normand: The resolution in question was not put in the report for the reason I have stated previously and which I will repeat now, that I did not receive any precise definite instructions from the Committee to report this resolution to the House, or to include it, for that matter, in the second report.

Mr. Woolliams: Were you present when your draft report was considered by the Chairman or when the steering committee considered it?

Mr. Normand: Yes.

• 1155

Mr. Woolliams: Did anyone on the steering committee suggest that the resolution we are dealing with be omitted or be included in your report?

Mr. Normand: The sub-committee had its meeting prior to November 28.

Mr. Woolliams: In other words then, the instructions relative to the report were given before the full evidence was heard on November 28? Yet the report really covered all the evidence of November 28, did it not?

Mr. Hogarth: How could it?

The Chairman: This is a matter for judgment; it is not a matter of fact.

Mr. Woolliams: Was there any other report? Your instructions are given at page 72, and considerable evidence was given after that. Was there any other report that dealt with this resolution, that you know of?

The Chairman: Which one?

Mr. Woolliams: The resolution in reference to the Transportation Committee's visiting the Atlantic Provinces before they abandoned the railways in that Province?

Mr. Normand: I am sorry, sir; I fail to understand your question.

Mr. Woolliams: All right; I will put it very clearly. Your instructions in reference to your report were given to you, or can be found, at page 72. The resolution dealing with the abandonment of the railways in Newfoundland is to be found on page 108, which is subsequent to the instructions we are talking about.

Mr. Normand: That is right, yes, sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Was this motion in question on page 108 included in a third report, or in any other report, subsequent to the second report?

Mr. Normand: No, sir.

Mr. Hogarth: Has there been any other report?

Mr. Woolliams: Was all the evidence that was given after page 72, and any instructions, ignored by you when you drafted the report on the date of November 28?

The Chairman: I do not believe it is fair Mr. Woolliams, to use the word "ignored".

Mr. Woolliams: Well, omitted; not looked at, or not used?

The Chairman: He is not there to judge.

Mr. Woolliams: I am merely asking this: Did you use any of the evidence before the Committee given on November 28 after the instructions were laid down at page 72 of No. 6 of the Transport and Communications Committee? There are 108 pages of evidence. That means that 36 pages of evidence and motions and proceedings were recorded after the instructions found on page 72. Was any of the evidence contained in those 36 pages, including the motion, used in drafting a report?

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit, very humbly, that for the Clerk of the Committee to act he needs a motion. And in preparing my second report to the House I acted upon a motion of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which is found in the Minutes of Proceedings and backed up on page 72; but I did not receive any instructions to report anything else to the House.

Mr. Woolliams: I read again from 72, also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces.

When one looks at the motion that we passed, or adopted, by the Committee at page 108, it deals with the very thing that the instructions dealt with, but it merely says that we do not abandon railways until the Committee visits Newfoundland.

When there is a request that the Committee at some date agree to visit the Provinces and one reads that together with the further instruction in the motion on page 108, that the Committee should visit before the railways are abandoned, that, to me, should surely be part of the instructions.

I come now to my next question: Did any one on the steering committee, or any member of this Committee, before the report was filed in the House of Commons, ever suggest that that motion on page 108 of the proceedings on November 28 be made part of that report?

Mr. Normand: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: Did anyone suggest to you that it be left out of the report?

Mr. Normand: Again, no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: How many people considered your report before it became part of the proceedings of the House of Commons?

● 1200

Mr. Normand: The report...

An hon. Member: How does he know?

Mr. Woolliams: Because he was at the steering committee.

How many are members of this Committee?

Mr. Hogarth: In his presence?

The Chairman: He cannot answer these questions. He said that he prepared the draft report and put it on Mr. Blouin's desk.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lundrigan: Should not the witness indicate that he cannot answer the question. This, to me, would be the proper...

The Chairman: Well, I must . . .

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, may I finish my point of order?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lundrigan: I think there has been ample evidence here this morning of a bit of coaching on the part of a number of hon. members—and I would even say the Chair—as to the evidence being submitted by the witness. I think it is quite obvious that if the witness cannot answer the question, if he does not have the evidence to support his position, that he should then be allowed to make that statement.

The Chairman: The witness is here but he is not here to answer any questions that are not judged to be relevant questions by the Chairman. This is my duty and I intend to continue on this ground.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your responsibility in that regard and I think it is quite proper to rule a question out of order, but to indicate to the witness that perhaps he does not have the evidence to answer the question—which was indicated a moment ago—I do not think is ruling the question as the Chair should. Nobody is disputing your ruling as to whether the question is in order. I think that is the responsibility of the Chair.

The Chairman: If the questions which are ruled out of order could be rephrased in such a way that the witness could answer them, I will allow them.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be ruled that question is not in order and that it should be rephrased, rather than ruling that the witness does not have the evidence to answer the question. That is my point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Did Mr. Macdonald, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, every suggest . . .

Mr. MacGuigan: On this same point of order, I think it is quite clear when you rule the witness does not have the evidence on which to answer the question that in effect you are ruling the question is out of order. I think that is the answer to the hon. member's question. You are making such a ruling. You may not be using that exact formula, but that is the effect of it.

Mr. Lundrigan: My point of order was directed to the Chairman and I accept the Chairman's decision. If we have a second chairman with us, then I think this should be indicated to the group.

Mr. Richard: Anybody is allowed to speak here.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I think we are all entitled to make submissions to the Chair, not just members of the opposition party.

An hon. Member: Go ahead and make your submission.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry that we have had this interruption. I will preface my question this way. On page 3587 of Hansard Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) said:

I have not studied this; I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

Did Mr. Macdonald or any member of this Committee or of the House of Commons ever suggest in your presence at any time when this report was under consideration by the Steering Committee or the Chairman that the resolution be left out because it was out of order?

Mr. Normand: No, sir.

Mr. Sullivan: I am sure that is the answer. We do not have to go on for another half an hour.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, if my good friends came here to block the evidence, to cover up everything and sweep it under the carpet, it is obvious by the interruptions that they have made this morning that they are not really interested in finding out what is going on.

The Chairman: I rely on the goodwill of all the members of this Committee to confine their remarks to the facts and the evidence which has already been given. I do not think it would be worthwhile for any one of us to enter into an argument. Mr. Woolliams has asked questions of the witness and the witness has answered. If there are other relevant facts, let us go on.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but with the greatest of respect, Mr. Chairman—and you have not done it—when I am asking questions the hon. members across the way who belong to the Liberal Party in the government are saying, "We have had that answer, we know the answer". That was the first time I put the question in reference to Mr. Macdonald and the first time I put the question in reference to the Steering Committee, and then we have these remarks to the effect that the questions were asked previously and they were not relevant to the issue. In my opinion they are relevant. I am going to abide by your ruling. I may not agree with your ruling; that is my privilege. I have my rights in this Committee. I came here with a certain degree of responsibility. They may have come here with a certain degree of responsibility and instructions, but I am merely asking this witness sir, with the greatest respect, certain questions to find out why a motion did not become part of a report in the House of Commons.

• 1205

Mr. Hogarth: I have listened to this—

Mr. Woolliams: Well, of course—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Hogarth is not interested in the evidence.

Mr. Hogarth: I am fascinated by the evidence.

Mr. Woolliams: He is interested in keeping the facts under the table.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Hogarth: I am fascinated by the evidence. However, I might say that this witness has explained with abundant clarity why that resolution was not included in the report. I do not see why we have to go on.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Hogarth has said it is abundantly clear. With the greatest respect, I think it is abundantly not clear, and I have a right to my opinion. He has a right to his opinion.

The Chairman: If you have any other questions, Mr. Woolliams—

Mr. Woolliams: I have other questions but when I am putting them I do not need these kinds of interruptions or these kinds of suggestions from the hon. member, Mr. Hogarth.

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add that as this question has been answered once we should not go over it four or five times. I am suggesting, with respect, that the last member has gone over everything that Mr. Nesbitt went over, and then he has done so two or three more times. I do not think this should be a platform. We are here to make a finding, not to listen to a witness being abused.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, on the point of order, I have not abused this witness. I respect this witness. I respect his word. I suggest with the greatest respect, that Mr. Nesbitt did not ask any of the questions I have asked.

The Chairman: I do not see any point of order in this. We will not go any further. Mr. Woolliams, do you have any other questions to ask the witness?

Mr. Woolliams: I want to proceed. When the report went to the Steering Committee, after you drafted it, was there any discussion by anybody at the Steering Committee level in reference to the motion that was passed by this Committee and which is found on page 108?

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, this report was not referred to the Steering Committee.

Mr. Woolliams: That ends it. Was it referred to the Chairman of this Committee?

Mr. Normand: It was put on his desk.

Mr. Woolliams: Right. Did you have any discussion with him in reference to the report after you put it on his desk?

Mr. Normand: Let us just say that he did not call me.

Mr. Woolliams: Right. Thank you very much. I do not want any more answers.

Mr. Jerome: Witness, may I just ask you one or two questions. You have already told us in your evidence this morning that you drafted this report on the basis of instructions that have been made public. Was the report that was ultimately tabled in the House of Commons in the form in which you prepared the draft, or to your knowledge were any substantial changes made in it in the interval?

Mr. Normand: It was made exactly as I prepared it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jerome: Thank you. That is the only question I have.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have only a few questions to ask. Can the witness tell us if, normally, the instructions given to him by the Committee are in writing or oral?

Mr. Normand: The instructions given to the Clerk of the Committee are given through resolutions. And the Clerk is bound by the resolutions that are adopted during the meeting.

Mr. Fortin: Is it the same case as far as the Subcommittee is concerned?

Mr. Normand: It is exactly the same thing, Mr. Chairman. The report of the Subcommittee is drafted according to the instructions of the Subcommittee and then submitted to the Committee.

Mr. Fortin: When a Committee holds a meeting, is everything that is said published in the public report?

Mr. Normand: That depends. Are you talking about the subcommittee or the Committee meeting?

Mr. Fortin: My question deals with both the subcommittee and for the whole Committee.

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, for the subcommittee, nothing is taped. But on the other hand, the meeting of the Committee itself is taped.

Mr. Fortin: When you have to have a report adopted, and when the Subcommittee does not sit, who adopts it?

Mr. Normand: Would you please rephrase the question?

Mr. Fortin: Suppose that as Clerk, you have to prepare the report of the Committee you have to submit it afterwards to the Subcommittee to have it adopted, and the Subcommittee does not sit, who adopts the report?

Mr. Normand: If you are speaking of the Subcommittee, on Agenda and Procedure, the report it makes, if it makes one, has to be adopted by the Committee. If it is not submitted to the meeting,...

• 1210

Mr. Fortin: Had the report tabled on Mr. Blouin's desk been adopted beforehand?

Mr. Normand: At the Committee meeting, I prepared the report according to the instructions given to me during the meeting of the Committee held on the 28th of November.

The Chairman: The meeting of the Committee.

Mr. Normand: Yes, during the Committee meeting of November 28.

Mr. Fortin: Would you tell me, Mr. witness, if I take a practical example what happens? In the record of the 6th of December proceedings No. 8, it says:

Resolved—That nomination be closed.

It states:

The vote on a show of hands resulted in a tie.

It seems that a vote had been taken. Then you explained who voted for and who voted against. The result is 9 to 9. Then, you concluded:

After discussion, no decision having been reached on the main motion and nine members having walked out...

You took notes of the Committee's proceedings, you are the Committee clerk and you report the facts as they occur. Tell me what becomes of these notes you have just taken?

Mr. Normand: As far as the 6th of November session is concerned, which is in the No. 8 issue of the Proceedings, when we selected the Chairman of the Committee of Transport and Communications, the report was drawn up and when the nine members withdrew the meeting was adjourned.

Mr. Fortin: In your experience then does the resolution carry when there is a tied vote? I know it is not that important.

Mr. Normand: It does not carry, Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: So the motion is dropped and the committee goes on with its proceedings?

Mr. Normand: No, it adjourns.

Mr. Fortin: It adjourns?

Mr. Normand: Yes.

Mr. Fortin: So you send the whole thing for adoption and printing.

Mr. Normand: Exactly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fortin: In other words, it is not you who sends this report for printing of translation?

Mr. Normand: I only report what happens at the meeting.

Mr. Fortin: Do you send the work to Mr. Plouffe's department?

Mr. Normand: Do you mean to the printers'?

Mr. Fortin: Yes.

Mr. Normand: I do all the preliminary work. I prepare the envelopes and preliminary pages and then wait for the evidence to be sent along. When I get the record of the evidence I send everything to the printers'.

Mr. Fortin: In other words, does the Chairman of the Committee before presenting his report to the House, does he say that the report is correct and accurate, or does he comment on it, or does he take the report and table it in the House without consulting you?

The Chairman: Could you be more precise, Mr. Fortin. You may ask whether after having prepared the report, the Chairman made comments on that particular report rather than going...

Mr. Fortin: I think we are dealing with an exception. And I want to establish what happens normally, so that I can decide whether this in an exception to the rule or not?

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Fortin: After you have prepared your report and submitted it to the Chairman of the Committee, before he tables it in the House or presents it to the House for adoption, does he normally make any comment on it to you?

Mr. Normand: Let us say that if everything is all right, I hear no more about it. If there is an error then the Chairman will get in touch with me and tell me: "Such and such a thing does not appear to be right."

• 1215

Mr. Fortin: And in this particular case, you feel everything was right?

Mr. Normand: Let us say that I got no telephone call from the Chairman.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, I want to clarify one point only. I think three members questioned the processing of the report prepared by the witness. One said that the report was prepared and then submitted to the Chairman, but there were no further meetings. It was presented in its original form with no corrections. Can the witness confirm this?

Mr. Normand: Right. I prepared the report, put it on Mr. Blouin's desk in the presence of his secretary. And that was the last I heard of it.

Mr. Trudel: There was no meeting to discuss the contents of the report. You submitted it for signature only?

Mr. Normand: Right.

Mr. Trudel: Thank you.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any other questions to Mr. Normand?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: One question, Mr. Chairman. After Mr. Blouin presented his report to the House for adoption certain events took place in the House concerning that report. Certain members then made statements and raised a question of privilege. Did Mr. Blouin get in touch with you after that?

Mr. Normand: No, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question. The witness has said "Let us just say that I received no telephone call from the Chairman" and again, a little later, identically the same statement, "Let us just say that I received no telephone call from the Chairman". Let me just ask, did the witness receive any communications at all from the Chairman, or was he in any way involved in any discussions with the Chairman regarding his draft report which formulated the second report which was accepted by the House?

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. I must have misled the members while answering this question. I should have answered, "no", shortly—no phone calls, no communications whatsoever, nothing.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I personally am ready to hear Mr. Blouin.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any other questions that could be asked?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I have another similar question. Did the witness in any way contact the Chairman of the Committee subsequent to the placing of the report on the desk of the Chairman?

Mr. Normand: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not try to reach Mr. Blouin.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure who I could ask this question of but in the event of an error in judgment which may be made by a Clerk, is there any recourse to members of the Committee or members of the House of Commons concerning corrective procedures which could be adopted?

The Chairman: Well, there is an obvious recourse. After this very resolution was passed at the end of the meeting on November 28, at the following meeting the Committee could have requested the Chairman to table another report in the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: At the following meeting.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a question with this witness that I do not think is on the record. Was the state of the proceedings of this Committee such that further reports were anticipated? I am referring to November 28; this was not a final report, was it? Was the state of proceedings such on November 28 that further reports were going to be made from this Committee to the House? Did you anticipate that? This was not a final report, that is what I am getting at.

Mr. Normand: Oh, no.

Mr. Hogarth: So further reports would be anticipated after November 28?

Mr. Normand: Well, if the Committee has an Order of Reference in front of it, it can submit further reports...

Mr. Hogarth: Yes.

Mr. Normand: ...but the state of affairs after was that when the estimates were recalled to the House, no Order of Reference was before the Committee.

Mr. Hogarth: I appreciate that, but the point I am making is that after November 28, after the resolution of Mr. McGrath was passed by the Committee, there were still further reports contemplated from this Committee on the terms of reference it originally had. Is that not so, or do you know?

Mr. Normand: I cannot say at this stage, Mr. Chairman. I do not know.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I suppose we should determine whether we are finished with this witness. It appears that we are.

• 1220

The Chairman: I was going to ask the members if they had any other questions to ask Mr. Normand.

Mr. Woolliams: I just have one more question. To follow up from what Mr. Hogarth said, which is in line with what the witness has said in reference to my question, as the report was not referred to the standing committee and was not referred to the steering committee, to the best of your knowledge, having read the report that was finally filed in the House of Commons, were there any omissions from or additions to your original draft?

Mr. Jerome: I asked him that and he said, "no".

Mr. Normand: No omissions, sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Were there any additions?

Mr. Normand: No.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness just one last question? Does he, in fact, say that there was an error in judgment as to the interpretation of instructions on the final report?

The Chairman: This is a matter for us to decide. I would allow you to ask the question of Mr. Normand of whether he followed the usual practice as Clerk of this Committee. This question, I think, would be more precise and more appropriate than asking him if he made an error in judgment.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am asking, simply, Mr. Chairman, if he would say that the instructions did indicate that he should have reported the resolution.

Mr. Normand: I did not receive any instructions from the Committee to report this resolution to the House, Mr. Chairman—I repeat again.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, he does answer my question by saying that there was no error in judgment; he interprets this as meaning that the instructions were not given. That is what he is actually saying.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: After the Clerk has his report adopted and has it sent to the printer, does he receive a copy from the printer for adoption and to check whether it is consistent?

Mr. Normand: You mean if the printed copy is adopted as such?

Mr. Fortin: Yes.

Mr. Normand: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Forest.

Mr. Forest: A brief preliminary question. How long have you been Committee Clerk?

Mr. Normand: Nine to ten years.

Mr. Forest: The Chairman said the question would be in order. Did you follow the normal procedure, as you do as a rule, in making the report of the Committee proceedings?

Mr. Normand: I followed the usual procedure, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Nesbitt?

Mr. Nesbitt: One very brief final question. Could the witness tell us or give us any explanation as to why, after he drafted the report under the instructions that he felt he had, the draft report was not submitted? It was only submitted to the Chairman and not to the steering committee and not to the standing committee.

The Chairman: In all fairness to the witness, Mr. Nesbitt, if you refer again to page 72 you will see that this draft report was, in the end, in the hands of the Chairman at the time and there were precise instructions, precisely related in the report—

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps you misunderstand my question, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I might, yes.

Mr. Nesbitt: On page 72 it is quite clear there are certain specific instructions given by the Committee to the Secretary to draw up a report and then certain events took place afterwards at the place of the meeting. After the meeting, presumably, the Secretary of the Committee drafted a report which, as he has told us, he submitted to the Chairman, Mr. Blouin. I am merely asking if, after he submitted his draft report to the Chairman, he could give us any reason—maybe he cannot, I do not know—why that draft report was not submitted to a meeting of the steering committee and then subsequently to a meeting of the standing committee.

Mr. Normand: Mr. Chairman, I can only say that the Chairman of the Committee should be the one to answer this.

Mr. Woolliams: I think that is a good idea.

The Chairman: Mr. MacGuigan?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, is it the normal procedure for a report which has already been approved by a steering committee and then by the committee to be further submitted, beyond the Chairman, to the steering committee?

Mr. Normand: Not that I know of, sir, unless it is a crucial report—a very lengthy report, for example on the crisis in Nigeria; but aside from this, for routine reports, not that I know of, sir. I am sorry—not that I know of.

Mr. McGrath: Did you consider this particular report routine?

The Chairman: We all understood that it was not routine.

• 1225

Thank you, Mr. Normand.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, if we have finished with this witness, there has been some indication that there is a desire to hear the Chairman, Mr. Blouin, which seems natural. I understand that Mr. Blouin is expected back in Ottawa about February 10. I wonder if members of this Committee might agree at this time the Committee adjourn until such time as Mr. Blouin arrives in Ottawa so that he can be heard. Is that not a sensible way to proceed?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the Member's remarks. I think we have enough facts on hand to question Mr. Blouin to the best advantage.

[English]

The Chairman: Before I put this motion for adjournment, Mr. Jerome, we have here Mr. Ollivier. I realize that it is 12.30 p.m. There were some suggestions made in the steering committee on Tuesday that we call on Mr. Ollivier, who is the legal adviser of the House of Commons, if some members had any questions to ask of him about the usual rules and so on. Because of the time, it might be more appropriate to adjourn and if, later on, we decide to ask questions of Mr. Ollivier, then we could advise the steering committee that we would like to have him with us. I want to thank him for having been here this morning.

Is this meeting adjourned? Yes, Mr. MacGuigan.

Mr. MacGuigan: I just want to say that while I am quite agreeable to adjournment, I do not want to be taken to agree to calling Mr. Blouin. It seems to me that we now have the evidence we need. We have found the reason. The Clerk has testified that he prepared the report; that the final report in the House is the report he prepared; that he received no instructions from anybody and I believe we have the reason.

The Chairman: As there has been a motion made, this meeting is adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE
ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 5

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1969
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1969

Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport
and Communications

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

INCLUDING THIRD REPORT TO THE HOUSE

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

¹ Cafik,	MacGuigan,	Skoberg,
² Deakon,	McGrath,	⁵ Sullivan,
Forest,	Murphy,	Trudel,
Fortin,	³ Peddle,	Valade,
Goode,	Richard,	Woolliams—(20).
Hogarth,	Ritchie,
Lundrigan,	⁴ Schreyer,

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4) (b),

¹ Mr. Cafik replaced Mr. Weatherhead on February 11, 1969.

² Mr. Deakon replaced Mr. Sullivan on February 11, 1969.

³ Mr. Peddle replaced Mr. Nesbitt on February 10, 1969.

⁴ Mr. Schreyer replaced Mr. Rose on February 11, 1969.

⁵ Mr. Sullivan replaced Mr. Deakon on February 13, 1969.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

TUESDAY, December 10, 1968.

Ordered,—That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the Committee on November 28th, from the Second Report of the Committee presented to the House on November 29th, and which reads as follows:

Resolved,—That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

THURSDAY, February 13, 1969

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of Tuesday, December 10, 1968, your Committee had the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications under consideration, to determine the reason for the omission from the Report of a certain resolution adopted by that Committee, which Report was presented to the House on December 3, 1968.

This matter having been raised in the House as a question of privilege and the Speaker having ruled that there was a prima facie case of privilege, it remained for your Committee to decide:

1. If there was a question of privilege involved, and
2. The reason for the omission of the resolution referred to above.

Your Committee held four meetings and heard the following witnesses:

Mr. Antonio Plouffe, Chief of the Committees and Private Legislation Branch;

Mr. Robert Normand, Clerk of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications;

Mr. Gustave Blouin, M.P., former Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications;

Dr. Maurice Ollivier, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

Your Committee reports that the reason for the omission is that it was never moved and concurred in that the said resolution adopted by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be part of its Second Report.

An act which constitutes a breach of privilege being, inter alia, disrespect to the House, disobedience to its orders, or interference with its procedure, your Committee, in consequence of what has been said, is of the opinion that there has been no breach of privilege.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues Nos. 3 to 5 inclusive) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, February 11, 1969.

(5)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 4.05 p.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Cafik, Deakon, Forest, Fortin, Hogarth, Jerome, Laflamme, MacGuigan, McGrath, Murphy, Ritchie, Schreyer, Skoberg, Trudel, Woolliams (15).

Also present: Messrs. Allmand, Deachman, Portelance.

Witnesses: Mr. Gustave Blouin, M.P.; Dr. P. M. Ollivier, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

The Committee questioned Mr. Blouin concerning the proceedings and the Second Report to the House of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Committee questioned the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel concerning legal aspects of its Order of Reference dated December 10, 1968.

Moved by Mr. Jerome and Agreed—That this Committee report to the House of Common pursuant to the terms of reference of the Order of the House dated, Tuesday, December 10, 1968, on the basis of evidence received to this date.

The amendment of Mr. McGrath to this motion—

That the resolution dealing with rail passenger in Newfoundland adopted by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be included in the Committee's Second Report now before the House—was ruled out of order by the Chair.

At 5.50 p.m., the meeting adjourned to the call of the Chair.

THURSDAY, February 13, 1969.

(6)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.10 a.m., in camera, the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Cafik, Forest, Fortin, Goode, Hogarth, Jerome, Laflamme, MacGuigan, Murphy, McGrath, Peddle, Skoberg, Sullivan, Trudel (14).

The Committee considered a draft Third Report to the House and instructed the Chairman to present it at this day's sitting.

At 11.30 a.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, February 11, 1969

• 1604

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we now have a quorum, and I think it would be appropriate to start right away. Last week we heard the Clerk of the Transport and Communications Committee, Mr. Normand. At the last steering committee meeting, as you know, it was decided to hear Mr. Blouin who was at the time the Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee. He was away for the reasons you know, and we are really glad to have him with us here this afternoon.

I must repeat what I have already said, that Mr. Blouin requested earlier that he appear before the Committee to answer any questions you may wish to ask him. This meeting is open and Mr. Blouin is here. We are really glad to have you with us, Mr. Blouin, and I hope you can answer any questions you be asked within the terms of reference of this Committee.

• 1605

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin (Former chairman of Committee on Transport and Communications): First of all, I thank you Mr. Chairman, and I take this opportunity to address my thanks to some members of the Committee who sent me best wishes during my two stays in hospital.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, could we just hold off until we get our translation ear pieces in order.

The Chairman: Yes.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Are they operating now?

I am sorry about this delay in coming to give evidence before this Committee. As the Chairman stated a few minutes ago, and as you are all aware, this delay was caused by my recent illness and I can do nothing about it. I am here in flesh and bone and I am quite ready to answer the questions that the members of the Committee want to put. That is all, sir.

[English]

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Blouin. I should inform the members that Mr. Blouin has had an opportunity of reading the transcript of our earlier deliberations so he is aware of what has been said prior to this. I will allow any member who wants to do so to ask a question. Mr. McGrath?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to welcome Mr. Blouin back. I am glad to see that his health has been restored; he looks considerably better than he did the last time we saw him.

Mr. Blouin: Thank you.

Mr. McGrath: I say that sincerely. I am glad to note that he has read the transcript of the evidence, especially the evidence of our last meeting, because it is certainly our wish that this matter be brought to a conclusion as quickly as possible. I know everybody is getting a little impatient with it, and perhaps this is due in no small way to the fact that Mr. Blouin unfortunately was detained due to illness, and obviously he is the chief witness.

My first question, Mr. Chairman—and I would welcome any supplementaries to it—has to do with Mr. Normand's evidence. When Mr. Normand, the Clerk of the Committee, laid the draft of the second report of the Committee on Transport and Communications on your desk, did you read it?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I did read it carefully.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Did you read it before it was presented to the House?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, I read it.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Did you note the omission of the resolution in question, more particularly the resolution dealing with the Newfoundland rail transportation?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: In so far as I know, there was no omission not any change.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I must raise a point of order. We are having trouble with the simultaneous translation.

The Chairman: This one I have is working very well; perhaps you could use some other set.

Mr. McGrath: I seem to have it now.

Mr. Woolliams: It was off for a little while.

Mr. McGrath: Could I repeat the question, and could Mr. Blouin repeat his answer, Mr. Chairman? When he read the report did he note the omission of my resolution passed by the Committee on November 28 dealing with rail passenger service in Newfoundland?

• 1610

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: In so far as I know, Mr. Chairman, there was absolutely no omission if you are referring to the second report. There was no omission of any resolution in the second report which was to be submitted in the House, absolutely not.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Blouin said there was no omission, in his opinion, of the second report. May I ask him what became of the resolution passed in the Committee on November 28, presumably on which the second report was based?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: You mean to say the resolution?

[English]

Mr. McGrath: The resolution that was adopted by the Committee on November 28.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: So, this resolution, if I remember, did not appear in the second report that was to be submitted to the House.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Blouin, the second report did contain a recommendation to study problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces. Is that right?

Mr. Blouin: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: In your opinion, was not the resolution I referred to related to the recommendation of the Committee to study transportation in the Atlantic Provinces? I will repeat the resolution:

Resolved,—that the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: This resolution, if I remember correctly, was submitted at the very last minute at the session of November 28th. In so far as I know, none of the members of the Committee on Transport and Communications requested that this resolution be included in the second report. We must remember that, previously, two other resolutions were included in the second report and were reported to the House in the normal way.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Why omit this resolution if you included the other two resolutions?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: They were never omitted, there was no change made whatsoever.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: If it was not included, surely it must have been omitted.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Normally, this resolution would have been discussed at subsequent sittings and would have been presented in the normal way to the House through the third report. It's as simple as that.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Blouin, this resolution...

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on a point of order. Surely the question as to whether or not this resolution should or should not have been contained in the second report, is a question of parliamentary law, is it not? Can we not get the advice of Dr. Ollivier as to whether by parliamentary law that should or should not have been included?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Hogarth, let me continue with my line of questioning.

The Chairman: Order, please. A point of order has been raised. This very point might be part of our discussions later on, but I see no objection to Mr. McGrath asking questions of Mr. Blouin. Mr. Blouin can give the explanations as he sees fit to give them. But I do not see that there is any point of order right now.

It is part of the evidence. He has been the Chairman of this Committee. Mr. McGrath has, I think, a right to question, and I think Mr. Blouin should answer the questions.

Mr. McGrath: May I proceed then, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. McGrath.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Blouin, the resolution dealt with a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission, the implementation of which was due to start, if my memory serves me correctly, on December 6. Consequently the resolution was of some urgency. In your opinion, did you not feel that because of the urgency of the resolution it should have been reported to the House?

• 1615

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, I understood the importance of the resolution. Certainly, I did. If there is anyone who is aware of transportation problems in the Atlantic Provinces, it is certainly I, because I am a neighbour of the Atlantic Provinces, and we have about the same problems in transport and communications. But the Chairman doesn't decide, on his own, on putting a resolution into a report to be tabled in the House. It must be submitted to the Committee. And show me a case where a member of the Committee requested that a resolution of that nature be submitted to the House in the second report.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will do that. The Committee passed the resolution by a vote of six to five. In other words, they adopted the resolution, which meant they wanted it to be adopted by the Committee and be recommended to the House. Surely this must have been clearly implied in the adoption of the resolution.

The Chairman: Mr. McGrath, I do not want the...

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Blouin raised the question.

The Chairman: I agree. I have realized this; I did not interrupt you until you were through, but I want to inform you that I do not want you and the witness to go into an argument about what will be the purpose of our deliberations after we have heard the full evidence.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I can come precisely to my point. I want to know why Mr. Blouin did not report my resolution to the House.

The Chairman: This is a valid question.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: There was never any omission in presenting this resolution in the second report. As you know, Mr. Chairman, in order to present a resolution, the Committee must request that the resolution be submitted to the House. And I might quote here what was mentioned during this particular meeting of November 28:

Mr. SCHREYER: Mr. Chairman, did you assign a date for that last item?

THE CHAIRMAN: Assign a date?

Mr. SCHREYER: Did you assign a date? Have you fixed a date for these claims to be brought before the Committee?

THE CHAIRMAN: No, we did not fix any date. Everything depends on whether we will be finished with the estimates.

Mr. Woolliams: Which page?

Mr. Blouin: Page 72, November 28 in the report number 6.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Clerk points out that we also have to wait the order of the House.

Mr. Douglas, who was a member of the Committee:

Mr. DOUGLAS: That is what I was going to ask. I understood you were going to ask for an order of the House to permit us to deal with these claims.

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, we are. Next Tuesday a report will be presented to the House.

Mr. NESBITT: I presume, then, that between now and Tuesday, Mr. Chairman, the first report of this Committee will be prepared for submission to the House and that it will contain a request to have a hearing on the claims against the CNR concerning the Great Slave Lake Railway and also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces?

THE CHAIRMAN: That is correct. That report will be presented to the House on Tuesday. Is that agreed?

And all the members of the Committee were in agreement. So there was never any question of putting the resolution in the second report.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: All right. Did you call a meeting of the steering committee to consider my resolution?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, that report was tabled in the House the 3rd of December, and the next day I was ill.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: We are talking about the 28th now; we are talking about the 28th, the day the resolution was adopted. From the time the resolution was adopted until the report was tabled in the House, did you call a meeting of the steering committee? If not, why not?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: You mean to say between the 28th of November up to the 3rd of December? Yes, I think there was a meeting of the steering committee.

• 1620

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I want to know what was the date of the steering committee between the time my resolution was passed on the 28th, and the time the report was presented to the House on the 3rd of December. I want to know the time and place of the steering committee meeting and who was in attendance.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: I haven't got the date with me. Was it the same day? I know there were two meetings of the steering committee but I don't have the exact date.

Mr. Fortin: One or two?

Mr. Blouin: I don't know whether the Clerk of the Committee has the date. All I know is that there were two meetings of the Steering Committee between those two meetings.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Is the Clerk of the Committee here? Could you check with him?

The Chairman: I will have that checked right away, Mr. McGrath.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a supplementary?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Woolliams: Before I do that, may I just digress for a moment. I particularly welcome him back, and I am glad to see him in good health. I think you and I suffered the same ailment at some time and so I have complete sympathy with you. I think one of the main things is to avoid stress because that could undo any progress you have made.

Mr. Blouin: Thank you very much.

Mr. Woolliams: Now I want to ask you just a few questions which will be supplementary to Mr. McGrath's question. I am sorry I was late. I was at the Conference.

While they are checking the date of the steering committee—you say there were two meetings—could you tell the Committee, and I think this is important, whether there was any member of the Progressive Conservative Party at that steering committee, if there was a notice of that meeting, and where the meeting was held in reference to this particular resolution passed by the Committee dealing with railway transportation or transportation in Newfoundland?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I remember very well that at those two meetings of the subcommittee there were 5 members, among whom there were Conservative Party members. I do not remember the exact dates, but those meetings took place in my office, after notices had been distributed by the Clerk of the Committee, as is normally done.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Were there any of our party there at those meetings?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, yes.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Who were those members?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: I remember Mr. Thomas (Moncton). Mr. Nesbitt had been summoned but had himself replaced. I summoned him myself twice. He apologized for not being able to attend the Steering Committee meeting. He had delegated Mr. Thomas (Moncton).

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: An I take it then that Mr. Thomas and Mr. Blouin attended both those meetings.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Yes, so far as I know.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: And was the report read to that steering or subcommittee? Was the whole report given to them and read to them?

Mr. McGrath: The draft of the second report.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, the draft before presenting it to the House of Commons—at those meetings.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: So far as I know, yes. The reports were read and approved. But, I do not know if those meetings took place before the 28th of November, or after. I am not quite sure.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Before December 3 of course.

Mr. Woolliams: You go ahead and ask him if you want. I do not mind. The thing is I just wanted to follow that through.

I think I can clarify it very quickly. Mr. McGrath's statement is very simple. Was the meeting before the 28th or after? If it was before, well, of course you could not discuss the resolution, and if it was after, was it before the report was filed in the House of Commons. That is important too.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: I think it was before the 28th of November.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Then really after the resolution was passed in reference to the Newfoundland railway—and that is in Volume 6 of November 28—there was no meeting of the steering committee where they considered the draft report or the final report that was filed in the House of Commons?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, I do not think so.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: A supplementary here, if I may?

Mr. Woolliams: If I could just follow this one through, then I am through.

Mr. Cafik: All right.

Mr. Woolliams: Now we might as well follow it through. Was the report ever submitted to the whole Committee as a whole before it was filed in the House of Commons—the second report?

• 1625

Mr. Blouin: The second report? The second report was presented to the steering committee, as far as I know.

Mr. Woolliams: But was it ever submitted to the whole Committee as a whole, here, like we are sitting today, for approval?

Mr. Blouin: For approval?—

[Interpretation]

Yes, I think so. On reading, you will see here—This was submitted to the Committee as a whole since Mr. Nesbitt replies, here. Therefore, I presume—

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: What day was that, sir?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: The 28th of November.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: November 28.

Mr. McGrath: Before the evidence was taken on November 28?

Mr. Blouin: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: So that that report then was submitted to the whole Committee as a whole before the evidence of November 28 was taken.

Mr. Blouin: What are you saying?

Mr. Woolliams: The draft report was submitted to the Committee as a whole prior to the evidence of November 28, was it not?

Mr. Blouin: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: Right. So that the report then, although submitted to the Committee, which did not contain the resolution we are talking about was really submitted to this Committee before it was even passed or adopted by the Committee. Is that correct, or am I in error about that? You correct me if I am wrong, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: No, Mr. Woolliams. What I want to point out to you is that in the Minutes of Proceedings there is a full report of the steering committee meetings that were held before the meeting of November 28.

Mr. Woolliams: I know but I am not dealing with this now. I probably did not make my point. Do you mind if I just speak to you, Mr. Chairman, for a moment?

The Chairman: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Woolliams: My point is this, that the witness has said—and if he was in error he could correct it certainly by his evidence—but as I take it, they had a meeting of the steering committee prior to the meeting of November 28. Then I asked him if the report as a whole that was finally filed—that is the report we are dealing with in the House of Commons and that is now before the House of Commons—was ever submitted to the Committee as a whole for consideration, and he said yes, but it was submitted before taking the evidence of November 28. So the resolution could not get into that report if the report was—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I am going to raise a point of order—

Mr. Woolliams: Well, let me just finish speaking—just let me finish. I am not concerned about that. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to my good friends here—I did not come here, particularly when Mr. Blouin is a good friend of mine, because my next question is going to be quite serious—I did not come here to prosecute him or persecute him. He is a gentleman, he is a good Member of Parliament and, as far as I know—I was not on his Committee—I have always found him a fair-minded chairman. So that there is no reason for them to get exuberant about it. I want to be polite and I am going to be a gentleman. Now the thing that I would like to ask him, in view of his answers to Mr. McGrath, is this. We are not here to chastise you, particularly after being a sick man, but have you any objection, as the former Chairman of the Committee when this resolution was passed and because of the difficulties that seem to arise from the evidence, of it now being included in the report in question? I might bring to your attention why I make that suggestion—and I was not on the Committee, like my friends, and they no doubt have this knowledge and I have not got it. I came in later. At page 72, I am going to read this part which you read, sir.

I presume, then, that between now and Tuesday, Mr. Chairman; the first report of this Committee will be prepared for submission to the House and that it will contain a request to have a hearing on the claims against the CNR concerning the Great Slave Lake Railway and also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces?

Because the resolution that was omitted, rightly or wrongly—and I am not dealing with that point—dealt with the visitation to the Atlantic Provinces so that no decision would be made until the visit was over, have you any objection to it now being included in that report?

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, this witness cannot be expected to answer something that would be entirely up to that other Committee.

The Chairman: If, Mr. Hogarth, you could allow me to answer Mr. Woolliams, because I precisely see the point.

The only objection, Mr. Woolliams, I have to your question in this regard is the fact that I do not think that it could be appropriate that we could ask Mr. Blouin to speak on behalf of the Transport and Communications Committee as a whole because I realize that the Committee itself should speak for this, but not Mr. Blouin.

I am not going to rule your question out of order but I remind you that whatever Mr. Blouin could say on this is irrelevant to what we have to do here.

• 1630

Mr. McGrath: But, with respect Mr. Chairman, it is within the terms of reference of this Committee to recommend that this resolution be incorporated in the second report which is still before the House. Is that not correct?

Some hon. Members: No. no.

The Chairman: Just a minute. I would like to see where it has been recommended, Mr. McGrath.

Mr. McGrath: I am asking the question. I am not making the point...

The Chairman: If this Committee could recommend—but I must say that we...

Mr. McGrath: Yes. How do we dispose of it otherwise?

The Chairman: Well, the only thing we have to report back to the House is simply the terms of reference for which we are here.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I might answer what you say? There might be something to it. What I am trying to come to is this. There is a complaint that this motion was left out. There were instructions given to the Committee on a report that apparently was prepared before the resolution took place.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I have been here too long in the House of Commons to be unfair to Mr. Blouin or anybody else in the House of Commons or anywhere else. I just want the facts. I have talked to Mr. Blouin and I am quite pleased with what he said in the evidence. I am very happy with it. All I am saying is this. There was a resolution that is very important to Newfoundland. Surely nobody in this Committee is going to be so partisan—I am not—as to suggest, when it was so important to the Province of Newfoundland, that here was a resolution omitted because Mr. Blouin said the report was considered before the resolution was passed; that we could not include it in some report before the House of Commons. I cannot believe any of the members of the House of Commons would object to such a thing if it was done because the report was considered before all the evidence was considered. That seems to be—I am not saying this in the wrong sense—very irregular and that seems to be the grievance of the people where this resolution was left out. All I understand the people of Newfoundland to want is to get the resolution before the House. What have they got to fear? If there is nothing wrong with it why can we not correct it?

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, the matter of importance is not at issue. It is a matter of sticking with the terms of reference. Mr. Olivier may correct me, but I would suggest as an answer to your question that if the members of the Transport and Communications Committee want this resolution to be reported to the House in a report, the only thing they have to do is to meet and pass a resolution to this effect and instruct the Chairman accordingly.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, we are a different committee but I am asking this question. You heard what the Chairman said and he is being most helpful. If this Committee is suggesting to the Committee on Transport and Communications that either it be included in the report that is now before the House—and it could be amended—or included in a third report, would you have any objection to this resolution's being included in a report? Would you have any objection, as the former Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman...

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: Personally, I think it is beyond our scope. Our terms of reference are clearly indicated here and were set forth to us by the Clerk of the House. I do not think that we, as members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, can tell our colleagues of the Committee of Transport and Communications to do this and do that, to have breakfast in the morning and to dine either in the evening or at noon in order to live properly.

If we are going to conduct our discussions on that level, Mr. Chairman, we might as well go back to the constitutional conference or to the House to discuss the Omnibus Bill because we shall be wasting our time here.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to go back to the constitutional conference. The Chairman ruled that...

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: No, Mr. Woolliams, a point of order has just been raised.

Insofar as I am concerned, the question put by Mr. Woolliams is hypothetical, but instead of discussing points of order of this nature indefinitely, I would rather allow the question and allow Mr. Blouin to answer. I know it is a hypothetical question because that is not what we are here to discuss, but if it can throw some light on the situation, then I can allow the answer.

• 1635

[English]

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that this question is completely irrelevant to this issue. The terms of reference specifically state that this Committee is to determine the reason for the omission of this resolution from the report. There was an accusation made in the House, which is on page 3735 of Hansard dated December 10, 1968, in a statement made by Mr. James A. McGrath, St. John's East.

My question of privilege is based on the fact that the resolution adopted by the Committee on November 28 was, in my view, deliberately omitted from its report to the house...

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Deakon, but I must ask the members to proceed in an orderly way. There were questions of Mr. Woolliams to Mr. Blouin which I consider hypothetical but I suggested if Mr. Blouin wanted to answer to clarify some points that may be indirectly relevant it would be preferable to allow the questions.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if you would answer the question.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, upon my soul and conscience, there has never been any omission or change in the resolution which Mr. Woolliams mentioned.

What happened was that this resolution which he talks about was supposed to be discussed at subsequent meetings and was to be the object of a specific request from the Committee of Transport and Communications for submission to the House. If, as in the normal course of events a member of the Committee had made such a request this resolution would have been submitted to the House along with the third report, in accordance with normal procedure. This is more or less the reply to the question.

The Chairman: And those are the reasons, Mr. Blouin.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, may I supplement, please? During the course of the evidence it was made abundantly clear that the matter was of some urgency because the implementation of the decision referred to in the resolution was to take place in fact on December 6, 1968. There would be a gradual phasing in of buses and phasing out of the passenger trains to conclude in April of this year. This made the matter of some urgency. Also, at the conclusion of our meeting on November 28, 1968—and the evidence will indicate this—there was no suggestion that this resolution would be considered at any subsequent meeting. It was inferred quite clearly that this resolution formed a part of the second report which was considered at the beginning of the evidence because it dealt with the recommendation of the Committee to study problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces.

The Chairman: I realize, Mr. McGrath, that you wanted to make your point. If you have any questions to ask of Mr. Blouin I will allow them but actually you are arguing.

Mr. McGrath: I am not arguing, Mr. Chairman, I am just stating facts as I see them.

The Chairman: They are valid points perhaps but no one, including Mr. Blouin, has ever questioned the importance of the matters contained in the resolution that was passed at the end of the meeting on November 28, but again we are not here for that. We are here to listen to the reasons why this resolution was not submitted in the report tabled in the House on December 3, 1968, and I really believe, if I may say so to you members of this Committee, that Mr. Blouin has already answered the questions as to why he did not include it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might continue. I could be very short if I did not have so many interruptions.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, it seems that these questions are all in the form of supplementaries and we have had supplementaries now for well over half an hour.

The Chairman: I am going to allow Mr. Woolliams a few more questions and then I will recognize you, Mr. Cafik.

Mr. Woolliams: Did you ever consider, Mr. Blouin, that this resolution at any time was out of order?

Mr. Blouin: No.

Mr. Woolliams: Then when Mr. Macdonald, the President of the Privy Council, on page 3587 said:

...I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

You never told the President of the Privy Council it was out of order.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: I never even saw the leader of the House, so I could not have. . .

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I see. Then he said:

Under the circumstances I take it that it is null and has no effect, but I have not examined the question.

Do you take the position that the President of the Privy Council takes?

• 1640

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Woolliams, I missed your question. Would you like to repeat it?

Mr. Woolliams: My question is very simple: that the President of the Privy Council takes the position that the resolution was out of order and, in fact, he says it was null and void. Somebody has just heckled me, as I am asking the question, and said, "It is out of order", meaning my question. I would say this to you: we are trying to find out why it was left out of the report. You have given us one answer. I am not dissatisfied, but I am prepared to probe just a little further as to why it might have been left out, apart from yourself. The fact is, the President of the Privy Council says this resolution is out of order and you said that you do not agree with him. Did you ever tell him it was out of order or give him any instructions in that regard?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: I did not say I was not in agreement with him. I said I had never even seen the leader of the House, so he could certainly not have given me any instructions, since I never saw him. He never attempted in any way to influence me or to give me instructions. I never even saw him.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Do you suggest today, as former chairman of that Committee, that that resolution was out of order?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, because I had accepted this motion as Chairman of the Committee, at the very last minute of the meeting of November 28.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I am finished now.

The Chairman: Mr. Cafik?

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry for taking so much time but we had quite a few interruptions.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman and Mr. Blouin, I have a number of questions here. First of all, in order to get a couple of facts straight in connection with the motion made by Mr. McGrath, at the time Mr. McGrath made his motion toward the end of this meeting on transport did he ever make a motion to have this motion included in the second report to the House of Commons?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, not as I know of.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: Did he ever make a motion to have it referred to the Steering Committee for consideration to be included into the second report to the House of Commons?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, not that I know of.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: In other words, there was nothing unusual about his motion to indicate that he wanted it in the second report to the House of Commons?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Absolutely not, that I know of.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: Now, may I ask a second question? As chairman of that Committee, and bearing in mind that the original terms of reference given to the Committee by the House of Commons were to study the revised estimates of the Canadian Transport Commission, would you consider that the motion put forward by Mr. McGrath—which was not directly related to the estimates, in my personal view—was in order and dealing with the matter before the Committee, or was it dealing with a matter that was not before the Committee?

Mr. McGrath: It was dealing with the recommendations incorporated in the second report which opened the proceedings of that meeting.

Mr. Cafik: Excuse me.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Woolliams: He has already answered that he was of the opinion that the motion was in order, so I am really at a loss to see why you discredit your own friends.

Mr. Cafik: I am not discrediting. I am asking, in view of this, whether it is within the terms of reference.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, if I may reply, I repeat what I stated to Mr. Woolliams. At the end of the meeting of the Committee on Transport and Communications on the 28th of November, 1968, I accepted the resolution submitted by Mr. McGrath. It was put to the vote and was approved. That resolution was thus properly in order. Only what happened is that no one in the Committee requested that it be put in the second report to the House because there were already two other resolutions which preceded that one. So that is why it was never submitted to the House. And normally, after a subsequent meeting, that resolution would have been submitted to the House in the third report. It is as simple as that.

• 1645

[English]

The Chairman: Just before you continue, Mr. Cafik, I want to clarify a point that was raised earlier by Mr. McGrath and Mr. Woolliams concerning the precise dates of the Subcommittee meetings that were held. Mr. McGrath, if you look at issue No. 7 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence you will see that there was, in fact, a meeting of the Transport and Communications Steering Committee at 1.30 p.m. on November 28; that is a few minutes after your motion was passed by the committee and the report says—I think you have the minutes and can look at them—that the members present were Messrs. Allmand, Blouin, Nesbitt, Serré and Skoberg. I do not want to read what was decided in the report; this refers, at the bottom of the page, to the meeting of the Steering Committee held on December 3 where the members present were Messrs. Allmand, Benjamin, Blouin, Carter, Corbin—no, I am sorry, this was the full Committee. This is the answer to the questions you have asked. I do not know precisely the time of the Subcommittee meeting that was held after this meeting. I am sorry, Mr. Cafik, but I wanted to clarify that point.

Mr. Cafik: Yes. The reason that prompted me to ask the last question about the legality of the motion put forward by Mr. McGrath is that it strikes me—and I am not a member of that Committee—that the actual resolution in the second report to the House of Commons was a resolution asking that the scope of the Committee be expanded to allow it to look into the problems and to study the problems of the Atlantic Provinces and so on. It seems to me that your resolution was to act as though the Committee had already expanded its sphere of activity.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The member of the Committee is giving an opinion and I submit that that is out of order. He is supposed to direct his questions to the Chair or to the witness and not give opinions to the Committee.

Mr. Cafik: Yes.

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Cafik. Gentlemen, as Chairman, I would like to have you in my confidence for a few minutes. I do not think we should spend time on points like that. I would remind hon. members that the opinions you have, personally, after you have read the evidence, will be part of the report we will be making. I think we should ask Mr. Blouin, precisely, for relevant facts related to the terms of reference, that is to say, the reason for the omission. This was asked a few minutes ago and I would ask Mr. Cafik and all hon. members to please try to avoid asking the witness his opinion on any subject. We have our own opinions; we can make all the suggestions we wish to make.

Mr. Cafik: No, but the point I was trying to bring out, and I am not trying to express my own personal view, is whether the Committee felt it was necessary then to expand its terms of reference in order to look into these other larger areas that are contained in your second report?

The Chairman: This, again, is up to the members of the Transport and Communications Committee to decide.

Mr. McGrath: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has not even read the second report; otherwise he would not put that question. The second report recommends that the Committee study the problems of transportation in the Atlantic Provinces. My resolution was related to it.

Mr. Cafik: Excuse me. On a point of order.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Cafik: That resolution asks that the terms of reference be enlarged.

An hon. Member: Read it for him; he cannot read.

Mr. Cafik: All right, I will read it.

That the Committee report to the House asking that the scope of the Order of Reference dated October 16, 1968, be enlarged authorizing the Committee to study:

(a) Transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

(b) Claims of the Great Slave Railway Company against the Canadian National Railway Company.

Now, if you already had terms of reference to do that, why would the second report have asked for those terms of reference?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, may I reply?

• 1650

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Blouin: I think that what Mr. Cafik says is true. There was a request to extend the terms of reference of the Committee so that it could go and study the problems in the Atlantic Provinces. Very well. But Mr. McGrath's resolution has nothing to do directly with the other resolution submitted previously. It was another resolution which was entirely separate. It was a third resolution.

[English]

The Chairman: Are you through, Mr. Cafik? Do you have some other questions?

Mr. Cafik: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, may I just say one thing to resolve this matter? Would the Committee give consideration to reporting to the House recommending that this resolution be incorporated in the second report? That would resolve it very simply.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, what is wrong with that?

Mr. McGrath: Why do you want to keep this resolution out of the House?

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Hogarth: I can see the Transport Committee considering that such a resolution be made but we are not on the Transport Committee, and I honestly do not quite know what the resolution, in substance, is all about. It might be perfectly valid that it go before the House—I do not know—but if I were on the Transport Committee I would certainly consider it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say this: It does seem to me—and I am going to speak on behalf of the Whip—that here he is being examined; this was left out of the report; we are sent here to find out, but there is a very practical suggestion. I do not like playing funny games. I did not come here to play funny games and the only reason we are here really is to find out why it was left out; really why we are here is to get it in a report and get it before the House of Commons.

Why can we not be like gentlemen and Canadians and work for the Crown the same as the rest of the nine provinces? We can rise right now and forget about it and say to the other Committee, why not be big about it and say, "we have left it out, maybe it was an accident, the way things worked out, or an omission. Put it in before the House of Commons so Newfoundland's transportation system is protected." That is all I am interested in.

Mr. Blouin and I are good friends and he knows that, and his wife is a good friend of mine and I am not going to sit on this Committee, by any means, and see him chastised by either the friends over here or friends there. The mistake that was made was not his fault. All we want is action and that is what the row is about. These gentlemen here, including Mr. Hogarth—he is talking about the rules of Parliament as if he has been here since Confederation. I would say to him, everybody gains experience; some take longer than others and he is no exception.

An hon. Member: Some never learn.

Mr. McGrath: The second report is still before the House, Mr. Chairman, so my resolution is...

The Chairman: I really... Yes, Mr. Deachman?

Mr. Deachman: In lieu of what has just been said by Mr. Woolliams, will Mr. McGrath retract his statement of December 10 regarding this being a deliberate omission?

The Chairman: I am really sorry, gentlemen, but I must inform you again that we have to continue our deliberations according to the rules, and I suggest to you that we are bound by the terms of reference that were referred to us by the House of Commons.

Mr. McGrath: Why do you not put the suggestion I made?

The Chairman: I beg your pardon?

Mr. McGrath: Why do you not put the suggestion I made to the Committee and resolve it once and for all?

Mr. Jerome: Because you fellows were instructed to keep the resolution out of the House.

An hon. Member: No, I am sorry...

An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman, I...

The Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if members might be able to agree at this stage that we have finished with the witness. I think that that would be a positive step.

An hon. Member: No, I would...

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Jerome, but I have a list of hon. members who indicated to me that they wanted to ask questions of Mr. Blouin.

Mr. Jerome: I simply wanted to suggest at this time, Mr. Chairman, that it seemed even those who were most actively engaged in questioning the witness—and I believe their questions were not only active but quite proper—covered the field very thoroughly in their questions of the Clerk, initially, and of Mr. Blouin today.

As a result of those questions it is clear to me, at least, that we have arrived at the answer to the question we were instructed to determine and at this stage I suggest to hon. members of the Committee that we have now got the answer and I do not know what more questioning will accomplish. I realize that you, the Chairman, want to ensure that everybody has a chance to speak, but in the interests of expediting this enquiry it seems to me that the reason has been clearly given. Everybody understands it and repeating the same questions over and over again is really not going to benefit any of us.

● 1655

I would also remind the members of this Committee, as I did earlier in the proceedings, that there is now a Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization and if members of this Committee, as I think some of them do, feel aggrieved by virtue of the fact that something was left out—they feel aggrieved; whether or not they place any blame on an individual member of the House they feel aggrieved—surely the proper thing to do would be for this Committee to report its reason, which is now plainly evident, to the House which would complete the matter before this Committee.

Then if it were necessary to take this matter further it could be put before the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization with the request that the procedure of committee work which is going to become increasingly important be reviewed by that committee in the light of determining some rules as to what should and what should not be included in reports to the House from standing committees and the manner in which this should be done.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, the honourable gentleman's point is very well taken, but he left out a very important part. He still has not suggested how we are going to dispose of this resolution. Is it to be left in limbo? I will bring it to a head. I move a motion. I am going to make a motion, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but before you make a motion I want to recognize other hon. members who want to ask questions. They have the same privileges that I have already allotted to others, and at this time I recognize Mr. Skoberg.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, at the last meeting of the Committee of Privileges and Elections I attended it was suggested that possibly the House Leader could be asked to attend as a witness. I am just wondering whether or not this was followed up by the steering committee, particularly when you read the statement that he made in the House, and under the circumstances I take it that it is null and has no effect. Mr. Macdonald said:

MR. MACDONALD (Rosedale): I have not studied this; I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask whether or not the steering committee did take into consideration this statement?

The Chairman: If I may answer this, I would like first to tell hon. members that it might have been logical for this Committee to hear Mr. Macdonald if any of the witnesses we have heard had either suggested or intimated that Mr. Macdonald had anything to do with the presentation of the report that has been referred to us, but since both Mr. Normand and Mr. Blouin say that at no time did they have any communication with Mr. Macdonald before this report was tabled in the House, I really believe that at this time it is quite useless for us to have Mr. Macdonald because we cannot speak for what happened after December 3. We can speak only on the terms of reference and the reasons why this motion was not included in the report tabled in the House on December 3.

If you want a legal opinion, Mr. Ollivier is here. I do not mind, if it is the wish of the members of the Committee, our having Mr. Macdonald here to give his own legal opinion, but we have here the Parliamentary Counsel of the House of Commons.

Mr. Skoberg: If I may add something, Mr. Chairman, and then I will finish, there is no question at all that Mr. Blouin believes that the motion we have before us is quite in order. That was the end, as far as I am concerned, of Mr. Blouin. He has fulfilled his obligation to this Committee here as far as a witness is concerned but the statements of Mr. Macdonald, as recorded on page 3587 in Hansard on December 6. . .

The Chairman: What date?

Mr. Skoberg: December 6, 1968, page 3587, is exactly the question that we have before us at this particular time. He said that this was not in order. Now, who told him it was not in order and why did he say it in the House of Commons? I believe he is the man who should have the answer. . .

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Skoberg, but I still repeat again, what does it have to do with the reason why the motion presented by Mr. McGrath was not included?

Mr. Skoberg: This is exactly the question Mr. Macdonald should answer to this Committee and not Mr. Blouin.

The Chairman: I do not think it is in the terms of reference that we have to deal with.

Mr. Skoberg: Did the steering committee decide against having any witnesses other than Mr. Blouin?

The Chairman: We did not decide against having any witnesses but personally this is the opinion I have and I really believe in good faith that we must remain within the terms of reference under which we have to act; otherwise there is no use in having any meeting. Mr. Normand and Mr. Blouin have both given their evidence before us and since neither Mr. Normand nor Mr. Blouin had ever been in touch with Mr. Macdonald before this report was tabled, I think it is useless and outside our terms of reference to have Mr. Macdonald give his legal opinion on what he thinks about it. We are here for this.

• 1710

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak to this, Mr. Chairman, before you make such a categorical ruling. Mr. Macdonald says this:

MR. MACDONALD (Rosedale): I have not studied this; I am advised. . .

Now we have the statement of Mr. Blouin. In any kind of committee or any kind of board or hearing if someone says "I am advised" which would appear. . . Mr. Blouin said he did not advise him.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not saying he did but somebody has advised him and I want to know who advised him, when he was advised and what is this kind of advice that caused the problems we have today.

MR. MACDONALD (Rosedale): I have not studied this; I am advised. . .

The Chairman: Mr. Woolliams, I will allow you to ask these questions of Mr. Ollivier, if he wants to answer.

Mr. Woolliams: I want Mr. Macdonald here and if you are ruling against me, then do you know what we have done? We have just wasted my time and the Committee's time and everybody's time because there must be something somebody is hiding. Why are you, as Chairman, making a categorical ruling before we have even made a submission?

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Woolliams. I am not making any ruling. I would just like to repeat what I have already said; that I strongly believe that within the terms of reference we have to study and as Chairman of this Committee, that with the reference made by Mr. Skoberg to hear Mr. Macdonald we will lose our time completely, because it is completely out of order in a sense that what Mr. Macdonald could have said on December 6, since neither Mr. Normand nor Mr. Blouin had ever talked to him before the tabling of this report, is completely irrelevant of the terms of reference we have.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, I disagree with you.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to test this by putting a formal motion before the Committee at this time that subject to any further questions of Mr. Blouin, this Committee receive no further evidence because it has already answered the question it set out to answer and that it rise and report to the House of Commons. I am prepared to put that motion and have it tested.

Mr. McGrath: Report what?

Mr. Jerome: Report the answer that it has received to the question, which is the reason the motion was left out is because—the answer given by the Chairman and the Clerk—the Clerk in preparing the draft report did not include the motion and the Chairman was not of the opinion that it would be included.

Mr. McGrath: Is that a motion?

Mr. Jerome: Yes it is.

The Chairman: If there is a motion it has to be put in writing, but while you make it I would...

Mr. McGrath: If that is a motion I will move an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: We have no seconder yet.

An hon. Member: We do not need a seconder.

Mr. Hogarth: For those of us who have not been here since Confederation, we learned that at one of these meetings.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Allmand?

Mr. Allmand: Just to clarify some things with the Committee, I would like to...

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Allmand; you are not a member of this Committee.

Mr. Allmand: No, and I...

The Chairman: Before I can hear you I think it would be appropriate to hear some other members that have requested...

Mr. Allmand: It is very brief and it would clarify a lot of things.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but...

Mr. Allmand: I am the one who told Mr. Macdonald it was out of order.

The Chairman: However, I ask Mr. Fortin.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin?

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some questions to put to Mr. Blouin and also to Mr. Ollivier, who, I think, will not only enlight me, but also certain members of this Committee.

Mr. Blouin, was the contentious resolution presented or not?

Mr. Blouin: What do you mean by "presented"?

• 1705

Mr. Fortin: The one Mr. McGrath has spoken of.

Mr. Blouin: He submitted his motion to the Committee and as Chairman of the Committee, I accepted it. It was put to the vote and the motion was passed. The proceedings were in order.

Mr. Fortin: Thus, you are saying two things: the resolution was presented, and it was adopted by the majority.

Mr. Blouin: Yes.

Mr. Fortin: And the resolution was in due form.

Mr. Blouin: Yes.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Ollivier, in the proceedings number 7, Tuesday, December 3, we read on page 7—4:

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Tuesday, December 3, 1968.

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

And then it says:

Your Committee recommends that its Order of Reference be enlarged, etc.

Mr. Ollivier, from your experience, without prejudicing the present debate, could you explain to me how it is, first of all, that this recommendation be there? Without necessarily naming the author, where does it come from? And, when it is presented, how does one decide whether or not it is in accordance with regulations, and how does one decide whether it can be submitted to the House or not? Is my question clear?

Dr. Ollivier (Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel): Yes, your question is clear. I will begin from the end. You asked me whether the question was in order or not. I was convinced that it was not in order, but I did not go to the Committee to state that. As Mr. Allmand, later on stated verbally to Mr. Macdonald, that I did not believe that this motion was in accordance with regulations. On the other hand, even if the motion were not in order, it does not contravene the regulations because of the fact that it was adopted by the Committee and no one has objected to it. That does not mean, however, that I am convinced that it should have been in the second report.

At the meeting of the 28th of November, we considered the resolutions that had been adopted on the 26th of November, I believe, by the Steering Committee, and then they were adopted. And after these resolutions were adopted and sent back again to the Steering Committee for drafting of the report, another motion was adopted. But this other motion did not go any further because no one proposed that this resolution be sent to the Steering Committee, that it be drafted in due form and then submitted to the House.

Mr. Fortin: Let us keep to that, Mr. Ollivier. If I refer to page 7-6 in the same proceedings report, I read as follows:

December 3, 1968—Mr. Warren Allmand, —That the resolution passed at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—

The said resolution read as follows: "be now rescinded." And I put the same question to you as I did a minute ago, concerning this resolution. What makes it acceptable and such that the Chairman is obliged to submit it to the House or not? Do you understand my question?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes. The Chairman would be obliged to submit to the House those reports that were adopted. When a Committee has ceased its sittings, a subcommittee is set up, a Steering Committee which is to write down in due form all the resolutions that had been adopted and which the Committee intends to have reported to the House. On November, 28th, there was a study of what the Steering Committee had previously adopted, and these two resolutions were reported to the House in: The first report of the Subcommittee on Agenda. It was those two paragraphs that the Committee had to consider and report to the House and everyone was in agreement. Subsequently, at the very end of the sitting, a new resolution was adopted that of Mr. McGrath. I do not think it is important to know whether that resolution was in order or not. I am convinced it was not in order and I said so to Mr. Macdonald and perhaps also to Mr. McGrath.

As that resolution was adopted at the last minute, it was not sent to the Steering Committee to be written up and to be reported. No one proposed this. This does not mean that it could not have been part of a subsequent report. But there was no need for it to be included in the report of that particular day.

• 1710

[English]

Mr. McGrath: According to that the whole report is out of order.

The Chairman: Mr. McGrath, I still recognize Mr. Fortin. He has some other questions.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Sir.

Mr. Ollivier, I am asking you a very clear and specific question: In a Committee, do you need to have a definite request for a resolution to be submitted to the House through the Chairman?

Dr. Ollivier: No, unless the Committee decides that it must be part of the report. Actually, there must be two motions: a motion to adopt a recommendation of a regulation, and another motion to propose that it is included in the report to the House.

Mr. Fortin: Now let us deal with the contentious point, Mr. Chairman. When I ask for a vote, in Committee, is this a specific request to have the subject of that vote submitted to the House? In this specific case, the vote was six against five. That is excellent, it comes to the assistance of the transport industry in Newfoundland. But this is not the problem. According to parliamentary procedure, does that vote not necessarily mean that it's outcome must be submitted to the House?

Dr. Ollivier: No, there are good many votes taken in Committee that are not reported to the House. You can adopt any number of recommendations in a Committee and then decide to form a Steering Committee entrusted with preparing the report that will then be approved. Thus, on November 28, resolutions were adopted that had been adopted in previous sittings. Then it was said that these resolutions must be part of the report, then this was put to the vote and decided accordingly. Thus, these resolutions were voted on twice. The first time, when they were drafted, and the second time, when it was decided that they would appear in the report. Now, the final resolution was adopted at the very last minute, and I understand that the Steering Committee met about half an hour later.

Mr. Fortin: My last question, Mr. Chairman, and it is for Mr. Blouin. At the very outset, Mr. Blouin told you that two other resolutions had been submitted at the same meeting, which was proof of your good faith. Would you please tell me exactly when you were asked by the Committee to refer these resolutions to the House?

The Chairman: Page 72.

Mr. Blouin: On page 72. Thank you for your assistance, Mr. Chairman. If you refer to page 72, Mr. Fortin, in volume 6, there is a very explicit statement. Mr. Douglas, first of all, states:

That is what I was going to ask. I understood you were going to ask for an order of the House to permit us to deal with these claims.

He dealt with the previous resolutions.

[English]

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: On a point of order, I would like to have read to the Committee the exact motion that was moved by Mr. McGrath and which was voted on and passed.

The Chairman: It is at the end of the...

Mr. Schreyer: It is on page 100.

Dr. Ollivier: I have it here.

Mr. Schreyer: I would like to have it read from the minutes.

Dr. Ollivier: Yes. It reads:

Resolved,—That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the Committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic Provinces.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, has it occurred to you that there is no reference at all in that motion to the Committee making a reference to the House of Commons. I know what Mr. McGrath's intentions are, but where in this motion that was voted on is there any reference to the Committee asking the House for any kind of expansion of authority?

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer, this is precisely the point that Mr. Fortin wanted to ask Mr. Blouin about.

Mr. Schreyer: The reason I ask that, sir—and I am still on this point of order—is that if you look at the motion that Mr. McGrath was going to move, which appears at page 107 of the Minutes of November 28, you will see that the motion he intended to move, and which he read to the Committee was never put to a vote. It was quite a different motion that was put to a vote.

Mr. Allmand: What column does that appear in?

Mr. Schreyer: It appears in the right-hand column on page 108. There you will see the actual motion that was voted on and passed.

• 1715

This motion, of course, makes no reference to the House of Commons. There is no requirement by the Committee to include it in its report to the House of Commons. There is nothing there, and therefore I do not see what the question of privilege is.

The Chairman: I agree.

Mr. Schreyer: On the other hand, if Mr. McGrath had moved his first motion and it had passed and had not been included in the Committee report, I would say there was a question of privilege. I therefore think it is important that we note very clearly that it is quite a different motion that was finally put to a vote. There is nothing in the motion that requires the Committee...

Mr. McGrath: If you read the report you will see that it refers to transportation in the Atlantic provinces.

The Chairman: Order, please. Are you finished, Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: I have read the minutes.

Mr. McGrath: Obviously you have not.

Mr. Schreyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says I have not read the minutes. I was in the Committee until November 28.

The Chairman: You raised this point, Mr. Schreyer, and I think it might be wise, before we make our report to the House, if we were to first study this matter and decide if there has been any breach of privilege and to explain the reasons this resolution which was presented by Mr. McGrath was not included in the report. This is the very point we have to decide. It might be part of our deliberations within the next few minutes if we can finish with the witnesses, and both Mr. Fortin and Mr. Blouin have some questions to ask of Dr. Ollivier.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: I had a question, and when I was interrupted, the witness wanted to reply. Can he now reply?

Mr. Blouin: I was going to say to Mr. Fortin, Mr. Chairman, that it is clearly mentioned here, it was I who replied to the Chairman of the Committee on Transport and Communications as follows:

Yes, we are. Next Tuesday a report will be presented to the House.

Then, Mr. Nesbitt, who was also on the Committee, said:

I presume, then, that between now and Tuesday, Mr. Chairman, the first report of this Committee will be prepared for submission to the House and that it will contain a request to have a hearing on the claims against the CNR concerning the Great Slave Lake Railway and also a request that the Committee, at some date agreed by the House, visit the Atlantic Provinces?

I replied:

That is correct. That report will be presented to the House on Tuesday. Is that agreed?

The Committee was in agreement. Everyone agreed, and I did as follows: I presented those two resolutions in the second report to the House of Commons.

Mr. Fortin: So, the resolution that does not appear in the second report—and in my opinion, it should not—is not there because such a procedure was not followed in the case of this resolution. Is that so?

Mr. Blouin: That is correct.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Blouin.

[English]

The Chairman: Gentlemen, does anyone have any further questions to ask? Mr. Hogarth.

Mr. Hogarth: I have a question, Mr. Blouin, I will be very brief. As you probably do not know except by reference to the evidence, the Committee met again on Friday, December 6, which was apparently the day before that you had been removed from the Committee by reason of your illness. Is that correct?

Mr. Blouin: That is correct, yes.

Mr. Hogarth: Has any other reason been given to you why you were taken off that Committee?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: No, never. I left hurriedly because I had a haemorrhage. I was very concerned and I went to see my physician who put me in the hospital. And I advised the whip's office that I would be absent. There was absolutely no other reason beside the illness itself.

[English]

Mr. Hogarth: It was substantially at your request then that you be removed because of your illness. Is that correct?

Mr. Blouin: That is correct.

Mr. Hogarth: I am referring to page 151 of the Minutes of December 6 of the Transport and Communications Committee, and this is what was said by one of the hon. members there:

—Now how can we proceed when your government fired the Chairman by last night by removing him from the Committee.

I take it that you were not fired.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Blouin: As far as I know, I was not dismissed from the Committee.

[English]

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Hogarth, but this is part of the Minutes of the Transport and Communications Committee and I do not think it would be appropriate for us to enter into all of the discussions that took place in that Committee.

• 1720

Mr. Hogarth: Except, Mr. Chairman, there is an allegation here that this man was removed for what was evidently subsequently referred to as hanky-panky, and I just want to clear the man's reputation. I do not know, perhaps there is some evidence that we can get to show that there was hanky-panky, or something. I want to know from the Chairman if he was fired or not.

The Chairman: I agree with your point, but it might be taken some other place. For the time being, please. . .

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, we have gone over this thing from stem to gudgeon, so to speak, and with the greatest respect, this man's reputation was very much in issue that day and it is my respectful opinion that we should get that cleared up, because I do not think it is proper that such allegations be made unless they can be substantiated in fact. I want to find out from the witness if there are any facts to substantiate the suggestion that he was fired.

The Chairman: I would recognize this question if this matter had been referred to us by the House of Commons. However, I realize that we must link ourselves with our terms of reference, and after we have got through the reason this resolution was not put in the second report which was tabled in the House on December 3 we have finished what we have to do. If we go into this it will generate into a large debate. If you feel that Mr. Blouin was wrongly accused of anything, I think he can defend himself at any time in the House of Commons. . .

Mr. Hogarth: I would not want to have to put him in that position.

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Hogarth, but. . .

Mr. Hogarth: All right.

The Chairman: . . . in all fairness I will have to hold this question for the moment.

Are there any further questions?

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Blouin. I hope we haven't unduly hurt your feelings?

Mr. Blouin: Think nothing of it, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I have a motion I wish to read. If it is moved by Mr. Jerome: That this Committee report to the House of Commons pursuant to the terms of reference of the Order of the House dated Tuesday, December 10, 1968, on the basis of evidence received at this date.

Do you have a seconder, Mr. Jerome?

An hon. Member: Sir, you do not need a seconder.

The Chairman: I also have an amendment by Mr. McGrath to Mr. Jerome's motion, which reads: That the resolution dealing with rail passenger in Newfoundland adopted by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be included in the Committee's second report now before the House.

Mr. McGrath?

Mr. McGrath: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee's second report is on today's Order Paper.

The Chairman: Yes, I agree with you on that. Had I the right to do it I would perhaps act otherwise than to rule this amendment to the motion out of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to my amendment?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: My question of privilege, in the first instance, and my resolution before the Committee on Transport and Communications on November 28 were not, as some people might suggest, with a view to creating mischief. It was a resolution that was passed after a long and exhaustive examination of the estimates of the Canadian Transport Commission and of the President of the Canadian Transport Commission, in relation to a decision that the Commission had made allowing Canadian National Railways to phase out the passenger service of the entire Province of Newfoundland, which happens to be the province from which I come.

I, my colleagues and those on the Committee who supported that resolution would like to have it come before the House so that it can be dealt with by the House.

The matter is of some urgency. The Committee on Transport and Communications is going to Newfoundland, in its tour of the Atlantic Provinces, on Sunday, February 16. The resolution calls for withholding the implementation of that decision until the Committee goes to the Atlantic Provinces. Consequently, it has some urgency.

I hope the members of the Committee will look at it in that light, and that you, sir, will allow that amendment to stand. To my mind, this would be the only reasonable way to dispose of my question of privilege.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer, have you a comment on the amendment?

• 1725

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I want to say very briefly that I support Mr. McGrath's amendment even though we have had some harsh words here.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order...

The Chairman: Just a moment; Mr. Schreyer has the floor.

Mr. Schreyer: I support the amendment because I think it is logical that the Transport Committee should recommend to the House and to the Canadian Transport Commission that there be no change in transportation services in Newfoundland until after the Transport Committee has had an opportunity to visit Newfoundland and to look at the transportation services there.

For that reason it is, in my opinion, logical to support the amendment.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Murphy?

Mr. Murphy: How is it possible for us to speak to an amendment that is out of order.

The Chairman: No; I want to hear from honourable members speaking on the amendment, and then I will make my ruling.

Mr. Murphy: I thought you had made the ruling?

The Chairman: Yes, I made the ruling, but I allowed Mr. McGrath to make some remarks in explanation of the amendment. Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: I support the amendment, because it is logical to do so, in my opinion, but that does not mean that I consider there is to be any legitimate question of privilege before this Committee. I really do not.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Murphy?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, no matter what my views on Mr. McGrath's amendment I feel that had he sought to have the matter he raises in his amendment determined by this Committee he should have made it a part of his motion in the House. He did not.

I may be wrong—I am a newcomer here, as earlier described by Mr. Woolliams—but from what little I do know I am sure that had he made that point a part of his motion before the House the Speaker would not have ruled on it as a question of privilege to be determined by this Committee.

Consequently, I do not think that this Committee should attempt to expand its own terms of reference to permit a discussion of this amendment by this back door method when we would not have been given that right by the Speaker in the House.

The Chairman: Order, please. I have heard the remarks made and the arguments put but I must repeat that it is not within the scope of our terms of reference to do here what perhaps some other committee could do.

You, Mr. McGrath, are a member of the Transport and Communications Committee. This amendment could be valid there. But if you read again the terms of reference under which I—

Mr. McGrath: Of course, we had to move a motion in Committee to get it passed; we have already moved it once, and it has been passed once.

The Chairman: Order, order. I think I have listened with great indulgence to members' comments.

Mr. McGrath: So have I.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I have to state again, as Chairman of the Committee, that I must rule your amendment out of order, for the reason I was going to give—and I will repeat it—that this motion could be valid some other place but we have to act within the terms of reference that were referred to us by the House of Commons, and with your motion, Mr. McGrath.

If you want some action taken by the Transport and Communications Committee you can go and ask them, but the only thing we have to deal with here is the reason for your motion, passed by the Committee at the end of its deliberations on November 28, not being included in the report tabled in the House on December 3. You have heard the evidence.

I have the motion, and I will read it again: That this Committee report to the House of Commons pursuant to the terms of reference of the Order of the House dated Tuesday, December 10, 1968, on the basis of evidence received at this date.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to that motion, the purpose of it is to take us back to the terms of reference of the Order of the House of Tuesday, December 10, 1968, which as we have heard repeated ad nauseam up to this point, was to inquire into the reason for the omission of the resolution from the second report of the Committee on Transport and Communications.

The reason to my putting that motion before you now is because it is my respectful opinion that we have found that reason. We have found it in clear and unequivocal language in the answers of the Clerk and in the answers of the Chairman of the Committee. Having found that, I think it is the duty of this Committee to stop now, because we have completed that inquiry. We have our answer, and I think we should make our report.

• 1730

I would hasten to add, Mr. Chairman, that I do not wish, nor do I intend in any way, to abrogate any of the privileges of any of the members of this Committee or of any of the members in the House. We were given a job to do, which was to find a reason. We have found the reason. Now I believe we should report it to the House. It seems to me that there are certain grievances that have been expressed here which do not die with the report of this Committee. This Committee simply finds a fact and makes its report. Upon the tabling of our report in the House of Commons there may very well be certain members of the house who feel that they have a point of privilege to express to the House, based on the answer contained in our report. If that is the case, then they are certainly free to do so. Furthermore, there are certain actions or recommendations that members can make respecting future proceedings of committees, because Mr. McGrath has raised the very legitimate question, in my personal opinion of how many times he has to move a motion before it gets contained in the report. I do not know. I do not know that and I am sure we should know it, because we are going to do an increasing volume of extremely important work in committees and when we do, I am sure all of us will want to know whether, when a motion is moved, we have to do something other than simply move and carry the motion in order to get it in a report. If we do, what is it?

I really do believe that we have completed the inquiry that we were instructed to conduct. We have found the reason and the proper thing for us to do is to conclude our work and report to the House; and then and there any members who are aggrieved I hope will be encouraged to take the matter through proper channels to find the answers that they want to find which I am sure will enlighten all of us. That is the reason I feel my motion is proper at this time. I really do believe that we have finished our work and that we should report to the House and let those who wish to carry it further from there.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the argument that my good friend has made. It is the most logical one this afternoon. There is only one thing that bothers me and I come back to it. We are all members and we should belong to the greatest gentlemen's club there is in Canada, the House of Commons. I am not here to cross-examine or say there may be some question of anyone's credibility, particularly when he is a member of the House of Commons, and particularly when he is a friend of mine. But it does bother me—and I am serious about this—that here is the House Leader, a Privy Councillor, President of the Privy Council, who says:—I have not studied this; I am advised the resolution was out of order." When the President of the Privy Council made that statement in the House of Commons I got the feeling and I still draw the inference from those words—whatever they mean I do not know—that someone had advised him the resolution was out of order, and naturally I thought that was why it was dragged out of the report and not put in. Now Mr. Blouin has said that in his opinion may be that is not the case—from what he knows about it. But this I would like to know from Mr. Macdonald: who advised him, when he was advised and why he made that statement at page 3587 of December 6. He is a Privy Councillor. It would not take long and I thought the Steering Committee was going to call the President of the Privy Council. It agreed to do so and now he is not here today and I will support that motion providing Mr. Macdonald is called and I think everyone will. We want to get this thing over with. I do not like playing games, but I want to know. I want to know who advised him and what part he had to play in this. He may say: "Well, look. I spoke in a hurry. We all do that; we all make mistakes. I did not mean that it was out of order in that shape. I was talking to some lawyer or someone and I did not know all the terms and conditions of what went on in the Committee." If he says that I will accept Mr. Macdonald's word. But in the meantime he says: "Here I was advised the resolution was out of order," leaving the impression that was why it never got in the report.

My hon. friend over there said he is satisfied. I will be satisfied if Mr. Macdonald tells me. Whatever his answer is I am prepared to accept it as a Privy Councillor.

● 1735

Some of my friends across there have opposed this. If there is nothing wrong and you have nothing to hide—and I do not think we have anything to hide and I do not think you have—you are leaving the impression, in my opinion—and I hope I am wrong—that there is something, that you people are running these Committees because you have a majority—and I am going to speak my mind today—and sweeping these things under the table. There may be nothing wrong with what has happened in this Committee at all, Mr. Chairman. There may be nothing wrong in the fact that the resolution got left out, but I do not think we can come to that conclusion until the President of the Privy Council has passed that and I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to ask your Steering Committee before you put that motion, because the motion is going to pass. I know exactly how these boys line up. That is why I object to the change in the rules; that is the only reason. It would not be any different if a government other than the Liberal Government were in. I would say to your Conservative members, "You would likely be doing the same thing", or NDP members, or Social Credit members. And I am coming to grips...

Mr. Fortin: Not Social Credit members.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, you would behave as human behaviour.

Mr. Chairman, surely when I was given to understand that the President of the Privy Council would be called, I want to know why he is not called; and if my hon. friends object to it, would they mind telling me why they object, because there is an inference here that he was advised and he dragged it out of the report.

The Chairman: Order, order. Mr. Woolliams, just one moment, please. A few minutes ago I made some comments about the desirability of having Mr. Macdonald. With the evidence we already have it is, in my view, completely useless to have Mr. Macdonald here, but I personally, as Chairman of this Committee, have no objection whatsoever to having Mr. Macdonald called if he had anything to do with the tabling of this report.

I want to express to you in all fairness, in all frankness, that I personally have no objection to calling Mr. Macdonald and asking him some relevant questions about whether he had anything to do with the tabling of this report or with the drafting of this report. But I felt and I still feel that since we have heard both Mr. Normand and Mr. Blouin state that they had nothing to do with Mr. Macdonald, that they did not get in touch with him, that he did not speak to them, there is no use in having Mr. Macdonald appear before the Committee.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Mr. Ollivier spoke a while ago to Mr. MacDonald and he replied to my question by saying that he had advised Mr. MacDonald. So, I wish to go back to that point. I do not necessarily agree with what the previous speaker said, but I wish to remind you what...

[English]

Dr. Ollivier: I imagine that practically every case that happens has happened before. I was looking for something the other day in Hansard but I found something else. On May 2, 1966, Mr. Frank Howard raised the point—he did not raise it under a question of privilege, but he raised it at the late show, that he had made a motion before a Committee, the motion had been agreed to unanimously but had not been reported to the House. And the question of advising came in. I will not read the whole thing because it takes a few minutes, but I will read about three paragraphs of it. Mr. Howard said:

Some two months ago I moved that the committee report to the house, and that the Canada Elections Act be referred to it for study. That motion of mine was carried unanimously in the committee. There was not a whisper of objection to the idea that we should complete the examination begun in 1963.

We waited in vain for the committee to report. The chairman, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. McWilliam) who is not here this evening, said in answer to one question of mine that someone had objected to the proceedings of the committee. But this was a unanimous decision. So we must ask ourselves: Who objected, and for what reason?

I will try to make that a little shorter. Then he says:

I submit that it is for that reason the government has refused to carry out the unanimous recommendation of the Privileges and Elections Committee of 1963, that the government has interfered with the privileges of the committee, and did it by having the committee stymied through the chairman. I submit that this has been an unwarranted intrusion into the affairs of the committee.

Now Mr. Bechard, who was then Parliamentary Secretary to Miss LaMarsh, answered:

Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, March 1, 1966, at the organization meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a motion was made, as stated by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), in substantially these words, "that the Canada Elections Act be referred to the committee for study, examination and report."

Then these last words, Mr. Béchard said:

Well, I am told by the chairman of the committee that it was raised, due to the fact that the act was not referred to the committee by the house. The chairman of the committee then requested opinions on the matter, not from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), but from the Clerk of the House, the parliamentary counsel and the chief of the committees branch. These three officials stated in writing to the chairman that the committee acted beyond its terms of reference.

Since then the chairman of the committee has requested space for the accommodation of another meeting, at which time the opinion of the officers of the house will be brought before members of the committee for consideration and action. I must state that there was no interference by the Prime Minister, the government, or any member of the government.

In this case I myself gave an opinion to Mr. Macdonald. I did not give a written opinion, but I just met him in the hall—and I met some other members too—and said to him that I thought that motion was out of order. I am still willing to debate that, but I do not think it is before the House. Another point is that even if this motion is reported to the House, and is carried in the House, it will not allow you to travel to Newfoundland. You would have to have a new order of reference to the Committee. Even if you accept the report, if it is accepted unanimously in the House, it will not allow you to travel. You will have to have a new reference to the Committee allowing you to travel from place to place.

Mr. McGrath: We have that, Dr. Ollivier.

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, I know you have had it since, but you did not get it by accepting the report.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Fortin: As I was saying a minute ago, on the point of order...

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin, would you please wait the time it will take to deal with one question only.

[English]

Mr. Hogarth: In the light of Dr. Ollivier's explanation, are you insisting that Mr. MacDonald be called?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I will accept Dr. Ollivier's statement. It would have been, in my opinion...

The Chairman: Would you speak up close to the microphone, please, Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Woolliams: Excuse me. I will accept Dr. Ollivier's statement if he advised Mr. MacDonald, and if he advised him after the report was filed. That is an answer to this situation. As far as I am concerned I am quite happy about that. But it does seem to me—I want every member to think about this because I am going to be short and I hope you agree with me—as far as I am concerned I do not know of anything I have ever done when I get on these standing committees that I do not think we are trying to build rules to fence ourselves in. We say “this term of reference”, “that term of reference”, “you cannot do that”. We are out here to actually try and govern the country and help the government. These committees—and I back up my honourable friend—have never functioned in the 12 years I have been here. That is my opinion.

I know when we were the government, I know what went on then, and I am not being critical of the government. But it is human nature to stand together like you fellows have this afternoon. If we were the government we would likely be doing it. And as long as you have got committees like that, that is why—and I am maybe using a very rude term—I call this the most “Kangaroo Court”—and that includes myself because I am here—that I have ever taken part in. And that is what is wrong with the committees.

I wish that we could get a different kind of fellowship, that we could get down to the facts and do the job. I am not from Newfoundland as you know, but here they did pass a resolution. They want to have the Committee look into something that is going to happen and happen very soon, so that those people in Newfoundland have railways, have transportation. Or if they do not have railways, have substitutes that will be set up when the railways are taken off. And yet we are wasting time fighting each other on something we want for the good of all Canada, and there is not one of you who do not agree with me right now.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: Mister Chairman, you said a while ago that Mr. MacDonald had not been advised.

The Chairman: I didn't say that. I am sorry if I did not express myself clearly, but I never stated that. I simply repeated what Mr. Normand and Mr. Blouin had said. Both said that in no circumstances did they get in touch with Mr. MacDonald before the report was tabled in the House, and that it was only time lost to ask Mr. MacDonald about the legality of the report. That is what I stated and nothing else.

Mr. Fortin: All right.

[English]

The Chairman: I want to read the motion first.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, we are not all trained seals. I did not mean to say that, but you guys do not care about the people who will suffer.

The Chairman: Order, please. Before I put the motion I think it would be advisable for us to have some opinion from Dr. Ollivier as to what we have to decide, because this matter has been referred to us as a question of privilege. And with all respect to the motion, we have to decide, I think, if there is a question of privilege. I think it would be appropriate for us to hear from what we should consider our expert.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my motion was not in any way to restrict what we may do with this report, and I think that that might be a subject for continuing and very meaningful discussion. I simply wanted to establish that we set out to find an answer; we had found it; and it was time to report. Now we might have discussion for quite some time over quite a number of meetings as to what should be contained in the report.

• 1745

Dr. Ollivier: I will be very short. I think this was raised in the House as a question of privilege and the Speaker decided that there was a prima facie case of privilege. Therefore, I do not think we should drop that. I think the first thing that this Committee should decide is whether there is a question of privilege or not, because that has not been decided; that has not been resolved. And after that you could answer the second question that was put directly by the order of reference, namely, why the resolution was not reported to the House. That is as simple and as short as I can put it.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, may I ask what the effect of this motion would be. Is the effect of it that we hear no more evidence and that we proceed to discuss what would be in the report, as Dr. Ollivier has suggested?

The Chairman: If you want to put your suggestions before the members of the Committee as to what should be contained in the report, we might have to adjourn and have the steering committee make a draft report and submit it to another meeting, maybe tomorrow afternoon or Thursday morning, to have this report approved by the whole Committee.

Mr. Hogarth: May we have the question on this motion? There is no need for that motion to be . . .

Mr. McGrath: I do not think we need to put the motion. I think we generally agreed not to call any more witnesses. So why put the motion?

Mr. Cafik: Let us put the question, Mr. Chairman, and at least we can establish whether we are making some progress.

The Chairman: Would you then, if everyone agrees, pass the motion and decide to refer it to the steering committee for drafting in the report?

Mr. Hogarth: I might add to that motion. What does it say?

The Chairman: It states:

That this Committee report to the House of Commons pursuant to the terms of reference of the order of the House dated Tuesday, December 10, 1968, on the basis of evidence received at this date.

Mr. Hogarth: "... and that the steering committee prepare a draft thereof."

Mr. Skoberg: I conclude from that that it will come back here, though, to be authorized by the full committee?

The Chairman: Yes, to approve the report.

Mr. Skoberg: And this still is not satisfying, though, what Dr. Ollivier has suggested here, as yet.

Mr. Hogarth: We will have that in the nature of the report.

The Chairman: I am advised, Mr. Hogarth, that we do not have to put in the motion the fact that it has to be referred to the steering committee. I think it should be agreed then that we report to the steering committee by tomorrow, and then we will have another meeting on Thursday morning. So I will put the motion, gentlemen. All those in favour of the motion? All those opposed.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: The meeting is adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE
ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 6

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1969

Concerning

Vote 45 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer.

WITNESS:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

² Benjamin,
Cafik,
Cantin,
Forest,
Fortin,
Gervais,
¹ Howard (Skeena),

Jerome,
Laflamme,
Lundrigan,
Marceau,
MacGuigan,
Murphy,
Nielsen,

Peddle,
Richard,
Ritchie,
Trudel,
Valade,
Woolliams.

(Quorum 11)

Michael A. Measures,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

¹ Mr. Howard (Skeena) replaced Mr. Skoberg, on February 13, 1969.

² Mr. Benjamin replaced Mr. Schreyer, on February 13, 1969.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, April 17, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.18 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Cafik, Forest, Fortin, Hogarth, Laflamme, Murphy, Richard, Ritchie, Sullivan (9).

Witness: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Committee questioned the Chief Electoral Officer concerning Vote 45.

At 12.04 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, April 17, 1969

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

• 1112

The Chairman: Gentlemen, is it agreeable that while we are waiting for a quorum we start with Mr. Hamel, who is the Chief Electoral Officer? Then, as soon as we have a quorum, we can have a motion to have those minutes—Is this agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: First, I would like to inform you that yesterday we had a meeting of the Steering Committee whereby we decided to proceed today with the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer, first and which, I think, we can finish by the end of this meeting. Next week we could start with the case referred to us by the House of Commons and raised by Mr. John Roberts. After we have dealt with the Roberts case, then we could proceed on Thursday next with the matters referred to us by the Leader of the House, Mr. Macdonald. We first have to study the advisability of having a permanent electoral list and second, the Election Act and the four matters in the way it was agreed by the House we should proceed.

I think it is appropriate for those who do not know him, for me to introduce Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer. At our last meeting in the fall, when we studied the estimate for the earlier year Mr. Hamel was asked if he could get the figures for the total cost of the last general election on June 25. Mr. Hamel has prepared complete and detailed figures of those costs by constituency in both English and French and I would ask if they could be distributed.

• 1115

Before we deal with these figures, if you have any questions to be asked of Mr. Hamel, we will, first, proceed with the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer which you can find on page 357 of the Blue Book, Vote 45.

Expenses of elections including the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer	$372,680
45 Salaries and Expenses of Office	$171,000
Total ..	$543,680

I will ask Mr. Hamel if he has any comments he would care to make.

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Merci, Monsieur le Président. Good morning, gentlemen. It is not exactly a statement that I wish to make. I believe, though, I should provide you with some additional background information regarding the estimates of my Office as they appear on pages 357 and 358 of the Blue Book, or for those of you who have this White Book, they are on pages 58, 60 and 61.

You will notice that our budget is divided between two main headings or, as we call them now, activities, namely Administration, which includes the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer—this constitutes one activity—and Expenses of Elections, which is our second activity.

I cannot see that there is some rationale in this presentation since there is considerable overlapping between the two activities or between the two main subjects. However, it has to be presented in this way because the Canada Elections Act as it presently reads provides only that in addition to any sums payable to the Chief Electoral Officer, only the fees and expenses of election officers as well as the expenses incurred for the purchase or printing of election material can be paid out of the unappropriated Consolidated Revenue Fund. Other amounts, that is, amounts required for the payment of the salaries of the staff of the Chief Electoral Officer including the additional staff required at periods of peak activities as well as expenses of administration, have to be appropriated. I said that there is over-lapping between the two activities, so if you wish, I could later on give you some examples if you are interested.

• 1120

For 1969-70, in the budget that is now for your approval—that is on page 58 of the White Book and 358 of the Blue Book—there is an amount of $171,000 to be voted while it is indicated that we might—I insist on the word “might”—spend $350,000 on expenses of elections, that is on statutory items, that latter figure cannot be forecast with any degree of accuracy because there are too many unknown factors over which we have absolutely no control, such as for instance, the number of by-elections that may have to be conducted or the quantity of election material or supplies that will be purchased during the year. I may say that I do not intend to purchase any supplies this year because of the possible changes that might be recommended by the Committee following the study of Mr. Castonguay's report.

For last year, 1968-69, and this is something, I believe, that I must point out, if you look at the book there is an amount of $165,000 mentioned there as the expenses of administration, but that amount had to be supplemented by an amount of $170,000 which was granted by the Treasury Board out of the Department of Finance contingencies vote when the general election was called. As I mentioned earlier, the staff has to be paid out of appropriation and since we could not foresee last year that there was going to be a general election, we just budgeted for a regular year. Therefore, we had to go to the Board to obtain additional funds at the time the general election was called, so this $170,000 will not be found in the book because it was in the estimates of the Department of Finance.

[Interpretation]

As the Chairman told you earlier, you asked me last year to prepare a detailed report on the cost of the last general elections. Copies were distributed. It should be stressed that the amount of $170,000 that I mentioned a while ago does not appear in this report. In fact, the report includes only statutory expenditures. But since the salaries and current expenses of the office were not included in the Estimates and since these are fairly current expenditures, I did not feel it was necessary to include the additional amount obtained from the Treasury Board for the salaries of supplementary staff.

The last detail, if you will allow me, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the complete report, the detailed report of the last general elections, let us say the report I must prepare according to paragraph 6 of Section 56 of the Act, was released by the printers last Monday and I presume that you received a copy during the week.

• 1125

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen, that is all I have to say now. If you have questions, I will be very pleased to try and answer them to the best of my knowledge.

The Chairman: Thank you very much Mr. Hamel. Mr. Forest?

Mr. Forest: Mr. Hamel, could you give us an idea of your staff for the last election, for this year and for next year?

Mr. Hamel: My regular staff is composed of 21 people, 22 including myself. To conduct an election, we have to hire at least one hundred extra people. In fact, during the last election, we hired altogether 140 people. However, some were there for only two weeks or three weeks. This is simply at our headquarters.

As far as electoral districts are concerned these people are paid from statutory funds and their salaries are included in the 13 odd million dollars shown as election cost.

Mr. Forest: You are talking only about returning officers?

Mr. Hamel: Not only returning officers, but also election secretaries, deputy returning officers, poll clerks, enumerators, revision officers, in other words all the many people who are needed for elections. These people are paid from the statutory item.

Those I hire at headquarters are not paid with the statutory fund. As soon as the election is started, I must apply to the Treasury Board to obtain supplementary funds. These funds are obtained from the Finance Contingencies item, an item for unexpected situations. This is a non-refundable item. This is why I did not have to submit supplementary estimates. Thus this amount does not appear in my estimates even if it is money I have spent. It was spent from the budget of the Finance Department and not from my budget. This may seem paradoxical, but this is the actual case.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I presume this will appear in the report from the Department of Finance?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, it will appear from the total amount of the item called the Financial Contingencies; I do not know the French translation. It is quite a large item of about $100 millions, I believe, and is intended for contingencies.

Mr. Forest: Normally, this year or next year, your staff will be about 20 people.

• 1130

Mr. Hamel: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Forest: And when there are no elections, what kind of a job do you do?

Mr. Hamel: First of all, to clean up an election takes about a year. The amendments or modifications to the Act which we intend to suggest require quite a lot of work, of drafting and printing. There are by-elections which we cope with. There are elections in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon for which I am Chief Electoral Officer. However these elections are at fixed dates. They were held last in 1967; therefore they will take place in 1970. We also have to prepare for the next General Election, to review all material available, what we have to purchase and also to see what improvements can be brought about in this material, etc.

Mr. Forest: In the years between elections, such as this year and next year, do the returning officers remain on your staff? Do they review lists or polling districts in their electoral constituencies?

Mr. Hamel: The returning officers, as they are called in the Act, are appointed on a permanent basis, but they are paid only when they do a specific job. I believe it would not be right to ask for them to review their districts when we know that the next election won't take place next month.

This means probably that in 1970 or 1971 these returning officers will have nothing to do except accounts which might still be outstanding, some problems which might catch our attention from the last election, as there are things which are brought to our attention at any time, but they are not paid at all. They have no fixed fees between elections; they don't have to review their districts every year, as in some provinces. They review their districts only when I ask them to do so. And I ask them to do so when I feel that it is useful or necessary, either before a by-election, for example if a member resigns or if a vacancy occurs in the House of Commons. If we believe there should be a review, then I ask the returning officer to review his districts at that time and as close as possible to the general election coming. With the population movements we have, particularly in urban centres, if it is done one year prior to a general election, this really creates trouble and problems.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: I have some questions on the printing of voters' lists and the remuneration, which may not have been adequate. I would like to ask how you arrive at this. I presume there is a variation in printing costs throughout the various parts of the country and so on. How do you assess the reimbursement of the cost of printing the voting lists? Also, can you tell me if you had any complaints about this?

Mr. Hamel: If I understand correctly you are dealing with the printing of the preliminary lists of electors?

Mr. Ritchie: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: Pursuant to section 60 of the Act, we have what we call a tariff of fees established by the Governor in Council and we have a standard tariff throughout Canada. The printers get a certain amount of money per name on the list, and there is no difference between one area of the country and another. There is only a slight difference in the process used by the printer, it is 16 cents per name if he uses a certain process and 18 cents per name, if he uses another process.

We did not have problems during the election, if I may say so, in the sense that to my knowledge no returning officer had any problem whatsoever finding a competent printer to print his lists. We had the odd complaint after the election to the effect that our rates were not adequate, particularly in some areas of the country; for instance, in large urban centres where the salaries that the printers have to pay are probably much higher than in smaller centres or in rural areas.

• 1135

I may say that we definitely intend to have a look at the tariff of fees before the next general election, and, if necessary, to try to obtain some expert advice on the best system to compensate adequately the printers responsible for printing our lists. Perhaps I should add that the returning officer is responsible for the selection of the printer. I have nothing to do with this; he selects. The only direction he gets from me—it is in his instructions—is that he should select a printer in his electoral district or near his electoral district; a printer who is competent and has the equipment to do the job required of him.

Mr. Ritchie: I do not know much about printing, but do you know if there is a variation in the normal pricing between large centres or is this fairly standard across the country?

Mr. Hamel: At the moment our rates are uniform across the country.

Mr. Ritchie: You do not actually set these rates. Did you mention by whom they are set?

Mr. Hamel: They are set by Order in Council.

Mr. Ritchie: Oh yes, but you can set them yourself; that is, you suggest that such and such a fee be considered adequate, is that right?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Ritchie: You are going to have a look at them for the next time around?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Ritchie: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Cafik?

Mr. Cafik: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I direct a question to the witness in respect of this 1968 general election break-down that has been presented to us this morning? I am looking at the column of returning officers services and expenses. Not being too familiar with this aspect of government, I would like to know why there is such a large difference in certain ridings. For instance, many of them are in the $5,000 to $6,000 category and two or three in the Province of Ontario, for instance, that are up in the $10,000 range. From my experience I cannot see that they are any larger ridings; one is, but one does not appear to be any larger in number. How is that amount determined?

Mr. Hamel: The basic fee of the returning officer is based on the number of names on the list of electors. He gets, all in all, I think about 11 cents, 11½ cents per name on the list, plus in urban areas $1.50 per polling division for his travelling expenses. In rural areas he is reimbursed the actual expenses incurred in travelling in his district for selecting and appointing his enumerators, selecting and appointing polling stations and deputy returning officers and so on.

The main variance would probably come from the difference in the number of names on the list of electors. By and large the number of electors per polling division does not vary that much so in terms of travelling expenses in urban areas there should not be that much difference between two districts which have approximately the same number of electors. Normally they should have approximately the same number of polling divisions; therefore, on that item the returning officer should get approximately the same fee.

Of course, it is quite understandable if you look at York Scarborough, for instance, which has probably twice as many electors...

Mr. Cafik: That is understandable.

Mr. Hamel: Yes. To take an extreme example, of a rural area it is quite normal for the returning officer in the Northwest Territories to spend quite a lot on travelling expenses because the only way he can get to different places in his district is by chartering aircraft and this is a very expensive mode of travelling. However, this is the only way of travelling, he has no choice. In other places he may use his own car, or some returning officers will travel much less than others. They will mainly do their work over the telephone, or they have people who will do the selecting in various areas in their districts; they will make the appointments and then whoever is appointed will be sworn in by the postmaster or a notary or a lawyer or a commissioner.

• 1140

Mr. Cafik: Is the returning officer responsible for all the staff that he may hire during the course of the election? Is that paid for out of his amount of reimbursement, or is that an additional charge?

Mr. Hamel: No, it is paid out of an allowance we give him. There is an item in our tariff of fees whereby he gets, I think, four and a half cents for his clerical assistance plus two cents or two and a half cents for addressing envelopes when mailing preliminary lists of electors to electors.

Some returning officers will hire a small staff on more or less a full-time basis. Others will hire a greater staff, but for very short periods of time. I even know of a few returning officers who used the facilities of some specialized schools, for instance, for addressing envelopes to mail preliminary lists of electors to the electors in his district, or business schools, for instance. But, this is paid out of the allowance we give him for that purpose.

Mr. Cafik: What sort of controls do you have on his travel? What controls do you have? Is there a certain allowable mileage allowance, perhaps a certain number of miles he is allowed to travel depending on the nature of his riding or is this just left wide open?

Mr. Hamel: He has to submit a detailed account of his travels; in other words, where he went. He may perhaps add the odd mile here and there, but if there is any exaggeration I think it is quite easy for us to pick it up. If he has a relatively small district and he claims he travelled 25,000 miles I think it is quite evident there is something wrong somewhere.

Furthermore, if he happens to spend more than a day travelling he will have to claim for his meals, also, if he spends a night somewhere he has to provide us with a voucher for his hotel. I do not think I am naive enough to say that we can control to the last penny, but I think we can exercise a reasonably adequate control over this kind of travelling.

Mr. Cafik: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin?

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask a few questions to the Chief Electoral Officer. I don't know if other people did, but as far as our party is concerned, I had occasion to speak very often to the Chief Electoral Officer during the last electoral campaign and almost everywhere in Quebec. And every time I found out that his services were tremendous, excellent, quick and efficient. Since I am a member of this Committee, I shall congratulate him and his team for all the excellent work he has done. And it is not enough to criticize, we should also congratulate when congratulations are in order.

Now, I would like to ask a few questions about printing costs of the preliminary electoral lists and official voters' lists.

I am under the impression, Mr. Chairman, I would not like to say anything gratuitously, but what is your opinion about this? As for myself, I feel there is a lot of waste, first of all as far as electoral lists are concerned. Secondly, it has come to my knowledge that many errors have been found because in the many ridings where I have worked, this has been the case.

• 1145

Thirdly, I have the feeling that the printers selected, are not always the most able ones and always belong to the right party. I think there is a lot of freedom left to the returning officers. During the election, when a complaint has to be made to the returning officers, sometimes we are turned back and told: "You are wrong". Then, nothing else can be said.

I think there is too much freedom given to the returning officers as to the choice of printers. I have some cases in mind, for instance, where two printers could very well do the work. One is a Conservative and the other one is a Liberal. Very often, if the returning officer belongs to the Liberals, the choice is automatic. It does not matter if they have better personnel or better equipment.

On what then is this choice based? Is it left entirely to the freedom of the returning officer? When complaints are made as far as the preliminary or official lists are concerned when errors are found or . . . I even found that complete streets had been forgotten for instance. We had to fight at the last election, in certain Quebec ridings, to have these streets included in the electoral lists.

I think everybody agrees a bit about this, maybe not to the same extent. I think that this question should be cleared up because there seems to be a leak of funds, some waste and people who are profiting at the expense of other people.

Mr. Hamel: Mr. Fortin, I thank you for your kind words on my behalf and also on behalf of my personnel who have been quite worthy.

In so far as the problems of printers are concerned, and which you have mentioned, it is in the Act stated quite clearly that the choice of the printer is left to the returning officer. Is there a more efficient way of doing this? I would say that prima facie, there doesn't seem to be any. The returning officer is in a much better position to judge the qualifications of the printers in his riding. If we had only one province or a rather small territory to look after, I think we could do much better. But when you have to operate on the scale of Canada, it is quite hard for us to judge the qualifications of a specific printer. Moreover, time is very limited. If the returning officer has to send his printing outside of the district, whatever the distances right away there are problems, because he will be using time which he should devote to other functions.

When you say that whole streets were missed, as far as missing names of streets or what have you, it may not be the fault of the printer. It could be the fault of the enumerators.

Mr. Fortin: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: On this subject, it is quite difficult to speak in general terms because the error may have several causes: It may be neglect on the part of the enumerators. As you know, most of those acting as enumerators are efficient, but some of them do not take this work seriously. It may be also a problem arising from the descriptions prepared by the returning officer, not that the descriptions are not complete, but that they are not understood by the enumerators. Also the returning officer may not have had sufficient time to have all the information and instructions given to the enumerators.

This is a very complex question, I think. We are trying to convince the returning officers that they should give adequate instructions to the enumerators. I think most of them are doing this quite well.

• 1150

One last thing comes to my mind. During the last election, the proportion of errors was greater I think than in previous general elections, because this was, in fact, the first election based on the new electoral map. You know, like I do, that the Representation Orders of 1966 has completely changed the electoral map of Canada, a change which has been unknown in the past. I take, for instance, your riding which I know very well, I think the difference between Lotbinière today and Lotbinière riding in 1965 is great. Let's say that they differ completely. In urban areas, I think it was even more evident. I believe this is why the frequency of errors was higher than in the past.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Chief Electoral Officer, about this precision on the enumeration, i.e. everything about the enumeration or the location of electors, in order that they will be voters on orders, do you not think that there should be a revision of all this system so that every voter is treated equitably?

Mr. Hamel: I think the question will be studied, presumably, when you will study the report of the Representation Commissioner on the establishment of a central file. If the decision of the Committee and of the House is to continue with the procedure we have now, I presume that we shall have the opportunity to study the present system and to amend it if necessary. There will be certain changes which could improve the present system. At first glance, I do not believe I can propose some specifically. There might be a way of improving for instances the actual revision procedure of lists, especially in urban areas. In rural areas, it is not so serious because the voters which are omitted from the list, apart from feeling somewhat neglected, can still vote under section 46 of the Act, if he is put under oath and accompanied by a witness. In cities, if he is not on the list, he cannot vote. Maybe we could improve our present revision procedure in the sense that we could give it a little more publicity than at present. This is one question I will leave to your discretion for consideration and suggestions. I know that in certain provinces or certain large municipalities, newspapers are used, for instance, to notify voters if their name is missing from the list or if they believe that certain names are missing. These people can contact the returning officer or his deputy, so that the list can be corrected.

At this time, the only method provided is what we call revision notices, which are official documents posted in post office and other public buildings. But, as you know, less and less people go to the post office, especially in cities. So, very few people see these notices. Maybe the procedure could be improved in this regard.

Mr. Fortin: In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it will be pretty hard to visit the post offices in the future since the Postmaster is closing them.

The Chairman: If you will allow me a supplementary question to that of Mr. Fortin. As far as errors are concerned in the voters list, you have referred to the description of the polling divisions. They have to enumerate. If I remember right, you give instructions to your returning officers in each district to describe the polling division sometimes before the election. How much time?

Mr. Hamel: This is about what I was saying a while ago. If this could be done right before the election, it would be ideal. However, we do not know at what precise time the election will take place. Let us take the example of 1968, for instance, we asked for a complete revision after the redistribution that is in the fall of 1966 and in the winter of 1967. As a result, the descriptions of districts which were used in 1968 had been established a year at least before the election. But at that time, a lot of changes were made; streets could have changed names or be renumbered. For instance, the Quebec or Niagara Falls areas, during the revision of the districts, there were no structures, no existing structures. When the election was called, the returning officer was reminded that some people were living there now. With my permission a new polling district was established and, once the enumeration is completed, we find 980 persons in this area, where, at the time of the revision, there was nobody living there. And this happens everywhere throughout Canada, in the centre of Vancouver or in the Vancouver area, it is the same.

• 1155

What we are trying to do, therefore, is to make a revision of those districts, as far as possible to election time. But, this is not always easy to guess the time of the election. We do not want to be caught with descriptions 3 or 4 years old. Quebec people, for instance, know that returning officers must, under the Act, revise their district every year, whether there is a forthcoming election or not. Naturally, this is very costly, but it has certain advantages. In other provinces, the procedure is not the same.

You have talked about descriptions a moment ago, and I talked about this, in relation to the errors on the voters lists. We ask the returning officers to prepare descriptions as short as possible and as clear as possible. However, it is difficult to give precise instructions, because, what seems to be understood by everyone in one province, may be meaning less for another province. In 1966, for instance, if you look at the description of the electoral district in Newfoundland. I, for myself, do not understand the thing and yet people in Newfoundland understand it. Because, there are a latitude and meridiens in Newfoundland. And for the people in Newfoundland this is quite understandable. But, in other areas, in the west for instance, we make use of lots, numbers of lots which is not done in the Maritimes or in Quebec or Ontario.

So, the only general instruction that we can give to returning officers is to prepare descriptions as clear and as concise as possible, so that everybody understands them.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any more questions? Mr. Forest?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Forest: Do all the returning officers throughout the country pass sometimes in Ottawa to learn the trade.

Mr. Hamel: In practice, we feel that it is necessary for a new returning officer to spend 3 days, here in Ottawa, three days, during which a little bit of the Act is explained to him, his responsibilities and of course the financial aspect of the election, the expenses to which he is entitled, the expenses that we pay directly and that are acceptable to us etc.

• 1200

To give you a concrete example, since the new electoral map of 1966, a lot of returning officers, who were already working in other ridings, have been named in new electoral districts. They already had the experience of 2 to 5 previous elections. These people were called to Ottawa, but for one day only, because they knew their trade already. The only thing we had to explain to them was their new electoral district, the boundaries, for instance, what it was composed of, the number of voters in that riding, the number of people coming from other ridings, the parts of his district which were transferred to another riding, etc.

Mr. Forest: As far as the boundaries of the ridings are concerned, I understand this does not depend directly on you, but on the Representation Commissioner. Do you make recommendations to him in the light of your experience? For instance, during the last election, you found out that certain polls or municipalities were divided in an unpractical way. Do you make any recommendations to him for the next election in respect of the boundaries of the riding?

Mr. Hamel: Officially, no. And I doubt very much that the Commissioner himself may make recommendations, because the boundaries are the responsibility of each Provincial Commission. Under the present Act, the Commissioner is a member of those commissions. Each commission is absolutely autonomous. And this was established by the Act passed by Parliament in 1964, but each commission, established for each of the provinces, is absolutely autonomous. The Representation Commissioner, himself, is only a member of these commissions. And, I think this is entirely their role.

Mr. Forest: Would it be right to say that there could be changes in the boundaries of the ridings only after the next census?

Mr. Hamel: This is the way I understand it, yes, because the commissions do not exist at the moment and only the commissions can make changes.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Fortin?

Mr. Fortin: As far as the candidates' expenses are concerned, whether they win or lose, they are obliged to publish a report of their electoral expenses or at least to submit one. First, could you tell me if they are compelled to publish this report? If so, is reimbursement provided for those expenses? Do you believe that it is fair for reporting officers, for instance, to select one particular newspaper to publish those electoral expenses, sometimes even the most expensive newspaper around, when it is the candidate who...

Mr. Chairman: This is paid by the candidate.

Mr. Fortin: This is paid by the candidate, but did you have any problems about this situation?

Mr. Hamel: No, there are no problems that I know of. Anyway, if you look at the Elections Act, the publication of the candidates' expenses is strictly up to the candidate and the returning officer. I have no powers under the Act, no responsibilities under the Act. The candidate must produce a summary of his expenses and submit it to the returning officer for the purpose of publication in a newspaper. The cost of this is at the expense of the candidate, it is a part of his expenses, he is not reimbursed for that. Moreover, if the candidate submits a report to the returning officer, but does not assume the cost of the publication, the returning officer is not obliged to publish the candidate's report. He is obliged to publish it only if the candidate accepts to pay the costs.

Mr. Fortin: Then, if the candidate refuses to pay the costs, the report can be produced without being published?

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

[English]

Mr. Cafik: In that particular case is the candidate or the member violating any law by refusing to pay?

Mr. Hamel: Yes, in a sense he is because the Act says that he shall provide the returning officer with a summary of his expenses for publication in a newspaper.

Mr. Cafik: But does the Act say he must also provide the funds to publish it?

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

Mr. Cafik: All right, thank you.

The Chairman: At our next meeting, when we have a quorum I will call the various items in the estimates for a vote since we have heard Mr. Hamel and, I think, completed our questioning on these particular estimates. We have to review the possibility of a permanent electoral list and make a complete review of the Canada Election Act, so we will be in touch with Mr. Hamel, again. If there are any more questions on his estimates they can be asked at that time. Thank you very much, Mr. Hamel.

If there are no more questions then I think I will adjourn the meeting.

Thank you very much Mr. Hamel, and also to your assistants. The meeting is adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON ★

JUN - 9 1969

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 7

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 1969

Vote 45—Chief Electoral Officer

Subject-matter of question of privilege—Mr. Roberts

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

INCLUDING FOURTH REPORT TO THE HOUSE

The Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Cafik,	¹ Marceau,	Schreyer,
Forest,	Murphy,	Skoberg,
Fortin,	² Nielsen,	Sullivan,
Hogarth,	Peddle,	Trudel,
Lundrigan,	Richard,	Valade,
MacGuigan	Ritchie,	Woolliams — (20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4) (b),

¹ Mr. Marceau replaced Mr. Goode on April 17, 1969.

² Mr. Nielsen replaced Mr. McGrath on April 17, 1969.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Thursday, February 20, 1969.

Ordered—That Vote 45 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ATTEST

ALISTAIR FRASER

The Clerk of the House of Commons

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Wednesday, April 23, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of Thursday, February 20, 1969, your Committee has considered Vote 45 listed in the Main Estimates for 1969-70 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Your Committee commends it to the House.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues Nos. 6 and 7) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Tuesday, April 22, 1969.
(8)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met at 11:24 a.m. this day, the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Cantin, Forest, Fortin, Jerome, Laflamme, Marceau, MacGuigan, Peddle, Richard, Ritchie, Sullivan.—(12)

Also present: Mr. Clermont, M.P.

Witnesses:: Mr. John Roberts, M.P.; Dr. Maurice Ollivier, Parliamentary Counsel; Mr. J. P. Connell, Assistant Secretary (Personnel), Treasury Board.

On motion of Mr. Sullivan,

*Resolved,—*That the evidence of the meeting held Thursday, April 17, 1969, with less than a quorum present, be accepted and printed.

On motion of Mr. Richard,

*Resolved,—*That item 45 of the 1969-70 Estimates relating to the Chief Electoral Officer be carried and that it be reported and commended to the House.

The Chairman read the Committee's Order of Reference of Thursday, March 27, 1969, relating to the question of privilege raised by Mr. Roberts, M.P.

The Chairman reported that he had been authorized to delete the words "Strictly Confidential" from a letter from the Honourable Jean Marchand to Mr. Roberts, dated March 20, 1969.

On motion of Mr. Marceau,

*Resolved,—*That the now declassified letter be printed as part of today's proceedings. (See Appendix B).

Mr. Roberts gave a statement and was questioned.

Dr. Ollivier gave a statement and was questioned.

Mr. Connell reviewed the action of the Treasury Board with respect to Mr. Roberts' case.

The witnesses were questioned.

On motion of Mr. Jerome,

Resolved,—That the Committee sit in camera at its next meeting.

At 12:58 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Michael A. Measures,
Acting Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, April 22, 1969.

● 1124

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum.

Before we commence our study of the Roberts case, if I may call it that, you will recall that we had agreed to deal with certain Estimates last week in the absence of a quorum on the understanding that someone would move today to have accepted and printed the evidence of such meeting held on Thursday, April 17, 1969.

Mr. Sullivan: I so move.

Mr. Jerome: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: I would now ask for a motion that Item 45 of the 1969-70 Estimates be carried and reported to the House.

Mr. Richard: I so move.

Mr. Forest: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: On March 27, 1969 the House of Commons submitted to us terms of reference which I will read. Here is the report sent to me by the Clerk of the House of Commons:

[Interpretation]

It is ordered—That the subject-matter of the question of privilege from the honourable Member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) relating to the refusal of the Government, upon his election to the House of Commons, to pay him the terminal gratuity provided as a normal practice to those leaving the Public Service, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[English]

I have been authorized to delete the words "strictly confidential" from a letter sent on March 20 last by Hon. Jean Marchand to Mr. John Roberts regarding his case. This letter states the grounds on which

Mr. Roberts' claim was refused, which resulted in his raising a question of privilege in the House of Commons on March 27. If I had a motion deleting the words "strictly confidential" from this letter it could form part of the evidence of today's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Mr. Marceau: I move that the words "strictly confidential" be removed from the said letter and that it form part of today's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Mr. Sullivan: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: We will circulate copies of this letter among the members present.

We have with us today Dr. Maurice Ollivier, legal adviser to the House of Commons. Before hearing his point of view on the legal aspects raised by this matter I think it would be appropriate to call upon the very person interested in this matter, our colleague John Roberts, to put the facts, as he understands them, before us.

It is agreed that we hear from Mr. Roberts?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Mr. Roberts, before proceeding we will give the members a moment to read Mr. Marchand's letter.

Mr. John Roberts (Member for York-Simcoe): Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to express my gratitude to you and to the members of the Committee for dealing so promptly with this matter which is of great concern to me. I prepared an aide-memoire which I have circulated to members of the Committee.

[Interpretation]

I apologize to the French-speaking members for not having had my text translated before to-day's meeting. Unfortunately I did not have enough time. I am very sorry, but, at any rate, I had copies of the memorandum in English distributed to all members even the French-speaking ones, and I hope it will help them a bit to take part in the discussions of the Committee.

[English]

This aide-mémoire is not very lengthy. I am prepared to read it if members of the Committee so desire. But since they already have it they may prefer that I simply touch upon the main points that are made in it.

The Chairman: You could touch on the main points rather than read it, because everyone has a copy of it, but I am informed that if you want to have it as part of the record you had better read it, sir.

Mr. Roberts: That is fine; I am in your hands, Mr. Chairman.

The question which I raised previously in the House of Commons on March 27th revolves around one central point to which I keep coming back in my arguments. It is the relatively simple point that benefits which I would ordinarily have received have been denied to me because I have been elected a Member of the House of Commons. Had I not been elected I would have been treated one way. As a result of my being elected to the House of Commons I have been treated in a different way.

Compensation for past services, which I performed as a government servant, have been denied to me entirely as a result of my present position as a Member of the House of Commons. I have been deprived of advantages which were normally due to me. In sum, I have been treated in a discriminatory and unfavourable manner because of my status as a Member of Parliament. And all my arguments are really directed to this central matter of the discriminatory treatment which springs entirely from my status as a Member of Parliament.

I do not think the facts of the matter are in dispute. Briefly, they are as follows. My government service dates back to July, 1963 when I entered the Department of External Affairs. Since that date, and later, while I was an executive assistant to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, I accumulated a vacation credit which amounts to almost 50 days. When I was nominated in May for the election last June I took a leave of absence without pay from my position in the office of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, and with my election on June 25 my employment in the Minister's office ceased.

The normal treatment both for civil servants and, I believe, for ministerial staff, is that when they retire from government service they are paid a sum equivalent to their accumulated vacation credit. To the best of my knowledge, this was done for all my predecessors in the office of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

The device—and I emphasize the word “device”—for making this payment—and it is usually made in a lump sum—is the following. The government employee, or the public servant is kept on the government's book as if—as if—he were still providing service to the government, even though he is in fact working full time for another organization and may, indeed, be working in another place in Ottawa. In other words, the government adopts the fiction that the person is working for the government, though in fact he is not. When he has been kept on the books long enough to cover the size of the lump sum payment he is taken off the books. This is the normal device used to making the payment.

Of course, in itself, this does not preclude the use of other methods. For example, in the case of those who become Members of Parliament the device of an ex gratia payment might be used. And, parenthetically, perhaps I should interject that regardless of what decision you have come to about the limitations imposed by the present law, the Senate and House of Commons Act, no matter how valid you may feel is the argument that this places limitations on the ability of the government to pay a member of parliament for past services, it would always be open to you, as members of the Committee, to recommend to the government that an ex gratia payment be made in compensation for past services.

To return to the main argument in my case, it is clear from the letter I have received from the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development which has now been circulated to you, that though the government admits—and I am now using their words—that “as a matter of justice I am fully entitled to payment”—those are the words of the Minister—they believe that making a payment to me could place my seat in jeopardy; and on this ground they have refused to make the payment.

This letter which you have makes it clear that the decision to withhold payment springs solely from my status as a Member of Parliament. There is no indication in the letter that there is any other barrier to my receiving the money. It argues that a payment to me would contravene the Senate and House of Commons Act. It also notes—which I believe is generally accepted—that only Parliament can interpret the application of legislation which concerns its own members. Parliament is, therefore, the final authority in the interpretation of the application of the Senate and House of Commons Act. It is, therefore, entirely proper for the members of this Committee, who, to that extent, act in the capacity, I suppose, almost of an advisory court, to come to a determination on the issues involved and to recommend to the House of Commons the decision which should be taken on the point at issue. In other words, it is basically for the House of Commons—for this Committee which is a servant of the House—to come to a decision on the merits of the case. This is your responsibility.

It is my hope, therefore, although, of course, it is not for me to give any directions to the Committee on how they wish to proceed in the matter and what questions they wish to consider, that the Committee would feel able to come to a conclusion on the two related points which I believe go to the heart of the issue. There may be other questions in this general problem of payment to members of parliament who have previously been in public service, and I understand Mr. Anderson might wish to present to you some particular points which relate to his case which is in some ways different from mine. But I would suggest that there are, at the heart of the issue, two questions. First, I suggest that a payment to a former public servant, who is a Member of Parliament, for services performed entirely before becoming a member does not contravene the Senate and House of Commons Act. And, second, I suggest that no one, on becoming a Member of Parliament, should lose rights or privileges to payments or emoluments for service of for employment which was performed entirely before he became a member.

I would now like just briefly to discuss the first of these questions, which is the extent of the limitation imposed on members of the Commons by Section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act. The argument has been that Section 16 precludes a member in my position from receiving payment. I will read Section 16 which is perhaps a bit complicated. I hope that most of you have it before you in the aide-mémoire that I presented.

In any case it reads:

If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission, or is concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work which, by this Act, renders a person incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the Government of Canada, or for any of the officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada, is paid, whether such contract, agreement or sale is expressed or implied, and whether the transaction is single or continuous, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall thenceforth be null and void.

Now the first thing to note about this Section is that it applies to members of the House of Commons. It does not apply to those who are former members, nor does it apply to those who with the passage of time, may be fortunate or unfortunate enough to become members. It applies to a member of the Commons who accepts any office or commission or is concerned or interested in any contract or agreement, or knowingly sells or performs any service. These limitations are all in the present tense. They apply to actions of the members of the House of Commons. They are not retro-active. There is nothing in the section to indicate that they apply to services performed before becoming a member.

That they do not apply in my case becomes clear, I think, if we simply ask the following questions in the context of the Act. Has John Roberts, Member of Parliament, accepted any office or commission? To which the answer is no. Is John Roberts, Member of Parliament, concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work? No. Has John Robert, Member of Parliament, sold any goods, wares or merchandise? No. Does John Robert, Member of Parliament, perform any service for the Government of Canada? To which, at least in the context of the Act, the answer is no.

For it is clear that the services which I performed were entirely completed before I became a Member of Parliament. That is a simple fact. The services or actions referred to in Section 16 are services or actions by a Member of Parliament. I was not a member of Parliament when those services and actions were performed. I am not asking for payment for services performed while I was a member of the Commons. I am asking for payment relating only to service as a government servant. Section 16 does not apply to actions prior to becoming a member.

Now I described to you earlier that the traditional device for providing the termination payment is to hold an employee on the books as if—and I stress “as if”—he were still employed by the government. But it is clear that the payment which he receives is not for services which are provided during the post-employment period, for two reasons at least. The payment is made as a lump sum payment which would be inconsistent if he were being paid for a continuing service while he was on the books.

And secondly, this payment is calculated entirely with reference to the vacation credits which were accumulated before he finished his employment, and he is taken off the books once this sum is reached. In other words, it is clear that the payment is not determined by or constructed upon the basis of any service to the government after he leaves its employment, and that for the evident reason that no services to the government had been performed after the employment was terminated.

I believe, therefore, that the payment which I am asking the government to make could not reasonably be held to constitute a payment for services performed since my election to the House of Commons.

To do so would fly in the face of the facts. While the payment would be made at a time when I had become a member of the House of Commons, the services for which the payment is made were performed before that status was reached. In that sense it is comparable to the military pension which a former member of the armed forces receives, and may receive while he is holding his parliamentary seat. The military pension is a payment springing from military service, for service to the government which is completed before he becomes a member. And receiving it does not contravene the limitations of Section 16.

I conclude, therefore, that section 16 does not prevent the government from making the payment to which, it admits, I am in justice entitled.

I would like to turn very briefly now to the second point which I raised which was this:

That no Member of Parliament, in becoming a Member of Parliament, should lose rights or privileges to payments for services or employment performed entirely before becoming a member.

I confess that this seems to me to be almost self evident. We accept, as Members of Parliament, that certain limitations be placed upon us to preclude even the suspicion that we might be influenced by outside payment to act contrary to the interests of the public we have been elected to serve. To apply this principle to a payment for work entirely performed before occupying parliamentary office simply penalises a Member of Parliament for being chosen to represent his constituency. To accept that argument would establish a barrier, a disability, or a disuasion, to those who are otherwise interested and capable, from seeking seats in the House of Commons. Such an interpretation, I suggest, would, therefore, be contrary to the public interest.

In sum, Mr. Chairman, I have tried to show that I have been treated in a discriminatory and unfavorable manner as a result of my status as a member of the House of Commons. I think the letter which has been circulated indicates that clearly. I have suggested that this divergence from normal treatment to former public servants is not required by the Senate and House of Commons Representation Act. Even if members of the Committee decided that that was the effect of the Act, they would still have open to them the possibility of recommending to the House that an ex-gratia payment be made to Members of Parliament who find themselves in my position.

I have raised two related points which are fairly specific, which I hope the members of the Committee will wish to decide, and I have offered arguments to support my position on those two principles. I am anxious to be of whatever assistance I can be to the members of the Committee in dealing with this question, and I place myself entirely in your hands.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Roberts. Mr. Richard.

Mr. Richard: Before we proceed, according to the terms of reference, in this case we are dealing only with Mr. Roberts' case and we will not be making any recommendations as to changes in the Senate and the House of Commons Representation Act. We are dealing with a particular case and not with other cases, only with his case, because the terms of reference are very narrow.

The Chairman: But I think, when you read the terms of reference, we have to deal with the question raised by Mr. Roberts in the House of Commons, and if you read back to the statement he made when he raised his question of privilege of the House of Commons, I think it should cover this point too. We have to make a decision on the whole issue.

Mr. Richard: Yes, but we cannot make recommendations as to amendments to the Act or anything like that. We are not given that reference.

The Chairman: Whatever might be the decision we will reach when we come to this conclusion, it is going to affect some other members too who might be in the same position as the one raised by Mr. Roberts.

Mr. Roberts: Excuse me for interjecting, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me not so much a question of changes in the Act, but rather that there is some doubt as to what actually the Act means or what limitations it imposes. So I would respectfully suggest that in dealing with my case you would be clarifying what the effect of Section 16 is, and the clarification might therefore affect other people who find themselves in a position similar to my own.

Mr. Sullivan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on that.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Sullivan: It is my very firm conviction that Section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Representation Act does not apply in this case at all. I think it is pretty clear, and I think Mr. Roberts should be commended for the very clear memo . . .

The Chairman: I do not want, Mr. Sullivan, to interrupt you but I would suggest to you that the kind of argument you are raising now is a little premature in the sense that we are not now dealing with the kind of conclusion that will be reached, but only getting the facts before the members and then after that we could sit in camera and decide what conclusions to reach. But I think it would be appropriate, if some members have precise questions to clarify points, to clarify some of the facts raised by Mr. Roberts, for me to allow questions. But before entering into the whole issue and discussing arguments, I think we should hear the witnesses we have called. Mr. Roberts has presented his case and if any clarification of what Mr. Roberts has just said is needed, then I think we should direct our questions precisely to those issues rather than talk among ourselves about the conclusions we may reach. I appreciate the suggestions you have made, but I think they are a little premature for the time being. Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: May I put a question to the witness, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Roberts, let me put my impression of the situation to you and ask for your comment. I think that may be the best way because it is a sort of general question.

It strikes me that a question of privilege, as a member of the House of Commons, is at this moment in time, perhaps, premature because it is my impression, first, that the Cabinet seems favourably disposed to making a payment to you, although it would be an ex gratia payment, but their fear was that you might be into trouble under Section 16 of the Act. Second, the question involved here, rather than being a question of privilege as a member of the House of Commons, is really a question of the privileges of an individual citizen having been adversely affected by having been elected to the House of Commons. It is really your privilege as a citizen rather than your privilege as a member of the House which comes into question.

The third impression I have is, if the Cabinet is prepared and if we can make a recommendation that an ex gratia payment be made, that that be done. If you are placed in jeopardy as a result of that payment, we are then into a question of privilege which I think most of us seem agreed would put you on pretty solid ground.

The Chairman: Again, Mr. Jerome, I do not want to bar the question but I believe the same remarks I made to Mr. Sullivan apply to the kind of remarks you are making now. I believe we should stick to the facts. When we discuss among ourselves the kind of conclusions we reach, I think we should hear the whole evidence about the law, the way it applies, the jurisprudence, if any, any other points. Mr. Ritchie?

Mr. Ritchie: I would just like to ask, Mr. Chairman, as Mr. Roberts had leave of absence during the election, but assuming he had not been elected on June 25 and had still not returned to the Civil Service, how would he have received this money and in what manner? Would he have been carried on their books, say, for two months?

Mr. Roberts: My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that I would have received the money in the way in which it has been paid previously in many cases, to other people in a similar position, as a lump sum payment. I assume that I would have been paid in the same way that they had been paid, by a lump sum payment.

Mr. Ritchie: Technically you still would have been considered an employee for the number of months required to use up that lump sum?

Mr. Roberts: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, there are three or four questions that I want to ask. Before I ask them, I want Mr. Roberts to realize that I am in full sympathy with his case. There have been too many instances in the past when people at all levels of the Public Service have been denied the opportunity to seek public office because of hazards or obstacles such as this.

I am wondering whether Mr. Roberts would tell us if his appointment, when he went to work for the government in 1960, was an Order in Council appointment or a Public Service Commission appointment.

Mr. Roberts: In 1963 I joined the Department of External Affairs which is a Civil Service position, and when I resigned from External Affairs to join the Minister's office I believe that was an Order in Council appointment covered by the Public Service Act. I think there is a section in the Public Service Act—I am not sure what number it is—which refers to members of ministerial offices.

The Chairman: We are dealing precisely with this point.

Mr. Roberts: We were considered for some purposes to be under the Civil Service regulations and not for other purposes.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you aware of anything in the law or in the regulations of the Public Service Commission that would require—at the time of your leave of absence you were an Order in Council appointment then—your resignation once you were nominated, rather than receiving leave of absence without pay?

The Chairman: I am sorry, I do not want to interrupt you, but Mr. Ollivier will deal precisely with those issues, too.

Mr. Roberts: Perhaps I could be allowed to say that I do not know of any such disability and at the time I sought legal advice which was to the effect that the proper action for me would be to take a leave of absence without pay.

Mr. Benjamin: A lot of people are wondering about instances of people who wish to seek nomination for a political party, and we are told—and I have no way of knowing this for sure—that if they did and if they received the nomination they would have to resign because they were seeking federal office and were federal employees. There was no prohibition to their seeking provincial or municipal office. Whether or not this is correct, or whether it is just something that happens behind the scenes, I would not know. Could you tell us, Mr. Roberts, were both the date you were nominated and the date of your leave of absence effective the same day?

Mr. Roberts: I believe it was May 14, and I think the leave of absence was effective as of May 15. I think there was one day when I was considered to be on service when I came back and cleared up the office and so on. The effective date of the leave of absence was from May 15, I believe, or May 14.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I am a little concerned that Mr. Roberts will not be able to make his case adequately if we cannot discuss the substance of the questions while he is here. Have I misunderstood; will he be present at the closed session as well?

The Chairman: Well, I think it should be clearly understood that Mr. Roberts is available to members of the Committee, but I think most of the questions being asked right now are a little premature of what is going to be said or expressed by the Law Clerk of the House of Commons. I think if it could be agreed among the members we could hear a report by Mr. Ollivier and then if we want to come back to ask questions of Mr. Roberts that would be agreeable because he has already stated that he was available to the members.

Mr. MacGuigan: All I wanted to ensure was that Mr. Roberts has a chance to comment on these points as they are raised by us.

The Chairman: Then I think we should call upon Dr. Ollivier since he has some years of experience on this theme.

Dr. P. M. Ollivier (Parliamentary Counsel and Law Clerk, House of Commons): Mr. Chairman, on Thursday, March 27, Mr. John Roberts, member for York-Simcoe, raised a question of privilege in the House of Commons, which I will try to summarize in as few words as possible as you have already heard Mr. Roberts this morning and you have also heard him in the House.

The member for York-Simcoe in stating his question said:

... it relates to the refusal of the Government upon my election to the House of Commons, to pay to me the terminal gratuity provided as a normal practice to those leaving the public service.

And he added: "the facts are basically these—members of the public service are normally given a termination payment upon leaving the public service equivalent to their accumulated vacation leave." And further: "the technique for payment normally used is a device, or what I would call fiction. I think that is important. The former public servant is kept on the books even though he may be working on a full-time basis for another employer."

Another employer, of course—not the House of Commons at that time.

I have rather emphasized those quotations because I intend coming back to them in the analysis of this question of privilege.

The Member for York-Simcoe referred to the fact that the payment is discretionary; also that if he had been paid it would be conceivable that his right to hold his seat could be challenged. He admitted that part of it in his testimony in the House.

One last quotation is as follows: "Moreover, it is well accepted that on questions concerning the application of section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, final authority as to the eligibility of members to sit rests with the House of Commons."

Since reference has been made to section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, and since we will have to come back to that section, it would have been very useful to me to quote that section at length, but this has already been done by the member. I will just take in a few words:

'16. If any member of the House of Commons . . . performs any service for the Government of Canada . . . for which any public money of Canada is paid . . .

I am now summarizing it, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall thenceforth be null and void.'

Having now referred to certain preliminaries, I might perhaps now in a general way state what I understand the position to be.

Mr. Roberts, M.P., is a former executive assistant who was on salary and employed in the office of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. He had accumulated vacation leave over a period of time, but before using this he became a candidate at the federal election in 1968, was elected, and now wishes to receive this leave reduced to dollars. He has requested payment of a certain amount from the federal authorities and for the moment has been refused payment.

Bourinot, on questions of privilege at pages 303 and 304, defines them as taking a wide range but referring to all matters affecting the rights of members since they became members of the House. I need not give those quotations at length; suffice it to say that they would cover the present case.

The honourable member takes the position that, because of the fact that he is a member of Parliament, he has been denied payment of money for services rendered before he became a member which an ordinary civil servant or executive assistant would receive in the circumstances. In other words, he is prejudiced by his particular status as a member.

This again revolves around section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act and its interpretation. Section 16 provides, inter alia, that if a member of the House of Commons performs any service for the government for which any public money of Canada is paid, the seat of such member should therefor be vacated.

There is no doubt again that if he did receive this payment of money while a member, some other member might raise a question of privilege to be dealt with by this Committee.

The honourable member either has the right to be paid what he calls severance pay, or he has not. If he has the right, then section 16 has no application for he is requesting money that he has earned and was due him before becoming a member of Parliament, and Parliament is not concerned. If on the other hand he has not that right, there still remains the possibility of an ex gratia payment which may or may not interfere with his right to sit in the House and, for this reason, the Government of Canada is understandably somewhat reluctant to put into operation a fiction which might disqualify the member, which would be somewhat parallel to paying a pension to a former member of the House who has become a senator. The member could not receive a pension at the same that he is paid an indemnity as a senator.

To a certain extent this is a question of privilege in reverse and to my mind it is hypothetical. The direct question would be if the member had been paid monthly, thus kept on strength of the department whilst a member. Then the question could well be raised whether the member has not thus disqualified himself from sitting in the House of Commons. The hypothetical question is precisely, would the member then be disqualified?

In other words, the problem is whether the member may receive the amount claimed with impunity.

Apparently civil servants who receive this amount do so by means of a fiction adopted for purposes of authority to pay them. He was kept on strength for the period of time required to absorb the amount of his vacation leave. It has been an ex gratia payment authorized by Order in Council and paid out of the general vote of administration of the department concerned.

Whether in the present case the honourable member was a civil servant as defined in the former Act—the Civil Service Act—or as amended by the Public Service Employment Act which was passed in 1966-67, Chapter 71, I presume the benefits were pursuant to Order in Council, as was the amount of the salary.

The situation is further complicated by section 37 of the Public Service Employment Act just referred to dealing with ministers' staffs, where subsection (2) recites that a person who is employed in the office of a minister ceases to be so employed thirty days after the person holding the position of such minister ceases to hold that position. How then could the member be kept on strength after that time by fiction of the law and be paid? There is also no doubt that he could not be paid whilst he is on leave without pay.

The Act says that he can go on leave without pay. Therefore you could not pay him during that time by a fiction of the law since he is on leave without pay.

Whilst I am still dealing with the Public Service Employment Act, it is pursuant to section 32 that an employee of the public service who is desirous of becoming a candidate at an election may obtain leave of absence without pay to seek nomination as a candidate for election. If he is declared elected, he ceases to be an employee of the public service. That is Section 32(5). This being so, he cannot at that time be kept on strength of the public service nor, as I have said, can he be kept on strength during the election campaign because the Public Service Employment Act provides that he is then on leave without pay. So, if that person is declared elected, he is losing his unused vacation leave.

The keeping on strength of an employee in order to pay him a cash gratuity in lieu of unused leave, although not contemplated by the legislation, is not against the Public Service Employment Act, or against the public service terms and conditions of employment regulations made under the authority of the Financial Administration Act. The resignation is postponed to a later date in order to allow the employee to be paid for a period without having to report for duty—in that case, this is again an ex gratia payment.

To return to the mechanics of the operation, ex gratia payments are first decided by Order in Council and included, generally speaking in the general vote of administration of the department concerned, and a special item is not needed—the Order in Council is the authority for the Comptroller of the Treasury to make the payment.

If a special item were inserted in the estimates, then whether or not section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act applies may be irrelevant, for the special item is an enactment which stands by itself, but I will come back to that later on.

Again the position is clear that the House of Commons itself has the exclusive jurisdiction to determine questions of eligibility of its members. This is in accordance with judicial decisions in England as well as in Canada.

That the question of eligibility of members rests with the House of Commons cannot as a general proposition be denied. The House and its Committee on Privileges and Elections may certainly be involved in a problem like this one, and this must have been taken into account when the question of the ex gratia payment came before the Cabinet for consideration.

On the other hand, a committee of the House cannot authorize or directly recommend an expenditure of money. It is the function of a minister to do so, having first obtained the recommendation of the Crown. All the Committee would do or could do, in any case, if it is the opinion of its members that an injustice has been done, would be to report that finding and recommend that the government should consider the expediency of placing in the estimates, or supplementary estimates, an item for the payment of such "severance pay"—Mr. Roberts calls it severance pay but—I do not because it concerns monthly payments and keeping on strength—with the stipulation that such payment or payments shall not disqualify the member or members affected, because more than one member happens to be involved of course in this particular matter.

The item in the Appropriation Act to my mind would then become law when the Act itself would receive Royal Assent. It would also remove any doubt as to the validity of payments made and as to the qualification or disqualification of the member or members to sit in the House. What I have in mind is a proviso. If an item were put in the Estimates it should have the same proviso as happened, for instance, when the position of parliamentary assistants was authorized by an item in the Estimates before the actual act was passed. That was in 1943 and there was a proviso there saying,

Provided however that notwithstanding any Act or other law to the contrary payments made hereunder shall not render any such person, if he be a Member of the House of Commons, liable to any penalty or disqualification, or vacate the seat of any Member of the House of Commons or render such Member ineligible to sit or vote in the said House and no person receiving payment hereunder shall thereby be disqualified as a candidate at any Dominion election.

In other words, if the Committee should first recognize that an injustice has been done and so report it to the House with a recommendation that an item with this proviso be put in the Estimates, I imagine that is as far as a Committee could go. The final decision would still be with the government but on the recommendation of the Committee of Privileges and Elections. If the Committee does that it is possible that the government would feel justified in putting in such an Estimate which would cover all the cases that you have in mind.

Mr. Jerome: What then would be the effect of the House adopting that report and approving it, if we made that recommendation.

Dr. Ollivier: I do not even know that it would be necessary for the House to adopt the report, as long as you made the report to the House. Perhaps the government would prefer that it be adopted—I do not know. Not all reports are adopted.

Mr. Jerome: There is something about Dr. Ollivier's remarks that confuses me. The term ex gratia payment is used and—the interpretation that you have placed on it, Doctor somewhat confuses me. There seems to me to be a kind of payment by keeping the person on service and giving him the money to which he is entitled.

Dr. Ollivier: That is the way it has been done.

Mr. Jerome: I appreciate that, but that to me seems to be something different. To me that would seem to be a contractual payment, whereas an ex gratia payment would seem to me to be something different. Now in your interpretation you seem to imply that an ex gratia payment is that very thing.

Dr. Ollivier: What I mean is that there is not a legal obligation for the government to pay. In other words Mr. Roberts could not sue the government for payment of that. If a payment is made it would be ex gratia, because he would not be successful in obtaining the payment before the courts.

Mr. Jerome: I see.

Dr. Ollivier: In that way it is an ex gratia payment—because the government is not obliged to make it. In resigning he has practically lost. It is like a Civil Servant who is entitled to a certain number of holidays in a year and if he does not take them he loses them.

Mr. Jerome: Right.

Dr. Ollivier: A member of Parliament is entitled to 15 days holidays in the year. If he loses 15 days he will not be penalized for those 15 days, but if he does not take those 15 days he cannot add them on in the following session and have 30 days.

The Chairman: Before dealing with this point I would suggest to the members that it might be interesting to have Mr. J. P. Connell, the Assistant Secretary to the Treasury Board, comment on what happened in connection with the Roberts case at Treasury Board. In that way we will have further facts and then after that we could call upon any of the witnesses present and ask questions. If that is agreeable to the members, I would ask Mr. Connell to proceed. Would you state your position first, Mr. Connell?

Mr. J. P. Connell (Assistant Secretary (Personnel) Treasury Board): I am Assistant Secretary (Personnel) of the Treasury Board Secretariat.

The Chairman: In your capacity as such could you tell the members of the Committee what happened in the Roberts case.

Mr. Connell: A submission was made to the Treasury Board by Mr. Sauvé, the Minister for whom Mr. Roberts worked as Executive Assistant, recommending that a cash gratuity in lieu of unused vacation leave and in respect also of two weeks retiring leave, be paid to Mr. Roberts. The Treasury Board Ministers considered the question and were advised by Treasury Board staff of a precedent in 1965 whereby the Cabinet had declined to approve a payment in similar circumstances and the Treasury Board Ministers as a result declined to approve the payment of the gratuity to Mr. Roberts because of a potential conflict with Section 16 of the House of Commons Act. Subsequently I believe that this matter was referred to the Cabinet, I believe that the Cabinet decision was the same as that of the Treasury Board, and this decision was communicated to Mr. Roberts by Mr. Marchand, a letter which I understand has been distributed.

Dr. Ollivier is correct when he says that as far as legal entitlement is concerned, Mr. Roberts does not have a legal entitlement to the moneys because he loses his vacation credit at the time that he ceases to be employed as an Executive Assistant or, if he had been a public servant, as a public servant. It is not then a question of right, as Dr. Ollivier says, but an ex gratia payment. In the past an ex gratia payment I believe has often been regarded as a payment made by the Governor in Council, although subsequently I believe the Treasury Board Ministers have the authority to make cash gratuity payments in circumstances such as we have in the case of Mr. Roberts. So I do not believe that it would have to go to the Governor in Council now to make this payment. Regardless of the devise which is used, as Dr. Ollivier has pointed out, I would agree it is ex gratia in the sense that ex gratia means by favour and not having a legal right, so that whether he were kept on strength or whether he were paid as a cash gratuity, it would be ex gratia. In cases such as this it is not at all unusual for cash payments to be made rather than using the devise of keeping people on strength, and for the payment to be made to Mr. Roberts he would not have to be kept on strength. The question of whether he can accept the money if it is paid to him I guess is, as Dr. Ollivier points out, really not a question for me or for anyone except the House of Commons.

The Chairman: Do you have any questions?

Mr. Ritchie: Then, as far as the Civil Service Act is concerned, Mr. Roberts could be paid as of June 24 a lump sum on the termination of his services.

Mr. Connell: Not under an act, sir, it would be by authority of Treasury Board. He is not covered by the terms and conditions of employment regulations.

Mr. Ritchie: Therefore, the real solution to this would seem to be a change in the Act in the future to allow this payment to be made under the Act.

Mr. Connell: It could happen this way or it could happen as it can at present. I hesitate to express a legal opinion, but I wonder if that would remove the circumstances that have so far prevented Mr. Roberts from getting the payment. Mr. Ollivier may be able to comment on that for us.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Dr. Ollivier a question then. Let us assume in theory that Mr. Roberts performed a service before being elected to the House but his cheque was dated after being elected to the House. Let us say it is technically impossible to pay him earlier. Has he contravened Section 16 of the Act?

Dr. Ollivier: Probably not because he has been paid then for services rendered before he became a member. The difficulty there is the fact that you mentioned that he is being paid. There is always the danger that the question of privilege might arise—a real one at that time—whether he should be paid afterwards. I will give you an example of what I mean. A lawyer who is not a member of Parliament has a case for the government. Before presenting himself at an election he neglects to have his payment made. There is a theory that once he becomes a member he cannot be paid. He should have been paid before because as a member he might influence the government to tax his account a little higher or things of that sort. Personally, I am always very scrupulous when it comes to members of Parliament because then you would have a real question of privilege whether he used his influence to be paid for services rendered before being a member of Parliament; payment which he might or might not have had otherwise.

Mr. Ritchie: Therefore, Mr. Chairman and Dr. Ollivier, even if there were a change in the Public Service Act, to give him the mandatory lump sum made to all other people, you would still run into this very thing?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, I say if he was paid that sum, he should have been paid before he became a member of Parliament.

Mr. Ritchie: In other words, the cheque should have been made out . . .

Dr. Ollivier: I am perhaps going a little bit too far, but I mean if the question arose in the House.

Mr. Ritchie: He should have been paid on, say, June 24 in this case.

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, but not with the device of keeping him on strength.

Mr. Ritchie: No, no, I agree. By that, you mean even a lump sum?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, even a lump sum, if he could be paid in a lump sum which would be, as you say, an extra gratia payment.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Chairman, is it conceded that these were credits accumulated by Mr. Roberts as the result his service previous to leaving?

Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Peddle: Then would it not be reasonable, to approach it this way? Section 16 goes into the business of sales of merchandise and so on. Let us assume that Mr. Roberts was a farmer and on June 24 he delivered, let us say, a carload of potatoes to the Parliamentary Restaurant; would payment for this merchandise be refused because on June 25 he was elected as a Member of the House of Commons? Section 16 is just as strong on this point, on the sale of merchandise, as it is on rendering a service.

Mr. Connell: I would really have to direct that question to Dr. Ollivier.

Mr. Peddle: All right, I will direct it to Dr. Ollivier. It would be impossible for him to be paid because he could have delivered his carload of potatoes one hour before the polls closed.

Dr. Ollivier: Well, it is a fixed price and the price was understood before.

Mr. Peddle: So is his service, I am assuming.

Dr. Ollivier: That is the difference, I suppose. You are talking about merchandise or contracts.

Mr. Peddle: Yes, this is just as strong in Section 16 as the other matter of service. Now, I am assuming that there is a fixed price on Mr. Roberts' services, the same as there would be on his potatoes if he were a farmer.

Mr. Connell: Perhaps the difference in the case is that the sale of the potatoes is a contract. There was no contract that the credits to which he was entitled while employed would be extended after he ceased to be employed.

Mr. Peddle: There are many cases on record where being elected to the House of Commons was not involved when there was no question of making payment.

Mr. Connell: Right.

Mr. Peddle: As you said, yourself as a lump sum, not necessarily following this device of carrying them on the books.

Mr. Connell: That is right.

Mr. Peddle: That is all, thank you.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you. I would like to put this question to Dr. Ollivier. Could one say that since Mr. Roberts was elected a Member of Parliament and since previously he was a public servant, could one say that in his case as in the case of other persons, the Elections Act runs against the Public Service Act?

Dr. Ollivier: I do not believe that there is anything in the Elections Act providing for salaries paid to a Member. The conflict of interests comes from the Senate and House of Commons Act. The Elections Act prevents him from being a candidate while he is a public servant, he must first stop being one or be on leave. Previously under the Civil Service Act when a civil employee wanted to run for office, there was only one solution, he had to resign immediately as a civil servant.

Under the Public Service Act, the Civil Service Act was changed by saying that a civil servant can run for an election if he has a leave without pay during the entire electoral period. If he is defeated, he comes back to the Public Service. This is under the Public Service Act, not elections laws.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I would be prepared to recommend, I would recommend immediately that in accordance with Dr. Ollivier's opinion, to the House of Commons, that the question there is clear, I believe.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin I believe it would be important for all questions to be answered first of all, and then we should recommend sitting in camera.

Mr. Fortin: Let this recommendation be made, Mr. Chairman, as I really am very anxious to see justice given to Mr. Roberts. This was the case for me in 1965 and again in 1968, since I worked for the House of Commons before my election. This is unfair. I had to go through lots of red tape. I spent a lot of money to get my due, Mr. Chairman.

I believe there will be more and more civil servants elected to the House of Commons, and I believe this section of the Act should be amended or changed. I believe we should act immediately and stop discussing this question which has been dragging since the 25th of June.

The Chairman: I understand, Mr. Fortin, but this is our first session on this point, and I believe all members should have an opportunity to know exactly what the situation is before reaching a decision.

[English]

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of questions for Dr. Ollivier. First of all, I understood as an alternative he was suggesting it would not be necessary to use the device of keeping Mr. Roberts on the payroll, but that a lump sum payment could be made. Did I understand him correctly?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, but my suggestion was, first, to recognize in your report that an injustice has been done to those members who, if they had not become members, would have received a certain amount of money. But as the Committee cannot do anything but recommend that the money be paid, my device was that having recognized that in justice, you would recommend an item in the Estimates. But to make certain that the question could not arise that Section 16 was involved, there would be a proviso that this payment would not affect the status of a member. So that nobody could attack it in the House. Just like when parliamentary assistants or parliamentary secretaries were appointed in 1949, there was not an Act at that time. An item was put in the Estimates because they were getting, whatever it was, $4,000 more than the indemnity, and it was stated that apart from getting that indemnity that that would not affect their status. I think if it is just an ex gratia payment, it would still leave the question in the air so that it could be discussed and somebody could still raise the question of privilege. Whereas by putting it beyond any doubt, then that would settle the whole question. It could be settled in one item for all the members concerned.

Mr. MacGuigan: Well, your answer resolves the second of my questions which was about the interpretation of this legislation. I would have thought that unless there is something in the legislation to deny it, that the Act would be interpreted judicially rather than only by this Committee, and that despite a decision of this Committee...

Dr. Ollivier: In the Estimates, it is like drafting a law. That item will be part of the Appropriation Act. It is the law just as much as if you had a separate act to deal with the question.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes. But if we did not proceed that way, any other interpretation which this Committee were to give of the Senate and House of Commons Act might be over-ridden by a judicial interpretation, might it not?

Dr. Ollivier: I still say that it might still be up in the air. Somebody might still raise it in the House or raise it before the courts.

Mr. MacGuigan: Is there not something in the Senate and House of Commons Act that refers to the Elections Act and to the qualifications which a candidate must there have for election? That is my recollection, and I have had some experience with having to clear up business with the government before becoming an official candidate under the Elections Act.

Dr. Ollivier: Oh yes. There is, of course, a section in the Elections Act saying who may or may not be a candidate.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, and if this is incorporated this complicates our problem, and I believe it is incorporated.

Dr. Ollivier: It also says in the Senate and House of Commons Act, and that I accept, that anybody who sits and is not entitled to sit is liable to pay $200 a day penalty, and that can be sued by anybody outside. As a matter of fact the person who sues, the plaintiff, would be entitled to half of the penalty.

Mr. MacGuigan: Is there not something in that Senate and House of Commons Act to incorporate the qualifications of the Elections Act for a member?

Dr. Ollivier: In the part dealing with the independence of Parliament it says:

No person holding any office of emolument under the Crown. . .

Nor any sheriff. . .

and so forth. Then there is an exception for the members of the military forces. During the war, for instance, if somebody enlists he will receive his indemnity as a member and also be paid. Then it was necessary to put in the Act provisions to cover Ministers of the Crown. Previously, before 1930, when a member of the House became a Minister of the Crown he had to resign his seat and had to run again in his constituency. That is the reason why Mr. Meighen was defeated in 1926, because when he accepted the office of Prime Minister he was not sitting in the House anymore, he was sitting in the gallery, and he was defeated by one vote.

Mr. MacGuigan: Perhaps I might have a look at that Act to look for this section, and somebody else might ask questions in the meantime.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Cantin?

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to make a remark. The Member for Lotbinière was honest enough to say that he had the same interest as that of the claimant, Mr. Roberts, so he should not really take part in the decision of the Committee. Personally, I must say that I share the opinion of Dr. Ollivier and I agree with his conclusions particularly that this should be the recommendation of the Committee.

If you tried now to have the opinion of the Committee, I think we could reach a decision.

The Chairman: This is exactly the reason why, Mr. Cantin, I, personally, would like to tell the members that since this is question relating to the interests of a colleague, it might be better to discuss our decision in camera. There are other members. . .

Mr. Cantin: Are we prepared to sit in camera immediately? We can sit. . .

The Chairman: Exactly, this is really the very crux of the question of discussions which belong to the members of the Committee.

I would suggest and recommend to the members not to jump to conclusions immediately, before they have allowed all members to put their questions to one or the other of the witnesses, so that we have all our questions answered. Then we can have an in-camera sitting where everybody can express his opinion and views. I think this would be the wisest way to proceed.

Do members agree on this?

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, did I understand Dr. Ollivier and Mr. Connell to say that any public servant who took leave of absence without pay for any purpose is not by right entitled to payment for accrued vacation or retirement severance? That it is as a favour, ex gratia as you put it, no matter what the circumstances?

Mr. Connell: A person covered by the Public Service Employment Act, a public servant who is also therefore covered by the terms and conditions of that Act, if he resigns, he gets payment on a discretionary basis from the deputy head for credits such as this unused vacation and unused retirement leave.

Mr. Benjamin: If he resigns?

Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: But if he has leave of absence without pay, it is obvious that there is intention to return to the service. Until such time as someone resigns or is dismissed, there is an intention to return to the service. So in that case they still are not entitled as a matter of right to payment for unused vacation leave.

Mr. Connell: Well, with the intention to return to the service, if it were a leave of absence, for example, for three months, it would be presumed that he would return and that he would perhaps take his vacation when he returned, or he might take it before he took his leave of absence. I do not think the question would really arise in the normal case of a leave of absence.

Mr. Benjamin: I see. Well, the main point that I was wondering about is that it is not a matter of right in a situation like that of Mr. Roberts or any other person who is in the public service. The payment would be made as a favour.

Mr. Connell: In the case of a public service employee covered under the Public Service Employment Act, the normal device has been, if he resigns, to postpone his resignation date until he has taken his unused vacation credits. So to this extent he has been kept on the payroll on vacation, and it has been a device. But if he were to resign without having taken that vacation, then it would be discretionary with the deputy head of the department to give him this gratuity in lieu.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask one further question on the matter of the public service, and members of it who seek public office. Are there any general regulations, or to your knowledge has any senior person in any department, either by letter, by circular, or verbally, advised members of the federal public service that if they sought and received nomination for federal office they would be required to resign?

Mr. Connell: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Benjamin: Then there is no restriction on federal civil servants seeking federal office. They would be entitled to leave of absence without pay, and would not be required to resign unless and until they were elected.

Mr. Connell: As Dr. Ollivier has pointed out, the circumstances under which an employee under the Public Service Employment Act gets leave of absence, indeed, is required to take leave of absence, as set forth in this Act, are that once he is nominated, he must take leave of absence. I know of no instructions of the type that you referred to. I do not know whether it would have been necessary to have issued them I do not know whether or not they have been.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask Mr. Roberts a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Roberts, I notice in the letter from the Minister to yourself there is mention of terminal leave and, I think, at some other point retirement funds. Your submission mentions vacation allowance. Is it one or the other or is it some of both?

Mr. Roberts: No, I received a refund of my contributions to the superannuation fund which, I think, is what was referred to in that letter.

Mr. Benjamin: I see; all right.

Mr. Roberts: As far as I know, the only outstanding payment as I would call it is the one which is related to my vacation credit.

Mr. Benjamin: You have received a payment in the sense that you received a refund of your pension contributions.

Mr. Roberts: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: That is the only one you have received?

Mr. Roberts: I believe so, unless there was some other contribution that I made that had been returned to me, but I think that is the only one I have received. The only one outstanding is the vacation credit.

The Chairman: Are you through, Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Sullivan: Dr. Ollivier, I wonder if you would clarify my thinking on this, particularly in relation to Section 16. What about a member who is involved in expropriation proceedings? Can he negotiate with the government?

Dr. Ollivier: I do not think so. I know it might happen in the case of the new international airport and some members might be involved, but this is a general law and it applies to everybody. The member has not asked for the expropriation. He will be forced, probably, to accept the money that will be given to him. I do not think that would disqualify him. otherwise . . .

Mr. Sullivan: He might be interested in a contract.

Dr. Olivier: . . . it would mean that if we wanted to build an airport and one or two members have their properties in the land the government wants, could they, because that conflict refuse to sell and say, "I cannot sell because this constitutes a contract". This is a general law that applies to every member. For instance, he could have shares in the Bell Telephone Company and . . .

Mr. Sullivan: I fail to see the distinction. I can see that point of view if the . . .

Dr. Ollivier: . . . the Bell Telephone Company could have a contract with the government.

Mr. Sullivan: . . . expropriation occurs and it is dealt with by a court, but I can see a conflict if there is agreement, can you not?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, if you could prove there was a conflict of interest in a way that the member could use his position to obtain a more favorable consideration.

Mr. Sullivan: So no member really should settle an expropriation proceeding with the government?

Dr. Ollivier: He should not settle it separately. He should . . .

Mr. Sullivan: Go on and be adjudicated.

Dr. Ollivier: ... wait for the adjudication, but he would have to accept it.

Mr. Sullivan: If he does not, would he be disqualified in your opinion?

Dr. Ollivier: That is a question that would have to be decided probably by the courts.

Mr. Sullivan: What about people receiving benefits under federal statutes?

Dr. Ollivier: It depends. There are some federal statutes which provide exactly for that position. For example, statutes relating to veterans such as the Veterans's Land Act. It was thought necessary to put in those acts a section saying that if a member happened to be a veteran or a veteran happened to be a member, that he could still take advantage of that act. I think it is always better in drafting such an act to provide for those cases. I know in the agricultural laws in the West, for instance, that some members, no doubt, will benefit from those laws and will not be disqualified.

Mr. Sullivan: What about the Farm Credit Act?

Dr. Ollivier: That is the one.

Mr. Sullivan: Can a member deal with the Farm Credit Corporation regarding a loan?

Dr. Ollivier: That is the one I was thinking of. I have not read it lately, but it would be better if in the act itself there were such a provision as there are in others. I am not sure whether there is ...

Mr. Sullivan: If it were not in that Act ...

Dr. Ollivier: ... but I do not think there is such a provision in that Act.

Mr. Sullivan: ... would you say a member now would be disqualified?

Dr. Ollivier: No, because it is a general act that applies to everybody, unless there is a conflict of interest where the member uses his influence as a member to get a better deal. I would think that would be the answer.

Mr. Sullivan: It does not say that here though, does it?

Dr. Ollivier: No.

Mr. Sullivan: It says "any contract". It certainly is a contract—a loan.

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, but as I was saying, suppose you are a shareholder in the Bell Telephone. The Bell Telephone has a contract with the government, but you will not be disqualified as a member because you hold shares in the Bell Telephone.

Mr. Sullivan: In the case of the Bell Telephone you are a shareholder, but the corporate is different. Being a shareholder is not the same as being the Bell Telephone.

Dr. Ollivier: Yes, if I were a member ...

Mr. Sullivan: A member of the corporation is not the corporation.

Dr. Ollivier: ... I might forego the benefits if I had any doubts. The law is there, but it is up to you to interpret it. I could not advise you and say, "Do not do it" or "Do not take it" because you might be taking a risk.

Mr. Sullivan: I have one last question. Would a member be safe in dealing with a Crown corporation and making contracts with them?

Dr. Ollivier: I think the same principle would apply.

Mr. Sullivan: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I am asking myself what the member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Cantin) meant when he said that it would be better if I did not say anything during the present debate and that I do not take part in it.

Mr. Cantin: I did not say that it was preferable that you did not speak but when the decision was made that you should not speak because you have a similar interest. It is for your own protection.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, my case has been settled and was somewhat different. So I stick to my privileges as a member of this Committee.

Mr. Cantin: Excuse me, before you did not mention that your case was settled.

[English]

The Chairman: With your permission and taking leave of certain of my functions, I would like to ask Mr. Connell a few questions so will have something crystal clear in my mind.

Could you state, Mr. Connell, the reason and the only reason why the request made by Mr. Roberts was turned down? Was it because of the potential conflict with Section 16 of the Election Act?

Mr. Connell: That is my understanding of the reason for the decision made by the Cabinet.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Ritchie.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to ask Dr. Ollivier a question through you, Mr. Chairman. Even if this Committee passed the recommendation that this lump sum be paid to Mr. Roberts and even if the government acquiesced and it was put in an act or the estimates which you said are the same as an act did I understand you to say there still would be a possibility that Mr. Roberts could be challenged either in the House . . .

Dr. Ollivier: To my mind it all depends on how the item is worded. If it were worded with a proviso that this will not affect his position as a member—the example that I gave before—then there would be no doubt, but if that were not put in, there might still be some doubt.

Mr. Ritchie: Yes.

Dr. Ollivier: So to make it safer, I would recommend an item with a proviso that would read, “notwithstanding any act, payments made hereunder shall not render any such person, if he is a member of the House of Commons, liable to any penalty or disqualification”. If it was found necessary to put that in when the legislation for parliamentary assistants was created, I think it is just as necessary to put it in in the present case. At least, it would be safer; it would be water tight.

Mr. Ritchie: Would this be binding on future cases?

Dr. Ollivier: It would depend on how it was drafted. I suppose the item could be drafted so that it would apply to all cases. It would take a good draftsman, but they have them in the Department of Justice.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: I have supplementary to that, Mr. Chairman. Is there any other method that Dr. Ollivier could suggest? Is not this method—the estimates—quite cumbersome? Is there any other method of payment that could be made?

Dr. Ollivier: He could wait, perhaps, until he ceases to be a member and then . . .

Mr. Benjamin: No, no, I mean in settling this quicker than an item in the estimates would allow. Is there any other manner in which this could be done, such as a motion of the House or . . .

Dr. Ollivier: It would be up to the government to decide to do it. In my mind, there would still be a doubt if the government did pay it. I believe, as Mr. Connell does, that the reason the government hesitated to make that payment was so it would not open a conflict provided for in Section 16. It might not happen but it would be sufficient that a member would get in the House and raise a question of privilege. This would not be a question of privilege in reverse. As I said, that would be the real question of privilege. If Section 16 does not apply, then we are not concerned with it.

Mr. Benjamin: I think the point Mr. Ritchie made was that, this could occur and re-occur after every election. If we have to go through this every time then there is a need for amendments to the Act.

Dr. Ollivier: You would not have to repeat it in every appropriation bill. You put it in once and it remains like that.

Mr. Benjamin: I was wondering if there were some quicker and easier way, including the points you made.

Dr. Ollivier: I suppose, if the Committee interpreted Section 16 as not preventing members in such a position from receiving an ex gratia payment then I think it would be better and that the Report would be agreed to by the House. It would certainly strengthen the position of the members concerned and help the government.

Mr. Benjamin: Would such a recommendation in the Report need to specify in cases of this instance, for services rendered up to or prior to the time of an election?

Dr. Ollivier: That the Committee is of the opinion there is no conflict between the right of a member and Section 16. It would be an interpretation that could be invoked if the question arose again.

Mr. Benjamin: This would apply, then, to all present cases and any that might occur in the future?

Dr. Ollivier: Yes that would be another solution; it is a possible solution.

The Chairman: Mr. McGuigan, just before you ask questions, I think, Mr. Connell has some comments to make.

Mr. Connell: Mr. Chairman, I just did not want to mislead you by my previous remark into believing that the Treasury Board or the Cabinet had decided that payment would be made if it did not contravene. They did not make such a decision. They declined to make a decision until they were sure of the effect of Section 16.

Dr. Ollivier: I think I can add to that. Not only the Treasury Board, but I think the Department of Justice also, is not anxious to give a legal opinion. They would not give a legal opinion to the House on that.

The Chairman: Mr. Connell, I just want to have it clear, without being elected would he have been paid?

Mr. Connell: I do not know what the box score is but I doubt if there were very many, if any, cases that were not, or have not, been paid in the past.

The Chairman: If there is anyone who has not been paid I think that . . .

Mr. Connell: I am not aware of any.

The Chairman: You are not aware of any; everyone else had been paid?

Mr. Connell: Yes.

The Chairman: All right. Mr. MacGuigan?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to follow up Mr. Benjamin's line of questioning because, while I recognize that Dr. Ollivier's first suggestion would be a way of solving the case here, it would not be a permanent solution. If we could make an interpretation of Section 16 which, after being adopted by the House, would be more or less binding from that time on, this might be a great deal more useful.

I want to come back again to this question I raised about judicial interpretation. Is the Act written in such a way that no one could appeal to a court to invoke the penalties against a sitting member—this $200 a day penalty that you mentioned—unless this Committee first decided that person was not qualified to sit? In other words, would our members be protected from judicial action if we were to make such an interpretation of Section 16A?

Dr. Ollivier: I do not think so.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am sorry, Section 16 not 16A; that is a different problem.

Dr. Ollivier: There was a case, that of Kelly versus O'Brien, a suit for statement against a Senator. It was unsuccessful because the court said that the law was not clear.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes.

Dr. Ollivier: In the meantime Senator O'Brien resigned in case he would have to continue to pay $200 a day in penalties. Actually he did not have to resign because the Court in the first instance and in appeal said that the law was not clear enough to say whether he should vacate his seat as a Senator. That was 1943 in the Ontario Court of Appeal.

Where an action is brought to recover a penalty under a statute which is ambiguous and capable of two equally reasonable interpretations, that interpretation should be adopted which will relieve defendant from the penalty.

Mr. MacGuigan: That is a useful precedent.

Dr. Ollivier: Kelly versus O'Brien.

The Chairman: Did you have one more question?

Mr. Ritchie: There is one thing more I would like to ask Dr. Ollivier. If the Committee recommends this as you have drafted or suggested, and the precedent will cover other similar things in the future, will this open up any problems about greater claims on things not related to this particular type of thing?

Dr. Ollivier: Well it all depends how the item is drafted. It might be drafted just to cover Mr. Roberts; it might be drafted to cover the other members who are concerned at the moment also.

Mr. Benjamin: And any case of that nature later on.

Dr. Ollivier: I think a general item to cover all cases to come would better be done by an amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, it is close to 1 p.m. and unless some of you have more questions to ask of our witnesses I would receive a motion that on Thursday next at 11 a.m. we sit in camera to decide.

Mr. Jerome: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Thursday in case members of the Committee want to question me.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I want to know whether you want me to keep myself available

The Chairman: We will let you know, Mr. Roberts. It is agreed that on Thursday next we sit in camera to decide this.

APPENDIX B

MINISTER OF FORESTRY
AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS
CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES
CANADA

MINISTRE DES FORÊTS
ET DU DÉVELOPPEMENT RURAL

Ottawa, March 20, 1969.

Mr. John Roberts, M.P.
House of Commons
Ottawa, Ontario

Dear Mr. Roberts,

As you may have learned by now, my recommendation that you be paid a cash gratuity in lieu of terminal leave for services which you rendered before becoming a Member of Parliament has been turned down by Cabinet.

The purpose of this letter is to acquaint you with some of the reasons why Cabinet took such a decision, a decision which, I should add, was taken only after most careful consideration had been given to the matter.

As I understand it, under the present legislation, there cannot be anything in the estimates to provide for payment of services to a member of the House, even for an ex gratia payment. If there were, the matter could be debated in the House.

Most if not all legal advisors consulted came to the conclusion that only Parliament can interpret legislation concerning its own members. This then leads them to conclude that use could be made of the Senate and House of Commons Act to challenge your right to hold your seat in the House of Commons if such a payment were made to you by the government.

This was the dilemma: on the one hand it was thought that as a matter of justice you were fully entitled to your payment, but on the other hand I am led to understand that the possibility clearly exists that, were the payment made to you, your right to hold your seat in the House could be challenged.

It is on this basis that the decision was taken.

In the light of the foregoing, further study of the Senate and House of Commons Act has been initiated with a view to clarify the situation for the future.

I know that this decision will be a great disappointment to you but the law, as it stands, has left me no alternative.

Best wishes,

(signed)
Jean Marchand

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 8

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1969

Subject-matter of question of privilege—Mr. Roberts

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

INCLUDING FIFTH REPORT TO THE HOUSE

The Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Cafik,	Marceau,	Schreyer,
¹ Cantin,	Murphy,	Skoberg,
Forest,	Nielsen,	Sullivan,
Fortin,	Peddle,	Trudel,
Lundrigan,	Richard,	Valade,
MacGuigan,	Ritchie,	Woolliams—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65 (4) (b),

¹ Mr. Cantin replaced Mr. Hogarth on April 22, 1969.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Thursday, March 27, 1969.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of the question of privilege raised by the honourable Member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) relating to the refusal of the Government, upon his election to the House of Commons, to pay him the terminal gratuity provided as a normal practice to those leaving the Public Service be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ATTEST

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Thursday, April 24, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of Thursday, March 27, 1969, your Committee has considered the question of privilege raised by the member for York-Simcoe, viz, the refusal of the government upon his election to the House of Commons to pay to him the accumulated vacation leave provided as a normal practice to those leaving the Public Service.

Your Committee held one meeting and heard the following witnesses:

Mr. John Roberts, M.P.;

Dr. Maurice Ollivier, Q.C., Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel;

Mr. J.P. Connell, Assistant Secretary (Personnel), Treasury Board.

Your Committee reports as follows:

1. The question of privilege is well founded.
2. Your Committee is of the opinion that in the light of the accepted practice, an injustice occurred when Mr. Roberts upon his election to the House of Commons could not be paid for the accumulated vacation provided as a normal practice to those leaving the Public Service.
3. Your Committee is of the opinion that the services to the government of Mr. Roberts as executive assistant to a minister of the Crown for which payment is claimed, were performed before he became a member of the House of Commons and, although the government may make an ex gratia payment according to the accepted practice for persons leaving the employ of the Public Service, the Committee recognizes the government's possible difficulty in the face of legislation as it now stands.
4. In order to overcome any possibility of a further question of privilege in the light of Section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, it is recommended that the government consider the expediency of introducing an item in the estimates or supplementary estimates, equivalent to the amount of vacation leave accumulated by Mr. Roberts with a proviso that such payment be made notwithstanding any other Act of the Parliament of Canada and that acceptance of such payment would not require him to vacate his seat in the House of Commons.
5. As there are similar cases involving other members of the House of Commons, your Committee recommends that the government give the same consideration to such members.

6. Your Committee is of the opinion that the government should consider the expediency of introducing legislation to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act to resolve the question of the propriety of members of the House of Commons receiving such payments.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues Nos. 7 and 8) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Thursday, April 24, 1969.

(9)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met at 11:20 a.m. this day, the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Forest, Gervais, Jerome, Laflamme, Marceau, MacGuigan, Murphy, Peddle, Richard, Ritchie, Trudel—(11).

Also present: Messrs. Émard and Serré, M.P.'s.

Witness: Mr. Nelson Castonguay, Representation Commissioner.

In Camera, on the matter of the question of privilege raised by Mr. Roberts, M.P., the Committee considered a draft report and, after some discussion, adopted a report for presentation to the House by the Chairman.

In open session, Mr. Castonguay answered questions on the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting 1968.

At 12:14 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Michael A. Measures,
Acting Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, April 24, 1969.

● 1205

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Castonguay, I am very pleased that you have come here today at noon, though even we have had to delay your presence here. Nevertheless, we are quite pleased to have you here now and for the following sittings. Since it is quite late, and if you have a brief that has been prepared, would it be possible to have it circulated right now?

Mr. N. Castonguay (Representation Commissioner): I have not prepared anything, because I think my report is rather complete. If the honourable members wish to have more light shed on the questions I have raised, I am ready to answer their questions. I have no brief because my report is complete, at least, I think so.

The Chairman: Mr. Richard?

Mr. Richard: I believe that we should wait until the next meeting, because I think that the questions that will be put to Mr. Castonguay will be quite lengthy, and as there are not too many members available, it would serve no purpose to go on.

The Chairman: Since you have made your report, Mr. Castonguay, would you have any other comments to add to it?

Mr. Castonguay: Nothing at all.

[English]

The Chairman: Is there anyone who has questions to ask of Mr. Castonguay right away about this report, or has anyone read Mr. Castonguay's report which has been circulated among the members?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Forest: Our questions may be rather long if we start to study the report of the various systems that exist in Australia or elsewhere and the experience gained in other countries. Now, I was wondering if

Mr. Castonguay had an additional report to give, he could have done so and we would have had the time to examine it before the next meeting. If there is none, I would agree with Mr. Richard that it would be preferable to have a new meeting with Mr. Castonguay, and then proceed. We might possibly wrap up the whole thing within one meeting instead of two. Under those circumstances it would be better to adjourn and start over again, . . .

The Chairman: Very well, Mr. Forest. I think it is a good suggestion. Now, I would like to ask Mr. Castonguay if he is aware that according to the terms of reference, we must first discuss the establishment of a permanent electoral list, and only that? Are there any specific points in your report that have a bearing on that question and on which you would like to draw our attention, or else . . .

Mr. Castonguay: No, because I think my report . . .

An hon. Member: Everything deals with the electoral list?

Mr. Castonguay: My report deals only with registration systems and supplementary voting systems, such as the absent vote, and voting by mail. There is an explanation about the voting systems in England, Australia, and the United States. I believe I have dealt with these questions thoroughly enough to enable you to judge the other systems.

Dr. Ollivier: Mr. Castonguay, can I ask you if your entire report deals with the electoral list or if some parts deal specifically with the electoral list while others deal with other subjects?

Mr. Castonguay: My report deals entirely with permanent electoral lists and secondly, the voting methods like the postal vote and the absent vote. I have been asked to make a report about these questions only, and therefore, I do not deal with any other questions.

[English]

The Chairman: I believe then, gentlemen, since there has been a motion to adjourn this meeting . . . Yes, Mr. Forest?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Forest: You mention in your report that establishing a permanent electoral list based on the Australian system would be extremely costly. Do you have any figures giving you an approximate idea of what a similar system would cost within the Canadian context?

Mr. Castonguay: I made a thorough study of the overall approximate cost of the Australian voting system which you will find on page 59 of the French version, and page 54 of the English version.

● 1210

Mr. Forest: I am talking about costs.

Mr. Castonguay: You will see in the detailed information that these are the costs from 1964 to 1965. And it amounts to about 45 cents a year per voter. But you will see that the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer in Australia was $9,000, while it was $21,000 in Canada. Could you find a Returning Officer here who would work full time for $3,900 a year?

I believe that to start with, a minimum of $1. per year per voter would be the cost of establishing that system in Canada. I think it will take . . . Well, in Australia, I believe there are 318 permanent employees, and they only have 124 ridings, whereas here we have 264 ridings. So, if you take a mean of 2 permanent employees per riding, this means at least 600 employees, including the central administration staff. Personally, I do not see how you can establish a system here, like the one that is established here, at a cost of less than $1 per year per voter. In Australia, they revise their lists every year. They go from door to door in urban ridings, and this costs them $50,000. I don't see how we in this country could do such a revision of the electoral list each year for $50,000. The system is completely different because, in Australia, the electoral districts include from 2,000 to 12,000 electors. For instance, a district with 2 to 3000 electors is given to a returning officer, who may take up to 2 months to carry out the revision. He might have 500 houses to visit in one week. I don't see how we could do this in Canada for $50,000. Moreover, in rural areas, revision costs them $6000. Do you think we could do that in this country, Mr. Chairman? In Australia, the cost is 45 cents per elector. But in looking over the details of costs I have here before me, I see that such a system could not be successful in Canada.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I should like to have some further details. Could we have some figures comparable to those we have for Canada.

Mr. Castonguay: I gave details of costs for the Australian system, but it should not be forgotten that these are Australian costs.

Mr. Forest: We shall come back to this.

Mr. Castonguay: Very well.

The Chairman: The Committee is adjourned till Tuesday, at 11 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 9

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1969

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1969

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1969

Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968.

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

¹ Alkenbrack,

Cafik,

² Code,

Forest,

Fortin,

³ Gervais,

⁴ Howe,

⁵ Kaplan,

MacGuigan,

Marceau,

Murphy,

Richard,

Ritchie,

Schreyer,

Skoberg,

⁶ Sullivan,

⁷ Thomas (Moncton),

Trudel,

Valade—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,

Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4) (b),

¹ Mr. Alkenbrack replaced Mr. Woolliams on April 30, 1969.

² Mr. Code replaced Mr. Lundrigan on April 30, 1969.

³ Mr. Gervais replaced Mr. Sullivan on April 24, 1969.

⁴ Mr. Howe replaced Mr. Peddle on April 30, 1969.

⁵ Mr. Kaplan replaced Mr. Cantin on April 29, 1969.

⁶ Mr. Sullivan replaced Mr. Gervais on April 29, 1969.

⁷ Mr. Thomas (Moncton) replaced Mr. Nielsen on April 30, 1969.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, made pursuant to section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, April 29, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 10:00 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Forest, Fortin, Laflamme, Marceau, Peddle, Richard, Sullivan—(7).

Witnesses: Messrs. Nelson Castonguay, Representation Commissioner; R. L. Stewart, his Executive Assistant; J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Committee resumed consideration of the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting 1968.

Mr. Castonguay was questioned.

At 11:00 o'clock a.m., the Committee adjourned to Thursday, May 1st, 1969.

Gabrielle Savard,
Acting Clerk of the Committee.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11:30 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Forest, Howe, Laflamme, MacGuigan, Sullivan, Thomas (Moncton) (6).

Witness: Mr. Nelson Castonguay, Representation Commissioner.

The Committee questioned the witness concerning the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting 1968.

At 12:10 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

WEDNESDAY, May 7, 1969.
(10)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 3:41 p.m., in camera, the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Code, Forest, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, MacGuigan, Murphy, Richard, Ritchie, Sullivan, Thomas (Moncton) (12).

Witness: Mr. Nelson Castonguay, Representation Commissioner.

Moved by Mr. Sullivan and Agreed,—That the proceedings and Evidence of the meetings held on April 29 and May 1, 1969 without quorum be accepted as part of this day's proceedings.

The Committee agreed to accept as an exhibit letters received since 1963 by the Chief Electoral Officer concerning absentee voting (Exhibit V).

After discussion, it was moved by Mr. Howe, and Agreed,—That the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure meet to draft a report on the Methods of Registration of Voters and Absentee Voting for subsequent approval of the Committee.

At 4:57 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, April 29, 1969

• 0959

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think that at this time, we could go on questioning Mr. Castonguay, who is here, on his report, distributed among the Members of the House, on the methods of registering electors and also absent ballot. For that purpose, I think that, without having a quorum at the present time, the members might perhaps agree that since the evidence we are having at present is recorded and entered in the minutes of the proceedings, that when we will have a quorum, we shall be able to move a motion so as to regularize the situation. Otherwise, the witnesses who are here will be losing their time, and so will the MP's and I think that we already have enough members among us here who are visibly interested in this question.

[English]

I would then suggest that you indicate your intention to ask questions. After we have had one round of questioning we could start over again. We are continuing our study of Mr. Castonguay's brief. Is that agreed?

[Interpretation]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Mr. Castonguay, last week, you said a few short words on the main points of the report submitted by you, with regard to the possibility of setting a permanent electoral list and especially of settling the problem of absentee ballot. Have you any general comments to offer on those two important matters before we have questions on that point?

Mr. Castonguay (Representation Commissioner): No, I have nothing else to add.

The Chairman: Mr. Forest?

Mr. Forest: Mr. Castonguay, in your report, especially in those pages where you sum up your conclusions and recommendations and where you state that if we came to the conclusion that in this country we should have a permanent electoral list, that it would be similar to the present system in Australia, i.e.

it would be a permanent list but not a definitive one. I notice that you made some objections in your report, particularly with regard to the cost. Last week, I believe you pointed out that, at the present time, you had no figures as far as Canada is concerned, but you were going by the figures involved for Australia. However these figures go back several years, and apply to a population that is perhaps more stable, and to a smaller territory than ours. Have you any figures for Canada, or is it only in comparison with Australia?

Mr. Castonguay: Well, it is only in comparison with Australia. Conditions in Australia are pretty much what they are in Canada. If you look at page 57 of the French version which is page 52 of the English version, you will see the conditions which have a bearing on the changes made in the electoral list and which indicate a shift in population.

In 1966, the electoral list included 6,011,034 electors. That year, 779,462 names were added; we took out 586,899 names; we made changes to 183,406 names; the total number of operations was 1,549,767; that is about 25 per cent change for the year. You will note that in the preceding years, the average was about 25 per cent.

To appreciate conditions in Canada, I would like to draw your attention to page 31 of the French version.

You will see that we have a statistical bulletin on population movements in Canada. Between the age group 20-24 and the age group 65 and over, there is a total population of 10,063,713.

In a five-year period, there were 4,398,623 moves or changes of address. In the same municipality, 2,651,661 changes occurred; 1,746,962 moved within different municipalities; 1,368,934 moved within the same province, and for those who moved from province to province, the figure is 357,541. There were 20,487 listed under the category "moved, residence not indicated", and 350,461 were listed under "immigrants".

Statistics also indicate that,

During the calendar year 1966, the Family Allowance Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare recorded approximately 748,000 changes of address from 2,826,000 accounts as of the 31st December of that year. During the same period, the Old Age Security Division of the above-mentioned Department recorded some 206,000 changes of address from 1,125,000 accounts as of the 31st December of that year.

Now, 748,000 changes are the equivalent of about 26 per cent, and 206,000, add up to approximately 18 per cent changes annually. So that in Canada we can expect population moves, changes of address, and a number of operations which amount to an average of 25 per cent changes. I believe that at the time of the last elections, the electoral list showed 10,800,000 electors, which means approximately $2\frac{3}{4}$ million changes annually on the electoral list. Steps must be taken to keep the list up to date by returning officers, and this must not be left to the elector's choice. It is when an election takes place that all the changes occur.

British Columbia is the only province in Canada which has a permanent list. You will see the problem that arises, on page 12 of the French version.

Statement of the additions and deletions of names of voters effected to the Rolls between 1963 and 1966.

Names of voters on Rolls at 1963 general election... 863,103

Removals: non-voters, deaths, etc., 1963-66. 176,569

Additions, 1963-66 . . . 32,727

On rolls at start of registration for 1966 general election 719,261

Applications for registration made before the elections amount to about 153,000 for one year. These were 22,097 voters from other ridings. Finally, the electoral list for the 1966 elections included 873,927 voters.

Therefore, you can see that over a three-year period, 176,000 changes were made, and before the elections, about 175,000 changes were made. Which means that no great change occurred in between elections.

The experience in B.C. indicates that there does not exist any method of revision to keep the electoral list up to date, every year, except the list where the elector must notify the returning officer that he has changed address or has reached the age of 21. We have had the same experience in other parts of the United States. When this is left up to the elector, nothing happens except at the last minute. If we add the 25 per cent annually, there must have been far more changes than that in B.C.

The Chairman: In Australia, the cost of the permanent list, in 1965, was $0.45 per elector. Do you think the cost would be similar or higher in Canada?

Mr. Castonguay: You will find the estimated cost of the registration system on page 59 of the French version, and on page 54 of the English version. The total cost amounts to $2,716,404 annually and in 1965, the electoral list included 5,934,587 electors. They have 124 electoral districts, plus one returning officer per electoral district who receives $3,900 annually. Can we, in Canada, hire a permanent electoral district registrar on an annual salary of $3,900? I don't believe so. And, he needs an assistant, so we have 2 employees. In Australia, they have approximately 318 permanent employees. Here, I think that the Chief Returning Officer has about 22 permanent employees. The others are returning officers who are hired when there is work.

Here in Canada, one returning officer and a deputy returning officer per district would immediately involve 528 permanent employees. This is a start, but won't these two individuals require a messenger? They will need an office and a head office. In other words, there will be close to 600 permanent employees. Personally, I fail to see, taking into account the difference in costs between Australia and Canada, how we could establish the same system as Australia for less than 1 dollar annually per elector. In Australia, the annual revision costs $120,000 to the government in urban centres, and approximately $6,000 in rural areas. I fail to see how this could be carried out in Canada, because in 1935, when we had a system of permanent lists, the cost of annual revision was about $500,000, and there were no returning officers. It was $500,000 in Canada, in 1935. I fail to see how this revision could be carried out at present for less than a million dollars!

To establish the Australian system in Canada, it would easily take a minimum of $1 per elector, per year.

Mr. Forest: Which means that it would cost $11 million a year instead of $5,041,000 which was the cost of the 1968 electoral list.

Mr. Castonguay: Expenditures that apply exclusively to electoral list for the last election were approximately $7 million. Mr. Hamel is here, and he could give accurate figures for expenditures.

Mr. Forest: These are just figures relating to the enumeration. There is, perhaps, the printing of the lists.

Mr. Castonguay: There is the printing, the revision, and other questions. But I believe that it was approximately $7,100,000. We shouldn't forget though, that these expenditures are not repeated every year, but only for the general election. Some people feel that our method of preparing lists is very expensive, but I do think that a permanent list is far more expensive because it is extremely expensive to keep such a list up to date.

Here, in Canada, we did try the system in 1934, with the cooperation of the elector, and it didn't work out at all, because the permanent list was used for one election only. After that election, all parties recommended that this system be abandoned, because it was not satisfactory at all.

Mr. Forest: This system would require mandatory registration of citizens, offices in every riding for the up-dating of the list, house calls in case of removals, and so on. It would be a very complicated process.

Mr. Castonguay: I have recommended that the registration be mandatory for the following reasons.

With the present system, the registration of a name on the list is the responsibility of returning officers. It is up to them to go and look for names, the public is used to that. Sometimes, the list is not complete, but it is not necessary for it to be complete, since electors can be sworn in on the day of the voting.

Hence, people are accustomed to having the State as responsible for drawing up these lists. Now, with a permanent list system, I am of the opinion that it is up to the voter to have his name registered, otherwise, it would cost a fortune to keep the list up-dated! And, even if it were up dated, we would have the problem which exists in other countries. In Australia, the revision is carried out between January and March, over a three-month period. If an election is called in April, the list is up to date, but if it were called in September, it would no longer be up to date. In Australia, they discovered that 3 to 5 per cent of the people do not register. It is mandatory in Australia to register within the 21 days following arrival in a new residence. But 3 to 5 per cent of the electors ignore this responsibility. Hence, in a constituency of 40,000 people, approximately 2,000 electors did not observe the law. Therefore, the list is really not up to date even in Australia. Because, during the revision period, there occurs an error of 3 to 5 per cent. If the election is held in September, October, or November, the list is never up to date. With our present system, at least, our list is prepared 7 weeks before polling day. It is up to date at least 7 weeks before the elections.

Mr. Forest: The main advantage claimed for a permanent list, is that it could shorten the election period. You indicate in your report that this delay could be brought down to 30 days. Now, on the basis of your election experience, do you really think that in a country like Canada, it is possible to hold an election, choose candidates, have conventions, and so on, within a period of one month? Do you feel it is realistic to consider a 30-day election period?

Mr. Castonguay: I shall answer in English to give the interpreter a break.

[English]

I do say that from the administrative end, from the practical end and from the electoral end, an election can be held in this country in 30 days. However, I want to caution the Committee that I think it is totally unrealistic from the point of view, first, of selecting candidates. There are 21 constituencies in this country where there are only 28 days between nomination day and polling day. We have one electoral district that is 1,253,000 square miles. Then we have at least 10 that are over 100,000 square miles in area. Now I have read and heard people say that we are in the electronic age, the instant-communication age and the jet age, but the only thing that has happened in these hinterland constituencies is that the pack horse, the canoe and the dog teams have been replaced by helicopters and snowmobiles—and there are a few more landing strips. But the weather is still the same and the seasons are still the same. I would mean, if it was possible to have an election in 30 days, that in 21 constituencies you would have three days to pick candidates and in 243 constituencies you would have two weeks to pick candidates. It may be said that you can pick your candidates before the election, but I have been in charge of six general elections and connected with the last one and I am fully aware that it takes the national parties at least six weeks to get all their candidates on the slate. How can you grind out a convention to pick candidates and everything else in three days in 21 constituencies and pick a candidate during that time? If the body politic can adjust to having candidates always at the ready in the event of 30 days, fine, but I do not know if this can happen. I do not think the body politic operates that way. It would be a major change to the body politic. I recall as Chief Electoral Officer having a problem publishing a list of candidates for the members of the Canadian Forces. So I asked this Committee in 1955 if they would give me another week, which means the nomination day in those 200 and more constituencies would be 21 days instead of 14 days. This Committee helped me with my problem. They recommended there should be a period of three weeks between nomination day and polling day, the government accepted the report and the bill was brought down in the House with three weeks. But the Committee of the Whole in the House had second thoughts on it and the government and the opposition agreed that it would be cutting into their time to get candidates. They had six weeks then. This would be giving them five weeks, taking one week off. I am not one to argue very much about whether this adjustment could be made; I think members of this Committee are in a better position to know if it could be made, but the people who discuss this matter say that in the U.K. they can have an election in three weeks. They ignore the fact that the area of the U.K. is 94,000 square miles. Canada has 10 constituencies that are larger than the U.K.; not provinces, but constituencies. France is 200,000 square miles and can complete an election in two weeks, but speaking of 200,000 square miles, there are three constituencies in Canada bigger than France.

• 1020

My experience has been that if you talk to an urban member he feels three weeks are sufficient. If you talk to a member who has a rural constituency with a large town in it, he will say four or five weeks, but if you talk to a member with a hinterland seat you will find he would like a lot more than 60 days to cover that constituency. Also, a candidate running for the first time would like a lot more time than 60 days.

It seems to me that since 1962 the problem has been not the long campaigns, but the frequency of elections that has wearied people. We have had four general elections in seven years.

The practical side is that from the electoral officer's point of view there is no problem in holding an election in 30 days given a permanent list. As a matter of fact, a permanent list would be a chief electoral officer's heaven. All that has to be done is to provide polling facilities. In the Barbeau Report there is mention that maybe a permanent list would save money for parties, but if it means that every party has to keep candidates ready in the wings is that not going to be an expense to the candidates? I do not know. Will this offset the saving they may effect from being able to have an election in 30 days? This I cannot answer. First, I would caution that I think the adjustment has to be made to the body politic before it becomes possible for a Prime Minister in this country to call an election in 30 days. He may catch a lot of people off base. I am not saying he would do this intentionally, but with 30 days there are only three days in which to pick candidates in 21 constituencies and two weeks in the others. Which creates a big problem.

Mr. Richard: I have a supplementary. I think that if we had fixed election dates we would not have that problem at all: for example, every four years on September 3 or whatever the date might be.

Mr. Castonguay: The United States has the system of permanent lists in various degrees, but they have adapted their system to a fixed date.

Mr. Richard: That is what I was saying—a fixed date.

Mr. Castonguay: In the United States, the big expense to the parties is to get the people registered. They do not do anything in the non-election year. Next year will be an election year in the United States, so for the primaries, the reform groups, the unions, the service clubs and others try to get the electors registered, which is a big expense to the political parties. Then they try to get them registered for the election. They have more success in the presidential year but it is geared to a fixed date. The American political organizations think our system is ideal because there is no cost to the parties, but their permanent list results in a tremendous cost to them.

• 1025

[Interpretation]

Mr. Forest: Now, this could have been a lesser evil at the time when it was to be foreseen that elections would be held every four years. But since 1962, there have been minority governments, and elections were called suddenly; that and that situation would almost have been impossible. One last question, Mr. Chairman. The absentee ballot is maybe one of the advantages of the permanent list, because it permits a check on the absentee ballots on election day. That same system is in effect in Australia and in British Columbia. But, without a permanent list, is it possible at all to check to absentee ballots on election day?

Mr. Castonguay: Well, we have two examples to go by. I do hope that with these examples the absentee voting adopted in 1934, will not be adopted again, because it was an absolute failure. It's told in this report. It didn't work out at all, because, to begin with, it was limited to a category of 3 or 4 occupations and required an affidavit. The province of Saskatchewan adopted the same system in 1960, but gave it up after one election, because it required an affidavit. You are absent from the province in another constituency; you fill out an affidavit and you vote for a candidate in your own constituency. Well, that's all right. But, when you add up the votes, and if a candidate has won with a majority of 50 and you have about 500 outstanding affidavits to be counted, these are going to weigh quite heavily. I believe that there is not one single member in this House who wouldn't like to know, whether he will be satisfied with these affidavits? How do you know who has signed the affidavit? Do you really know if he has the right to vote in your constituency?

In those countries with an absentee voting system, they have a permanent list. One should not think that a permanent list is made up like we make up our electoral lists with the present enumeration system, and that they go from house to house to take the names. Each voter must fill out a registration card containing his signature, all the details, his age, and so on. Here is an example:

Suppose I am from Ottawa and I go to Toronto. So, I go to any polling place in Toronto to vote for a candidate in my own constituency of Ottawa. For one thing, I have to begin by filling out a statement with my name, my address, and with my own signature. So, I sign this. And this is printed on an envelope. So, I'm given a ballot and I have a list of the candidates and I choose my own candidate and write the name on the ballot and I put it in the envelope, as in the case of our military vote.

After the election, the returning officer of York-North, shall we say, takes this ballot, sends it over to the returning officer in my riding. When he receives it, he compares the signature on the envelope with the signature on the registration card to see if Nelson Castonguay is the person who signed. Then he looks on the voting list to see if Mr. Castonguay did not vote in the ordinary polling place where he is listed. If he is satisfied with the signature, if Castonguay has not voted in his ordinary place of voting, that ballot can be counted. When the votes are added officially, all envelopes are opened in the presence of the candidates or of their agents and the ballots are placed in a ballot box—thus, the votes become secret. After all the envelopes are opened, he opens the ballot box and the votes are counted. The candidates may examine the envelopes, compare signatures and examine the voting list in order to find out if the elector has voted. And that's it.

[English]

Those are the only acceptable safeguards. Of course, not everybody is a handwriting expert but at least this is the only acceptable safeguard and it has worked satisfactorily in Australia for absentee voting, and the same system applies for postal voting.

• 1030

It is very similar to our Canadian Forces voting regulations. The only comment I have to make here is that we were never in 25 years able to remove their doubts as to the secrecy of that ballot. Will you be able to remove those doubts from the 10 per cent of civilians in this country? One cannot help but think that somebody is going to link that ballot with that envelope. That is a hazard with this absentee voting or postal voting. Absentee voting, where you can present yourself to any polling station on polling day, applies only to absence within a province itself. If I am in Montreal I cannot do that. I have to apply for a postal ballot to my own returning officer and it must be received in the office of the returning officer of my own constituency before the polls close that night. That is not so with the absentee ballot, because it is passed in the poll, say in Toronto, in the box and when the DRO opens the box that night he puts those absentee ballots in a special envelope. He counts the others but not the absentee ballots.

If you want to adopt a system of providing methods of voting for people who are necessarily absent from home through sickness or any other reason, the only known and acceptable safeguard is this registration card. So, to get a permanent list means that roughly 11 million people have to fill out this card, before this system is working. It would take, in my view, about 18 months to get this system working after the legislation was passed because you cannot register 11 million people overnight this way, by getting signatures. We can do it by enumeration. We are given six days and with our present system of enumeration we can get 11 million names in six days because we do not require signatures.

The Chairman: How can they get those cards?

Mr. Castonguay: You would first have to set up registration centres throughout the constituency and make a drive to register everyone and, the next time a review is made you would pick up those people who were not registered. If you went along with compulsory registration, then over a period of perhaps two or three reviews everyone would be registered.

The Chairman: Do you mean that everyone will have this type of card?

Mr. Castonguay: Every returning officer? Every elector completes this card and it is kept in the returning officer's office. The elector is not given anything as a credential.

The Chairman: I can go to the registration office and get this card?

Mr. Castonguay: You can examine it. Oh, as an elector you can go and get it and register.

The Chairman: I can be away from my constituency and then vote through the mail?

Mr. Castonguay: Certainly, if you want to.

The Chairman: What would happen if more than...

Mr. Castonguay: There are certain rules. You cannot use this card unless you are absent, but how can a returning officer prove you are not absent? I must tell you that in Australia, in my discussions with the electoral officers, I found that there was no abuse of this privilege. It is working satisfactorily there.

Mr. Forest: Is it possible to have an absentee vote without a permanent list?

Mr. Castonguay: It is not, and still have the acceptable safeguards. I do not see how you could do it unless you were enamoured with affidavits, but I would be very surprised if anyone was. Would you be enamoured with them if your majority was 100 and 500 of them were sitting on the returning officer's desk?

Mr. Forest: No.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin, did you have a supplementary question, I had the name of Mr. Sullivan on the list.

Mr. Fortin: Yes.

The Chairman: Perhaps I could return to you later.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Castonguay, You spoke of the Armed Forces. Do you deal with that matter in your report?

Mr. Castonguay: No, because I wasn't asked to study the military vote, I was only asked to study the matter of permanent lists and of absentee voting.

Mr. Fortin: Do you feel that the Armed Forces vote is similar to the absentee vote?

Mr. Castonguay: The military vote, according to the regulations that respect the Armed Forces vote is a type of permanent list. There is a postal vote there too, or an absentee voting system. They use an envelope system. It's pretty close to a permanent list system for Armed Forces members and their dependents. We do have a permanent list and absentee ballots in this country for members of the Armed Forces but not for others, according to the law. But if we had a permanent list, it would solve, of course, a number of problems. The Armed Forces could give up their regulations and be subject to the same regulations as the civilians. Federal employees serving outside the country, people in hospitals, students who caused trouble in 1965, they could all vote without difficulty. A permanent list will settle a lot of problems but will also create as many problems. We will have new problems.

[English]

Mr. Sullivan: I would like to direct a question to Mr. Castonguay. If we look upon absentee voters as you now define them, do you also include the non-voters in that? In other words, how do you get the figure on absentee voters from the last election?

Mr. Castonguay: The figures I quoted here were obtained from the census people. Do you mean in so far as movement of population is concerned?

Mr. Sullivan: Yes. First of all—

Mr. Castonguay: I do not have any figures on absentees in Canada. I was trying to relate what those figures could be by this study I made, which I wish to draw to your attention. This appears on page 28 of the English version. It reads:

The statistics show that of the 10,063,713 persons 20 years of age or over residing in private households in Canada at the time of the 1961 Census, 4,398,623 or 43% changed their usual place of residence within Canada at least once over the preceding five-year period. Just over 60% of these proved to be movers within the same municipality; 31% moved from one municipality to another within the same province, while 8% crossed provincial boundaries.

During the calendar year 1966, the Family Allowance Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare recorded approximately 748,000 changes of address from 2,826,000 accounts. . .

That means that 26 per cent of the people changed their addresses. To continue:

During the same period, the Old Age Security Division of the above-mentioned Department recorded some 206,000 changes of address from 1,125,000 accounts as of the 31st December of that year.

That is 18 per cent. What I was trying to arrive at is that if you had a movement of population of roughly 25 per cent these figures could be accepted, and they would be somewhat similar to the movement of population and the conditions in Australia. Two thirds of the population there is in about five large cities and Australia has more land area than we have. This amazed me but it is a fact. They have an electoral district called Kalgoorlie, which has an area of 900,000 square miles and it falls—it is not in the Northwest Territories—in a redistribution pattern such as we have. Therefore I think the conditions are pretty much the same in Australia—or they could be somewhat the same—plus the fact that I do not believe their population movement would be as great as ours.

Mr. Sullivan: Were a significant number of people deprived of their vote because of this?

Mr. Castonguay: You cannot tell. All I can say is that in Australia, if you use those figures of the movement of population, 10 per cent of the people avail themselves of the facilities of absentee and postal voting. However, you must remember that those facilities are provided in Australia because they not only have compulsory registration, they also have compulsory voting, so with compulsory voting you have to eliminate every excuse that anyone gives you for not voting, and they have every facility to vote.

Mr. Sullivan: This was going to be my next question. If you did not have compulsory voting would a lesser percentage of the mobile people, the people who tend to move around, vote than those people who remain in their homes?

Mr. Castonguay: It is hard to say. We have had some experience in this respect. For instance, in the last election in the Province of Ontario we took the Service Forces list for Ontario—I think the figure was something like 35,500 potential Canadian Forces electors in Ontario—and all these people could vote if they wrote to an office in Toronto and said they wanted to vote. They took the address of the member of the Forces and sent him a ballot and a return envelope. There were 2,387 interested members of the forces who applied for the ballot and 198 were not sent ballots because they were not eligible. They sent 2,189 ballots to the electors and only 1,527 came back. That does not mean to say that some of those electors did not vote as civilians at civilian polls, but there was a potential 35,000 and only 1,500 applied for the ballot. I could not tell you if that is a good yardstick or not.

• 1040

Mr. Sullivan: You also mentioned that 30 days might be enough time for people running in urban ridings. I run in an urban riding and I certainly do not think it is. I agree with you that you certainly need 60 days at least.

Do you have any other suggestions to make on how, under our present system, it is possible to get on a list on election day?

Mr. Castonguay: I presume you are speaking of urban because there is no problem in the rural ridings.

Mr. Sullivan: That is right.

Mr. Castonguay: I do not know of any system where you would have the necessary safeguards. If 200 or 300 names were put on the list on voting day how do you know that these are bona fide electors? How can any electoral officer or any candidate and his agents or any political organization check on these people to see if they are bona fide electors?

Mr. Sullivan: No matter how many people come in with them you could still put two or three with each phony?

Mr. Castonguay: It may be of interest to you to know that during provincial elections in Ontario you can be vouched for in an urban riding. This is being abandoned because they are running into problems. The vouching for is being abandoned in the urban areas. I do not know how an electoral officer could check it. Perhaps the candidates would have enough workers to check out these 200 people, but I doubt it. I have tried checking 200 people out in a week and it is pretty difficult to do. All of a sudden you get an application and you have 200 people to put on that list. We had an experience in an election where in one electoral district 900 fictitious names were put on the list during the revision. There were people in the telegraph poles and the car lots, and the parties were not able to check all those in two weeks before the polling day.

Mr. Sullivan: I am sure they were not.

Mr. Castonguay: If you allow any names to be added on polling day in an urban constituency I do not doubt that they could be bona fide people, but I do not know of one member of this House with an urban seat who would be satisfied that they are bona fide unless he had some assurance that some check was made.

Mr. Sullivan: Do you have any suggestion for the people who are sick or bedridden?

Mr. Castonguay: To start off with, I think what you are referring to are those people in general treatment hospitals. From the statistics I got a few years ago, the average stay of patients in such a hospital is 10 days; so in a period of 60 days you will have about that many sets of new patients coming in. Some will stay the whole 60 days, but not all of them come from the constituency in which that hospital is situated.

Mr. Sullivan: That is true.

Mr. Castonguay: Therefore, to me, it is almost impossible to take care of the patients in these hospitals.

I had the experience of observing the taking of a vote in such a hospital in Queensland in Australia. I was not too impressed with it, and for this reason: many people are interested in getting the votes of sick people, but I wonder how interested are the sick people. We went through a ward with the polling officials. There was an agent for each candidate and there were about eight around this body. Every bed we went to the patient just said "No". He was not interested. In that ward of perhaps 40 people I think two voted. It presents problems. The hospital cannot say, "Do not go near that sick man", because immediately one of the agents will say, "You are working against me." We have had that problem. Therefore, I am not sure how many people in an general treatment hospital are willing or want to vote, and after this experience in Queensland I would think twice before providing voting facilities in a ward in such a hospital. There are some people who are well enough, sure, but in this ward I think only two or three voted.

Mr. Sullivan: What about crippled or aged persons at home? Do you have any suggestions about them?

Mr. Castonguay: Again, the only way to tackle this problem is with a permanent list and your postal vote. I cannot see it with our present system. There is enough elasticity in our present system to take care of most cases. I do not know of any other electoral system in the world that allows an elector to get on the list two weeks before polling day. I defy anyone to show me any such electoral system.

We do this. Therefore let us not think that we are not providing our electors with more facilities and more opportunity to register than any country in the world. Do not let us "knock" our system too much.

• 1045

There is no system that covers everyone 100 per cent, unless you want to go into this very expensive package of permanent lists. If you do, you can provide all these facilities, but over a period of, say, four years it would cost around $44 million vis-à-vis an expense of $8 million.

Do you want to provide those facilities for $35 million? If you find that the other proposal of shortening the election period is not valid, the only reason for your wanting permanent lists is not for more accurate lists—because I do not think any other system of permanent lists is any more accurate than ours over the whole period of a year. I am speaking about a particular time, but over the period of a year, no matter at what time you call an election, with our system it is going to be reasonably accurate; but with a permanent list its accuracy depends on how close to the revision you order the election.

In the U.K. they voted recently to try to have two cycles a year to keep their permanent list up-to-date. There was a tie vote. The Speaker would not vote on it and it remains the same. It is one cycle a year. The reason for that second cycle was to update it a little more, but I think they ran into the problem of costing it.

But if you find that the reduction of the election period is not valid, it boils down to your spending at least $30 million to provide these facilities for how many people? If you do that and perhaps make voting compulsory you might get 10 per cent. But I do not think you would get 10 per cent unless you made it compulsory. Because of these very sick people I do not know how many would want to use it. Therefore, it is not so easy. To apply for a postal ballot you must make application 10 days before polling day, and who is going to remember to get it in on time?

Mr. Sullivan: Thank you very much.

[Interpretation]

The Chairman: Mr. Marceau.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Castonguay, I believe that the most serious problem we have in our ridings and even throughout the country is that the considerable number of people are not on the list at the time of the election. You seem to say that permanent list would certainly contribute solutions but would also involve problems. To solve this problem which is the major one in our countries, could you not recommend a concrete solution? Obviously, when somebody is not on the list, that person does not have the right to vote. This, I feel, is a bit drastic because, from a provincial point of view, that person can vote with a certificate. Could you not propose a solution of a smaller scope than a permanent list?

Mr. Castonguay: Yes, I have a solution, which, I think, will not be very acceptable. I should like the candidates of urban ridings, who are able to recommend Enumerators to the Returning Officer, to have more time to choose the Enumerators. This is what happens. I am not criticizing candidates who nominate the enumerators. When an election is called, the Returning Officer needs 300 Enumerators. The candidate who, at the last election, received the biggest number of votes, recommends one half of them. The second one will recommend the second half.

He gives the Returning Officer a list of 150 names. He cannot check whether these people can act. The list may have been prepared by his organization three weeks earlier. The Returning Officer receives the list and observes that the list was prepared for the purpose of giving him time to check whether these people are available. The Returning Officer himself makes that check. He may notice that 50 per cent of these people were not even asked whether they would be available. He will observe that 25 per cent for one reason or another are not available. And then you have only 25 per cent who can act. The Returning Officer must, therefore, again consult the candidates. When an election is called you normally have only 10 days. The enumeration starts on the 49th day.

It means that the candidates have only 4 or 5 days to choose 150 Enumerators and to recommend them to the Returning Officer. In my opinion, if the candidates in urban ridings had more time to choose and to check whether these people are available and competent, the enumeration would be better performed.

Mr. Marceau: For instance, when entire streets are forgotten, it is not the fault of the enumerators, who are often mistaken in their boundaries. It is somewhat the fault of the voter, who did not take care of it at the time of the enumeration.

Mr. Castonguay: It is not reasonable to believe that you can start an election in ten days. When the election is called, the Returning Officer opens his office. I am not talking about rural areas, but of the cities. The candidates give a list; the Returning Officer assembles 300 Enumerators in his office and the enumeration must start on the 49th day. I would like to recommend the system by which the candidates should have at least 10 days to choose these enumerators and before starting the enumeration we should have three weeks. I know that this means that the election campaign will last 70 or 71 days, but there are other ways of reducing the expenses; if there is no radio, television, no ads in the papers except during the last 30 days, then there is not much expenditure for political parties.

Mr. Marceau: But how is it that the open list in rural constituencies is not accepted in urban constituencies. It is a question of principle, I know that the figure is much larger, but why do they accept this in rural constituencies and not in urban constituencies?

Mr. Castonguay: In urban constituencies there are several boarding houses where nobody knows each other. In small villages everybody knows one another. They even know how their great grandfather voted. But in cities there are neighborhoods where people do not know one another at all.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Castonguay, there are usually a relatively number of employees in a polling office, and sometimes they do not know every voter, but it is very rare and I do not believe this would represent more than 10 per cent of people voting. There is always one employee who has at least interviewed the voter, who can be placed under oath and if the voter refuses there is something unacceptable. The oath is there to protect people.

Mr. Castonguay: Yes, but what happens is that people who are going to play that game are prepared to make a verbal oath. The most efficient way to stop that game is to make them sign an affidavit under oath. It is my experience that once they have to sign an affidavit, they just walk away.

Mr. Marceau: It is just because...

Mr. Castonguay: It takes only 15 minutes to administer the oath in writing.

Mr. Marceau: Yes, but listen, 15 minutes, I believe that if we have electoral officers who are well informed and who know their job, this can be done fairly quickly. You are raising the problem of the competence of electoral officers, because there is one thing certain, Mr. Castonguay,...

Mr. Castonguay: People may possibly know each other very well in your area—but there are neighborhoods in Montreal and I could name some in Toronto where there are high-rise apartments and people do not know one another in the same house, in the same building.

Mr. Marceau: If somebody is not on the list and wants to vote, it is normal that he takes an oath.

Mr. Castonguay: But, if...

Mr. Marceau: This is a protection, but you should not prevent people from voting when for one reason or another they are not on the list, simply on the principle that there might be an irregularity.

Mr. Castonguay: I could tell you something, this principle was applied 25 years ago and it was accepted in the cities in Ontario, but it is now abandoned. The Committee recommended that it be abandoned. You could have somebody from Ontario who could testify as to the problems they had in this field.

Mr. Marceau: In the province?

Mr. Castonguay: In the province. They abandoned it completely. And they had that system for 25 years and then dropped it.

Mr. Marceau: They thought there were too many irregularities.

Mr. Castonguay: I do not know the reasons why they are giving it up but they are giving it up and this means that they are not happy with it. Maybe you can get the reasons from these people.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Castonguay, I believe that you have said much more here in your comments than in your report.

Mr. Castonguay: Well, that is because they ask questions.

Mr. Marceau: This is very interesting though I am reaching the conclusion, obviously, that it is costly, but you have added that this might involve more problems or at least as many as the ones you have solved.

What would be the advantages of a permanent list. You told us about the drawbacks. Would there be any disadvantages, first of all from the point of view of the election, and other general advantages...

Mr. Castonguay: We had problems in Canada. This would solve quite a few problems. You undoubtedly remember the elections in 1965 and the students in the universities. Well, that problem would be solved.

Mr. Marceau: But, what proportion of voters was represented? Could it be 5 per cent, 3 per cent?

Mr. Castonguay: It depends. Will we maintain the right to vote at 21, or are we going to establish it at 18 years.

Mr. Marceau: Put it at 21 years.

Mr. Castonguay: 21 years. It is a hard question.

Mr. Marceau: Approximately. Could it be 5 per cent?

Mr. Castonguay: No, no. It would be somewhat less. I do not think that...

Mr. Marceau: Do you have figures on that subject?

Mr. Castonguay: I do not have figures, but I do not know how many students in all those universities are 21. I do not have figures in that respect.

Mr. Marceau: At any rate, it is not a large proportion.

Mr. Castonguay: I believe that in 1965, several figures were mentioned and the highest was 150,000.

Mr. Marceau: Good.

Mr. Castonguay: That was the highest. I do not know where they got their figures, though.

Now, let us take the case of the armed forces; there is an objection to the fact that the result of that vote is announced one week later, that there is a delay in certain ridings; this could change the results of an election and the armed forces do not care to have their votes identified as a military vote. That problem would then be settled.

There have been requests, in the past, dealing with the vote of Federal employees outside the country; that would settle that problem, as well as the people in hospitals or people at home who cannot go out. I have no figures for Canada, but would you accept the figure of 10 per cent for Australia?

Mr. Marceau: To settle the problem of costs, this could reach almost that maximum?

Mr. Castonguay: There would be delays after the election. You have to wait for at least 10 days so that all absentee votes or bulletins are back. During my stay in Australia, the only criticism on the part of the Australians as to the system, was that it takes too long to have the results of the elections.

Now look, if 10 per cent of the people votes in a 40,000 people constituency, this would be 4,000 votes. You have to wait for two weeks. Here, you have to wait for five days for the military votes. But don't forget that with respect to the postal and absentee vote, one regulation stipulates that you have to wait ten days before the votes can be counted officially, and thus you have to wait at least ten days before you have results. I do believe that there will be more ridings where they will wait for the results for ten days than at present, because of the military vote, because if you accept the figure of Australia, of 10 per cent, 4,000 electors, that is sufficient. That will make a big difference in many counties. The results will be in doubt for a long time.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortin.

Mr. Fortin: There is one thing which I think is very intriguing, Mr. Chairman. In Mr. Castonguay's mandate, he was not told he had to study the military vote. Since the start of the discussion this military vote crops up time and again. Am I in order to discuss this or not?

The Chairman: Yes, you are in order. By discussing a permanent polling list, we have to try to solve the problem of absentee votes and military people are absentees at the time of the election.

Mr. Fortin: In my party we are all unhappy about the military vote and this for several reasons. I will not give you all the reasons and we can discuss them at another time in order not to hold up the debates. But we are absolutely displeased with the present system of military vote. Because, in our opinion, it is a legalized theft of elections. In Shefford, I witnessed a legal recount in 1965 in the presence of lawyers and other colleagues and without being a specialist in graphology, with respect to the written vote that this vote was a sort of vote in a machine. They all had similar handwriting.

On the other side, we cannot have all the necessary steps, we cannot have the list of the soldiers or these members of the armed forces. We cannot know who votes. We cannot contact them and when that happens at a given moment, we lose our seat. For a third party such as ours, this is very important in the last few years, we were caught in two counties, in Sherbrooke and Shefford. I am not criticizing the member for Sherbrooke, who is of high caliber. Nevertheless, this leads, in our opinion, to controversies. I do not say that his election can be questioned but I say that the military vote might involve the contestation of votes, which should not happen because they are perfectly honest. I feel that the military vote in itself is dishonest unless I am proved wrong.

Since this subject is discussed constantly, and since this is not in your report, I would like you to comment on it. Do you agree or not? Maybe I go too far to have your reactions or your comments on this. We have really a few question marks and a few doubts so far is concerned the efficiency and the honesty of military vote.

Mr. Castonguay: You will have less doubts if you had a scrutinizer like the other parties, in offices of the special returning officers. The leader of the Government and the leader of the opposition and of the third party, have, under the regulations, the right to appoint scrutineers at the special returning officers.

Mr. Fortin: In other words, a party such as ours has no access to that office. But on the contrary, there is access to make it lose its seat.

Mr. Castonguay: The regulations can be changed. If you have a scrutineer, certainly, several doubts will be removed. That is the only comment I can make. Because other parties do not have this doubt, because they have scrutineers who are attending the count.

[English]

The Chairman: I am sorry, but we will have to vacate this room as another committee is scheduled to meet here at 11.00 a.m.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Castonguay.

The Chairman: This meeting is now adjourned until Thursday.

Mr. Richard: At what time?

The Chairman: I think it has been arranged for 11.00 a.m., but I will have it checked and you will receive a notice.

Thursday, May 1, 1969

• 1131

The Chairman: Order, please. We do not have a quorum yet; we did not have a quorum at the last meeting, but we did accept the idea of securing evidence from Mr. Castonguay and other witnesses, and to have it put in the Minutes in the legal form. Today we will continue our questioning of Mr. Castonguay about his report. For the attention of the members I wish to note the presence in this room of our confrère of the Bar, Mr D. D. Diplock of Ottawa, who is Counsel to the Ontario Provincial Select Committee on Elections and we are glad to have him with us here today. Please indicate to me if there are more questions you would like to ask of Mr. Castonguay about his report of this question on absentee voting, and all the subject matters. The discussion is open. Mr. MacGuigan.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I had to miss the last meeting because of the conflict so I would not like to ask for a repetition of the evidence. However, I certainly do have the impression that our witness is recommending against any establishment of a permanent electoral list because of the cost. The cost is too great to warrant the advantages to be gained as I understand is his contention. Did he recommend any changes in the present procedures which would enable us to achieve some of the advantages which a permanent list might give us. I have always been concerned, for example, with the fact that we did not have sufficient provision for people who are overseas, people who are travelling or people in hospital.

The Chairman: Before Mr. Castonguay answers these questions, I would like to remind the members that Mr. Castonguay is not here, let us say to tell the members what to recommend. He has already made recommendations in his report. Last Tuesday Mr. Castonguay answered your questions in general terms, and I will not allow him to give his views of the propriety of having a permanent list. Mr. Castonguay.

Mr. Nelson Castonguay (Representation Commissioner): Last week in our discussions I did not specifically recommend against the adoption of a permanent list but what I did point out was this. If you want permanent lists purely for the sake of having a more accurate list, then I would ask the members to consider the fact that a permanent list is not self-updating. With regard to leaving the initiative to the electors to up-date this list, we had that experience in this country in 1934 when we adopted a permanent list. The master list was set up in the autumn of 1934 and there was no way you could get on or off that list after the master list was compiled except for a period of six weeks between the first of June and the fifteenth of July.

The revision took place in 1935 in that period—the onus being only on the elector to go to the registrar to notify the registrar of a change of his status. When the election was held in October of 1935, it turned out to be a dismal, chaotic election because no one could get on or off that list. As a result of it, right after that election they set up a special committee which was given terms of reference to study everything—permanent list, compulsory registration, compulsory voting, and the committee unanimously recommended that permanent lists should not ever be adopted in this country. This is a permanent list which is something similar to France and something similar to the British system. You have a revision, and for instance in the British system, you start revising the old list in September. You go through the processes of bringing it up to date, you print the list, and then it appears for objections on the fifteenth of February. That list is then effective for all elections to be held in that current year. There is no way you can get on or off that list except that the registrar of death notifies the electoral people and they take the names of the dead people off. That is a permanent list. Now the system in Australia that I speak of, if parliament decides to go into the list of continuous electoral roles, allows registration up until the time the election is ordered, but despite the compulsory features of Australia where it is compulsory for an elector to register, they still are compelled, feel compelled and have found by experience that they must have a review on a house to house basis once a year. That review picks up anywhere from three to five per cent of the people who fail to comply with the compulsory features of the registration in Australia. You need 30 days residence in a constituency before you intend to vote in that constituency, and then you must register within 21 days. If you have an election in Australia, say in the month of May, which, when the revision is completed, your list is fairly up to date. However, if you have it in November, six months after the revision, it is not going to be as up to date.

● 1135

In my discussions with electoral officers of all the countries I have been in such as the United States, Australia, New Zealand, United Kingdom and France, they maintain that our system for a period of a whole year provides a more accurate list for an election called during that whole year than any of their systems—that is for the whole year. Now in the U.K. they felt that they needed a second revision. This process would start in June to prepare a list that would be effective for a six month period instead of a year's period. Well the speaker's committee vote on that was to maintain the present system because it would take a clear majority to make such a drastic change.

If you wish to supply a list to provide additional facilities for electors to vote such as absentee voting postal votes, there is no way that this can be efficiently, and with safety, attached to our present system. If you want to provide facilities for people to vote who are necessarily absent from their place of residence through sickness, business, or whatever reasons, either through absentee voting or postal voting, it is essential that you adopt a system of permanent lists in order to have their normal safeguards. The Province of Saskatchewan had the experience of attaching absentee voting in, I believe, 1960 purely on an affidavit basis. They abandoned that in 1965, so if the committee feels interested in this particular proposition of having absentee voting without a permanent list on an affidavit basis, may I suggest that some evidence be obtained as to why they are abandoning absentee voting in Saskatchewan.

What I pointed out to the committee is that if you want a permanent list purely for the sake of having a more accurate list, well, then, I do not think you are going to get a more accurate list. Secondly, if you want to shorten the period of the election, I am not so sure that shortening the period of the election can be effectively accomplished. I do say in my report that it can be done in 30 days. This can be done in 30 days purely from an administrative point of view, but I pointed out to the committee last Tuesday that if you have an election in 30 days, the Prime Minister could dissolve the House today, and in 30 days you have voting day. However, next Monday you have nomination day in 21 constituencies and two weeks from then you have nomination day in the other 242. I told the committee last Tuesday that it is my experience that all parties at all times require those six weeks between Issues of Writ and polling day to select candidates. At times they need a little longer I have observed. What I was merely pointing out to the committee last Tuesday was that I do not think a permanent list is any better and it is not self-updating. My view is that if you want an updated list, you must adopt the system of having one review per year. My recommendation is that if you want a permanent list, I recommend the Australian system, and compulsory registration on the part of the electors. You must remember with a permanent list your name must be on the list to vote. Now there are roughly 3,700,000 rural electors in this country, and under our present system we do not require the rural enumerator to make a house to house visitation, otherwise the expense of travelling would be just out of this world, but we do have this vouching system where if an elector is left off the list, all he has to do is get an elector whose name is on the list to vouch for him and he is permitted to vote. This is not permitted with a system of continuous elector rolls or permanent lists. There was, a great deal of dissatisfaction in 1935 from the rural areas, when the election came along and vouching was not permitted; they did not understand this. Your name must be on the list to vote, whether you have a permanent list or a continuous electoral roll. A good one third of our electorate are accustomed to the vouching system. I am not saying that they all vouch, but the system is there; if they are not on the list, they can be vouched for.

• 1140

Mr. MacGuigan: What about the American system?

Mr. Castonguay: You must remember that the American system is geared to fixed election dates. They have the assistance of continuous electoral rolls. They allow registration up until the close for primaries and up until a certain period before their election dates.

I have read in the Barbeau Report and I have heard some members express the idea that a permanent list might reduce the cost to the political parties of elections. When I went to Washington and discussed this with the Chairman of the Voter Participation and Registration Committee, set up by the late President Kennedy, I discussed this whole problem with him also, and with several members of that Committee. They wanted to know what we were doing here. He wondered if a permanent list must be recommended. He said the cost to the parties here is tremendous in keeping this list up to date and that there is only one state, Idaho, that has an enumerator going out actually seeking the elector to register him. All the others have to be shepherded into the registration office by unions, by service clubs, or by political parties, so that with a permanent list your problem is that you have this difficulty of updating the list. If the state does not pay for the expense of updating the list, then the political parties do, in order to get a more up-to-date list. The system they have in the States to purge their list of names that are deadwood for them is that if an elector has not voted for two elections, his name is automatically struck from the list. Remember, this works reasonably well for them, and it provides them with a very up-to-date list in so far as removing the deadwood four weeks after the election is over, but that deadwood is on the list for that election. If you have too much deadwood on the list, that may tempt a lot of people to get these people to vote anyway, even if they are six feet under. You have to be a little careful about that. I cannot see such a method of updating a list to provide a very good list four weeks after the election. I do not know how satisfactory that would be. It is one method, a cheap method, of bringing a list up to date after the election for the next election two years hence. However, is it going to be good for that election. I think there are 3 million electors in the city of Los Angeles. I think they anticipated after one election to remove 600,000 names from the list.

I pointed out that these permanent lists would certainly cure a lot of problems that we have here. I pointed out also that it would provide votes for people in hospitals through a postal vote. It would provide a vote for students; the problem we had in 1965, would be solved there. It would provide facilities for voting for civilians and members of the public service, who are serving outside of this country. It would help with the votes of the Canadian Forces. They could be treated as civilians and vote this way.

This would remove some of the objections raised by the Forces because their vote is released a week after and their vote can be identified as a group. It would cure a lot of these problems. The forces and the political parties feel that waiting a week, not even a week, waiting five days for the result of the service vote in four or five constituencies, is not too satisfactory. With a system of absentee votes, you allow a period of 10 days after polling day for all those ballots to come back to their respective constituencies.

• 1145

In Australia, anywhere from 8 per cent to per cent of the people use the facilities of absentee and postal voting. In a constituency of 40,000, let us say that 8 per cent use these facilities; this means that on the official edition of the votes there may be 3,000 ballots in that Returning Officer's office of absentee and postal ballots; if a candidate is sitting there very happy with a majority of 500, he would like to know very well if those are electors of his constituency. How many of the constituencies out of the 264 would be under suspense for a period of two weeks after the election, instead of five days? With our Canadian Forces voting there may be five or six constituencies left in suspense. I need not point out to you that in a close election there could be a hundred constituencies waiting for that two weeks to find out, not only who is going to be elected, but who is going to form the government. There is another difficulty with that. Then there is the difficulty of costs. I maintain that if you adopt the Australian electoral system, which I think is very adaptable to this country, and you provide absentee voting and postal voting, the cost would be a minimum $1 per elector per year. In the last election, I looked at the cost prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer; the cost pertaining to the list alone was $7,300,000. That is not a recurrent cost. This year the only cost is for the lists of the by-elections. You may have 11 million electors and start at $1 per elector. This is on the basis of two employees per electoral district; however, I have never known an office to start with two employees that has not built up over a period of years to two or three more.

They have in Australia 318 employees, permanent public civil servants. Using the same yardstick for Canada, you would have to have a minimum of 600 permanent public servants in this country. The costs are another factor. I feel it my duty, to bring to the attention of the House, these factors that must be considered.

Mr. MacGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howe: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Howe.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Castonguay mentioned something about the advanced polls. Why can people not vote at the advanced polls if their names are not on the list, but are vouched for?

Mr. Castonguay: With the rural system you have a poll with maybe 50 electors. The Deputy Returning Officer and the Poll Clerk are fully aware and know those 50 electors. However, when you set up an advanced poll, roughly they have 30 rural polls within them. There is not that knowledge of the DRO and the Poll Clerk of all the electors there. Therefore, the safeguard of vouching is such that if I were to come into the poll with you and vouch for you, would the polling officials and the agents in that poll know both of us? In other words, when you combine 30 polling divisions into an advance polling district, with one DRO and one Poll Clerk, there is not any way that that DRO and Poll Clerk could know 3,000 people spread over an area of maybe 100 miles one way and 50 the other. It was felt by the committee, when this was passed, that the local knowledge factor disappeared with the advance polling district containing 30 rural polling divisions. This is why they required that the name be on the list.

Mr. Howe: There has been discussion as to the great length of the campaigns. I have never found them that way. I have quite a large rural riding and I find difficulty getting around it in the period that is provided. What is the opinion about shortening the period to 30 days from 60 days?

Mr. Castonguay: From an administrative point of view, it is not realistic at all to think that you can run an election in 30 days. It is quite difficult because you have got to gear your administration to your largest constituency; that is the Northwest Territories and it has 1,532,000 square miles. We have a poll at Alert, which is 600 miles south of the North Pole.

• 1150

What has happened in the last 100 years is that the dog team, the horse, and the canoe, have been supplanted by the helicopter, the airplane, and the snowmobile, but the climate remains the same. I have had a Returning Officer when I was Chief Electoral Officer of the Northwest Territories in one election, who was flying around; he was one day in one settlement and was snowed in for 10 days; he could not get out. He arrived back at Yellowknife on election day, and he was away for 20 days. I do not care what there is in instant communication and transportation, you still need lots of time in these places. Other factors come out and in three or four constituencies there is not even a printing plant to print your ballot papers. It is all right in a place like Toronto or Montreal. He can cover his constituency with a 20-cent bus ticket and he can do it in an hour. He has all the latest facilities for printing and he has everything working for him. It seems to me that these are people who live in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Ottawa, and Toronto, and when they discuss instant elections they do not look beyond the borders of those cities. There is no argument. In those cities you can run an election in two weeks. They ignore that there is an awful lot of real estate in this country and that that area must be covered also. In 30 days you can do it, but it is the other side that I am a little concerned about. It is not my concern, but how can you get candidates over the weekend for the 21 constituencies that the writ issues in 30 days unless you have a lot of acclamations?

Mr. Howe: Old Mother Nature is pretty unpredictable too.

One other question. With regard to the appointment of returning officers—we know that this is a political appointment and there is no doubt about it—in my own case, I do feel that there was not too much consideration given as to geography. My riding is 75 miles long and the returning officer is right at the tip of that 75 miles and this makes it pretty inconvenient for the people down at the other end of the riding. Of course, you have mentioned the Northwest Territories but even in Ontario, my riding of Wellington-Grey runs from Wellesley right to Markdale. The returning officer lives just outside of Markdale and I think, even when these are political appointments, that some consideration should be given to where the returning officer lives. He should be living near the centre of the riding, particularly a riding of that type. What do you feel about that?

Mr. Castonguay: The appointment is the responsibility of the Governor in Council.

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Castonguay: As Chief Electoral Officer I have never been consulted in that. I do not want to be consulted about who should be the returning officer of a constituency. I do not know.

Mr. Howe: Would you suggest to them that the Governor in Council look at the location of this person? Rather than just being a bower of the party in power; he should be convenient. I know that on election night the men from the radio stations, the TV stations, and the newspapers—as well as everyone—were having a terrific job getting in contact with this man. He lives on a farm and I got lost every time I went to find him myself. I know a lot of people had the same experience. There should be a little more consideration given in this regard, so that it is not only convenient for the candidate but it is convenient for the press. I think it is quite important to these returning officers that they be as conveniently located as possible. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Castonguay: Oh, I would agree, certainly.

Mr. Howe: I know you do not have too much to say about this.

Mr. Castonguay: This suggestion is not new. It has been made at every committee I have been to since 1935, so I think it has fallen on deaf ears in the past.

Mr. Howe: All right. There will probably come a time when we have the appointment again. Who knows?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, could I just ask if this problem could be helped by having the office in a central place? The residence of the returning officer is not necessarily the site of the offices for a riding.

Mr. Castonguay: When I was Chief Electoral Officer—I was Chief Electoral Officer for six general elections—this problem did come up and we moved the office of the returning officer to a more central location when it was practicable. You can argue about a purely rural or hinterland constituency from morning until night as to what is the most central part in the constituency and you can get as many viewpoints there as there are people in the area. I am speaking for myself—when I was Chief Electoral Officer for six general elections—that whenever the request was made and it was practicable, we did move the returning officer to a more central location.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, suppose it is decided that we do not accept the system of a permanent list but remain with the present system. What improvement would you recommend to facilitate the voting of absentees, sick people, and students, in the light of the way it is now? I am thinking for instance, of enlarging the facilities to vote at advance polls for people who are sick and things like that. Can you suggest some improvements?

• 1155

Mr. Castonguay: I do not think that you can provide absentee voting methods and postal voting methods since they are linked up with a continuous system of electoral rolls or permanent lists. We made an effort at that in 1935. We had a permanent list, but it did not involve getting a registration card signed by each elector. With regard to postal voting and absentee voting, there is only one acceptable security offered. That is a permanent list or continuous electoral rolls in which you have a registration card signed by each elector that is in the office of the returning officer of the constituency.

Postal voting is somewhat similar to our armed forces voting. The ballot is put into an envelope. On the back of the ballot there is a declaration stating: your name, your address, and your electoral district. The absentee envelope is then dropped into the ballot box where you are voting and when it gets back to the returning officer of that constituency he then sends that ballot to the appropriate constituency. When the returning officer receives it, he then takes that envelope—upon which appears the signature of the elector—and compares it with the signature on the registration card. I grant you that every person is not a handwriting expert, but this is an acceptable safeguard. He then looks in the poll book where that person would normally vote and checks to see whether or not he might have voted there. If the signatures compare and he did not vote in the ordinary poll, that ballot becomes countable. On the official addition of the votes those envelopes can be examined by the candidates and their agents to check that they are authentic, and that they belong to that constituency. Then, once everybody is satisfied of the validity of these envelopes they then open the envelope, take the ballot out and drop the ballot in the ballot box. The ballot then is secret. They make their count.

We did other systems in Canada, in 1935. With our permanent list in 1935 we did not have registration cards signed by 8 million electors; it was just a form of enumeration. It was a coqueral of permanent lists and our system so that what we had was an affidavit.

Now there is a report on that system and if I may read it to the Committee here. You will find this on page 33 of my Report. This is my predecessor's report.

(c) The Chief Electoral Officer, in his Report to the Speaker of the House of Commons on February 3, 1936, had this to say in regard to absentee voting:

"4. I was also called upon, on many occasions, to express an opinion with regard to absentee voting. This is the first time that there has been absentee voting at a Dominion election. The procedure appeared to be most complicated to election officers and political workers. The right to vote as an absentee voter is limited to four classes of persons, namely: fishermen, lumbermen, miners and sailors actually engaged or employed in any of these occupations on polling day at a distance of not less than twenty-five miles from their ordinary polling stations and in the same province. This limitation gave rise to a lot of dissatisfaction and misunderstanding in most electoral districts and the application of the absentee voting provisions complicated to a great extent the duties of the election officers, which were already intricate enough. Absentee voting was not resorted to to a great extent. There were only 5,334 absentee voters' ballots cast in the whole of Canada on polling day. Of this number 1,533 ballots were rejected, leaving only 3,801 valid ballots.

Furthermore, the absentee voting procedure was the cause of a considerable increase in the cost of the holding of the General Election. In the first place, a large number of blank forms, ballots, etc., had to be printed to supply each polling station with a certain number. This printing cost upwards of $16,000. In the second place, a list of the names, addresses and occupations of the candidates nominated in each province had to be furnished to each polling station. Except in the Province of Saskatchewan, where there is an interval of two weeks between nomination and polling days in every electoral district this list could not be printed until after the close of nomination on the seventh day before polling day. For obvious reasons, the list was printed in four different places in the western provinces and it was printed in Ottawa only for the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The delivery of these lists of candidates necessitated the use of aeroplanes in several electoral districts and it also made it necessary to deliver the ballot boxes by messengers in most rural polling divisions at great cost. Otherwise, most of these boxes would have been sent by mail at parcel post rates. The cost of the application of the absentee voting provisions is not yet available, but it is estimated that it will be close to a quarter of a million dollars.

That is for 5,334 votes.

• 1200

In my opinion, therefore, the result of the last general election shows that absentee voting is a costly, ineffective and complicated procedure which should not be resorted to at any future Dominion election.

The answer to your question, therefore, is that absentee voting and postal voting, without a permanent list of continuous electorals, cannot be done. It cannot be attached to our present system.

There are problems right now with the advanced polls. There was an amendment which was submitted to the Committee in 1963 and agreed to which was to allow persons for any reason to vote at the advance polls. I think this would solve that.

I believe in the last election there were only 80,000 persons approximately, who voted at the advance polls. The advance polls can serve only those people who know they are going to be leaving their constituency a week ahead of polling day. It does not take care of the people in hospitals, not unless they know they will be in the hospital. It is very limited in its use.

My feeling is that anytime you try to take part of a system that works well with another, and attach it to ours, which is designed for taking the votes of only people where they are living, you weaken our system.

The Chairman: Mr. Castonguay, when you studied the Australian system, did you have the total percentage of the voters duly registered on election day?

Mr. Castonguay: The people who voted?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Castonguay: Please refer to page 53 of the English section. Do you mean the total vote?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Castonguay: It was approximately 97 per cent. You must remember the fact that the 3 to 5 per cent who do not observe this rule have left or have not registered. That could account for that difference between 100 per cent and 96 or 97 per cent. In Australia 96 to 97 per cent of the electors vote. Of course, it is compulsory voting, too.

The Chairman: Do you have more questions?

Mr. Howe: Has it ever been taken into consideration—the municipality, the province, and the federal government do it—to co-ordinate these efforts so that there would not be so much duplication in preparing the rolls?

Mr. Castonguay: Although it was not in my terms of reference, I made a study of the possibility of using one list for the three levels of government. It is almost impossible to have the municipal elections combined with this because they have different qualifications. I think it would be feasible to have a provincial and a federal list because the adjustments would be rather minor. They would have to adjust the rules of residence. We could not, for instance, have a list that could be used by both levels and have the requirements of both.

Mr. Howe: The boundaries are not the same.

Mr. Castonguay: In Australia, four of the six states use the same list for federal and provincial purposes. The electoral polling subdivisions are the same, so when they have a redistribution they take that into account. They do not divide a polling division. Therefore, when they have redistribution they can move that polling division from one border across to the other.

First, you must have agreement at two levels of government about rules of residence, voting age, and the boundaries of polling divisions. Then it can be used at two levels. I think you can see now the municipal elections could not possibly be included at that level.

Some people think that preparing for each election is an awful waste of money. I maintain it is far cheaper because the expensive part of an election is the updating, not the compiling. Updating that list costs a fortune.

As I pointed out the other day, one improvement in compiling the lists would be to have the period 70 days instead of 60. This would not be very popular. Right now, the election is announced, normally, 60 days before polling day. The enumeration starts on the 49th day before polling. In that period between the 60th day and the 49th day the returning officer must open an office, obtain all his enumerators, get the supplies out, and begin the enumeration the following Monday. This is quite a feat.

• 1205

I am not speaking only of the returning officers. I am speaking of the urban areas where we must give the candidates a chance to select somebody. They have a right to nominate. Right now, when a candidate in an urban area and the runner-up submit a list of 200 enumerators each, there is no time to check that list.

The returning officer does the checking, and as I pointed out, my experience was that when he comes to check voter names he will find perhaps 200 that he can get in touch with. The others will not even be contacted. These were people that were thought would be good enumerators by each party, and when the election is called we will contact them. In those 10 days he must try to contact 400 people, ask them if they can work, give them their supplies, and get them out into the street the following Monday.

Therefore, a great deal of the problems with our list now is the fact that we do not have sufficient time. First, the candidates must nominate enumerators and see if they are prepared to act. Then the returning officer must arrange for them to see him, brief them, give them their supplies, and get them out.

I am surprised and I have been astonished most of the time that this procedure can be accomplished. It has worked very well. There is a period of revision and so on, and we have been able to accomplish this.

Therefore, if you want a better list under our present system, I would suggest the only way would be to add another 10 days to the enumeration period. That would be a very popular move from the point of view of the elections.

Mr. Howe: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there no more questions?

• 1209

[Interpretation]

Mr. Castonguay, I thank you very sincerely for the research you have put into this question, and I thank your colleagues for having come to give evidence today, for having given us the additional information about the recommendations and conclusions in this report. The members of the Committee will try to meet again next week, perhaps in camera, and with the assistance of Mr. Castonguay and his assistants we will try to decide, according to our terms of reference, whether or not to recommend the establishment of a permanent list for the Canadian system.

For the time being, I think while we do not have a quorum, there are some exhibits that have to be filed. We could have them filed at our next meeting in the hope that we will have a quorum.

Mr. Sullivan: I think it might be a good idea to wait until we have the Minutes of the meeting printed so the other members who are not here could read them?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Sullivan: May I suggest that perhaps we should wait and not have one next week and have one the following week.

The Chairman: However, we need a quorum in the Committee to have the Minutes printed.

We will have a meeting next week to decide on procedure. Thank you very much, Mr. Castonguay.

The meeting is now adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 10

Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968.

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

INCLUDING SIXTH REPORT TO THE HOUSE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome

and Messrs.

Alkenbrack,	⁵ Forget,	Murphy,
³ Benjamin,	Fortin,	Richard,
¹ Brewin,	Howard (Skeena),	Ritchie,
Cafik,	Howe,	⁴ Sullivan,
² Chappell,	Kaplan,	Thomas (Moncton),
Code,	MacGuigan,	Trudel,
Forest,	Marceau,	Valade—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

¹ Mr. Brewin replaced Mr. Benjamin on May 20, 1969.

² Mr. Chappell replaced Mr. Sullivan on May 20, 1969.

³ Mr. Benjamin replaced Mr. Brewin on May 21, 1969.

⁴ Mr. Sullivan replaced Mr. Chappell on May 21, 1969.

⁵ Mr. Forget replaced Mr. Jerome on May 21, 1969.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of April 2, 1969, which reads:

“Ordered,—That the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, made pursuant to section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections”, your Committee held five meetings and heard Mr. Nelson Castonguay, Representation Commissioner, as witness.

Having studied the said report and in consideration of the testimony obtained, your Committee is of the opinion that the establishment of a permanent voters list in Canada similar to those referred to in the Representation Commissioner's Report, is not advisable since it would cause more problems than it would solve.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues Nos. 8 to 10 inclusive) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, May 20, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections having been duly called to meet at 11.00 a.m. this day, the following members were present: Messrs. Fortin, Howe, Laflamme, Marceau, MacGuigan (5).

There being no quorum at 11.20 a.m., the members dispersed.

WEDNESDAY, May 21, 1969.
(11)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 3.52 p.m., in camera, the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Forest, Forget, Howard (Skeena), Howe, Kaplan, Laflamme, Marceau, MacGuigan, Murphy, Sullivan, Thomas (Moncton), Trudel (13).

The Committee considered a draft Sixth Report and instructed the Chairman to present it to the House, as amended.

At 4.33 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1969

HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1968-69

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. OVIDE LAFLAMME

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE

No. 11

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1969

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

WITNESSES:

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

INCLUDING SEVENTH REPORT TO THE HOUSE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman: Mr. Ovide Laflamme

Vice-Chairman: Mr. James Jerome¹

and Messrs.

Alkenbrack,	Howard (Skeena),	Richard,
Benjamin,	Howe,	Ritchie,
Cafik,	Kaplan,	Sullivan,
Code,	MacGuigan,	Thomas (Moncton),
Forest,	Marceau,	Trudel,
Fortin,	Murphy,	Valade—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

¹ Mr. Jerome replaced Mr. Forget on May 22, 1969.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

FRIDAY, October 18, 1968.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of Bill C-16, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Students Franchise), be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, November 15, 1968.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Qualifications of Voters and Candidates) be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1968.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of Bill C-13, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Repeal of Court of Revision) be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, January 20, 1969.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of the following Notice of Motion be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure to amend the Canada Elections Act to prevent to a further degree the disenfranchisement of numerous citizens who are absent from their residence areas on polling days, and to prevent the Armed Services being singled out as the only professional group whose political choices are made public, by mingling Armed Service ballots with other absentee ballots, and, for those purposes:

(a) to entitle an elector to vote on polling day for the candidate of his choice who is nominated in his Electoral District, by casting his vote in a polling station or Electoral District other than his own, using an absentee ballot;

(b) to provide that Armed Services ballots shall henceforth be called absentee ballots and be counted simultaneously with other absentee ballots without, however, altering the present method of balloting by the Armed Services;

(c) to provide further that members of the Public Services of Canada and their dependents stationed abroad shall be enabled to cast absentee ballots in the manner prescribed for the Armed Services.—(Notice of Motion No. 20).

TUESDAY, February 25, 1969.

Ordered,—That the subject-matter of the following Bills be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Bill C-21, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Age of Voters);
and

Bill C-72, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Age of Voters).

THURSDAY, June 12, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to study the Canada Elections Act, exclusive of sections 62 and 63, and to report to the House such proposals as the Committee may deem advisable.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Orders for Second Reading of Bills C-33, C-52, C-77, C-80, C-90, C-92, C-106, C-107, C-117, C-127, C-133, C-145 and C-181 be discharged and that the subject-matter of the said bills be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to adjourn from place to place to place within Canada and that the necessary staff accompany the Committee.

ATTEST:

ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

THURSDAY, June 26, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada and that the necessary staff accompany the Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, June 26, 1969.
(12)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.28 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Alkenbrack, Code, Howe, Jerome, Kaplan, Laflamme, Richard, Ritchie, Sullivan, Thomas (Moncton), Trudel—(11).

Also present: Messrs. Portelance, Rochon, Roy (Timmings).

Witness: Mr. J. H. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

Moved by Mr. Trudel, and Agreed,—That Mr. Jerome be the Vice-Chairman of the Committee.

A discussion was held concerning the Committee's Orders of Reference and the advisability of holding meetings during the adjournment of the House.

Moved by Mr. Trudel, and Agreed,—That the Chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence when a quorum is not present provided there be no less than five members in attendance, and to cause the printing thereof.

Moved by Mr. Kaplan, and Agreed,—That the Committee seek the authorization of the House to adjourn from place to place within Canada and that the necessary staff accompany the Committee.

Moved by Mr. Trudel, and Agreed,—That the Committee obtain copies of the Provincial Elections Acts and other related documents as required.

Moved by Mr. Sullivan, and Agreed,—That letters containing suggestions pertaining to the Canada Elections Act received by the Chief Electoral Officer since 1963 be accepted as an exhibit (Exhibit VI).

Moved by Mr. Jerome, and Agreed,—That the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure be authorized to make the necessary arrangements and decide which centres across Canada should be visited and on what dates provided the House agrees to the Committee's recommendation that it be authorized to adjourn from place to place.

At 12.24 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, June 26, 1969.

● 1126

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see that we now have a quorum. Before we deal with the subject matter for discussion to day, I suggest that we appoint a Vice-Chairman. Jim Jerome was Vice-Chairman of this Committee but he had to be absent for a few meetings. Since he has now returned we should either re-appoint him or appoint someone else.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose that Mr. Jerome be re-elected as Vice-Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to speak in support of the nomination of Mr. Jerome for Vice-Chairman.

The Chairman: May I consider that the nominations are closed?

An hon. Member: There are no further nominations.

Mr. Jerome: I accept.

The Chairman: As you know, a full review of the Elections Act has been referred to us by the House with instructions to sit during the adjournment. After discussion with Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer, it was suggested that if we do review this Act we should be in a position to table our report at the resumption of the session in the fall. This would require the members to sit at least from about the middle of September until the resumption of the session. I would say in this respect that those members who do not think they will be in a position to sit or to be present in Ottawa, that they inform myself or the Clerk, Mr. Thomas, so that they may be replaced before the adjournment.

Also, it might be interesting to note that perhaps we should seek to get information from other provinces as to the way they proceed, for instance, with the proxy voting system as well as with the absentia voting system. They have a proxy voting system in Ontario and in Nova Scotia and they have an absentia voting system in B.C. Perhaps it would be interesting if we sought permission from the House to sit from place to place in Canada, and if I receive a motion to this effect I will make a request to the House that even if we sit during the adjournment of the House that we be permitted to sit in Ontario and Quebec, or let us simply say from place to place in Canada. If, for instance, we find it difficult to get witnesses in Ottawa, that the members wish to go and see what is going on in other places and have a full examination of the systems used, let us say, in Saskatchewan, B.C., Ontario or Quebec. Yes, Mr. Kaplan?

● 1130

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, that is an excellent suggestion and I certainly would be prepared to support it. However, I would like to suggest as an alternative that not only the Committee be empowered to sit from place to place in Canada but that subcommittees also be so empowered. We may find in the course of our work that not all of us, or even a large number, are prepared or able to go to Quebec City, for instance, but that three or four might be prepared to do so. Perhaps it would be useful to request extra authorization from the House so that a group of us...

The Chairman: I am informed that if we receive authorization from the House to sit as a Committee from place to place, then it is up to us to do it as feasibly as we can.

Mr. Kaplan: Would it be possible under those circumstances for us to sit in two places at once? For example, one group sit in Toronto, and another group sit in Quebec City?

The Chairman: Yes. We do not need to include that in the motion. The only authority we require from the House is that we sit from place to place in Canada. We will then decide on the best way to proceed.

Mr. Sullivan: You would not have to have a quorum, Mr. Chairman at each place. Is that what you mean?

The Chairman: No. If we do reach a decision on this, if we have a motion here today to reduce the quorum to hear evidence, then this will empower a section of the Committee to go to Ontario, Quebec or to British Columbia and to secure evidence there without being forced to have the full Committee there. And it might be difficult to have the full Committee if we sit during the adjournment.

Does someone want to add something to this?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity of having meetings in the various provinces as we are studying the Election Act. Can't we get all the documentation here and see it before we come to a decision?

The Chairman: There are systems, everywhere which are different from ours, and would throw a lot of light on the decisions that we will have to come to here. For example, the system of voting by proxy can become necessary, as you have rejected the idea of a permanent list for absentee voting. The system of proxy voting could become necessary, therefore it is suggested that we should study this matter. The province of Ontario has one system, as well as Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan. Now, do some members not think that it would be a good idea to meet the various people who apply these systems in the different provinces. We could always bring these witnesses or try to; to a thorough study of their systems, to see the very best possible system.

[English]

Mr. Howe: I am trying to analyze in my mind why we have to have a report ready for the re-opening of the House. Why is there this pressure to get this report in? Why cannot we wait until we come back here to make these studies?

The Chairman: Well, I may let Mr. Hamel speak on this.

Mr. Howe: The Elections Act has been there for a long time, so why in a couple of weeks do we have to arrange to revise it and bring in a report on the revisions of it?

The Chairman: May I ask Mr. Hamel to give some explanation on this.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I can only refer to the statement made in the House by the President of the Privy Council on June 12 when he said that the machinery, speaking of my office, would require a minimum of 24 months, if there are to be fairly broad changes in the Elections Act to be ready to face another election. In order not to be caught short of time, I think the government has agreed, or the government thinks, that this should be done at an early date. I mentioned to Mr. Macdonald that it would take quite a while to revise completely the books of instructions. We have eight books of instructions in English and in French and some of them are quite voluminous. You have one with you now. To re-write the whole thing, if there are amendments, would take some time. My staff is quite small and we can do only so much during a certain period of time, and then we have to order all the supplies after the amendments have been adopted by the House, if there are any amendments.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, you intimated that we would start this Committee working about the middle of September, and that we should have a report ready when the House opens. We cannot go through this voluminous document and come back with any kind of sensible report in two weeks after travelling around the country. It would just be impossible.

The Chairman: Well, the idea is that the full Committee should sit after September 15, but before that it might be important to secure the authority of the Committee to have a subcommittee or a steering committee sitting to do preparatory work in such a way that most of the information would be secured when the whole Committee sits in September, for the technical amendments and those which are required by the Chief Electoral Officer. He told me that it would not take more than two or three days to have them approved but there are some pretty important decisions, I think, that we will have to make about the questions of voting age, the proxy voting system, the absentee voting system, the vote of civil servants in other countries and the military vote. Those are some decisions that I think we will have to make, and if we do make those decisions and if we reach any decision on this, then we have to do that before we start redrafting this Act. Mr. Richard.

• 1135

Mr. Richard: My middle name is Thomas, and I am just being practical. It might be all right to do any kind of work you want to do in September but let us face the facts. When you come to revise the Elections Act, I am not worried much about the printing; I am interested in what is going to be printed. All these members, I am sure, have ideas about revisions of the Act and they are going to want new evidence brought in. I guarantee that if it is going to be a good report, it will not be out by December from this Committee.

I am not against it if you want to sit in September, but I do not think you are saving much time unless it is to gather information around the country, that is all. If somebody wants to go around the country and gather information so that when we sit in October we will—but it is hopeless to think that you are going to have a report from this Committee within two months after the month of October, unless somebody is going to push it down somebody's throat. I am not saying that about anybody, but I have been on committees a long time and I think they are getting more serious than ever.

I have been on committees since 1945 that have been revising the Elections Act, and that is a long time, and there have been some clever persons on those committees. Ministers used to sit on them and everybody else, and they have been all over the place. I am sure that if you seriously intend to change the Elections Act and not just amend it, that it is going to take you a long time. So I am quite in favour if some people are going to enquire, and there are enquiries to be made, and to gather information from September 15 to the first week of October. But after that I want the Committee to understand that we are going to be sitting for a good while before we make a report.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to keep in mind that the Elections Act can bear some revision before the next election, and with that in mind we ought not to set ourselves necessarily an immediate target of getting a perfect Elections Act. Perhaps what we ought to do is try, by the time limit that Mr. Hamel has suggested, to make important revisions that can be made within that time, and then afterwards when we have made a report in time to be implemented for the next election we might then turn our attention to the Act in a more detailed way. We would then have no pressure of time on us and we would be able to consider far-reaching and deep changes that might not be feasible if we insist on doing the whole job at once. In other words, it might be worth considering a stop gap series of changes that will take out some of the worst injustices and obsolescent features of the Act in time to be useful in the next election, and thereafter we might think about a better Act for the ages, if I can put it that way.

Mr. Richard: If my colleague wants to limit his examination to certain things about which we are all unanimous, or nearly unanimous, or the kind of revision that is easy to make, or just wants to accept, holus-bolus, the recommendations of the Electoral Officer, that is quite all right. But I am saying that the public and the House expect us at this time to give some finality to certain of the more controversial matters in the Election Act.

If you think there is unanimity about a great many things then I suppose we do not need to sit, because we could settle these this morning. But I am not talking about unanimity. I am talking about the direct problems with the Election Act that we will want to discuss. It will not be done in a few days.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, the point I wanted to make was that it is all very well to require until December to make all the changes to the Act that we would like to see, but the difficulty I see in following that procedure is that we will deprive this country of a new Elections Act for the next election.

Mr. Richard: I do not think so.

Mr. Jerome: May I just question that? To my mind we seem to be making the arithmetical assumption that in order to allow 24 months before the next election something has to be done by December 1969. Of course, no one can say when the next election is going to be, but I do not think it unreasonable to anticipate that it will not be before June of 1972, which is four years from the last election. That means that if we have this material in the hands of the Electoral Officer before June of 1970 he should have 24 months. And it may very well be that the next election will be sometime after June of 1972, perhaps in the fall of 1972, or even as late as the spring of 1973. Is my arithmetic wrong on that? What date were you assuming, sir?

Mr. Hamel: If you can guarantee that the election will not be before the spring of 1972, your arithmetic is certainly good.

Mr. Jerome: If we are going to work to this kind of target I think we have to make some assumption. I certainly think it is safe to assume that with his current majority one would not expect the Prime Minister actively to seek an election less than four years from the date of the last one. I certainly have that fond hope.

Mr. Hamel: If I may, the only thing I would like to emphasize, or to impress upon you, is that if there are going to be fairly sweeping changes in the Act we need a minimum of 24 months. The rest I leave to you. This is the thing that worries me—that we need two years following the passing of the legislation.

Mr. Jerome: But this rather raises a dilemma. If the changes we are about to make are fairly sweeping then it is foolish to anticipate that we could meet, beginning on September 15, and have something ready for October 1, or for the fall session, or for the end of the fall session. If the changes are substantial that connotes that there will be discussion and consideration. I think we have to be realistic enough to understand that we are going to have to spend several weeks discussing this subject if the changes are going to be at all serious.

The Chairman: Let me, then, withdraw the statement I have made that we will table this report at the re-opening of the House on the resumption of the session. There has been some urgency in the matter, but I am not making any statement, or am I criticizing what Mr. Richard has said. I would simply say that many reviews have already been made. Election expenses have been withdrawn from our terms of reference, and there has been a great deal of discussion on the subject matters on which we are going to reach decisions. But I do say that on many issues it would not take very long to come to a decision and table a report in the House.

• 1145

For example, we have to make a decision and inform the House about our views on the question of the voting age. I do not think it should take a lot of time to discuss that matter. If we try to re-adjust the proxy voting system within our law, then I think it would take perhaps a few days, or, let us say, a few weeks for some of us to obtain information, and on the absentee-voting system, I would say about the same. But except for the election expenses, I do not believe this whole matter will take that long.

If we propose only to discuss and reach no decisions we may do so and obtain a lot of information. We have already studied the full report of Mr. Castonguay on the establishment of a permanent electoral list and we rejected the principle. We did it, I think, in a very accurate way, in the sense that we obtained information. We have had this report. We do not need to enter into this whole issue again, because it has been done. Mr. Thomas?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, what we are discussing now is predicated on the statement by Mr. Hamel that it would take a minimum of two years after the recommendations have been received for his Department to prepare the new Elections Act.

I came in late and possibly he explained this, but you are asking the members of Parliament to work overtime and rush their work. Possibly Mr. Hamel's Department could be asked to work overtime and cut that 24 months down to 12 months. Is this possible, or is this 24-month period something that we cannot get around? Perhaps you could speed up your Department, Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: My only problem is that I do not have any control over the suppliers. Following the 1957 election, with all the priorities in the world and without any amendments whatsoever, it took 10 months to get all the supplies necessary for the 1958 election. This was without any amendment whatsoever, without any changes in the appointment of returning officers, and with practically no courses to be given except for the odd returning officer who was replacing one who had resigned. With all the priorities in the world it took 10 months then, with no amendments whatsoever.

We could work overtime—we are used to it—but, as I say, I have no control over the printers or the suppliers of the material.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): But, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a great deal of pressure to revise the Act. I agree that changes are necessary before the next election, but if this 24 months could even be cut to 18 or 20 it would give us an extra three or four months to consider this. There would not be so much pressure on us then. Would it be possible? Do you say that 24 months is an irreducible minimum—that you cannot go below 24 months?

Mr. Hamel: My statement was based on an assumption. It depends, of course, on the scope of the changes that will be made. If the Committee decides to adopt only the changes

I propose we may not need that length of time, but if other amendments are made, and we have to conduct courses of instruction for our returning officers, then to instruct 264 people takes time. And my staff boils down to four people, including myself, who can do that work.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, I agree that revision is necessary, but, like Mr.

• 1150

Richard, I would hate to see us rush this thing through. I think we should spend a good deal of time on it and take plenty of time to prepare our report. I would hate to see our being faced with a time-limit and having to do it by December, or by any set date. I do not think we can do it properly even if we sat all summer, which I certainly do not intend to do.

I question the necessity of members having to sit during the summer. Even if we did and came back here in September, to make a proper report I think we would be pushed to get it out even by the end of December. Therefore, I question whether sitting in the summer will accomplish anything other than a fact-finding mission by some members.

Mr. Ritchie: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what this Committee has on its agenda for the next session? What is it likely to be doing next fall and winter? Apart from this revision of the Elections Act, is it going to be busy?

The Chairman: We simply do not know. The only thing we have before us is the review of the Elections Act, plus the many private bills that have been referred to us. The main new bill, with the various subject matters that have been referred to us, is the Elections Act.

Mr. Ritchie: You have no idea whether or not we will be busy?

The Chairman: We do not know. We could sit a full year, if you wish, on these terms of reference. Then there is the point raised by Mr. Hamel, that even without the Elections Act being reviewed and having amendments approved by the House of Commons he still needs 24 months to prepare himself for the next election.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I suggest in conjunction with what Mr. Jerome has said, that we should assume that there will not be an election for another three years. Even if we did make a report by the end of the fall, it could easily come before he could get ready for it under the new system.

If we are going to make a reasonable revision of the Act we have to have enough time to think about it. Certainly it seems logical to me that we will not really be able to have a report ready before Christmas, if not later, if it is to be an intensive report.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should make one point very clear. Perhaps there are some obvious things that Mr. Hamel might recommend should be done to the Act, to which we could agree, but that would not take very long. If all that is urgent is to pass those few recommendations to brush up the Act I quite agree that we could pass then and make a report of some kind early in October, and he might be very happy about that. But any point is that surely it would have to be pointed out in that report that we had been asked to revise the Elections Act and that this was not a complete job. If you do not do that, you are in for criticism.

There is supposed to be a revision of the Act, not just a patching of it up. If we make a report of that type, on just the amendments that Mr. Hamel is suggesting—which may be quite necessary—we will have to preface it by saying that this is not the final job and that we wish to continue on those items that we think are important and on which we must reach decisions.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, is it government policy to have all the committees sitting when the House is not sitting? Is this something new that is going to happen? I know it has happened on occasions, in the past, they are very few. I was on the Health and Welfare Committee a few years ago when we went through the Canada Pension Plan. Has any definite policy been set out? Is this a new approach to the committee system, that all the work is going to be done and the period of being away from the House is going to be broken into by having to come back?

The Chairman: I do not say there is a definite policy on that. I just do not know. What

• 1155

I understand is that at least six committees of the House have plans to sit prior to the resumption of the session.

In our terms of reference we already have authority to sit during the adjournment, with a view to being in the position to report, and have the new amendments put forward in the House and approved there so that the Chief Electoral Officer will be in a position to act on the amendments that are going to be made.

Mr. Jerome: There is a factor about sitting during vacation periods that concerns me a little, Mr. Chairman. It is not perhaps too serious a matter, but it is annoying for members to come to a meeting while the House is in session and find that we do not have a quorum. It would be a serious inconvenience to members if they were to travel some distance to come here for a meeting and find that not enough members had shown up to make a quorum. How can we guard against that happening? We had a lot of trouble getting one this morning.

An hon. Member: The quorum could be much smaller.

Mr. Jerome: If we wish to authorize this Committee to carry out certain functions with less than the usual quorum of 11 members I suppose we had better do that today by resolution of this Committee.

The Chairman: It is on our agenda to have a motion put to the Committee to reduce the quorum to receive evidence.

Is it agreed by members of the Committee that we reduce our quorum to receive evidence?

Mr. Kaplan: What size of quorum do you have in mind, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: On the Public Accounts Committee they have a minimum quorum of five.

Mr. Trudel?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, should we not first divide the problem and establish the principle: should we sit or not. Then we will discuss the modifications. At the moment, we're talking about the report, all sorts of things. We should consider the principle right now; are we sitting or are we not? Will the

• 1158

Committee travel? The question must be divided into two or three parts and then we can agree. Presently, everybody discusses, talks. I would not like to give the impression that I am 100 per cent against what Mr. Jerome just said, on the contrary. But, first, if the question of whether we sit or not is not accepted, all the other modifications will have no reason for being at all.

The Chairman: I understand very well, Mr. Trudel, but I don't think it's a matter of principle at all. It is sit or not sit. That is not the point. I think, first of all, it is a matter of deciding whether we agree to reduce the quorum. If we reduce the quorum as it has been suggested and has been proposed by the majority so far, perhaps it will be easier to meet the objections raised by Mr. Jerome that if we decide to sit during the adjournment, then we can listen to the witnesses. We can do this with a minimum quorum.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, are you saying that the Committees have received the approval of the House to reduce their quorum to seven or eight?

An hon. Member: Yes, for a fact.

Mr. Chairman: Under the Regulations, we have the power to reduce our own quorum, not to make decisions, but to hear witnesses.

[English]

We have the authority to reduce our quorum to receive evidence. We do not need any reference from the House for that. We can do that ourselves.

I refer to Subsection (7) of Standing Order 65 of the rules of the House, that:

The presence of a quorum shall be required whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken by a standing or a special committee, provided that any such committee, by resolution thereof, may authorize the chairman to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence when a quorum is not present.

Mr. Howe: In other words, any major decisions require that you have a full quorum, whereas...

The Chairman: The only circumstance under which we can have a reduced quorum is to hear evidence; not to make decisions.

Mr. Howe: Then you have the authority. You do not need to reduce the quorum.

The Chairman: But the Committee has to decide.

Mr. Jerome: We can pass a resolution today authorizing the Chairman to call together five members to hear evidence, or three, or one?

An hon. Member: Five or more.

The Chairman: Not to call only five members, but to call everyone, to call the Committee, but if there are only five members present, being the number set down as a quorum, then evidence will be heard and the Minutes will be printed.

Mr. Trudel: I move, Mr. Chairman, that five be the accepted quorum to hear evidence.

The Chairman: Is there any discussion on this motion?

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the number five; why does it have to be five?

The Chairman: A minimum of five.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, I believe this has been the accepted number in other Committees, that is the only reason I chose five, because it has been selected in other Committees and it seems to be a workable figure. It is a minimum of five.

Mr. Alkenbrack: It may not be workable in the summer.

Mr. Trudel: This will be in the fall. We are talking about September if my understanding of the problem is correct.

The Chairman: There is no plan at all to sit before September 15.

Mr. Code: Mr. Chairman, if you call the Committee in September, would you call us one day and skip a couple of days, or would we meet for a week, for example, or how would you work that?

The Chairman: This is a question that has been raised and I think we have to think about it. It has to be dealt with. My suggestion is that if we could arrange to sit the two last weeks of September, then we could sit from Tuesday to Thursday night and sit for three full days.

Mr. Code: I just wondered if you would leave some time in between meetings, or would you have the meetings for a week?

The Chairman: When we call members from home to Ottawa to sit I think we should sit from morning to night on two or three consecutive days.

Mr. Code: Yes.

The Chairman: Would it be agreeable to members if we sit before the the House resumes that we call members on Tuesday and that we sit full days?

Mr. Howe: Would it be fair to say, Mr. Chairman, we know this happens in the provincial areas and has been happening for years, but in that area there is a special gratuity for members of Committees when they are brought in. Is this going to be carried out? Is this something new in government policy where Committees are being brought in there is going to be some additional assistance with regard to expenses?

The Chairman: I think this is a very valid point. This is done in Quebec and Ontario and other places too, but personally I am not in a position to reach any decision. If there is a request from the members of the Committee I could report this to the Clerk of the House and ask for a decision to be made. I think it is appropriate that special allowances be paid to members when they are asked to sit during the recess.

Mr. Howe: Would you require a motion to that effect, or a recommendation?

The Chairman: We do not need a motion because it is out of our jurisdiction. It is useless to have a motion. As the matter has been raised, I can assure you that I will report this to the Clerk of the House, to the House Leader and seek their decision on this. Mr. Portelance?

• 1205

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: Would you say that the Committee would sit and listen to the witnesses from August on or from mid-September only for the work that has to be done during the summer?

The Chairman: The witnesses would be heard starting from September.

Mr. Portelance: So this would mean that there would be no work to be done between, say, July the 15th and September the 15th?

The Chairman: Yes, the sub-Committee would have some work to do, preparation work, for instance, acquire the evidence, know what is happening elsewhere for proxy voting and absentee voting, for instance, which are the two most important questions that have to be discussed. As far as the age of voters is concerned, this is a matter of opinion or anyway a matter of general principle. We are for or against reducing the age of voters. Some people may have reasons for them, very obvious ones.

As far as absentee voting and procuration vote is to be decided, we rejected the principle of a permanent electoral list. But we said at the same time that there were means to modify or amend the Electoral Act to allow more people to vote and since there are proxy voting elsewhere, I think this would be integrated so we have proxy vote in certain cases, so that we have the greatest number of votes possible.

Mr. Portelance: Does it mean that a Committee of 5 could sit during July and August?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Portelance: In various provinces...

The Chairman: Yes in July, but maybe starting from August in various provinces.

Mr. Portelance: Starting in August?

The Chairman: Yes.

[English]

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, it would be preferred to sit in the provinces as well that have lowered the voting age...

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Howe: ...to get statistics on their experience with a younger group of voters who have been brought under the election act. I imagine those would be important statistics to have, how many of them are making use of the fact that the voting age has been lowered.

The Chairman: We already have the statistics about the opinions of the people in New Brunswick, where there was a referendum during the last provincial election and the people pronounced themselves two to one against lowering the voting age.

In Quebec they have lowered the age to 18, but perhaps you could ask Mr. Lesage what he thinks about it.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, what you have just indicated will require, will it require an additional resolution or additional motion...

[English]

... a special motion to put this into effect, or are we authorized by our terms of reference at the present time to travel and gather additional information?

The Chairman: No, we need a special order from the House to sit from place to place in Canada. I do need your authorization to table this request in the House and have it approved by the House.

Mr. Trudel: This has to be included in a form of report?

The Chairman: Yes.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Portelance: You've mentioned sitting in various places in Canada, would it not be required to visit other countries where certain data could be gathered.

[English]

The Chairman: I do not believe so. There has been a full report prepared by Mr. Castonguay about the voting systems established in democratic countries like our own. I believe perhaps we will not use it, but I think it is appropriate that we have the authority to sit from place to place in Canada. We may decide, for instance, to go to Saskatchewan to secure information about their permanent list or seek information in British Columbia and Ontario where they have a proxy voting system and in Quebec where they have reduced their voting age to 18. I think it is appropriate that we have this authority. If we can call witnesses here, we may decide not to go, but if we have this authority, we can go and secure information there as a Committee and hear witnesses on the spot. To secure the authority is not an indication that we will use it, but we will have it. If, for instance, Mr. Hamel has discussions with the Chief Electoral Officer of Ontario and Mr. Drouin in Quebec, and it is found more appropriate to go there and to seek evidence there, if we have the authority we may make a decision not to call again the Committee.

Mr. Thomas asked me if it would be interesting for the members to have the election acts of the other provinces distributed to members of the Committee. If we have to pay for them I would seek a motion for authority to get these documents for distribution to members.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, it would also be interesting to get election committee reports of standing committees of other provinces, and perhaps debates which might have taken place in the legislatures of other provinces on the question.

The Chairman: I am told that the Ontario and Nova Scotia legislatures have their own committees sitting and it might be important for us to meet with them. I am informed that some members of those committees wait until some decisions are made by us on some special issues.

Mr. Kaplan: You referred as well to a referendum in New Brunswick. There may well be interesting back-up material behind that referendum that would be of interest to the Committee, especially to those members from New Brunswick.

The Chairman: We have the statistics already, we have the questions that have been breached to the voters and we have the results. Yes, Mr. Trudel?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee be allowed to secure the Provincial Electoral Acts of the provinces concerned to help our present work.

[English]

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Howe: In the same connection Mr. Chairman, I do not know how the other members feel, but on other committees I have been on I have been weighted down with material, and briefs, and things like that, and I do not think there is a member of the Committee that has not felt that. I sometimes wonder whether there should not be some research assistance in connection with these committees to go through these elections acts and pick out areas that we should examine. I know I am not going to have time to read all these documents, and I doubt that many of the members will have time to go through them properly.

I can remember that a few years ago on the Drug Committee, for instance, we had an accountant and a legal adviser to assist the members and to direct them in the differences of opinion that had been arrived at. It was at tremendous assistance to that committee and in my estimation this one way in which the committee system is bogging down a bit. We are bogged down in the pile of material that is presented to us when we come to the committee meetings. Probably some of us are a little lazy, but I do know that it is well-nigh impossible, if you are a member of two committees, to keep up with all this stuff. Do you not find that yourself Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Definitely, yes. I agree, but on this question of the election system, I think among experts we could get a lot of good information from Mr. Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer, who has already secured a lot of information. I think he would be our best witness, because he is called to meet committees in different provinces to give them information about what he feels should be done.

• 1215

Mr. Howe: I think it is a point that should be considered. Probably in the whole committee system there should be more research assistance to the committee members, particularly when we are going to be discussing something that is not controversial. I do not think this is going to raise tremendous issues between parties; we are just trying to make the Elections Act more effective for the whole nation.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: If I may say so, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is one document which perhaps you may wish to have a look at, particularly the preamble. It is the first report of the Select Committee on Election Laws of Ontario. There is a copy of the proposed legislation and they give a broad outline of the changes they propose. This has not yet been approved by the Ontario legislature; it is the report of the committee which is still sitting.

As far as the other provinces are concerned, I quite agree with you that 90 per cent of the acts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are the same as ours. The important thing is to get the main features of these acts, particularly those features that differ from the federal act.

British Columbia, for instance, is the only province that has a permanent list and, having a permanent list, they have a whole system of absentee voting, so you might wish to have a look at this. I have a copy of the act but reading it does not have the same value as talking to people who are responsible for either administering the system or who are ruled by the system—namely, the candidates or the members of the B.C. legislature, and so on.

In Alberta at one time they had absentee voting within the context of a list prepared for each election the same as we have. They dropped the system in 1965 because, I understand, they had very serious problems.

Manitoba also had a restricted form of absentee voting for mariners and fishermen. They had an election yesterday, so it might be interesting to learn what the experience was and the extent of the use made by the electors of that system.

As the Chairman pointed out earlier, Ontario has had a system of proxy voting for years.

Nova Scotia has had proxy voting since 1960. It has had at least two elections on that system, but outside of that their acts do not differ much from ours.

In Quebec, of course, the main thing is the election expenses, although there are a few aspects which are now, by the way, copied by Ontario in that report. It might be interesting to speak with the people, and I am sure many members of the Committee already know the acts of these provinces.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I ask for a motion to table as exhibits, and distribute to members, the suggestions pertaining to the Canada Elections Act received by the Chief Electoral Officer since 1963, which are photostat copies of correspondence from people requesting changes in the Act. I think some of you have already received some of those photostat copies.

An hon. Member: We have not received any.

The Chairman: Not yet? These will be distributed among members. I ask for a formal motion to approve this.

Mr. Sullivan: I move that letters containing suggestions pertaining to the Canada Elections Act received by the Chief Electoral Officer since 1963 be accepted as an exhibit (Exhibit VI).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, do we have a motion empowering you to set up subcommittees to gather information during the summer? Do you have that now, or do you require it?

The Chairman: The only way in which we can operate is through this reduced quorum to hear evidence.

Mr. Jerome: That presupposes an actual meeting of the Committee with a smaller quorum, but what about having subcommittees?

The Chairman: Right now the only way to proceed is to call on members and say that we will sit at such and such a place, and if we are five or six we will hear evidence.

Mr. Jerome: But it is not possible for you as well to empower a subcommittee or two subcommittees to sit in different places at the same time?

• 1220

The Chairman: I think the steering committee already has power to sit anytime they please. We do not need any authority for that.

Mr. Jerome: I was just curious about whether, if you wanted, for example one part of the Committee to go to one place in the summer and one to another, you needed a special motion to that effect, or whether you feel that you have the power to do that already.

The Chairman: The only problem for the Chairman would be to get those members to be part of this subcommittee. It could be difficult for me to select members from among you for this subcommittee. I think it would be better if we relied on the steering committee system to make the decision; are there any other points you would like to have raised? Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: Before we adjourn, Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of points to bring up. If you are contemplating gathering some information during the summer there are two provinces that have been mentioned that would seem obvious points of interest for this Committee. Firstly, British Columbia because it has a permanent electoral list and, therefore, absentee voting and so on. Secondly, aside from the study that was done in Ontario, of course, there was some mention of changes in New Brunswick that might be interesting. I am not sure if I followed the discussion closely, but certainly Mr. Hamel noted some very, very great differences in the system in British Columbia which I think would be a point of very great interest to the Committee.

Mr. Hamel: The other place I mentioned was Saskatchewan where for four elections they had a form of absentee voting without a permanent list.

Mr. Jerome: That is right, without a permanent list.

Mr. Hamel: They dropped the system in 1965. Manitoba still has a form of absentee voting for a restricted group—a small group of electors—and then you have Ontario, of course, with this work here.

Mr. Howe: I move we adjourn.

The Chairman: Would you wait for just a few more minutes?

The Clerk has informed me that we need a motion from this Committee even if we receive the authority. This motion can be made in advance, dependent upon whether or not the authority is given by the House. May I have a motion that in the event we receive authority to sit from place to place in Canada, your steering committee is empowered to decide where we will go. By doing this we will not have to call the whole Committee for a decision. Would this be agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudel: If you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise one more point.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Trudel.

Mr. Trudel: Do we have a provision to replace a member of the Committee during the recess if this were necessary? Is there any provision that would enable the steering committee to do so?

The Chairman: This is the general rule.

Mr. Trudel: When the House is sitting there is no problem, but I wondered about when the House is not sitting which could cause a problem.

The Chairman: It could be done through the Clerk and the Whip's office.

Mr. Trudel: It will not cause any problem?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Trudel: That is fine. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The meeting is adjourned.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

First Session

Première session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1968-69

vingt-huitième législature, 1968-1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

COMITÉ PERMANENT

ON

DES

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 12

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1969—
QUEBEC, QUE.

LE MARDI 14 OCTOBRE 1969—
QUÉBEC, QUÉ.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1969—
HALIFAX, N.S.

LE MERCREDI 15 OCTOBRE 1969—
HALIFAX, N.-É.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1969—
FREDERICTON, N.B.

LE JEUDI 16 OCTOBRE 1969—
FREDERICTON, N.-B.

Canada Elections Act

La Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES

TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir les procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman
and Messrs.

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. James Jerome

Président
Vice-président
et MM.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
Carter¹,
Côté (Richelieu)²,
Forest,

Forrestall³,
Fortin,
Francis⁴,
Howard (Skeena),
Gibson⁵,
Lefebvre⁶,

Macquarrie⁷,
Marceau,
Murphy,
Paproski⁸,
Peddle,
Trudel—(20).

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),

¹Mr. Carter replaced Mr. Valade on October 10, 1969.

²Mr. Côté (Richelieu) replaced Mr. Sullivan on October 9, 1969.

³Mr. Forrestall replaced Mr. Thomas (Moncton) on October 10, 1969.

⁴Mr. Francis replaced Mr. Richard on October 9, 1969.

⁵Mr. Gibson replaced Mr. Kaplan on October 9, 1969.

⁶Mr. Lefebvre replaced Mr. MacGuigan on October 9, 1969.

⁷Mr. Macquarrie replaced Mr. Howe on September 2, 1969.

⁸Mr. Paproski replaced Mr. Code on October 10, 1969.

Suivant l'article 65(4)b) du Règlement,

¹M. Carter remplace M. Valade le 10 octobre 1969.

²M. Côté (Richelieu) remplace M. Sullivan le 9 octobre 1969.

³M. Forrestall remplace M. Thomas (Moncton) le 10 octobre 1969.

⁴M. Francis remplace M. Richard le 9 octobre 1969.

⁵M. Gibson remplace M. Kaplan le 9 octobre 1969.

⁶M. Lefebvre remplace M. MacGuigan le 9 octobre 1969.

⁷M. Macquarrie remplace M. Howe le 2 septembre 1969.

⁸M. Paproski remplace M. Code le 10 Octobre 1969.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, October 14, 1969.
(13)

[Text]

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met in camera this day at 11:00 a.m., in Quebec City, the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Paproski, Peddle (13).

Witness: Mr. François Drouin, Chief Returning Officer, Province of Quebec.

In attendance: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer of Canada; Mr. E. Giguère, Deputy Chief Returning Officer, Province of Quebec.

The Committee discussed the Canada Elections Act and the Election Act of the Province of Quebec.

At 12:45 p.m., the Committee adjourned to 2:30 p.m. this same day.

AFTERNOON SITTING (14)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met in camera this day at 2:40 p.m., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Carter, Forest, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Marquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (13).

Witness: Same as at morning sitting.

The Committee discussed the Canada Elections Act and the Election Act of the Province of Quebec.

PROCÈS-VERBAUX

Le MARDI 14 octobre 1969.
(13)

[Traduction]

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit à huis clos à 11 h. du matin dans la ville de Québec sous la présidence de M. Ovide Laflamme.

Députés présents: MM. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Paproski, Peddle (13).

Témoin: M. François Drouin, président général des élections de la province de Québec.

Aussi présents: M. J.-M. Hamel, directeur général des élections du Canada; M. E. Giguère, vice-président général des élections, province de Québec.

Le Comité entreprend l'étude de la Loi électorale du Canada et de la Loi électorale de la province de Québec.

A 12 h. 45 le Comité suspend ses travaux jusqu'à 14 h. 30.

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI (14)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit à huis clos à 14 h. 40 sous la présidence de M. Ovide Laflamme.

Députés présents: MM. Benjamin, Carter, Forest, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (13).

Témoin: M. François Drouin.

Le Comité poursuit l'étude de la Loi électorale du Canada et de la Loi électorale de la province de Québec.

A motion of Mr. Howard (Skeena), —“That at the adjournment of today’s meeting, the Committee return to Ottawa to reassess the procedure to be followed in receiving evidence” was negatived—

For 5; Against 6 (including the Chairman’s vote).

At 5:30 p.m., the Committee adjourned to 2:00 p.m. the next day following.

WEDNESDAY, October 15, 1969.
(15)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 2:00 p.m. in Halifax, N.S., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (12).

Witnesses: From the Province of Nova Scotia: Mr. I. C. McDermaid, former Chief Electoral Officer; Mr. H. F. Muggali, Deputy Provincial Secretary; Mr. A. J. Hickey, Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. J. R. McLennan, Deputy Returning Officer.

In attendance: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer of Canada.

The Committee questioned the witnesses concerning the Canada Elections Act and the Election Act of the Province of Nova Scotia.

At 4:12 p.m., the Committee adjourned to 1:00 p.m. the next day following.

THURSDAY, October 16, 1969.
(16)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 1:05 p.m. in Fredericton, N.B., the Chairman, Mr. Ovide Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard

M. Howard (Skeena) propose:
—Qu’après l’ajournement de la séance de ce jour, le Comité retourne à Ottawa afin de réévaluer la procédure à suivre lors de l’audience des témoins.

La motion est rejetée.

Pour, 5 voix; contre, 6 voix (y compris la voix du président).

A 17 h. 30 le Comité suspend la séance jusqu’à 14 h. le lendemain.

Le MERCREDI 15 octobre 1969.
(15)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit aujourd’hui à 14 h. à Halifax, Nouvelle-Écosse, sous la présidence de M. Ovide Laflamme.

Députés présents: MM. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (12).

Témoins: De la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse: M. I. C. McDermaid, ex-directeur général des élections, M. H. F. Muggali, sous-secrétaire de la province; M. A. J. Hickey, adjoint au directeur général des élections, M. J. R. McLennan, sous-directeur général des élections.

Aussi présent: M. J.-M. Hamel, directeur général des élections du Canada.

Le Comité pose des questions aux témoins en ce qui a trait à la Loi électorale du Canada et à la Loi électorale de la province de Nouvelle-Écosse.

A 16 h. 12 le Comité suspend sa séance jusqu’à 13 h. le lendemain.

Le JEUDI 16 octobre 1969.
(16)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit à 13 h. 05 à Fredericton, Nouveau-Brunswick, sous la présidence de M. Ovide Laflamme.

Députés présents: MM. Benjamin, Carter, Forrestall, Francis, Howard (Skeena), (Skeena), Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (12).

Witness: Mr. J. Donald Whalan, Chief Electoral Officer, Province of New Brunswick.

In attendance: Mr. J. Vaughn, M.L.A.; Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer of Canada.

The Committee questioned the witness concerning the Canada Elections Act and the Elections Act of the Province of New Brunswick.

Moved by Mr. Howard (Skeena), and Agreed,—That, with respect to this Committee's further visits, arrangements be made to give interested groups an opportunity to appear before the Committee.

At 3:07 p.m., the Committee adjourned.

Gibson, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau, Peddle (12).

Témoïn: M. J. Donald Whalan, directeur général des élections de la province du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Aussi présents: M. J. Vaughn, M.L.A.; M. J.-M. Hamel, directeur général des élections du Canada.

Le Comité questionne le témoin en ce qui a trait à la Loi électorale du Canada et à la Loi des élections de la province du Nouveau-Brunswick.

M. Howard (Skeena) propose et,

Il est convenu,—Que, en ce qui a trait aux prochaines visites du Comité, des arrangements soient pris afin de permettre aux groupements intéressés de venir témoigner devant le Comité.

Le Comité s'ajourne à 15 h. 07 de l'après-midi.

Le greffier du Comité,
Edouard Thomas,
Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Wednesday, October 15, 1969

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we have a quorum. Gentlemen from Nova Scotia, we appreciate your meeting with us this afternoon on the special subject of reviewing our own Elections Act. For the benefit of our members I would like to introduce our witnesses here this afternoon. To my right is Mr. MacDermaid, the former Chief Electoral Officer of the Province of Nova Scotia; next is Mr. Hickey, the Assistant Chief Electoral Officer; beside him is the Deputy Provincial Secretary, Mr. Muggah, and to his right is Mr. MacLellan, one of the returning officers of the Province of Nova Scotia.

I do not know if some of you, have any suggestions but I believe to begin it would be of great interest to us to discuss the differences between the existing Elections Act of Nova Scotia and the Canada Elections Act with regard to the fair application of a system of proxy voting. I think we should begin with this and I believe some of the witnesses would like to comment on the bill recently approved by the legislature of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacDermaid, have you any comments to make first?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Before Mr. MacDermaid begins could I ask one question relating to what we dealt with yesterday; namely, the cost of getting here and the value of our meetings as a committee to serve our purpose. Yesterday the Committee was advised, I think you said, that three, perhaps two, but in any event some, of the officials of the provincial electoral offices had refused to come to Ottawa which was partly the reason for our coming to the provinces. Could I ask whether Mr. MacDermaid or any of the other gentlemen was one of those to whom you referred who refused to come to Ottawa?

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mercredi 15 octobre 1969

Le président: Messieurs, nous avons quorum. Nous sommes très heureux de rencontrer des citoyens de la Nouvelle-Écosse pour discuter tout spécialement cet après-midi de la révision de notre Loi électorale. Pour le bénéfice de nos membres, j'aimerais présenter les témoins. Il s'agit à ma droite de M. MacDermaid, ancien président général des élections de la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse; le suivant, M. Hickey, président général adjoint des élections; à ses côtés, M. Muggah, sous-secrétaire provincial et à sa droite, M. MacLellan, un des directeurs du scrutin de la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

Je ne sais pas si vous avez quelques propositions à faire, mais en guise d'introduction, il serait dans notre intérêt de discuter des différences qui existent entre les Lois électorales actuelles de la Nouvelle-Écosse et la Loi électorale du Canada au sujet de la juste application d'un système de vote par procuration. C'est à mon avis cette question que nous devrions commencer à examiner et je crois que quelques témoins aimeraient apporter des commentaires sur le bill qui a été approuvé récemment par la législature de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

Monsieur MacDermaid, auriez-vous quelques commentaires à apporter en premier?

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Avant que monsieur MacDermaid ne présente son exposé, puis-je poser une question sur l'objet de notre discussion d'hier, à savoir les frais de notre voyage et l'utilité des réunions du comité. Hier, on a rapporté au comité que trois, peut-être deux, mais en tout cas quelques présidents généraux des élections avaient refusé de venir à Ottawa, ce qui explique notre présence dans les provinces. Puis-je vous demander si monsieur MacDermaid ou quelque autre personne présente a refusé de venir à Ottawa?

[Text]

The Chairman: I personally believe that is not an accurate question, Mr. Howard, and perhaps you could reserve these comments.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I will ask you then.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yesterday I think you said three chief electoral officers refused to come to Ottawa. You mentioned this partly in justification or in explanation of the expenditure we are making which is going to run to $9,000 or $10,000 just for this visit to the three provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Could I ask whether you received a negative response to the invitation to come to Ottawa from the Province of Nova Scotia?

The Chairman: We did not receive a negative response from any of the people here.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): All right, thank you.

Mr. I. M. MacDermaid (Former Chief Electoral Officer, Province of Nova Scotia): Mr. Chairman, I believe you all have in front of you the Elections Act of Nova Scotia originally passed in 1962. This Act resulted from the Royal Commission on Elections to study our election machinery and procedures. Basically our Act quite closely follows the federal act. We studied the various acts across Canada and introduced some new principles as the Chairman has mentioned, one of them being proxy voting. If you look at Section 93, this is the section that establishes proxy voting in our province. It is available for certain classes of electors, particularly fishermen, mariners, patients in hospitals, servicemen and unmarried students, and patients in nursing homes. These are people who may find it difficult to vote on election day and proxy voting was brought in with this limited class as a start. I might say that the ballots cast by proxy are cast on the same day as everybody else casts their ballots and they are counted in the same way and at the same time. Do you have any particular questions?

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes. Is there a limit to the number of proxies a person can walk into the polling booth with?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, you can only vote one proxy unless it is for a member of your household in which case you can vote more than one. If you take a look at paragraph (iv) of subsection (1) f Section 94, it says:

The proxy voter has not been previously appointed a proxy for any other elec-

[Interpretation]

Le président: Je ne crois pas que ce soit une question de bon goût, monsieur Howard, et il me semble que vous pourriez vous garder de passer de tels commentaires.

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, puis-je vous demander alors?

Le président: Faites.

M. Howard: Vous avez dit hier je crois que trois présidents généraux des élections avaient refusé de venir à Ottawa, pour expliquer en partie les dépenses de l'ordre de $9,000 ou $10,000 qu'entraîne notre déplacement au Québec, en Nouvelle-Écosse et au Nouveau-Brunswick. Puis-je vous demander monsieur le président, si vous avez reçu une réponse négative des témoins de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

Le président: Nous n'avons reçu de réponse négative d'aucun de ces messieurs.

M. Howard (Skeena): Très bien. Merci monsieur le président.

M. I. M. MacDermaid (ancien président général des élections, Nouvelle-Écosse): Vous avez tous sous les yeux la loi électorale de la Nouvelle-Écosse qui a été adoptée en 1962. Cette loi découle d'une Commission royale d'enquête qui a examiné les méthodes et procédures électorales. Notre loi suit de près la Loi fédérale. Nous avons étudié les différentes lois du Canada et y avons introduit quelques nouveaux principes, notamment le vote par procuration à l'article 93. Ce vote est offert à certaines catégories d'électeurs, en particulier les pêcheurs, les marins, les personnes hospitalisées, les membres des Forces armées et les étudiants célibataires et les malades dans les maisons de convalescence. Comme ces personnes peuvent difficilement voter le jour de l'élection, on a inauguré le vote par procuration. Je dois dire que le vote par procuration se fait le même jour que le vote ordinaire et que les votes sont comptés de la même manière et au même moment. Y a-t-il des questions bien précises à ce sujet?

M. Lefebvre: Y a-t-il un nombre limité de votes par procuration qu'une personne peut présenter au bureau de scrutin?

M. MacDermaid: Si vous avez la procuration d'un membre de votre famille, vous pouvez voter plus d'une fois. En examinant l'alinéa (iv) du paragraphe (1) de l'article 94, on remarque que le voteur par procuration n'a pas été nommé à ce titre pour un autre électeur, autre qu'un électeur qui est un tor, other than for an elector who is a child, grandchild, brother, sister, parent, grandparent, husband, or wife of the proxy voter.

[Texte]

So that is the only exception. You can just have the one proxy vote unless it is for a member of your household in which case you can vote more than one.

The Chairman: Mr. Francis?

Mr. Francis: No questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer, Government of Canada): I believe also that the proxy voter has to be on the same list.

Mr. MacDermaid: That is correct.

Mr. Forrestall: From the same polling division?

Mr. MacDermaid: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: This has been in operation how long, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MacDermaid: Since 1962 and I believe we have had two general elections since then.

Mr. Forrestall: Could you tell the Committee briefly what has been the experience of the province with regard to this proxy voting?

Mr. MacDermaid: Are you thinking of numbers, Mr. Forrestall?

Mr. Forrestall: I am thinking of numbers and the general applicability. Does it meet the purpose for which it was included in the Act? Has there been any difficulty with it? If so, what has been the nature of the difficulties?

Mr. MacDermaid: I do not know what earlier studies were done. I have not been with the government for five years. I know Mr. Hickey checked a couple of electoral districts this morning. In the last provincial election in the electoral district of Lunenburg Centre where most of our fishing fleet is located, there were some 60 persons who voted this way. In addition he took a look at Halifax-Cornwallis which is the south end of Halifax and mainly a residential area. There were some 20 people who voted by proxy there. I would take a guess that the number would be something like 3,000, perhaps, but that would require a detailed count from all of the poll books because this information does show up in the poll books.

[Interprétation]

enfant, petit-fils, frère, sœur, parent, grand-parent, mari ou épouse du voteur par procuration. Il s'agit vraiment de la seule exception. Vous ne pouvez voter par procuration que pour un membre de votre famille, et dans ce cas, vous pouvez voter plus d'une fois.

Le président: Monsieur Francis?

M. Francis: Aucune question, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Hamel.

M. J.-M. Hamel (Directeur général des élections): Je crois aussi que le voteur par procuration doit figurer sur la même liste.

M. MacDermaid: C'est juste.

M. Forrestall: Du même arrondissement de vote?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Depuis quand, monsieur le président?

M. MacDermaid: Depuis 1962. Nous avons eu deux élections générales depuis lors, je crois.

M. Forrestall: Pouvez-vous dire brièvement au Comité quelle expérience a connue votre province dans l'application de cet article de la loi?

M. MacDermaid: Pensez-vous au nombre?

M. Forrestall: Et aussi à l'application générale. Cette disposition répond-elle aux besoins qui l'ont vue naître? A-t-on rencontré des difficultés; dans le cas de l'affirmative, de quelle nature?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne connais pas les études précédentes dans ce domaine. Je ne suis pas fonctionnaire depuis 5 ans. Je sais que M. Hickey a vérifié une couple d'arrondissements électoraux ce matin. Aux dernières élections provinciales, dans le district de Lunenburg-Centre où se trouve la plus grande partie des flottes de pêche, 60 personnes ont voté de cette façon. Il a aussi examiné le quartier Halifax-Cornwallis, situé à la pointe sud de la ville. Il s'agit d'un quartier résidentiel. Environ 20 personnes ont voté par procuration. J'oserais dire qu'environ 3,000 personnes auraient voté par procuration, mais il faudrait un examen des livres de scrutin, car c'est vraiment le seul instrument de décompte.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: Has it been expensive to implement?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, the only actual expenses are the forms used in connection with the proxy voting.

Mr. Forrestall: Is it something that is now, or was, readily understood by the people?

Mr. MacDermaid: Certainly I have not run into any problems with it. Perhaps Mr. MacLellan who is the returning officer and has been right on the spot issuing these proxy papers could say whether there have been any difficulties in that regard.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if any of the other witnesses would care to comment on my brief questions because this is an area of concern to most of us.

Mr. J. R. MacLellan (Returning officer, Province of Nova Scotia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We had proxy voting in two provincial elections and in Halifax Needham, which is the north end of the City of Halifax we had approximately 25.

The Chairman: Mr. MacLellan, could you speak up a little louder.

Mr. MacLellan: More applications had been given out than that but a lot of them were not completed in time or did not have the proper signatures and did not qualify for voting. I would say in each election we had between 20 and 25.

Mr. Forrestall: In your riding?

Mr. MacLellan: A lot more application forms were given out.

Mr. Forrestall: Is there something wrong with the present form, do you think?

Mr. MacLellan: No, I think it serves the purpose. Sometimes the form has to be mailed to a voter to be signed and it is not back in time.

Mr. Forrestall: What is the form number, Mr. MacLellan? Do you know that?

Mr. MacLellan: Forms 39 and 40.

Mr. Forrestall: On what page is that?

Mr. MacDermaid: On page 148 is the appointment of proxy voter form and Form 40 is the actual proxy paper which the proxy

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que l'application de cette disposition a entraîné beaucoup de frais?

M. MacDermaid: Non, comme seules dépenses, il y a l'impression des bulletins de vote par procuration.

M. Forrestall: La population comprend-elle ou a-t-elle bien compris cette notion?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne me suis heurté à aucune difficulté. M. MacLellan, le directeur du scrutin qui s'est occupé de l'émission des bulletins de vote par procuration peut nous dire s'il a connu des difficultés?

M. Forrestall: Est-ce qu'un autre témoin pourrait nous donner des explications au sujet de cette question qui nous intéresse beaucoup.

M. J. R. MacLellan (Directeur du scrutin, Nouvelle-Écosse): Merci, monsieur le président. Il y a eu des votes par procuration, lors des deux élections provinciales. Dans Halifax-Needham, situé à l'extrémité nord de la ville d'Halifax, il y a eu environ 25 votes de ce genre.

Le président: Monsieur MacLellan, pourriez-vous parler un peu plus fort?

M. MacLellan: On a envoyé plus de formules, mais plusieurs d'entre elles n'ont pas été remplies à temps ou n'avaient pas les bonnes signatures, de sorte qu'elles ne répondaient pas aux exigences du vote. Dans chaque élection, il y en a eu entre 20 et 25.

M. Forrestall: Dans votre circonscription?

M. MacLellan: Mais nous avons envoyé un plus grand nombre de formules.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que la formule actuelle comporte des lacunes?

M. MacLellan: Non, je crois qu'elle répond à la situation. Quelquefois, la formule doit être envoyée à un voteur pour qu'il la signe, mais elle ne revient pas à temps.

M. Forrestall: Quel est le numéro de la formule M. MacLellan?

M. MacDermaid: Formule 40.

M. MacLellan: Formules 39 et 40.

M. Forrestall: A quelle page cela se trouve-t-il?

M. MacDermaid: A la page 148 se trouve la formule de la nomination du voteur par procuration et la formule 40 est en fait le docuvoter takes to the polling station.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: What is the weakness in this system? I gather from what you are saying that it is useful, that it does service something in the order of 3,000 people approximately. Has it been useful? What is wrong with the form if anything? Are there any plans to change or modify it?

Mr. MacDermid: Since it was brought in it was modified to include patients in nursing homes. That is the only modification that has been made.

Going back to Mr. MacLellan's remarks, there is one little problem with it. Sometimes a serviceman, if he is not in the province and does not have himself put on the list, cannot vote this way. In other words, he has to be put on the list first and that does create some problems. On the other hand I feel this is a matter that the army has not given us sufficient information on, which they attempt to do in each election.

Mr. Macquarrie: Why do students have to be unmarried because there are a great many married students today.

Mr. MacDermid: The reason is that under the laws of Nova Scotia an unmarried student is resident in his home town and not the university where he is, but he may not be home to vote. That is different from the federal Act as I understand it. In the federal Act I think he has a choice, he can vote at the university.

Mr. Macquarrie: But I am wondering why the fact that he was married would...

Mr. MacDermid: A different rule applies if he is married. He can vote at the university if he is married because his residence would be there.

Mr. Macquarrie: In Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacDermid: Yes. The unmarried student from Yarmouth who is at Dalhousie University under our rules is resident in Yarmouth. If the election is called while he is at Dalhousie in Halifax, he may have difficulties going home to vote but he can vote by proxy.

Mr. Macquarrie: I see. So if he is married he is a resident at the university and if he is single he is a resident at his home?

Mr. MacDermid: Right.

[Interprétation]

ment de procuration que le voteur apporte au bureau de scrutin.

M. Forrestall: Quelles sont les faiblesses du système? D'après ce que vous dites, environ 3,000 personnes ont pu voter par procuration? Le système a-t-il été utile? Qu'est-ce qui fait défaut dans la formule? Est-ce que vous avez l'intention de changer de formule ou de la modifier?

M. MacDermid: Depuis qu'on l'a adoptée, on l'a modifiée pour inclure les patients des maisons de convalescence, la seule fois en fait.

Pour revenir aux propos de M. MacLellan, il y a un petit problème à ce sujet. Parfois, un militaire qui n'est pas dans la province et qui n'est pas inscrit sur la liste électorale ne peut pas voter de cette façon-là. Il faut d'abord être inscrit sur la liste, c'est ce qui a entraîné certaines difficultés. D'autre part, cela provient du fait que l'année ne nous a pas fourni suffisamment de renseignements même s'ils essaient de le faire à chaque élection.

M. Macquarrie: Pourquoi les étudiants doivent-ils être célibataires? Il y a pourtant un grand nombre d'étudiants mariés de nos jours.

M. MacDermid: En vertu de la loi de la Nouvelle-Écosse, l'étudiant célibataire a comme lieu de résidence la ville qu'habite ses parents et non pas où se trouve l'université, mais il est possible qu'il ne soit pas à la maison. C'est différent par rapport à la loi fédérale. Dans la loi fédérale, je crois que l'étudiant peut choisir. Il peut voter là où il étudie.

M. Macquarrie: Mais je me demande pourquoi le fait d'être marié pourrait...

M. MacDermid: S'il est marié, il tombe sous le coup d'une autre loi. Il peut voter à l'université, parce que c'est son lieu de résidence.

M. Macquarrie: En Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. MacDermid: L'étudiant célibataire qui vient de Yarmouth étudie à l'université Dalhousie réside à nos yeux, à Yarmouth. S'il y a élection alors qu'il étudie à Halifax, il peut avoir des difficultés pour aller voter à Yarmouth, c'est pourquoi il peut voter par procuration.

M. Macquarrie: Je vois. S'il est marié, son domicile c'est l'université et s'il est célibataire, c'est le lieu de résidence de ses parents?

M. MacDermid: C'est cela.

[Text]

Mr. A. J. Hickey (Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, Province of Nova Scotia): I think, if I may intervene, Mr. Chairman, there was some attempt to get uniformity in the rules relating to residence as applied to hospital insurance, medical insurance and so on. The concept generally has been that the married student is resident at the place where he and his wife have their home, their household; whereas, the unmarried student who ordinarily is living at home inbetween university terms does not change his residence. He does not take up a permanent or even a semipermanent type of residence. It was partly an endeavour to get some uniformity in residence qualifications or requirements for all purposes so that you would not have residence in one place for purposes of hospital insurance and in another place for purposes of voting and so on.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter: I have only one or two questions. Perhaps Mr. MacDermaid can tell us if there is an advance poll here in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, very definitely. We changed that at the same time to say that anybody who expects to be absent from the polling division on election day could go to the advance poll by making a declaration to that effect.

Mr. Carter: I notice this proxy voting is aimed primarily at fishermen, I think, people who would be away from the polls on voting day, is it not?

Mr. MacDermaid: It is aimed primarily at people who will be away, right.

Mr. Carter: Would not the advance poll serve the same purpose?

Mr. MacDermaid: It might not. You might have somebody out fishing for a week. The advance poll in Nova Scotia is not that far advanced from polling day. It is the Friday and Saturday before polling day which is usually on Tuesday, the fourth and third days before. So if a fishing boat is out for a week the fishermen might miss the vote, or somebody in hospital and so on.

Mr. Carter: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I expressed concern yesterday about the Quebec system involving people in hospitals. While they do something about it, as a rule, federally, we do

[Interpretation]

M. A. J. Hickey (Président général adjoint des élections, Nouvelle-Écosse): Monsieur le président, on a cherché à uniformiser les dispositions régissant le domicile aux fins de l'assurance-hospitalisation, assurance médicale et autres. De façon générale, on accepte que l'étudiant marié réside à l'endroit où sa femme et lui-même habitent, tandis que l'étudiant célibataire a comme domicile la maison de ses parents. L'université ne représente pas pour lui un domicile permanent ni semi permanent. On a cherché à obtenir une certaine uniformité dans les dispositions relatives au domicile, aux fins de l'assurance-hospitalisation, de la votation et autres.

M. Macquarrie: D'accord, merci.

Le président: Monsieur Carter.

M. Carter: Est-ce qu'il y a un vote anticipé en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. MacDermaid: Oui. Nous avons tout changé en même temps. Aussi la personne qui prévoit s'absenter le jour des élections peut voter à l'avance en faisant une déclaration à cet effet.

M. Carter: J'ai remarqué que ce vote par procuration visait surtout les pêcheurs, enfin les personnes qui seraient absentes le jour de votation, n'est-ce pas?

M. MacDermaid: Cela vise surtout les personnes qui seront éloignées de leur lieu de résidence le jour des élections.

M. Carter: Est-ce que le bureau de scrutin anticipé ne servirait pas aux mêmes besoins?

M. MacDermaid: Non, un pêcheur peut s'absenter pendant une semaine. En Nouvelle-Écosse, le jour du scrutin anticipé se trouve le vendredi et le samedi, soit trois ou quatre jours avant le jour des élections qui ont toujours lieu le mardi. Si les pêcheurs sont partis en mer pour une semaine ou si quelqu'un est hospitalisé, ils ne pourraient pas voter.

M. Carter: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Jerome.

M. Jerome: Je me suis inquiété hier des personnes hospitalisées au Québec. Règle générale, au niveau fédéral, il n'y a pas de dispositions prévues pour les personnes hospitalinot have any provision for people in hospitals voting if they are confined. At least, let me say that I am not satisfied with the federal provisions for people in hospital. I note this section specifically includes patients in hospitals. I wonder if we hear about the experience of the province respecting the use of this section by people who are in hospitals and get some enlightenment on whether or not they have to be absolutely sure to be confined on the polling day or whether some time in advance is sufficient and things of that nature.

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: I am sorry, I am afraid I just do not know the experience with the hospitals in this regard.

Mr. Jerome: Does anybody have any idea of whether or not there has been very widespread use of this section in the last couple of elections for people in hospitals? Do you have the evidence or not?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, there would be some use.

Mr. Forrestall: I could confirm that there has been.

Mr. Jerome: There has been? It seems to be a very simple solution to the problem for people who are going to be in hospital.

Could I get some information, Mr. Chairman, about the approximate percentage of ballots cast by proxy in a general election.

Mr. MacDermaid: Roughly 406,000 names were on the list and 312,000 people voted.

Mr. Jerome: That is, 312,000 people voted by proxy?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, no, that is the total number.

Mr. Jerome: I am sorry, but you said something earlier about 3,000.

Mr. MacDermaid: I took a guess at 3,000.

Mr. Jerome: About 1 per cent of the total vote?

Mr. MacDermaid: I think Mr. Hickey probably could get that information for you if you require it.

Mr. Jerome: Would 1 per cent be a reasonably accurate guess?

Mr. MacDermaid: I would say probably 1 per cent.

Mr. Jerome: It operates, so far as you can say, fairly free of problems?

[Interprétation]

sées qui sont alitées. Permettez-moi au moins de dire que je ne suis pas satisfait des dispositions fédérales à leur sujet. J'ai remarqué que cet article de la Loi de la Nouvelle-Écosse comprend les patients hospitalisés. Est-ce que ces messieurs pourraient nous parler de l'application de cet article par les personnes hospitalisées et nous dire s'ils doivent être certains que la personne sera alitée le jour des élections ou s'il ne faut qu'un bref délai pour l'avertissement.

M. MacDermaid: Je ne connais pas les faits recueillis à propos du vote des personnes hospitalisées.

M. Jerome: Avez-vous une idée si cette décision a été bien utilisée lors des dernières élections par les patients des hôpitaux? En avez-vous la preuve?

M. MacLellan: Oui. On s'en serait servi.

M. Forrestall: Je puis confirmer que tel a été le cas.

M. Jerome: Oui? Ceci me semble une solution très simple pour les gens hospitalisés.

Puis-je obtenir un pourcentage approximatif du nombre de votes par procuration dans une élection générale?

M. MacDermaid: 406,000 personnes étaient inscrites sur la liste et 312,000 ont voté.

M. Jerome: 312,000 personnes ont voté par procuration?

M. MacDermaid: Non, il s'agit du total des votes.

M. Jerome: Je m'excuse, mais vous avez parlé plus tôt d'environ 3,000 personnes.

M. MacDermaid: Enfin, j'ai dit à peu près 3,000.

M. Jerome: Soit environ 1 p. 100 des votes.

M. MacDermaid: Je crois que M. Hickey pourrait vous procurer ces renseignements si vous le désirez.

M. Jerome: 1 p. 100 serait-il la proportion à peu près exacte?

M. MacDermaid: Je disais peut-être ce chiffre.

M. Jerome: Cela fonctionne pour ainsi dire sans difficulté?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: Certainly we did not encounter too many problems with it. There are seven offences in connection with it which pretty well tie up anything that anybody could do.

Mr. Jerome: I was concerned about the security, because certainly the form seemed to be simple enough and in comparison with other election regulations, fairly wide open. I was wondering about the enforcement of any penalties. Have there been any infractions or any prosecutions for infractions?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, no prosecutions that I am aware of at all.

Mr. Macquarrie: Have any of the potential voters encountered difficulties in that the period, I take it 15 days, was not sufficiently long? I wonder if it might not have a broader effect if it were more than 15 days?

Mr. MacDermaid: I am sorry.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am looking at 94(1). Do I take it that it is only in the last 15 days you can start working on a proxy certificate?

Mr. MacDermaid: The proxy voter has two weeks to get this from the returning officer.

Mr. Macquarrie: Would it not possibly give more opportunity if they had four weeks, say. I can think of young people going to the North or what have you.

Mr. MacDermaid: One of the problems is that we do not have the lists until that point so you do not know if these people are on the list and that is one of the requirements, that they must be on the list for the polling division.

Mr. Macquarrie: So your list is not ready until the fifteenth day before voting?

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

Mr. Macquarrie: Certainly you could not do otherwise.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I gather from looking through this that a person can choose anyone as a proxy.

Mr. MacDermaid: Anyone who is on this list.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, I mean anyone, related or not.

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermaid: Nous avons pour ainsi dire pas eu de difficulté. Il n'y a eu que sept délits reliés à ce vote.

M. Jerome: Je m'inquiétais au sujet de la sécurité parce que la formule semblait assez simple et par rapport à d'autres règlements assez larges. Je me demandais s'il y avait eu des peines ou poursuites pour toute infraction.

M. MacDermaid: Non, à ma connaissance, on n'a pas porté de plainte devant les tribunaux.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que des électeurs ont eu des difficultés, pour lesquels la période de 15 jours n'aurait pas été assez longue? Est-ce que les dispositions n'auraient pas plus d'effet si le délai était prolongé?

M. MacDermaid: Pardon.

M. Macquarrie: J'examine le paragraphe (1) de l'article 94(1).

En fait, y a-t-il seulement 15 jours pour décider d'obtenir un permis de vote par procuration?

M. MacDermaid: Le voteur par procuration a deux semaines pour se procurer le permis auprès du directeur du scrutin.

M. Macquarrie: Ne serait-il pas mieux qu'il y ait un délai de quatre semaines. Je pense aux jeunes qui se rendent dans le Nord ou autres?

M. MacDermaid: Nous n'avons pas la liste électorale avant ce moment. On ne sait donc pas si ces gens sont inscrits sur la liste électorale. Il s'agit là d'une exigence. Ils doivent figurer sur la liste pour l'arrondissement de votation.

M. Macquarrie: Votre liste n'est donc pas prête avant 15 jours avant le jour des élections?

M. MacDermaid: C'est cela.

M. Macquarrie: Vous ne pourriez sûrement pas faire autrement.

Le président: Monsieur Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): A la lumière de ces explications, une personne peut choisir n'importe qui pour voter par procuration.

M. MacDermaid: Toute personne qui figure sur la liste.

M. Howard: Oui, n'importe qui, qu'il soit parent ou non.

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Ontario, as I understand it, had, or has, a proxy voting system for mariners. I think it was confined to mariners. Did you look at the Ontario law?

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh, yes, very definitely. There are references to the Ontario provisions in this report of the Royal Commission.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Could I ask whether the system of enumeration for preparing the voters' lists is comparable to that contained in the federal Act?

Mr. MacDermaid: Actually we made quite a change in the preparation of voters' lists and it is a departure from the federal procedure. One of the reasons we did it was to cut down the length of time necessary to have an election. As a result, we can have an election here in 36 days and that includes preparing the lists. The change we made was that in urban areas we did not list the voters geographically, we listed them alphabetically, the same as we did formerly with the rural areas and as you do for rural areas. This had rather beneficial effects because it meant that we just had the one form which we used alphabetically. Also we cut out the revision that the registrars carried out in the rural areas and we left that up to the revising officers as was done in urban areas and this made quite a difference in the time necessary to prepare the lists.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Perhaps I will put in a little more detail what I am getting at. As I understand it, under our federal law there is no requirement that anybody discovers or determines before the person's name is put on the lists whether or not he is eligible to vote. There can be people on the voters lists who really are not in fact eligible to vote and this problem can be put to the test by a challenge on polling day. This is what I am trying to get at about the assuredness that the person who is in fact registered is an individual eligible to vote before he starts putting in proxies.

Mr. MacDermaid: You always encounter some difficulties because you have 2,000 enumerators and some of them may not be quite as perfect as other ones. The rules of residence are set right out in the face of this little book they fill in. In rural areas I cannot see where there would be a problem at all because everybody is known to everybody else. If somebody does get on the list that should not be on there, the parties can take

[Interprétation]

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Howard: Si je comprends bien, l'Ontario possède ou possédait un système de vote par procuration pour les marins. Avez-vous examiné la loi ontarienne?

M. MacDermaid: Oui. La Commission royale d'enquête fait allusion aux dispositions de l'Ontario dans son rapport.

M. Howard (Skeena): Le système d'énumération destinée à préparer la liste des électeurs est-elle comparable à la méthode contenue dans la loi fédérale?

M. MacDermaid: Nous avons apporté bien des changements à la préparation de la liste électorale. Cela nous a éloignés de la manière de procéder du gouvernement fédéral. Nous l'avons fait notamment pour supprimer le temps nécessaire pour une élection. Nous pouvons avoir ainsi une élection dans 36 jours avec la préparation de la liste. Dans les régions urbaines, nous n'avons pas énuméré les gens géographiquement, mais par ordre alphabétique comme ce que nous avons fait et ce que vous faites dans les régions rurales. Cela donne de bons résultats, car nous n'avons qu'une formule alphabétique. Nous avons également supprimé la révision du greffier dans les régions rurales et nous nous en sommes remis aux réviseurs comme cela se fait dans les régions urbaines. Cela change beaucoup le temps nécessaire à la préparation des listes électorales.

M. Howard (Skeena): Il voudrait peut-être mieux que je précise ce que je désire savoir. Dans le cadre de la loi fédérale actuelle, aucune disposition n'exige qu'une personne voit ou détermine avant que le nom de la personne soit inscrit sur la liste, si celle-ci a le droit de voter. Il est possible que le nom de certaines personnes figure sur la liste électorale et que cette personne n'ait pas le droit de voter. On peut toutefois le vérifier le jour de l'élection. J'aimerais m'assurer que la personne dont le nom est inscrit sur la liste électorale a le droit de voter avant qu'elle demande à voter par procuration.

M. MacDermaid: On rencontre toujours des difficultés car sur 2,000 énumérateurs, il s'en trouve toujours quelques-uns qui ne sont pas aussi parfaits que d'autres. Les règles de résidence sont établies en face de ce petit livret qu'ils remplissent. Dans les régions rurales, je ne puis voir où il y aurait des problèmes parce que tous les gens se connaissent. Si quelqu'un est inscrit par erreur sur une liste, les parties peuvent s'opposer auprès du révi-objection before the revising officer and if the objection is valid then have them struck off the list.

[Text]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, but in the sense of a person becoming registered then the system is comparable to the federal Act.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Apart from the preparation of the lists the actual process of a name getting on the list is comparable?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, it is exactly the same.

Mr. Jerome: Could I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman? Can you tell us something about the powers of scrutineers at the polls respecting proxy voting. Are they able to challenge the whole proxy system if they have any suspicion that there may be something amiss or require an oath to be taken in that regard?

Mr. MacDermaid: I will have to take a look at the Elections Act to give you the answer to that one.

Mr. Jerome: Because of the question Mr. Howard just raised, it occurs to me that the powers of the scrutineer in this regard, if they are not specifically spelled out in the Act, might be something worth considering.

Mr. MacDermaid: You are thinking more of challenging somebody on election day and saying that they are not qualified as a proxy voter.

Mr. Jerome: Exactly. I mean you can take an oath of the person who shows up now in most jurisdictions to say "I challenge your right to vote", and the person has to take an oath and say that he is the person and he is qualified and so on. I wonder if such a provision exists respecting proxies to be able to say "I challenge your right to vote as well by proxy" and require...

Mr. MacDermaid: No, there is no such provision. It might be worth considering.

Mr. Forrestall: The challenge has only to do with the representation of the individual that is before the clerk as to his name and the other qualifications set out for any ordinary elector. I do not know how you could establish challenge of a proxy. That is a communication between two other people, is it not?

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, we would expect that the parties would examine these docuseur et si l'objection est valable, on supprime le nom de ces personnes de la liste.

[Interpretation]

M. Howard: Pour la personne dont le nom figure sur la liste, il s'agit d'un système comparable à celui de la loi fédérale.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Howard: A part la préparation des listes, la méthode suivie pour inscrire le nom d'une personne sur une liste est comparable à celle de la loi fédérale.

M. MacDermaid: C'est exactement la même chose.

M. Jerome: Pourrais-je poser une question complémentaire, monsieur le président? Pourriez-vous nous parler du pouvoir des scrutateurs aux bureaux de scrutin au sujet des votes par procuration. Peuvent-ils mettre en doute la procuration s'ils soupçonnent quelque irrégularité ou peuvent-ils exiger que la personne prête serment?

M. MacDermaid: Je devrai consulter la Loi électorale pour vous répondre.

M. Jerome: La question de M. Howard me fait penser que si les pouvoirs du scrutateur à cet effet, s'ils ne sont pas précisés dans la Loi devraient faire l'objet d'une étude.

M. MacDermaid: Vous pensez plus à mettre en doute une personne le jour des élections et dire qu'elles ne remplissent pas les conditions d'un voteur par procuration.

M. Jerome: C'est cela. Vous pouvez assermenter la personne qui se présente en vertu de toutes les juridictions en mettant en doute le droit de vote de la personne. La personne doit être assermentée et dire qu'elle est véritablement cette personne, qu'elle a le droit de voter et ainsi de suite. Je me demande si une disposition de la loi prévoit la mise en doute possible d'un voteur par procuration...

Mr. MacDermaid: Il n'existe aucune disposition de ce genre. Il serait bon d'examiner cette question.

M. Forrestall: On ne peut que mettre en doute le nom et les qualités de la personne qui se présente devant le greffier. Je ne sais pas comment vous pourriez établir la contestation de la procuration. Il s'agit d'une communication entre deux autres personnes, n'est-ce pas?

M. MacDermaid: Nous pensons que les intéressés examineraient les documents au quar-ments at the returning officers' headquarters during the period that he is issuing them because they are on public display at that time.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Francis.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, how late can a proxy certificate be issued prior to actual voting? I no ice there is a reference here to the Saturday before voting day. What is the ordinary voting day?

Mr. MacDermaid: Tuesday. That is the third day before ordinary polling day.

Mr. Francis: Now, that is the absolute limit of the issuing, and these proxy certificates must be retained by the deputy returning officer, is it, or by the returning officer?

Mr. MacDermaid: They are in the returning officers possession from the fifteenth day before election day until the third day.

Mr. Francis: I am trying to think of a process by which a party, say a political party, had reason to be concerned about the number of proxies that might be issued. I am thinking again of the hospital problem in particular, because the number of patients in hospitals who lose votes on election day is a concern to all of us. Where could a political party go to inspect the proxy certificates? There is a section of your Act here, which is Section 95(b), apparently dealing with it. Does this mean that he could go to the office of the returning officer for that riding, for that constituency, and be able to see in one place all the proxy certificates that have been issued?

Mr. MacDermaid: For that electoral district.

Mr. Francis: And they would have to make their checks up until the Saturday night.

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

Mr. Francis: Then, let us look at the situation with people in hospitals, who are in fairly substantial numbers and who are disfranchised every federal election, which gives us concern. There would be, I would think, in any particular day in the province many more than 3,000 patients, otherwise eligible to vote, in hospitals. Would there not?

Mr. MacDermaid: There would be approximately 3,500 people in hospital in Nova Scotia at any one time.

Mr. Francis: And the overwhelming majority of these would presumably be qualified to vote, I would think—otherwise qualified.

[Interprétation]

tier-général des officiers rapporteurs au moment de la délivrance, parce que les documents sont affichés à ce moment-là.

Le président: Monsieur Francis.

M. Francis: A quel moment, avant le vote, peut-on délivrer un certificat de procuration? Je vois qu'on fait allusion ici au samedi avant le jour du vote. Quel est le jour normal de vote?

M. MacDermaid: Mardi. Le troisième jour avant le vote.

M. Francis: Ce serait la limite absolue de la délivrance, et ces certificats doivent être conservés par le sous-officier rapporteur, ou l'officier rapporteur?

M. MacDermaid: Les officiers rapporteurs les gardent du quinzième jour, avant les élections jusqu'au troisième jour.

M. Francis: Je songe à un procédé par lequel un parti, disons un parti politique, aurait des raisons d'être préoccupé par le nombre des certificats de délégation de pouvoir qui serait émis. Je pense encore au problème des hôpitaux en particulier, parce que le nombre de patients qui perdent des votes le jour des élections nous préoccupe tous. Où un parti politique pourrait-il s'adresser pour inspecter les certificats. Je vois ici l'article 95 b) de votre loi qui en traite. Cela veut-il dire qu'il pourrait s'adresser au bureau de l'officier rapporteur de cette circonscription et voir en un seul endroit tous les certificats qui ont été délivrés?

M. MacDermaid: Pour ce district électoral.

M. Francis: Et ils devraient faire leur vérification jusqu'au samedi soir.

M. MacDermaid: Exactement.

M. Francis: Maintenant, pour les malades dans les hôpitaux qui sont passablement nombreux, et qui perdent leur droit de vote à chaque élection fédérale. Je pense qu'il y aurait bien davantage que 3,000 malades dans les hôpitaux de la province, qui autrement pourraient voter, n'est-ce pas?

M. MacDermaid: Environ 3,500 hospitalisés en Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. Francis: Et la grande majorité de ces personnes auraient vraisemblablement les qualités voulues pour voter.

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, I wonder if the reason might be that the people who are actually using this are the people who are incapacitated, not the people who are in only for an appendix operation or something like that and can vote right in the hospital.

Mr. Francis: This is the next question, then, and it is possibly my misunderstanding of your Act. Is there usually a place to vote in a general hospital? Normally, in federal elections there would not be a place to vote in a general hospital; there would be in a T.B. sanatorium or possibly a mental wing, an active treatment section of a mental wing, where there are stays of long duration. But we would not normally have a polling booth in an acute hospital. Is it your practice to have them there?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, we do, and also, voting may be suspended during election day and the ballot box taken to bedside.

Mr. Francis: That, Mr. Chairman, opens up another section which will be of interest, I am sure, to the Committee. But I feel I have pursued the proxy voting regulations quite enough for now, for which I want to thank you.

Mr. MacDermaid: You are welcome.

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome.

Mr. Jerome: I will not carry this on if we are going to discuss this business of hospital voting later, but if this is the last time we are going to cover it I would like to get the run down on this business of voting in hospitals. I do not know what the will of the Committee is.

Mr. Francis: I would think other members would be interested in this section of the Act.

Mr. Jerome: One subject that has been raised is the ability of the patient to vote in hospital, and it would appear to me that it is possible for people in hospital to vote notwithstanding the fact that they are there from several different constituencies at the same time. I am interested to know whether or not that is in fact the case in Nova Scotia and if it is, how it is done.

Mr. MacDermaid: How is it done? It is done by making them residents at the institution if they have been there for a certain length of time.

Mr. Francis: At what date?

Mr. MacDermaid: Ten days preceding the date of the writ.

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermaid: Je me demande si la raison est que les personnes sont des invalides et non pas des gens qui sont là simplement pour se faire enlever l'appendice, par exemple, et qui peuvent voter à l'hôpital.

M. Francis: Voici ma prochaine question. Est-ce que d'habitude il y a un endroit où les gens peuvent voter dans un hôpital général? D'habitude, pour les élections fédérales, il n'y a pas d'endroit où les gens peuvent voter. Il y en aurait dans un sanatorium ou dans un hôpital psychiatrique où les gens restent très longtemps. Mais, d'habitude, nous n'avons pas d'urne dans un hôpital. Est-ce que vous en avez généralement?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, et aussi on suspend les votes le jour des élections et on amène les urnes de scrutin au lit des malades.

M. Francis: Voilà, monsieur le président, qui ouvre un autre article qui, j'en suis sûr intéressera le Comité. Mais je crois m'être suffisamment étendu sur la question des règlements pour l'instant, et je vous remercie.

M. MacDermaid: Vous êtes le bienvenu.

Le président: Monsieur Jerome.

M. Jerome: Si nous discutons cette question du vote à l'hôpital plus tard, je n'y reviendrais pas, mais si c'est la dernière fois que nous abordons la question, j'aimerais en parler. Qu'en pense le Comité?

M. Francis: Je pense que d'autres députés sont intéressés par cet article de la loi.

M. Jerome: Une question qui a été soulevée est la possibilité pour les hospitalisés de voter à l'hôpital, et il me semble qu'ils pourraient voter bien qu'ils viennent de circonscriptions différentes. J'aimerais savoir si c'est la situation en Nouvelle-Écosse et comment cela se fait.

M. MacDermaid: Comment ce vote se fait? Parce que l'institution devient la résidence de l'hospitalisé, s'il a été là pendant un certain temps.

M. Francis: A quelle date?

M. MacDermaid: Dix jours avant l'ordonnance.

[Texte]

Mr. Francis: So, if they are resident in an acute hospital and they are admitted ten days preceding the issuance of the writ, that would be their place of enumeration and place of voting, even if they are returned to their constituency between that time and voting day. Is that right?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, as a matter of fact we had to put in an amendment to cover the point that you are making, that if they go home in the meantime, they can vote at home. That is Section 28 subsection (2).

Mr. Francis: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, for anticipating. It may not be the wish of the Committee to go into it, but I find that the proxy section leads into one that gives me concern, and that is the right to vote in hospital. I am particularly interested in the provisions here.

The Chairman: These are really related subjects.

Mr. Francis: As long as the members of the Committee do not think I am abusing in pursuing this.

Mr. MacDermaid: Under Section 28(2A) it says that if the person mentioned in the two foregoing subsections returns home to his ordinary residence after the date of the writ, then he can vote there.

Mr. Francis: Then he would have to be stricken off the list of those in hospital otherwise eligible to vote. Is that right? Is there a provision to strike off?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, there is not.

Mr. Forrestall: There is provision for application on the part of a third party, I think, to have names struck off, but whether it is applicable I do not know. Does the Act deny that to the enumerated people in a poll located in an institution or a hospital?

Mr. MacDermaid: I am not quite sure how it would work.

Mr. Francis: Is it an advanced poll for the hospital?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, not especially for the hospitals. There are usually one, two, or three advanced polls for each electoral district.

Mr. Francis: That is conceivably one solution to the problem of the voter enumerated in hospital and discharged prior to election day. They could vote in the advanced poll for the hospital on that list, or they could vote in their own constituency. There would be many choices apparently open to them.

[Interprétation]

M. Francis: Donc, s'ils résident à l'hôpital et qu'ils sont admis dix jours avant l'ordonnance, l'hôpital deviendrait leur lieu de résidence, même s'ils retournent dans leur circonscription entre-temps?

M. MacDermaid: Non, s'ils rentrent à la maison entre-temps, ils peuvent voter à la maison. Nous avons fait une modification. Voyez l'article 28, paragraphe 2).

M. Francis: Je regrette d'anticiper, mais il me semble que l'article sur la procuration m'entraîne à parler du droit de voter à l'hôpital. Ces dispositions m'intéressent tout particulièrement.

Le président: Ce sont des sujets connexes.

M. Francis: Du moment que les membres du Comité ne croient pas que j'abuse si je continue dans cette voie.

M. MacDermaid: En vertu de l'article 28 (2a), il est dit que si la personne citée dans les deux paragraphes suivants retourne chez elle après la date de l'ordonnance, elle peut voter dans sa circonscription.

M. Francis: Elle serait donc radiée de la liste de ceux qui sont hospitalisés et qui auraient le droit de voter. Est-ce exact? Y a-t-il une disposition qui prévoit la radiation?

M. MacDermaid: Non.

M. Forrestall: Il y a une disposition prévoyant l'application, de la part d'un tiers parti, de la radiation des noms, mais j'ignore si elle s'applique. La loi nie-t-elle cela aux gens inscrits à un bureau situé dans une institution ou un hôpital?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne sais au juste comment cela fonctionnerait.

M. Francis: S'agit-il d'un vote anticipé pour l'hôpital?

M. MacDermaid: Non, pas spécialement pour les hôpitaux. Il y a généralement un, deux ou trois pour chaque district électoral.

M. Francis: Il y a sans doute une solution au problème du votant inscrit à l'hôpital et libéré avant le jour de l'élection. Il peut voter au scrutin anticipé pour l'hôpital, ou voter dans sa propre circonscription. Il semble bien que beaucoup de choix s'offrent à lui.

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, they would certainly have to get up and leave the hospital to cast their advanced votes...

Mr. Francis: Yes.

Mr. MacDermaid: ...but if they are still in hospital that day, it would be getting pretty close to election day.

Mr. Francis: But the average stay in a hospital, in an acute general hospital, is what, about 10 or 12 days? This would be the average length of stay. I know there is a gentleman here who has worked in hospital positions, whom I have known in another capacity, but it seems to me that this is not an academic kind of problem; it would be a situation involving a very substantial number of those enumerated in hospital that far in advance of the voting day. I would say that the majority of patients in any acute treatment institution would be discharged prior to election day.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, well, the revising officer, of course, can strike off his name if he is made aware of the fact that he is on the list and no longer resident there.

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre?

Mr. Lefebvre: If I understand your explanations correctly, if the person is in hospital ten days prior to the declaration of the election, you have a choice. He may get out of hospital before election day; he could end up walking into the polling booth in his own proper poll; he could vote by proxy from the hospital or he could vote right in his bedroom in the hospital. I mean, there is no way a hospital patient can have his vote removed in Nova Scotia. In other words, he cannot miss.

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, it is pretty hard to miss.

Mr. Lefebvre: You have covered just about everything. But from the experience you have had, have you had any complaints about attempts at voting twice or any of these things?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, the only complaints I had were under that offences section. I am going back to proxy voting. I am sorry I am slipping back.

Mr. Lefebvre: yes.

Mr. MacDermaid: We added three more offences there to our original section, which are things that cropped up during one of the elections, people signing these proxy certificates in blank and things like that.

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermaid: Oui, il doit pouvoir quitter l'hôpital pour voter à l'avance . . .

M. Francis: Oui.

M. MacDermaid: . . . mais s'il est encore à l'hôpital ce jour-là. Il serait très près du jour des élections.

M. Francis: Mais la moyenne d'un séjour à l'hôpital général est de 10 ou 12 jours. Je connais un monsieur ici qui a travaillé dans les hôpitaux, et que j'ai connu ailleurs, mais à mon avis ce n'est pas une question hypothétique. C'est une situation qui porte sur un nombre très considérable de gens inscrits dans les hôpitaux avant le jour du scrutin. Je dirais que la majorité des patients dans les hôpitaux de traitement actif peuvent être libérés avant les élections.

M. MacDermaid: Naturellement, le responsable peut radier son nom de la liste s'il sait qu'il est sur la liste et qu'il ne réside plus là.

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre?

M. Lefebvre: Si je vous comprends bien, si la personne est à l'hôpital dix jours avant la déclaration de l'élection, il peut y avoir un choix. Il peut sortir de l'hôpital avant le jour de l'élection, il peut marcher pour se rendre à un bureau de vote, voter par procuration ou alors voter depuis son lit à l'hôpital. Un patient ne peut absolument pas perdre son droit de vote en Nouvelle-Écosse. Autrement dit, il ne peut manquer son coup.

M. MacDermaid: Ce serait difficile.

M. Lefebvre: Vous avez abordé à peu près tout. Mais d'après votre expérience, avez-vous eu des plaintes concernant des tentatives de voter deux fois?

M. MacDermaid: Non, les seules plaintes ont été sur les délits. Je retourne au vote par procuration. Excusez-moi.

M. Lefebvre: Oui.

M. MacDermaid: Nous avons ajouté trois nouveaux délits à l'article d'origine qui se sont révélés au cours d'une élection, des gens qui signaient un certificat de procuration en blanc et autres choses analogues.

[Texte]

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes. If I understood you correctly, also on proxies, now that you mention it, all the proxies that have been sent in to the returning officer in one voting county or electoral district are in his office from—what time did you say? Fifteen days before the election?

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

Mr. Lefebvre: Until the third day before.

Mr. MacDermaid: Right

Mr. Lefebvre: Now where do they go?

Mr. MacDermaid: He still maintains those, but he sends a copy along to the deputy returning officer at the poll where the elector appears on the list as well.

Mr. Lefebvre: But I as a candidate, or my agent, could go to the returning officer's office and ask to see the total number of proxy forms that have been officially filled in for my riding.

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

Mr. Lefebvre: And after the third day before the election, when are they cut off again?

Mr. MacDermaid: They are cut off that third day before the election.

Mr. Lefebvre: So if I want to see the complete list, I would have to make sure I would see it that third day before the election.

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

An hon. Member: I think you could see them at any time.

Mr. Lefebvre: No, but what I am getting at is, how do I know? Supposing I am a scrutineer or a poll clerk. Do I ask for identification for every fellow who comes in to vote by proxy?

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, a copy of it has gone to the poll.

Mr. Lefebvre: But I cannot challenge him at the polling station.

Mr. MacDermaid: No, not unless you challenge him for some other reason, that he is not qualified or something like that.

Mr. Macquarrie: On Mr. Francis' point, could I ask for your practice in reference to these hospitals? I see that your Act does use the expression "chronic hospital" in Section

[Interprétation]

M. Lefebvre: Oui. Si j'ai bien compris, à propos de la procuration, toutes les procurations qui ont été envoyées à l'officier rapporteur dans un district électoral sont à son bureau—15 jours avant les élections, avez-vous dit?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

M. Lefebvre: Jusqu'au troisième jour avant?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

M. Lefebvre: Où sont-elles envoyées après?

M. MacDermaid: Il les garde, mais il en envoie une copie au sous-officier rapporteur du bureau sur la litse duquel le commettant figure.

M. Lefebvre: Mais moi-même, en tant que candidat, ou mon agent pouvons demander au bureau de l'officier rapporteur de voir le nombre total des formules de procuration qui ont été officiellement remplies dans ma circonscription.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Et après le troisième jour avant les élections, on les arrête?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Si je veux voir la liste complète je dois la voir ce troisième jour avant les élections?

M. MacDermaid: C'est juste.

Une voix: Je crois que vous pourrez les voir n'importe quand.

M. Lefebvre: Non, mais ce que je veux dire, c'est comment puis-je le savoir? A supposer que je sois scrutateur ou énumérateur, est-ce que je demande une pièce d'identité à toute personne qui vient voter par procuration?

M. MacDermaid: Une copie a été envoyée au bureau de votation.

M. Lefebvre: Je ne peux pas le contester au bureau de votation.

M. MacDermaid: Non, à moins que ce soit pour d'autres raisons, parce qu'il ne remplit pas les conditions voulues etc....

M. Macquarrie: A propos de la question de M. Francis, que faites-vous pour ces hôpitaux. Je vois que dans la loi, vous avez l'expression «hôpitaux de malades chroniques», à l'article

[Text]

28(2). Would that include the Victoria General Hospital?

Mr. MacDermaid: I am sorry, was your question: could a poll be in the Victoria General Hospital?

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Mr. MacDermaid: The answer is yes. What you are looking at here is the question of establishing residence.

Mr. Macquarrie: You would have a poll in the Victoria General, and it would be regarding these people as chronic hospital patients. Now, I see you are getting them through the proxy, but I was wondering if you were getting them in a different way through the hospitals, as Mr. Francis was pursuing.

Mr. MacDermaid: This residence rule does make reference to chronic hospitals and I would think that Victoria General would come within that definition.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am no expert on what is acute and what is chronic, but it would look unlikely.

An hon. Member: I would say that the Victoria General is not a chronic hospital; it is an active treatment hospital.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if there have been any representations, and from whom and to what extent, from others than those who are now eligible to cast proxy votes. Has there been any sort of pressure develop for other groups to be included?

Mr. MacDermaid: Certainly while I was Chief Electoral Officer there was no suggestion from anybody that we expand the classes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): For arguments sake, apart from fishermen you do not have an economic situation that has workers migrating or transient to any large extent then, or do you?

Mr. MacDermaid: Nothing that has come to our attention. Certainly the royal commission suggested that this class could be expanded if it worked out okay.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Thank you.

An hon. Member: The fishermen seem to be the ones most interested.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am thinking of course—and I am very partial to this idea,

[Interpretation]

28(2). Est-ce que ceci inclut le Victoria General Hospital?

M. MacDermaid: Voulez-vous savoir s'il pourrait y avoir un bureau à cet hôpital?

M. Macquarrie: Oui.

M. MacDermaid: La réponse est oui. Ce que vous examinez ici est la question de la résidence.

M. Macquarrie: Vous auriez un bureau de votation au Victoria General Hospital et il viserait ces patients en tant que malades chroniques. Je vois qu'ils peuvent voter par procuration, mais est-ce qu'ils peuvent voter autrement, comme M. Francis vous l'a demandé?

M. MacDermaid: La règle concernant la résidence s'applique aux hôpitaux de malades chroniques et je pense que cela s'applique à l'hôpital Victoria.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne sais pas exactement faire la différence entre une maladie aiguë ou une maladie chronique, mais cela semble improbable.

Une voix: L'hôpital Victoria est plutôt un hôpital de traitement actif.

Le président: Monsieur Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je me demande s'il y a eu des démarches, de qui et dans quelle mesure, émanant d'autres personnes que celles qui peuvent maintenant voter par procuration. Est-ce qu'il y a eu des pressions pour inclure d'autres groupes?

M. MacDermaid: Lorsque j'étais Directeur général des élections, personne n'a demandé qu'on augmente les catégories.

M. Howard (Skeena): A part les pêcheurs, vous n'avez pas de situation économique qui fait que les travailleurs sont très mobiles?

M. MacDermaid: Pas que nous sachions. La Commission royale disait que cette classe pouvait être agrandie si tout marchait bien.

M. Howard (Skeena): Merci.

Une voix: Les pêcheurs semblent être ceux qui sont les plus intéressés.

M. Howard (Skeena): Cette idée me touche tout particulièrement, mais je crois que si this concept—that if we apply it at the federal level then we are involved all across Canada with all sorts of economic situations and movements of people that may not be applicable in any particular part of the country. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Gibson.

Mr. Gibson: Concerning eligible people, Section 28(4) provides that:

where a person is serving on full time service with the Naval, Army or Air Forces of Canada, he is ordinarily resident on the date of the writ.

And there are the provisions of subsections (4) (a) and (4) (b). I am wondering whether there is any reason why people serving in the Department of External Affairs or at the United Nations and other fairly fixed and determinable areas where Nova Scotians reside, could not be included under this provision.

Mr. MacDermaid: Certainly I have never heard any suggestion of that either, but there is always the possibility.

Mr. Gibson: I noticed at the United Nations that the officials there were very resentful if they did not have a federal vote, and it seemed to me particularly applicable that Nova Scotians should have their vote as well. I thought I would draw that out.

Mr. MacDermaid: At least with the serviceman you have him tied down if he has made a declaration under the rules, which you would not have with your chap of External Affairs.

Mr. Gibson: Of course, some of these people have been in the service for many years. I was thinking of those cases.

Mr. MacDermaid: That would certainly be something for the government to consider.

Mr. Gibson: One other point comes to mind. You have provided very well, it seems to me, for people in hospitals. Would it be stretching things too far to cover people who are aged or infirm and unable to walk to the polls? Can they be covered in some way? There are many thousands of these people.

Mr. MacDermaid: We do have one provision here that there must be one polling station within the electoral district that must provide easy access for people in wheelchairs and this type of thing. That is in Section 84.

Mr. Gibson: But let us face it: there are many thousands of people who just nous l'appliquons au niveau fédéral, nous nous attaquons alors, dans tout le Canada, à toutes sortes de situations économiques et à une mobilité de main d'œuvre qui peuvent ne s'appliquer à aucune région du pays. Merci, monsieur le président.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur Gibson.

Mr. Gibson: A propos des personnes admissibles, l'article 28 4) stipule que: lorsqu'une personne sert à plein temps dans les forces armées, la marine ou l'aviation du Canada, elle est d'ordinaire résidente le jour de l'ordonnance. Il y a aussi les dispositions des paragraphes 4) a) et 4) b). Pourquoi les personnes travaillant au ministère des Affaires extérieures ou aux Nations Unies et qui ont un domicile relativement stable ne pourraient-elles pas être incluses dans ces dispositions?

Mr. MacDermaid: Personne n'en a jamais parlé, mais c'est une possibilité.

Mr. Gibson: J'ai remarqué aux Nations Unies que les hauts fonctionnaires avaient des sentiments très amers du fait qu'ils n'avaient pas le droit de vote, et il m'a paru tout à fait approprié que les habitants de la Nouvelle-Écosse devraient aussi avoir le droit de voter.

Mr. MacDermaid: Du moins avec le militaire, s'il a fait une déclaration en vertu des règlements, il est prisonnier, ce qui n'est pas le cas pour un membre du corps diplomatique.

Mr. Gibson: Naturellement, certains d'entre eux ont été dans le service pendant de nombreuses années. C'est à eux que je pensais.

Mr. MacDermaid: Le gouvernement devrait certainement étudier cela.

Mr. Gibson: Une autre question. Vous avez très bien prévu toutes les conditions pour les hospitalisés. Est-ce que vous ne pourriez pas aller plus loin et inclure les vieillards et les infirmes, ceux qui ne peuvent pas marcher jusqu'au bureau de votation? Est-ce que vous ne pouvez pas prévoir quelque chose pour eux? Il y a des milliers de ces gens.

Mr. MacDermaid: Nous avons prévu qu'il doit y avoir un bureau de votation dans chaque district électoral qui doit permettre un accès facile aux paraplégiques. Il s'agit de l'article 84.

Mr. Gibson: Regardons les choses en face: il y a bien des milliers de personnes qui ne cannot go to the polls, and if we could trust our system well enough—I think the average Canadian is a straight shooter, and Nova Scotians too—is it not possible that we should explore that and take another step?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: Also, we do have a provision for people who are infirm to transfer to another polling division. Those are the two things that we do have, but that is not as broad as you are suggesting.

Mr. Lefebvre: A supplementary question. Do you mean people who are confined to a wheelchair, say. Even if they are in poll number 30 but they have to go up five steps, you would transfer them to a polling station which had an easy access for a wheelchair?

Mr. MacDermaid: Right, and give them a transfer certificate to accomplish this transfer.

Mr. Lefebvre: But probably it would mean an expense for those people. I am thinking of my riding which is a couple of hundred miles long. If they had to travel 100 miles to get to that particular polling booth, this would add quite a bit of expense to their right to vote.

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, it is up to the returning officer in each electoral district to have one or more.

Mr. Lefebvre: One or more.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes. So if he knows of a particular situation, he can certainly have more than one. And these are very well advertised as well.

Mr. Lefebvre: Do you have these polling booths in the homes for the aged also?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: If you had 100 old people in a home, would they have a polling booth right there?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

The Chairman: When are the proxy votes registered, counted?

Mr. MacDermaid: They are counted on the same day as the rest of the votes. In other words, on election night.

The Chairman: Does this delay the final results?

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh, no, it does not affect the final result and there is no delay at all; they are counted at the same time.

[Interpretation]

peuvent aller voter et, si nous pouvons avoir suffisamment confiance en notre système—je crois que le Canadien moyen et l'habitant de la Nouvelle-Écosse sont des gens directs—ne pourrait-on pas étudier cela et prendre d'autres mesures?

M. MacDermaid: Nous avons aussi une disposition concernant les infirmes pour les transférer à un autre bureau de votation. Ce sont les deux choses que nous devons faire, mais ce n'est pas aussi vaste que vous le suggérez.

M. Lefebvre: Une question supplémentaire. Voulez-vous dire, par exemple, un paraplégique? Même s'il vote au bureau 30, mais qu'il doit monter cinq marches, vous le transféreriez à un autre bureau où il est plus facile à un paraplégique de pénétrer?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, et nous lui donnerions un certificat de transfert à cette fin.

M. Lefebvre: Mais ceci impliquerait sans doute des dépenses pour ces gens. Je pense à ma circonscription qui a deux cent milles de long. S'il doit faire 100 milles pour se rendre à ce bureau, cela augmenterait beaucoup ses frais.

M. MacDermaid: Il incombe à l'officier rapporteur de chaque district électoral d'en avoir un ou davantage.

M. Lefebvre: Un ou davantage.

M. MacDermaid: Oui. S'il est au courant d'une situation particulière, il peut décider d'avoir plus d'un bureau. D'ailleurs, l'existence de ces bureaux est rendue publique.

M. Lefebvre: Avez-vous de ces bureaux de votation dans les hospices aussi?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: S'il y a une centaine de vieillards dans un hospice, est-ce qu'il y aura un bureau de vote?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

Le président: Quand est-ce qu'on compte les bulletins des votes par procuration?

M. MacDermaid: Le même jour que les autres votes, soit le soir des élections.

Le président: Cela retarde-t-il le résultat définitif?

M. MacDermaid: Non, ceci ne touche et ne retarde pas les résultats définitifs. Ils sont tous comptés en même temps.

[Texte]

An hon. Member: They are not counted separately?

Mr. MacDermid: No.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): They go into the same box.

Mr. MacDermid: The same box, yes.

Mr. A. J. Hickey (Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, Nova Scotia): They are recorded on a different sheet in the pool book. There is a separate sheet in the poll book for proxy voters.

Mr. Forrestall: That elector number so and so voted.

Mr. Hickey: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: His vote, or we will say franchise, was exercised by elector so and so via form such and such.

Mr. Hickey: That is right.

Mr. MacDermid: During one of our elections, one of the returning officers set up a special poll for the infirm rather than incorporate it with another polling station as he is supposed to do. It turned out that one person voted in that election, and everybody knew what his vote was.

Mr. Forrestall: Could we move for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to the area of conformity as between this Act and the federal Act, and might I ask the witnesses orally if any of them would care to comment on any apparent difficulties that come up from time to time either in writing acts such as this or in their execution as it would relate one to the other? Does the presence of the federal Act—I know that certainly it is a guide—hinder the writing of an act like this?

Mr. MacDermid: I think basically speaking, the royal commission followed the federal Act where it could and streamlined it where it thought it was best streamlined. There is no great conflict of which I am aware between the two acts.

Mr. Forrestall: What is the practice in Nova Scotia with regard to constituency boundaries, as to provincial constituency boundaries within federal boundaries, and as to polling division boundaries within both?

Mr. MacDermid: Well, basically, you do not run into a problem there. Of the 2,000 polling divisions, probably about 1,900 are exactly the same as the federal ones, and with the other ones you have to use your

[Interprétation]

Une voix: Ils ne sont pas comptés séparément?

M. MacDermid: Non.

M. Howard (Skeena): Ils vont dans la même urne?

M. MacDermid: Oui.

M. A. J. Hickey (Adjoint du Directeur général des élections de Nouvelle-Écosse): Ils sont enregistrés sur une feuille distincte dans le registre du scrutin. Il y a une feuille spéciale dans ce registre pour les votes par procuration.

M. Forrestall: Que l'électeur numéro tant a voté.

M. Hickey: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Que son vote, ou, disons, son droit, a été exercé par tel électeur suivant telle forme.

M. Hickey: C'est exact.

M. MacDermid: Au cours d'une de nos élections, un de nos officiers rapporteurs a établi un bureau spécial pour les infirmes au lieu de l'intégrer à un autre bureau, comme il devait le faire. Il est arrivé qu'une personne vota à cette élection, et tout le monde connu son vote.

M. Forrestall: Pouvons-nous passer à la question de la conformité entre cette loi et la loi fédérale? Pourrais-je demander aux témoins s'ils veulent nous donner des explications sur les difficultés qui sont apparues de temps en temps dans la rédaction ou l'application de cette loi dans le mesure où elles ont des relations communes? Est-ce que la loi fédérale,—je sais que c'est un guide—gêne la rédaction d'une telle loi?

M. MacDermid: Je crois que, fondamentalement, la Commission royale d'enquête a suivi la loi fédérale lorsque c'était possible et l'a amélioré lorsqu'il était approprié de le faire. A ma connaissance, il n'y a pas de grand conflit entre les deux lois.

M. Forrestall: Que fait-on, en Nouvelle-Écosse, à propos des limites des circonscriptions, en fonction des limites des circonscriptions provinciales à l'intérieur de limites fédérales, et des limites des divisions de votation au sein de deux?

M. MacDermid: Au fond, il n'y a pas de problème. Sur 2,000 divisions de votation, environ 1,900 correspondent aux divisions fédérales, et pour les autres, vous devez faire preuve d'imagination lorsqu'elles dépassent imagination where they cross boundary lines. But basically speaking, the provinces followed the federal ones because they were more up to date than our own.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: That is a deliberate thing that is done.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: And the Province of Nova Scotia would find that useful.

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, we find the federal boundaries useful, yes. We do have provision for revising them on our own under the Act, but we try to keep them similar if we can because it prevents confusion.

Mr. Forrestall: Are there any areas that come to your mind where conformity could be further sought in connection with our own Act, our own provincial Act?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, I do not think so. Generally speaking, we certainly get very good co-operation from the Chief Electoral Officer in Ottawa, and he helps us in certain spots. There is no great conflict, I think, that needs to be resolved.

Mr. Forrestall: It is probably an unfair question to ask you, Mr. MacDermaid, because I know you are not directly associated any longer. But from what you have said I would assume that you would not feel that there might be any need for any kind of a national forum to be developed in which questions of conformity could be discussed. Would that be an accurate assumption?

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, certainly I do not think it hurts the Chief Electoral Officer in Nova Scotia to know what his counterpart in Quebec and elsewhere is doing. I think it is an excellent idea. Certainly when the royal commission worked on this report here, they consulted with all the electoral officers across Canada, and I think it would be useful if they could get together, yes.

Mr. Forrestall: Is there any move in Nova Scotia, officially or otherwise, to do anything such as the lowering of the voting age, which might give rise to some difficulties, for example in terms of polling division boundaries?

Mr. MacDermaid: I think Mr. Muggah should reply to that.

Mr. H. E. Muggah (Deputy Provincial Secretary, Province of Nova Scotia): I have heard nothing official on it. I have heard, or I les limites. Mais, en principe, les provinces ont suivi les limites fédérales parce qu'elles sont plus à point que les nôtres.

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: C'est une chose faite délibérément.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Et la province de Nouvelle-Écosse trouve cela utile.

M. MacDermaid: Les délimitations fédérales nous sont utiles. Nous avons des dispositions pour les reviser en vertu de notre loi, mais nous tâchons de les garder semblables pour éviter la confusion.

M. Forrestall: Y a-t-il des régions où la conformité pourrait être améliorée à l'égard de notre propre loi provinciale?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne pense pas. De façon générale, nous obtenons une excellente collaboration du Directeur général des élections d'Ottawa, et il nous aide. Il n'y a pas de grand conflit à résoudre.

M. Forrestall: Il est probablement injuste de vous poser cette question, car je sais que vous ne travaillez plus dans ce domaine. Mais d'après ce que vous avez dit, je présume que vous ne pensez pas qu'il serait nécessaire d'établir une tribune nationale où l'on pourrait aborder les questions de conformité. Ai-je raison?

M. MacDermaid: Il est certainement très bon que le Directeur général des élections de la Nouvelle-Écosse sache ce que fait son homologue du Québec et ailleurs. Je crois que c'est une excellente idée. Lorsque la Commission royale d'enquête a travaillé à son rapport ici, elle a consulté tous les directeurs d'élection au Canada, et il serait très bon qu'ils se réunissent.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce qu'en Nouvelle-Écosse, on a un plan, officiel ou autre, pour abaisser l'âge du droit de vote, ce qui pourrait soulever des difficultés, par exemple pour ce qui est des délimitations des arrondissements électoraux.

M. MacDermaid: Je crois que M. Muggah devrait vous répondre. Je n'ai rien entendu d'officiel à ce sujet.

M. Muggah (Sous-secrétaire de la Nouvelle-Écosse): J'ai lu des rapports de différents groupes, demandant l'abaissement de l'âge have read reports of groups in the community who felt, that the voting age should be lowered, but I am probably not as familiar with the public, or do not have my hand as closely on the public pulse as you have, Mr. Forrestall.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: I am committed to it being lowered; there is no question about that. But I was trying to find some way of getting into the area of the necessity today of keeping elections short. One of the ways that this can best be done, I would think, is through the maximum amount of conformity as between federal and provincial acts. Would the lowering of the voting age to 18 present, in your opinion any serious difficulties?

Mr. MacDermid: No, there would be absolutely no difficulties at all.

Mr. Forrestall: What is the average number of electors within the terms of the Act, in each polling division?

Mr. MacDermid: Electoral district or polling division?

Mr. Forrestall: Polling division.

Mr. MacDermid: It is 300 in our Act and it is 350 in yours, I believe.

Mr. Forrestall: The addition of 10 per cent, more or less, would not make any difference then.

Mr. MacDermid: You can always divide the poll, anyway.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am not nit-picking but I notice that the qualifications for electors include the expression "is a Canadian citizen or other British subject." And the qualifications for a candidate, the expression "as a British subject by birth or naturalization." Is this just an accident or something the lawyers forgot?

Mr. MacDermid: An accident, sir. I assume we followed your Act but we may have dropped a couple of words.

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement earlier that the system in this province now permits election campaigns to be as short as 36 days.

Mr. MacDermid: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: I am very interested in pursuing that matter further to ascertain whether or not there are certain modifications in Nova Scotia in which we should be interested for donnant le droit de vote, mais je ne suis pas d'aussi près de l'opinion publique que vous monsieur Forrestall.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: C'est indiscutablement une question que j'ai à cœur. Mais j'essayais de revenir à la question de diminuer la période des élections. Une des meilleures façons est d'intensifier la conformité entre les lois fédérales et provinciales. Est-ce que cet abaissement de l'âge de vote entraînerait des difficultés?

M. MacDermid: Aucune difficulté, non.

M. Forrestall: Quel est le nombre moyen d'électeurs fixé par la loi dans les arrondissements de votation?

M. MacDermid: Parlez-vous du district électoral ou de la division de votation?

M. Forrestall: De la division de votation.

M. MacDermid: 300 dans notre loi, et 350 dans la votre, je crois.

M. Forrestall: L'addition de 10 p. 100 ne ferait donc pas de différence.

M. MacDermid: On peut toujours réduire le nombre des votants.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne veux pas fendre les cheveux en quatre, mais je remarque que les exigences comme électeur comprennent l'expression «est un citoyen canadien ou autre sujet britannique» et que les exigences comme candidat comportent l'expression «sujet britannique de naissance ou par naturalisation». Est-ce une erreur ou un oubli des avocats?

M. MacDermid: Un accident, monsieur. Nous avons suivi votre loi, mais nous avons peut-être oublié quelques mots.

Le président: Monsieur Jerome.

M. Jerome: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais revenir au système dans cette province qui permet de raccourcir les campagnes électorales à aussi peu que 36 jours.

M. MacDermid: Oui.

M. Jerome: J'aimerais savoir si certaines des positions qui existent en Nouvelle-Écosse pourraient permettre de raccourcir les campagnes électorales fédérales. Pourriez-vous nous the purpose of shortening federal election campaigns. Could you elaborate on just exactly how it can be accomplished in that short space of time.

[Text]

Mr. MacDermid: I think one of the big reasons that we were able to shorten it was the fact that all the lists, whether urban or rural, are prepared on an alphabetic basis.

Mr. Francis: Not by streets.

Mr. MacDermid: No. In urban areas it is alphabetical as well. This lends itself to great simplicity and also the cutting out of the revision which is held by your rural registers under your Federal Act, which takes up time as well. From the completion of this alphabetical book it goes directly to the printer and the list is mailed out. But we seem to do it in a much shorter length of time than you people do. For instance, you appoint your enumerators 49 days before an election; we can appoint them 31 days before the election and still carry the election out.

Mr. Jerome: Thirty-one?

Mr. MacDermid: Yes. That is the day enumeration starts. Yours start 49 days before an election, and that is a difference of about three weeks?

Mr. Jerome: Eighteen days.

Mr. MacDermid: Eighteen days, yes.

Mr. Jerome: And how long does it take you to complete your enumeration?

Mr. MacDermid: We run or enumeration the same length of time as you do.

Mr. Jerome: Your timesaving then is between the completion of the enumeration and the publication of the voters' lists?

Mr. MacDermid: Our lists are printed 17 days before the election and yours are printed 26 days before.

Mr. Jerome: Now the gap is down to nine days. We have lost 10 days some place.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel, could you comment on the differences.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer, Government of Canada): I do not want to comment too extensively on this but perhaps I should mention that under the Canada Elections Act we conduct a general election in the Northwest Territories in 45 days. The main difference is that I have seven returning officers to do the job of one returning officer at a expliquer comment tenir des élections dans une aussi courte période de temps.

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermid: Je crois qu'une des raisons qui nous permette de raccourcir les campagnes est que toutes les listes, urbaines ou rurales, sont préparées par ordre alphabétique.

M. Francis: Non par rues.

M. MacDermid: Non. Dans les régions urbaines, les listes sont alphabétiques. C'est un système très simple qui permet de réduire les délais de revision qui sont faits suivant les registres ruraux en vertu de la loi fédérale et qui prennent beaucoup de temps. Une fois la liste établie elle est envoyée à l'imprimeur et ensuite expédiée par la poste. Cette méthode exige beaucoup moins de temps que l'autre. Par exemple, vous nommez, vous, un énumérateur 49 jours avant l'élection; nous, nous les nommons 31 jours avant l'élection et c'est suffisant.

M. Jerome: 31 jours?

M. MacDermid: Oui. Vous avez besoin de 49 jours, ce qui fait une différence de trois semaines?

M. Jerome: 18 jours.

M. MacDermid: Oui, 18 jours.

M. Jerome: Combien de temps vous faut-il pour terminer votre énumération?

M. MacDermid: Le même temps que vous.

M. Jerome: Vous réussissez donc votre économie de temps entre la fin de l'énumération et la publication des listes d'électeurs?

M. MacDermid: Nos listes sont imprimées 17 jours avant l'élection et les vôtres, 26 jours avant.

M. Jerome: Ceci réduit l'écart à 9 jours. Il manque 10 jours quelque part.

Le président: Monsieur Hamel, pourriez-vous nous expliquer les différences?

M. J.-M. Hamel (directeur général des élections, Gouvernement du Canada): Je ne veux pas m'étendre trop longuement là-dessus, mais je pourrais peut-être mentionner qu'en vertu de la Loi canadienne sur les élections, nous menons une élection générale dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest en 45 jours. La différence est que j'ai sept présidents d'élec-general election. In Nova Scotia I believe you have 26 or 27 returning officers.

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh, no we have 43.

Mr. Hamel: Well, I have 11 for exactly the same population. That question was raised yesterday at Quebec. The largest electoral district in Quebec is 57,000 square miles. We have 14 electoral districts in excess of 50,000 square miles, so I do not think that the problem is quite the same.

Mr. Jerome: In the Northwest Territories we have several electoral districts that must be larger than the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hamel: In the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Jerome: Yes. My own is larger than the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct. I think you have nine electoral districts in excess of 100,000 square miles.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: If I may come back to this question of lists, for instance, 43 returning officers means that there are 43 printers printing his lists while, in my case, I have 11 returning officers dealing with 11 printers to deal with 11 sets of lists. I think the problem is not quite the same.

Mr. Jerome: Do you in fact use a different printer for each electoral list or does one printer do it all?

Mr. MacDermaid: We might use three or four; it just depends on how competent and how large the printer is.

Mr. Jerome: You might use three or four.

Mr. MacDermaid: For one electoral district, if necessary.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Hamel, is the preparation of the lists the area in which we require so much more time?

Mr. Hamel: No, not necessarily. We require more time before the enumeration, in fact, because at the moment we run an election between 58 and 60 days and since we start the enumeration on the forty-ninth day it means we have roughly between eight to 10 days to get all the machinery in motion. It is very seldom that the writs are issued and we find all the returning officers ready to start.

[Interprétation]

tions pour faire le travail d'un seul lors d'une élection générale. Je crois qu'en Nouvelle-Écosse vous en avez 26 ou 27.

M. MacDermaid: Non, nous en avons 43.

M. Hamel: J'en ai 11 pour exactement la même population. Le point a été soulevé hier pour le Québec. La plus grande circonscription électorale au Québec est de 57,000 milles carrés. Nous avons 14 circonscriptions électorales supérieures à 50,000 milles carrés; le problème n'est donc pas le même.

M. Jerome: Dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, nous avons plusieurs circonscriptions électorales qui sont beaucoup plus grandes que la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. Hamel: Dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest?

M. Jerome: Oui. La mienne est beaucoup plus grande que la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. Hamel: C'est exact. Je crois que nous avons 9 circonscriptions électorales qui dépassent 100,000 milles carrés.

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Hamel: Pour revenir à la question des listes, il y a 43 présidents d'élections qui travaillent avec 43 imprimeurs qui impriment leurs listes tandis que, dans mon cas, j'en ai 11 qui travaillent avec 11 imprimeurs qui impriment 11 jeux de listes. Je crois que le problème est différent.

M. Jerome: Avez-vous un imprimeur différent pour chaque liste électorale ou un imprimeur fait-il tout le travail pour une élection?

M. MacDermaid: Nous en employons 3 ou 4; tout dépend de l'importance des installations de l'imprimeur.

M. Jerome: Vous en utilisez 3 ou 4.

M. MacDermaid: Pour une circonscription électorale, au besoin.

M. Jerome: Monsieur Hamel, est-ce la préparation des listes qui absorbe une si grande partie de notre temps?

M. Hamel: Non, par nécessairement. Nous prenons plus de temps avant l'énumération, en fait, parce qu'il nous faut de 58 à 60 jours pour faire une élection. Quand nous commençons l'énumération le 49^e jour nous disposons d'environ 8 à 10 jours. Il arrive très rarement que tout soit imprimé et que tous les présidents d'élection soient prêts à commencer. A chaque élection, nous en avons au

[Text]

At every election we always have at least half a dozen who have to be replaced because they have died, were involved in car accidents, were in Europe or Mexico, and so on. Furthermore, we have to allow political parties time to nominate their urban enumerators, and when you deal with a large urban electoral district with 150 to 200, and at times 300 polling divisions, it means that each party has to nominate 300 enumerators, the returning officer has to appoint 600 enumerators, brief them, because he does not have time to train them, and concurrently he has to find office accommodation. At one meeting of the Committee somebody mentioned, and quite rightly so, that some of the returning officers did not have adequate office accommodation. They have no more than 24 to 48 hours to find this accommodation, have two, three or four, telephones installed, have the proclamation printed and everything in motion.

If you are interested in looking at the possibility of cutting the period for an election I would suggest that we look at each operation and find out where it is possible to cut. But I would like you to keep in mind the fact that if you take together all the returning officers for the whole of Canada at the provincial level you have 560-odd returning officers while at the Federal level I have 264 to cover exactly the same area. If I had only the southern part of the country—let us exclude the northern part of the country—we could run elections as they do in Ontario, in 37 days, quite easily, but we cannot go any faster than where communications are the worst. I believe this is the crux of the problem.

Mr. MacDermid: The point I was really trying to make was that because of the way we prepare our lists, with the changes we have made, we are able to run an election in an eight to 10 day shorter period of time.

Mr. Jerome: Eight to 10 days shorter than you used to run it.

Mr. MacDermid: Than we used to run it.

Mr. Jerome: All right. You say one of the important changes was an alphabetical listing of the electorate.

Mr. MacDermid: Of the urban ones, which had always been done geographically before.

Mr. Jerome: Had you always done your rural electors by alphabetical order?

Mr. MacDermid: Yes, we have used the same procedure.

[Interpretation]

moins une demi-douzaine qui doivent être remplacés parce qu'ils sont morts, qu'ils ont eu un accident d'automobile, qu'ils sont en Europe ou au Mexique, et ainsi de suite. De plus, nous devons accorder aux partis politiques le temps nécessaire pour nommer leurs énumérateurs urbains. Dans une grande circonscription électorale urbaine, il peut y avoir de 150 à 200 et même jusqu'à 300 arrondissements ce qui veut dire que chaque parti doit nommer 300 énumérateurs, que le président doit nommer 600 énumérateurs, leur faire un exposé sommaire de leurs fonctions et, en même temps, trouver des locaux. A une réunion du Comité, quelqu'un a mentionné que certains des présidents n'avaient pas de locaux adéquats. Ils n'ont pas plus que 24 à 48 heures pour trouver des locaux, faire installer 2, 3 ou 4 téléphones, faire imprimer la proclamation et mettre le tout en branle.

Si vous désirez réduire la période nécessaire à l'organisation d'une élection, je vous proposerais d'examiner chaque opération et de trouver le moyen de réduire le temps nécessaire pour la compléter. Cependant il ne faut pas oublier que les provinces comptent un total d'environ 560 présidents d'élection alors que le fédéral en compte 264 pour couvrir exactement le même territoire. Si je n'avais que la partie sud du pays, je pourrais faire des élections en 37 jours, comme c'est le cas en Ontario, mais nous ne pouvons pas le faire dans tout le pays parce que, dans certains endroits, les moyens de communication sont mauvais. Je crois que c'est là que gît le problème.

M. MacDermid: Le point que je voulais souligner est que notre façon de préparer nos listes avec les changements que nous y avons apportés, nous permet de faire une élection dans 8 à 10 jours.

M. Jerome: 8 à 10 jours de moins qu'auparavant.

M. MacDermid: C'est exact.

M. Jerome: Très bien. Vous dites que l'un des changements importants touche l'établissement de listes alphabétiques des électeurs?

M. MacDermid: Des listes urbaines, qui étaient établies géographiquement auparavant.

M. Jerome: Vos listes d'électeurs ruraux avaient-elles toujours été établies par ordre alphabétique?

M. MacDermid: Oui, nous avons employé le même processus.

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: How is it that this is such a dramatic time-saver?

Mr. MacDermaid: We have got away from preliminary lists, typing of lists, and different forms. This book here has actually cut down the time.

Mr. Jerome: In other words, by using the alphabetical system you were able to go directly from the book without a further tabulation of the list, right to the printer.

You were mentioning that this was in conjunction with other changes that you had made which enabled you to cut down the time by eight or 10 days. Could you tell us what the other changes are?

Mr. MacDermaid: I do not know if I made that statement but I cannot recall anything else. This is the major thing that enabled us to shorten the period of time.

Mr. Jerome: Your enumeration then is now carried out in such a way that your enumerators can make entries directly in that book at the door?

Mr. MacDermaid: At the door, right.

Mr. Jerome: They make entries directly in the book and then the book goes directly to the printer.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, but there is something in between there: one copy goes to each political party, one copy remains in the returning officer's office, and one copy goes to the printer.

Mr. Lefebvre: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman. How can the enumerator do it alphabetically as he goes along.

Mr. MacDermaid: There is no problem because it is all lettered A, B, C, D, E, F, G—right down to Z. There are three or four unlettered pages at the end, the same as your own rural registrar's book. In other words, it is not strictly alphabetical but all the A's are together.

Mr. Hamel: In our case we are only one day on the actual transcription. In other words, the enumerators complete their enumerations on Saturday and they have to have the list in the hands of the returning officer by Monday. So the only time that this may be exceeded is in rural areas to allow time for the list to travel to the office of the returning officer.

[Interprétation]

M. Jerome: Comment réalisez-vous donc cette grande économie de temps?

M. MacDermaid: Nous avons éliminé les listes préliminaires, la dactylographie des listes et diverses formules. Ce livre nous permet d'éliminer les pertes de temps.

M. Jerome: Autrement dit, le système actuel vous permet de passer directement du livre à l'imprimeur, sans étape intermédiaire.

Vous avez dit que ceci était un des changements que vous aviez fait pour raccourcir le délai de 8 à 10 jours. Pourriez-vous me parler des autres changements?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne me souviens pas vous avoir dit cela. Le changement dont je viens de vous parler est le changement principal qui nous permet de raccourcir les délais nécessaires.

M. Jerome: Votre système d'énumération permet donc à vos énumérateurs de faire l'inscription directement dans le livre, à la porte?

M. MacDermaid: A la porte, c'est exact.

M. Jerome: Ils font leurs inscriptions directement dans le livre et le livre est ensuite envoyé directement à l'imprimeur.

M. MacDermaid: Oui, mais il y a quelque chose d'autre; une copie est envoyée à chaque partie politique, le président en garde une copie et une copie est envoyée à l'imprimeur.

M. Lefebvre: J'aurais une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Comment un énumérateur peut-il établir une liste alphabétique?

M. Macdermaid: Il n'y a pas de problème, parce que les pages sont marquées en majuscules, A, B, C, D, E, F, G, jusqu'à Z. Il y a trois ou quatre pages non marquées à la fin comme dans votre propre livre d'inscription rurale. Autrement dit, la liste n'est pas strictement alphabétique, mais tous les A sont ensembles.

M. Hamel: Dans notre cas, nous ne passons qu'une journée à la transcription. Autrement dit, les énumérateurs terminent leur énumération le samedi et ils doivent remettre leur liste au président le lundi. Le seul temps perdu dans les régions rurales est donc le temps nécessaire pour que la liste provienne au bureau du président.

[Text]

May I ask one question. Is your urban enumeration done by one enumerator.

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh no, two.

Mr. Hamel: How are they appointed?

Mr. MacDermaid: The same way yours are.

Mr. Hamel: Are your returning officers permanent?

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh, yes, very definitely.

Mr. Hamel: They are appointed. Do they receive some remuneration between elections?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, they do not.

Mr. Hamel: Just if they are called upon to do some work.

Mr. MacDermaid: That is all.

Mr. Hamel: Such as a revision and that kind of thing.

Mr. MacDermaid: As a matter of fact, they went around and registered everybody for Medicare. They used the same book. We got 98 per cent of the population.

Mr. Francis: Have we finished with this subject now, Mr. Chairman? I wanted to raise another one.

The Chairman: You can do so, if you wish.

Mr. Francis: I am interested in the provisions for candidates' representatives in the polls on election day.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Francis: I presume a candidate is permitted to have a representative in each of the deputy returning officers polling districts.

Mr. MacDermaid: That is correct, yes.

Mr. Francis: Is there provision for a candidate to have a representative in the office of the returning officer during election day?

Mr. MacDermaid: No. The only provision in our Act having to do with the headquarters of the returning officer is that he must be there at certain times, but if somebody wants to look at the proxy papers or some other papers...

Mr. Francis: But if the candidate, for reasons that he judged proper, made an official

[Interpretation]

Puis-je poser une question? Votre énumération urbaine est-elle faite par un énumérateur?

M. MacDermaid: Non, deux.

M. Hamel: Comment sont-ils nommés?

M. MacDermaid: De la même façon que les vôtres.

M. Hamel: Vos présidents sont-ils permanents?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Hamel: Ils sont nommés. Reçoivent-ils une rémunération entre les élections?

M. MacDermaid: Non, ils n'en reçoivent pas.

M. Hamel: Seulement lorsqu'ils travaillent.

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

M. Hamel: Comme une revision, et ainsi de suite.

M. MacDermaid: Ils ont été utilisés pour faire l'inscription de tout le monde pour Medicare. Ils ont utilisé le même livre. Ils ont atteint 98 p. 100 de la population.

M. Francis: Est-ce tout sur ce sujet, monsieur le président? J'aimerais passer à un autre.

Le président: Vous pouvez le faire, si vous le désirez.

M. Francis: J'aimerais en savoir plus long sur les dispositions régissant la présence des représentants des candidats aux bureaux de scrutin, le jour des élections.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Francis: Je crois qu'un candidat peut avoir des représentants dans chacun des bureaux de scrutin?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

M. Francis: Y a-t-il une disposition permettant à un candidat d'avoir un représentant dans le bureau du président le jour des élections?

M. MacDermaid: Non. La seule disposition dans notre loi traitant du bureau principal du président est qu'il doit s'y trouver à certains temps, mais si quelqu'un veut examiner les documents de procuration ou quelque autre document...

M. Francis: Mais si le candidat, pour des raisons qu'il juge valables, fait une demande request to the returning officer that he would like to have an agent there during election day, would that request be refused?

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh, heavens, no.

Mr. Francis: I know in the Federal Act there is no provision because, as a candidate, I made a very specific request and I was very specifically refused. I would hope that when this Committee makes a report it would take this into consideration.

Mr. MacDermaid: As a matter of fact, I should correct myself because in cities we brought in a provision whereby you are allowed to swear on, as you do in rural areas, if you are not on the list by appearing before the revising officer on election day, who must sit at the headquarters of the returning officers. So certainly the opposition or the party in power would be entitled to have people there to hear these applications.

Mr. Francis: Then in fact it would be quite impossible for one party to have any advantage on election day through partisan conduct of a returning officer because it would be open to any candidate to request that an agent be present and he would be permitted to do so.

Mr. MacDermaid: Certainly if there is anything of a partisan nature it would be referred to the Chief Electoral Officer and would be dealt with expeditiously.

Mr. Francis: Mind you, on election day it is not always easy to do things. There is the physical problem of time in coping with these things. While the right to go to a Chief Electoral Officer is always there it is not always in fact practicable to do so within the limitations of time.

I feel that there is a serious defect in the Federal Act. I feel any candidate who requests the right to have a representative in the office of the returning officer should have that right. He is specifically barred from having this right, according to an interpretation I received from your predecessor, Mr. Hamel. You may well be aware of that.

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

Mr. MacDermaid: In my opinion, that would be a very reasonable provision to have in your Act.

Mr. Francis: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre.

Mr. Lefebvre: In rural ridings if you show up at a poll on election day and your name is not on the list—nobody checked it, including officielle auprès du président pour qu'il admette son agent le jour des élections, cette demande sera-t-elle refusée?

[Interprétation]

M. MacDermaid: Non, certes pas.

M. Francis: Je sais que dans la loi fédérale, il n'y a aucune disposition parce que, en tant que candidat, j'ai fait une demande précise et j'ai reçu un refus précis. J'aimerais que le Comité tienne compte de ce point en faisant son rapport.

M. MacDermaid: J'aimerais corriger ce que j'ai dit, parce que, dans les villes nous avons adopté une disposition par laquelle vous pouvez vous faire assermenter, comme dans les régions rurales, si vous ne figurez pas sur la liste en comparaisant devant le reviseur qui doit se trouver au bureau central du président le jour de l'élection. Le parti au pouvoir ou l'opposition pourrait certainement avoir là quelqu'un pour vérifier les demandes.

M. Francis: Il serait ainsi impossible pour un parti d'avoir un avantage le jour des élections à cause d'un président partisan parce que tout candidat pourrait avoir un agent qui le représenterait.

M. MacDermaid: Certainement, s'il y avait partisanerie quelconque, la question serait portée à l'attention du président général des élections qui l'étudierait sans délai.

M. Francis: N'oubliez-pas que le jour des élections il faut faire vite et qu'il a beaucoup à faire. Même s'il a le droit d'en appeler au président général des élections, il n'est pas toujours facile de le faire dans des délais si courts.

Je crois qu'il y a une lacune grave dans la Loi fédérale. Je crois qu'on devrait accorder à tout candidat le droit d'avoir un représentant dans le bureau du président. On lui refuse catégoriquement ce droit, suivant l'interprétation que nous a donné votre prédécesseur, M. Hamel. Vous êtes peut-être au courant de cela.

M. Hamel: Oui.

M. MacDermaid: Je crois que c'est une disposition qu'il serait très raisonnable d'avoir dans votre loi.

M. Francis: Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre.

M. Lefebvre: Dans les circonscriptions rurales, si vous vous présentez au bureau de scrutin le jour des élections, et que votre nom the voter himself—you can be sworn in. Do you have the same thing in your provincial elections?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: We have the same thing for the rural areas. In the urban areas if you have been left off the list you may appear before the revising officer on election day and get a certificate from him saying that you are qualified to vote, then you go with your voucher and you may be sworn on on election day in the urban areas as well.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is good.

Mr. MacDermaid: We put that little extra precaution in because it is a little harder to check people in the cities.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, very much. I do not think too many of the provinces allow voters to be sworn in on election day.

Mr. MacDermaid: In cities.

Mr. Lefebvre: Even in rural districts. In Quebec they cannot. Does Ontario allow it?

Mr. Hamel: Ontario does in both rural and urban areas, but they are recommending now that it be dropped in both rural and urban areas.

Mr. Lefebvre: I hope this Committee does not follow that practice because I think we should do everything possible to make sure that a person wanting to vote has the opportunity of doing so.

Mr. MacDermaid: We sort of nailed them down a bit too by putting a form in the poll book that both the person vouched for and the voucher have to sign—they have to put their "John Henry" right in the poll book—which usually cuts out any abuse of that.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. MacDermaid, could you comment on the form of the ballot. We have had some indication that Ontario has recommended the adoption—I think Quebec have adopted it...

Mr. Hamel: No, not yet; it has been recommended.

Mr. Forrestall: The Province of Quebec has already adopted a new form of ballot.

Mr. MacDermaid: This is what the Royal Commission wanted here, based on the system.

[Interpretation]

ne figure pas sur la liste, personne ne l'ayant vérifié, y compris l'électeur lui même, vous pouvez être assermenté. Avez-vous le même système dans vos élections provinciales?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, nous avons le même système pour les régions rurales. Dans les régions urbaines, si votre nom n'apparaît pas sur la liste, vous pouvez vous présenter chez le reviser le jour d'élection et obtenir de lui un certificat qui dit que vous êtes qualifié pour voter. Vous vous présentez donc avec votre certificat et vous pouvez être assermenté le jour de l'élection dans les régions urbaines également.

M. Lefebvre: Très bien.

M. MacDermaid: Nous sommes un peu plus prudents parce qu'il est un peu plus difficile de vérifier dans des villes.

M. Lefebvre: Oui, en effet. Je crois qu'il n'y a pas beaucoup de provinces qui permettent aux électeurs d'être assermentés le jour des élections.

M. MacDermaid: Dans les villes.

M. Lefebvre: Même dans des circonscriptions rurales. Dans le Québec, ce n'est pas permis. Le permet-on en Ontario?

M. Hamel: En Ontario, c'est permis dans les régions rurales et urbaines, mais on voudrait l'abandonner.

M. Lefebvre: J'espère que ce Comité ne prendra pas une telle décision, parce que je crois qu'on devrait faire tout ce qui est possible pour permettre à une personne qui veut voter de le faire.

M. MacDermaid: On a décidé d'être plus exigeant en insérant dans le livre une formule que la personne qui a obtenu le certificat et celle qui l'a délivré doivent signer. Leur signature doit figurer dans le livre, ce qui réduit les abus.

M. Lefebvre: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Monsieur MacDermaid, pourriez-vous nous parler du bulletin de vote lui-même. Je crois que l'Ontario a recommandé l'adoption du nouveau bulletin de vote et je crois que le Québec l'a fait.

M. Hamel: Non, pas encore; on l'a recommandé.

M. Forrestall: La province de Québec a déjà adopté un nouveau bulletin de vote.

M. MacDermaid: C'est ce que la Commission royale voulait.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Could you tell us why it was rejected.

Mr. MacDermaid: I cannot tell you why it was rejected because I was not present when they were deliberating what they were going to adopt. They tried to simplify it so there would be only one place to put your "X" and it could not be rejected. There are quite a few rejected ballots in each election.

Mr. Forrestall: Would there be one per poll?

Mr. MacDermaid: I could tell you how many there are. We had 2,700 in the last election.

Mr. Forrestall: How many polling divisions are there?

Mr. MacDermaid: There are 2,000.

Mr. Forrestall: So it is better than one per roll—1.5 per poll.

An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman, is party affiliation shown on the ballot?

Mr. MacDermaid: No. I am sorry; it is now, under an amendment passed this year.

Mr. Francis: What does appear on the ballot? The name and the party affiliation appears. Is there anything else?

Mr. A. J. Hickey (Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, Nova Scotia): The address.

Mr. MacDermaid: The name, the party's address, and the name of his party, if he has one—if not, the word "independent".

Mr. Francis: No occupation?

Mr. MacDermaid: No. That is not quite in force yet; at the end of this month that will be in force.

Mr. Francis: Yes, but we are interested.

Mr. Carter: And the names will appear alphabetically?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, alphabetically. If there are two people to be elected in the one constituency they can agree to an arrangement of their names other than alphabetically. We have three constituencies here where, such is the case. I do not think you have any anymore?

Mr. Carter: No, but ordinarily it would be alphabetically?

Mr. MacDermaid: That is right.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Pourriez-vous me dire pourquoi on l'a rejeté.

M. MacDermaid: Je ne puis pas vous dire pourquoi on l'a rejeté parce que je n'étais pas présent aux délibérations. Ils ont essayé de le simplifier en prévoyant un endroit pour mettre le «X» afin qu'il ne soit pas rejeté. Il y a, en effet, un nombre imposant de bulletins rejetés à chaque élection.

M. Forrestall: Y en aurait-il un par bureau de scrutin?

M. MacDermaid: Je pourrais vous dire combien il y en avait. Il y en a eu 2,700 à la dernière élection.

M. Forrestall: Combien y avait-il de bureaux?

M. MacDermaid: Il y en avait 2,000.

M. Forrestall: Il y en avait donc plus d'un par bureau, 1.5 par bureau.

Une voix: Monsieur le président, indique-t-on les partis sur les bulletins de vote?

M. MacDermaid: Non. Je suis désolé, oui, en vertu d'une modification adoptée cette année.

M. Francis: Que voit-on sur le bulletin? Le nom du candidat et le parti qu'il représente y figurent. Y a-t-il quelque chose d'autre?

M. A. J. Hickey (Président général adjoint des élections, Nouvelle-Écosse): L'adresse.

M. MacDermaid: Le nom, l'adresse du parti, et le nom du parti s'il en a un; s'il n'en a pas, le mot «indépendant».

M. Francis: Pas la profession?

M. MacDermaid: Non. Ce n'est pas encore en vigueur, mais cela le sera à la fin de ce mois-ci.

M. Francis: Cet aspect nous intéresse.

M. Carter: Et les noms figureront par ordre alphabétique?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, par ordre alphabétique. Deux candidats d'une même circonscription peuvent se mettre d'accord sur une disposition de leur nom autre qu'alphabétique. Nous avons deux ou trois circonscriptions où un tel accord existe. Je n'en connais pas d'autre.

M. Carter: Non, mais ordinairement, c'est par ordre alphabétique?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

[Text]

Mr. Carter: Would an independent get the same privilege or would he be put on the bottom of the ballot?

Mr. MacDermid: No, he would be listed alphabetically.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is different than Quebec, where the independent does not get on the alphabetical portion.

The Chairman: Mr. Gibson.

Mr. Gibson: Do you have any provision for two candidates with the same name and initials, say "W. F. Anderson"?

Mr. Forrestall: We have that problem in Cape Breton with "MacDonald" in municipal elections.

Mr. MacDermid: There is really nothing in our Act. We would expect the returning officer to use some discretion when accepting the nomination paper. People are described by the names that they are known by in the community and there would be some distinction. Mind you, there is a distinction now with the party being listed on the ballot, but that is not quite the same thing.

The Chairman: It seems that you abide by the same order as used in Quebec for the recognized parties. You put them on the ballots.

Mr. Muggah: Yes, that is correct.

We had the Royal Commission that Mr. MacDermid refers to and then we had another a year or so ago which recommended fairly substantial changes, including the recognition of parties and the payment or reimbursement of parties and candidates for their expenses. A substantial part of these amendments followed very closely the Quebec provisions.

Mr. Lefebvre: On page 3 of the amendments they talk about a recognized party having at least 10 official candidates. I note that you have taken it for a new party that was formed also.

Mr. MacDermid: Yes. If they expect to field 10 candidates they call the Chief Electoral Officer and he grants them the same privileges.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Francis.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to open the question of election expenses, which is one of considerable interest. I note that in the 1969 amendments, Section 164B on page

[Interpretation]

M. Carier: Un candidat indépendant jouit-il du même privilège ou son nom figure-t-il au bas du bulletin?

M. MacDermid: Non, il est inscrit dans l'ordre alphabétique.

M. Lefebvre: C'est différent du Québec, où le candidat indépendant ne figure pas dans l'ordre alphabétique.

Le président: Monsieur Gibson.

M. Gibson: Y a-t-il une disposition dans le cas de deux candidats ayant les mêmes initiales, mettons «W. F. Anderson»?

M. Forrestall: Nous avons eu ce problème aux élections municipales, au Cap Breton, à cause du nom «MacDonald».

M. MacDermid: Il n'y a rien dans la loi à ce sujet. Nous nous fions au jugement du président quand il reçoit les mises en candidature. Les gens sont décrits par les noms sous lesquels ils sont connus dans leur milieu. Il y aurait une différence d'inscription dans le parti qu'ils représentent, mais ceci est une autre question.

Le président: Je crois que vous suivez le même ordre que celui qui est utilisé au Québec pour les partis reconnus. Vous les inscrivez sur les bulletins.

M. Muggah: Oui, c'est exact. Nous avons eu la Commission royale dont M. MacDermid parlait, et, ensuite, il y en a eu une autre, il y a environ un an, qui a recommandé des changements assez importants, y compris la reconnaissance des partis et le paiement ou le remboursement de leurs frais aux partis et aux candidats. Une partie importante de ces amendements ressemblait étroitement aux dispositions du Québec.

M. Lefebvre: A la page 3 des amendements, on parle de reconnaître les partis qui ont au moins 10 candidats officiels. Je crois que ceci s'applique également aux partis nouvellement formés.

M. MacDermid: Oui. S'ils croient pouvoir présenter 10 candidats, ils communiquent avec le président général des élections qui leur accorde les mêmes privilèges.

M. Lefebvre: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Francis.

M. Francis: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais attaquer la question des dépenses électorales, qui en est une de grand intérêt. Je note que, dans les modifications de 1969, l'article

[Texte]

10, there is provision for payment to the candidate who is declared elected or who has received not less than 15 per cent of the valid votes cast up to 25 cents for each elector.

Other than failure to be reimbursed, what penalty applies to an unsuccessful candidate for failing to file his statement of election expenses?

Mr. MacDermaid: There is a section dealing with that, if I can find it.

Mr. Francis: I am thinking of a candidate who has failed and who does not make a claim for election expenses.

Mr. MacDermaid: It says here in Section 164E—

Mr. Francis: I am sorry but I have not had a chance to read them all as carefully as I should.

Mr. MacDermaid: —that he shall “be disqualified from sitting or voting in the House of Assembly.”

Mr. Francis: I noticed that. But if he is not successful?

Mr. MacDermaid: If he is not successful and does not file?

Mr. Francis: Yes. There would be no penalty, I presume, in that case. But presumably it is the carrot rather than the stick, the carrot being that you get reimbursement up to 25 cents per voter if you file within the prescribed period and have in excess of 15 per cent of the valid votes cast. Is that a fair summary of the provision?

Mr. MacDermaid: That is my understanding of it. I am just about as familiar with it as you are.

Mr. Muggah: I thought that to fail would come under the general offence provisions, which would lead to the possibility of prosecution, a summary conviction matter, and probably a relatively small fine.

Mr. Francis: Is there any record of prosecutions for failing to present a statement of election expenses?

Mr. MacDermaid: I do not think it has ever . . .

Mr. Francis: In the previous Act were there any such records? Presumably there was a similar provision for failure to file prior to these amendments.

[Interprétation]

164B, à la page 10, il y a une disposition relative au paiement, au candidat qui est déclaré élu et qui a reçu non moins de 15 p. 100 des votes acceptés, d'une somme allant jusqu'à 25 cents pour chaque électeur.

Quelle peine, autre que le non-remboursement, prévoit-on pour un candidat battu qui n'envoie pas la déclaration de ses dépenses électorales?

M. MacDermaid: Il y a un article là-dessus, si je puis le trouver.

M. Francis: Je parle d'un candidat qui a été battu et qui ne réclame pas le remboursement de ses dépenses électorales.

M. MacDermaid: Il y a l'article 164E...

M. Francis: Je suis désolé, mais je n'ai pas eu l'occasion de les lire tous, comme j'aurais dû.

M. MacDermaid: . . . qui dit qu'il ne pourra pas siéger ou voter à l'Assemblée.

M. Francis: Je le sais. Mais, s'il est battu?

M. MacDermaid: S'il est battu et s'il ne produit pas de déclaration?

M. Francis: Oui. Il n'y aurait pas de punition, je crois, dans ce cas. Il peut obtenir le remboursement jusqu'à 25 cents par électeur s'il produit sa déclaration dans la période prévue et s'il a obtenu plus de 15 p. 100 des votes acceptés. Est-ce un bon résumé des dispositions?

M. MacDermaid: Je le crois. Je ne connais pas les dispositions plus que vous.

M. Muggah: Je croyais qu'un tel candidat tomberait sous le coup des dispositions régissant les infractions d'ordre général et qu'il serait passible de poursuite, d'une conviction sommaire et probablement d'une légère amende?

M. Francis: Connaissez-vous des cas de poursuite contre un candidat qui n'aurait pas produit une déclaration de ses dépenses électorales?

M. MacDermaid: Non, je ne pense pas...

M. Francis: La loi précédente contenait-elle une disposition semblable, quand on ne faisait pas de rapports.

[Text]

The Chairman: Under the previous Act you were only required to file if one of the other parties demanded it. As far as I can see nobody ever demanded a statement of election expenses. However, if you say you did not do it, then you would be liable to the offence section of the general Act.

Mr. Francis: But the situation now is that: failure to file deprives you of the right to claim up to 25 cents per voter, which is a fair way of approaching the problem. If a statement is filed which does not report all of the expenses, what penalty is applied?

Mr. MacDermid: It says that you are then guilty of a corrupt practice.

Mr. Francis: Which means?

Mr. Muggah: The fine is not more than $2,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or both.

Mr. Francis: Fine. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDermid: There is also an additional penalty here for it being a corrupt practice under Section 186 of the Act. You are not allowed to sit in the House for five years, and so on.

Mr. Francis: In other words, there would be a fairly substantial penalty for an incorrect statement and the incentive to file, really, is to be reimbursed?

Mr. MacDermid: Yes.

Mr. Francis: That in fact is a reasonable summary of the provisions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, a recognized party, if they have filed a list of their officers and leader, and their addresses and the addresses of their provincial headquarters, and so forth, while they may be a recognized party in an election they could not qualify for reimbursement of election expenses unless they nominate 10 candidates. Is that correct? I was looking at the section on official agents on page 7, which reads:

The Chief Electoral Officer shall not accept an appointment of official agent unless the party had at least ten candidates at the last election or it is shown to him that it will have that number during the current general election...

I presume that is only for the purposes of being reimbursed for election expenses. Is that correct?

[Interpretation]

Le président: En vertu de la loi précédente, on ne devait déposer un rapport que si une des parties, l'exigeait. Mais si vous ne l'avez pas fait, comme vous le dites, vous tombez sous l'empire de l'article de la loi qui prévoit des sanctions.

M. Francis: Mais si vous ne faites pas de rapport, vous ne pouvez réclamer $0.25 par votant. Et si le rapport ne contient pas toutes les dépenses, quelle est la sanction?

M. MacDermid: Vous êtes alors coupable de pratique malhonnête.

M. Francis: Ce qui veut dire?

M. Muggah: ...l'amende ne dépasse pas $2,000, ou une période d'emprisonnement ne dépassant pas deux ans, ou les deux à la fois.

M. Francis: Très bien. Merci monsieur le président.

M. MacDermid: Il y a aussi une autre sanction pour pratique malhonnête, en vertu de l'article 186 de la Loi. Une personne ne peut pas siéger dans la Chambre pendant 5 ans, etc.

M. Francis: Il y aurait donc une sanction assez sévère pour ces deux offenses?

M. MacDermid: Oui.

M. Francis: Merci, monsieur.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Quand un parti reconnu remet la liste de ses agents et de son chef, leurs adresses et celle de leur bureau central, etc. il ne peut obtenir le remboursement de ses dépenses à moins de nommer 10 candidats. N'est-ce pas? Je lisais l'article qui se rapporte aux agents officiels à la page 7:

(3) Le directeur général des élections ne doit pas accepter la nomination d'un agent officiel, sauf si le parti comptait au moins 10 candidats officiels aux dernières élections générales ou s'il lui est démontré que le parti en comptera autant aux élections générales courantes...

Je présume que c'est simplement pour le remboursement des dépenses électorales?

[Texte]

Mr. Muggah: For the purpose of being reimbursed and I think for the purpose of appointing official agents, and perhaps also for the purpose of identification on the ballot.

Mr. Benjamin: Suppose a new party started up. You would be a recognized party by just filing a statement with the Chief Electoral Officer showing the names and addresses of your leader and your officers, and so forth, but for the purposes of being reimbursed for election expenses you would have to field 10 candidates?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, I would not interpret Section 164(d) that way. There is no reference that I can see to "recognized party" in that at all.

Mr. Benjamin: What is that again?

Mr. Muggah: There is reimbursement of both the party and the candidate.

Mr. MacDermaid: Take the case of an independent; is he reimbursed?

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, no. I am thinking of a political party. Let us say they run nine candidates and under the Act they are a recognized party. Does that mean that the party could not be reimbursed for election expenses or that those nine candidates could not be reimbursed for their election expenses?

Mr. Muggah: I should be able to answer that question right off the bat because I worked on the bill. My recollection is that a recognized party—which, as you say, is a party having 10 candidates at the last preceding general election or a party that indicates in advance of nomination day that it expects to have 10 and in fact does have 10 candidates who run—may be treated as a recognized party and may be reimbursed for its election expenses in part, and that a candidate, whether a candidate of a recognized party or an independent candidate, may be reimbursed. So, we get reimbursement of both the party and the candidate, and of the party only if it is a recognized party.

Mr. Benjamin: If you have the 10 candidates?

Mr. Muggah: If you have the 10 candidates, yes.

Mr. Benjamin: If you had 9 candidates the party could not be reimbursed, but could the candidates be reimbursed?

Mr. Muggah: The individual candidates could, yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Right.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Muggah: Pour le remboursement et aussi, je pense, pour la nomination des agents officiels, et peut-être aussi pour l'identification du bulletin de vote, . . .

Mr. Benjamin: Supposons un nouveau parti, serait-il reconnu tout simplement en déposant chez le directeur général des élections une liste des noms et adresses de son chef, du bureau, etc?

Mr. MacDermaid: Non, je n'interprétera pas ainsi la section 164 (d). Je n'y voit pas de dispositions relatives au «parti reconnu».

Mr. Benjamin: Pardon?

Mr. Muggah: Il y a remboursement au parti et au candidat.

Mr. MacDermaid: S'il s'agit d'un indépendant: est-il remboursé.

Mr. Benjamin: Non; je parle d'un parti politique. Disons qu'il présente 9 candidats et qu'il s'agit d'un parti accrédité. Ceci veut-il dire que le parti ne pourrait pas être remboursé de ses dépenses électorales ou que les 9 candidats ne seraient pas remboursés de leurs dépenses électorales?

Mr. Muggah: Je devrais pouvoir vous répondre tout de suite, j'ai aidé à rédiger le bill. Si ma mémoire est bonne, un parti accrédité—soit un parti ayant 10 candidats à l'élection précédente ou celui qui prévient qu'il aura et qui a de fait 10 candidats, qui se présentent—peut être traité comme un parti accrédité et peut être partiellement remboursé de ses dépenses. Le candidat—celui d'un parti reconnu ou un candidat indépendant—peut aussi être remboursé de ses frais. Il y a donc remboursement au parti et au candidat, et s'il s'agit d'un parti reconnu, au parti seulement.

Mr. Benjamin: S'il y a 10 candidats de présentés?

Mr. Muggah: Oui.

Mr. Benjamin: Si vous avez 9 candidats, le parti ne pourrait être remboursé, mais les candidats le pourraient-ils?

Mr. Muggah: Oui, les candidats le pourraient, individuellement.

Mr. Benjamin: Bien.

[Text]

Mr. Muggah: If they qualify otherwise.

Mr. Lefebvre: That holds true for an independent as well?

Mr. Muggah: Oh yes.

The Chairman: If he gets 15 per cent of the votes cast in that riding.

Mr. Muggah: This is Section 16 (b). It is on page 9.

The Chairman: It seems that under this law the percentage of reimbursement of candidates' expenses is a bit higher than it is in Quebec. Could you tell me if there was any reason behind increasing the percentages?

Mr. Muggah: I cannot recall. I have forgotten how long that Quebec provision has been in effect and whether it was simply another example of inflation.

The Chairman: It was in 1965.

Mr. Muggah: In 1965. I was instructed to insert the figures here. I cannot tell you what led to that.

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: Is the method of enforcement of the limit on election expenses, on party or candidates' expenses, tied to the statement of expenses that has to be filed when the election is over? Is your enforcement of that section entirely dependent upon the accuracy of that return?

Mr. Muggah: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand. The method of enforcement...

Mr. Jerome: Am I correct in assuming that the only way you can really enforce control of election expenses is through the use of the return that is made by the candidate or his party within the terms prescribed by this legislation? In other words, you are stuck by the fact that he tells you in his return, which I take it is a sworn statement, that he did in fact spend certain dollars and therefore conformed with the provisions of Section 16 (a) of this Act. Has there been any instance of those statements being challenged by any other candidates or any other...

Mr. Muggah: No, we have not had any such experience.

Mr. Jerome: But you have not tested it. I see, this is new legislation.

Mr. Muggah: Yes.

[Interpretation]

M. Muggah: S'ils sont éligibles à d'autres points de vue.

M. Lefebvre: Ceci est vrai d'un indépendant aussi?

M. Muggah: Oui.

Le président: S'il obtient 15 p. 100 des votes dans cette circonscription.

M. Muggah: C'est l'article 164 (b), à la page 9.

Le président: Il semble que, en vertu de cette loi, le pourcentage des dépenses remboursées aux candidats est un petit peu plus élevé qu'au Québec: est-ce qu'il y a une raison?

M. Muggah: Je ne me souviens pas. Je ne sais pas depuis quand existe ce règlement au Québec, ou s'il s'agit tout simplement d'un autre exemple d'inflation.

Le président: C'était en 1965.

M. Muggah: En 1965. Non, je ne sais vraiment pas. Je n'ai fait qu'insérer les chiffres qu'on m'a donnés.

Le président: Monsieur Jerome.

M. Jerome: La limite des dépenses électorales frappe-elle le parti ou le candidat et se fonde-t-elle uniquement sur l'exactitude du bilan qui est déposé après l'élection?

M. Muggah: Je crains fort de ne pas très bien comprendre le jeu de cette limite.

M. Jerome: La seule façon de contrôler les dépenses d'élections, c'est en se fondant sur le bilan de dépense présenté par le candidat dans le délai prescrit. Autrement dit, il vous dit dans sa déclaration, le montant de ses dépenses. C'est une déclaration assermentée, je suppose? S'il présente certaines dépenses conformes à la Loi, vous les acceptez? Est-ce qu'il y a eu des cas où ces déclarations ont été contestées?

M. Muggah: Non.

M. Jerome: C'est une nouvelle loi. Merci.

M. Muggah: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if any of the witnesses could tell us how you arrived at the amount of the return for both the party and the candidate? How did you arrive at the particular figures, the amount of money?

Mr. Muggah: As I mentioned earlier, there was a commission of inquiry on this subject and my recollection is that the legislation follows substantially the recommendations of the commission, and the commission in turn was much impressed by the Quebec Act. I do not recall what justification the commission may have had for picking the figures that it did or what reason the government may have had for departing from the figures used in Quebec. They are not exactly the same.

Mr. Forrestall: I suppose it such a new procedure that there is not an established body of direction on the question, is there?

Mr. Muggah: I do not think there was any volume of former election expense returns from which an average could have been reached.

Mr. Forrestall: Does the commission deal with that in their report or do they simply arbitrarily suggest figures?

Mr. Muggah: I am sorry, I do not recall. I think I could give you a copy of that report if you do not already have one. You may have a copy of the green report.

Mr. Hamel: Mr. Chairman, I read the report of the royal commission but I do not remember all of the details. However, there is one point that perhaps should be kept in mind, and this is the fact that under Quebec law each party or each candidate of a recognized party is entitled to a representative in each poll and this representative is paid by the state, and this is not provided in your Act, so under the Quebec Act the maximum expenses allowed are smaller than they are in the Nova Scotia Act, and this is one of the reasons...

Mr. Forrestall: Supplied by the party.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Forrestall: In Nova Scotia. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we could ask the province if they could make on or more copies of the report available to us at their convenience.

The Chairman: Do you have additional copies of the Commission report?

Mr. Hickey: How many would you like to have?

Mr. Forrestall: About 20.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Monsieur le président, un des témoins peut-il nous dire comment vous avez établi le montant des dépenses du parti et du candidat?

M. Muggah: Comme je l'ai dit tout à l'heure, il y a eu une Commission d'enquête à ce sujet, dont, si je me souviens bien, la Loi suit de près les recommandations. La Commission à son tour a été frappée par la Loi québécoise. Je ne me souviens plus pour quelles raisons la Commission a choisi ces chiffres ou pourquoi le gouvernement s'est départi des chiffres utilisés au Québec.

M. Forrestall: C'est une procédure tellement nouvelle qu'il ne doit pas encore y avoir de règles d'établies?

M. Muggah: Je ne pense pas qu'il y avait autrefois des montants de dépenses d'élections qui auraient pu servir à établir une moyenne.

M. Forrestall: La Commission en parle-t-elle dans son rapport ou si elle suggère simplement un montant?

M. Muggah: Je ne me souviens pas. Je pourrais vous donner un exemplaire de son rapport. Vous avez un exemplaire du rapport vert.

M. Hamel: Monsieur le président, j'ai lu le rapport de la Commission royale, mais je ne me souviens pas de tous les détails. Mais il y a un point à ne pas oublier, c'est qu'en vertu de la Loi québécoise, chaque candidat d'un parti reconnu a droit à un représentant dans chacun des bureaux de votation et ce représentant est payé par l'État—et ceci n'est pas dans votre Loi—le montant maximum permis par la Loi québécoise est inférieur à celui de la Nouvelle-Écosse, et alors—c'est une des raisons...

M. Forrestall: Fourni par le parti.

M. Hamel: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Pourrait-on demander à la province de nous faire parvenir un ou deux exemplaires supplémentaires de ce rapport?

Le président: Avez-vous des exemplaires supplémentaires de ce rapport?

M. Hickey: Combien en voudriez-vous?

M. Forrestall: 20, environ.

[Text]

Mr. Hickey: I have already sent 14 copies to the House of Commons.

The Chairman: We already have 14 copies that were sent by Mr. Hickey.

Mr. Forrestall: That is fine. Presumably when we get back to Ottawa we will have them available to us to look over this fall.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel?

Mr. Forrestall: If we could go on a bit further, does this absolutely restrict money in every sense? Does it restrict the right of others to spend money on a candidate's behalf or on behalf of a party? I am talking about funds that might be expended other than by the official party, by the candidate, by the party's agent or agents or by the candidate's official agent.

Mr. Muggah: As I recall it, Mr. Chairman, all expenses are to be paid by or through the agent. there is quite a lengthy definition of election expenses, and it excludes the following:

(7A) "election expenses" means all expenses incurred during an election for the purpose of promoting or opposing directly or indirectly the election of a candidate, or a person who becomes or is likely to become a candidate, or the program or policy of a candidate or party and includes expenditures incurred before an election for literature, objects or materials of an advertising nature used during the election for a purpose above referred to, but does not include:

(a) the cost of publication in a newspaper or other periodical of editorials, news, reports or letters to the editor...

(b) the cost of transmission by a radio or television station of a broadcast of news or comment that is made in the same manner and under the same regulations as outside the election period...

(c) the necessary cost of holding a convention...

[Interpretation]

M. Hickey: J'en ai déjà fait parvenir 14 aux Communes.

Le président: Nous avons déjà les 14 exemplaires qui ont été envoyés par M. Hickey.

M. Forrestall: Très bien. Nous les retrouverons probablement à notre retour à Ottawa, et nous les examinerons cet automne.

Le président: M. Hamel.

M. Forrestall: Allons un peu plus loin—ceci restreint-il l'argent dans tous les sens? Ceci restreint-il le droit pour d'autres personnes de dépenser de l'argent pour un candidat ou pour un parti? Je parle des fonds qui peuvent être dépensés par d'autres que par le parti officiel ou par le candidat ou le ou les agents officiels du parti?

M. Muggah: Si je me souviens bien, monsieur le président, toutes les dépenses doivent être payées par l'agent ou par son intermédiaire l'expression «dépenses électorales». On peut y diare. Il y a toute une longue définition de lire ce qui suit:

(7A) «dépenses électorales» désignent toutes les dépenses encourues pendant une élection dans le but de favoriser ou combattre directement ou indirectement l'élection d'un candidat, ou d'une personne qui devient ou peut devenir candidate, ou le programme ou la politique d'un candidat ou d'un parti, et englobent les dépenses encourues avant une élection pour la diffusion de brochures, objets et matériel de nature publicitaire dans le but sus-mentionné, mais n'incluent pas:

(a) le coût de la publication dans un journal ou autre périodique d'éditoriaux, nouvelles, rapports ou lettres à l'éditeur, publiés de la même manière et selon les mêmes règles qu'en temps habituel et gratuitement, sans récompense ou promesse de paiement ou de récompense, si le journal ou autre périodique n'est pas établi dans le but de l'élection et si le rythme et la distribution de la publication ne diffère pas des périodes non-électorales.

(b) le coût de la transmission par une station de radio ou de télévision de la diffusion de nouvelles ou de commentaires organisée de la manière habituelle aux périodes non-électorales, et selon les mêmes règlements, sans paiement, récompense ou promesse de paiement ou de récompense.

(c) les frais nécessaires à la tenue d'un congrès...

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: It excludes the cost . . .

Mr. Muggah: The cost of holding a convention.

Mr. Forrestall: Of a convention that nominates a candidate.

Mr. Muggah: It reads:

(c) the necessary cost of holding a convention in respect of an electoral district for the selection of a candidate including the reasonable expenses of the candidates at the convention, the cost of renting a hall and the convening of delegates but not including publicity costs and apart from expenses of candidates other than the candidates selected, shall not exceed one thousand dollars;

It allows up to $1,000 convention expenses.

Mr. Forrestall: Going back to the restrictions on the newspapers, is there a requirement under the regulations which would imply a legal responsibility on the part of a newspaper not to accept a volunteered ad?

Mr. Muggah: No.

Mr. Forrestall: What if somebody with the best of intentions unwittingly went ahead and simply did something after the fact? Does all a party have to do is say "Oh, gee, look what my friend has gone and done", such as $4,000 worth of television time or a full page ad in the newspaper. How is that protected against?

Mr. Muggah: I think I would have to check back on that.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you recall if there are regulations that would cover . . .

Mr. Muggah: I do not recall that, no.

Mr. Forrestall: However, the Act does stimulate the responsibility of the candidate and his party for money spent on their behalf?

Mr. Muggah: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Francis?

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps somebody else could pursue more articulately what I am after.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Cela ne comprend pas le coût . . .

M. Muggah: Le coût nécessaire à la tenue d'un congrès.

M. Forrestall: D'un congrès où un candidat est mis en nomination.

M. Muggah: Le texte se lit comme il suit:

(c) les frais nécessaires à la tenue d'un congrès relatif à une circonscription électorale pour le choix d'un candidat y compris les dépenses raisonnables des candidats au congrès, les frais de location de salle et de réunion des délégués, sans inclure les frais de publicité et, en dehors des dépenses des candidats autres que les candidats choisis, ne devront pas excéder mille dollars;

On alloue jusqu'à $1,000 pour les dépenses de la tenue d'un congrès.

M. Forrestall: Mais pour revenir aux restrictions imposées aux journaux, n'y a-t-il pas un article en vertu du Règlement qui laisserait entendre qu'un journal a la responsabilité légale de ne pas accepter une annonce bénévole.

M. Muggah: Non.

M. Forrestall: Qu'est ce qui se passe si quelqu'un avec les meilleures intentions du monde, sans le vouloir, agit à l'encontre de ce Règlement. Est-ce que tout ce que le parti peut faire, c'est de dire: «Oh, je regrette; voyez ce que mon ami a fait, mais c'est fait et nous n'y pouvons rien». Par exemple, si on accepte $4,000 de publicité à la télévision ou d'annonces dans les journaux? Comment peut-on se protéger contre une telle chose?

M. Muggah: Il faudrait que je vérifie cela à nouveau.

M. Forrestall: Vous vous souvenez s'il y a des règlements qui couvriraient . . .

M. Muggah: Non, je ne me souviens pas de cela.

M. Forrestall: La Loi stipule la responsabilité du candidat et de son parti pour l'argent dépensé par eux?

M. Muggah: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Francis?

M. Forrestall: Quelqu'un pourrait peut-être expliquer plus clairement ce que je veux dire.

[Text]

Mr. Lefebvre: I do not understand this completely, but with respect to reimbursement of election expenses is the reimbursement only made to the candidate or are expenses also reimbursed to the recognized parties as well?

Mr. Muggah: To both.

Mr. Lefebvre: To both?

Mr. Muggah: Yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is different than in Quebec, is it not? In Quebec they only pay it to the candidates.

Mr. Francis: What is...

Mr. Lefebvre: I am trying to understand this.

Mr. Muggah: If you will look at Section 164A on page 8 of the amendments, that sets out the limit on the party expenses and then Section 164B deals with the reimbursement of candidates' expenses.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes. I understand that, but I cannot see where you reimburse the parties.

Mr. Benjamin: It is 40 cents.

Mr. Lefebvre: No, that is the limit of the expenses, not the reimbursement.

Mr. MacDermaid: Pardon me, you are right.

Mr. Lefebvre: You control the party's expenses but you do not reimburse any part of it.

Mr. Benjamin: Is it correct then, for example, in a riding of 10,000 voters that the candidate would be eligible to be reimbursed for a total of $9,250 and the party would be limited to expanding not more than $4,000?

Mr. MacDermaid: How many electors did you say there were?

Mr. Benjamin: Say, for example, that there are 10,000 electors, the party is then limited to spending $4,000, 40 cents a voter, for which there is no reimbursement and the candidate would be eligible to be reimbursed in an amount not exceeding $9,250, $5,000 for the first 5,000 voters and $4,250 for the next 5,000 voters? The party one is out. Do I have that right? Oh, I see, the candidate's expenses cannot exceed $9,250?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: That is it. The party can spend up to $4,000, the candidate can spend

[Interpretation]

M. Lefebvre: A propos de remboursement des dépenses électorales, est-ce que le remboursement n'est fait qu'au candidat ou bien y a-t-il aussi des dépenses qui sont remboursées aux partis reconnus?

M. Muggah: Aux deux.

M. Lefebvre: Aux deux?

M. Muggah: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: C'est différent à Québec n'est-ce pas? Au Québec, on ne rembourse que le candidat.

M. Francis: Qu'est-ce que...

M. Lefebvre: J'essaie de comprendre cela.

M. Muggah: L'article 164A à la page 8 des amendements établit la limite des dépenses du parti et l'article 164B traite du remboursement des dépenses du candidat.

M. Lefebvre: Oui, je comprends cela, mais comment est-ce que vous pouvez rembourser les partis?

M. Benjamin: C'est 40 cents.

M. Lefebvre: Non, cela c'est la limite des dépenses, non le remboursement.

M. MacDermaid: Excusez-moi, vous avez raison.

M. Lefebvre: Vous contrôlez les dépenses du parti, mais vous n'en remboursez aucune partie.

M. Benjamin: Par exemple, est-ce juste de dire que dans une circonscription de 10,000 électeurs, le candidat aurait droit à un remboursement totalisant $9,250 et le parti ne pourrait pas dépenser plus de $4,000?

M. MacDermaid: Combien d'électeurs, avez-vous dit?

M. Benjamin: Disons 10,000 électeurs. Le parti est limité à $4,000 de dépenses, $0.40 par électeur, une dépense qui n'est pas remboursée et le candidat pourrait avoir un remboursement d'un montant ne dépassant pas $9,250, $5,000 pour les 50 premiers électeurs et $4,250 pour les autres 5,000 électeurs. Le remboursement au parti est exclu. Est-ce que j'ai ce droit? Oh, je vois les dépenses du candidat ne peuvent pas dépasser $9,250?

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Benjamin: C'est juste. Les partis peuvent dépenser $4,000; le candidat peut dépenser up to $9,250, and then the reimbursement is 25 cents per elector. He could be reimbursed for a maximum of $2,500.

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: They could have spent $13,250? I have it now, I think. Then you are not as generous as I thought.

The Chairman: This has not been applied yet.

Mr. Benjamin: No.

The Chairman: Do you have any idea of the cost of the general provincial election in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Hickey: The last general election in 1967 cost $569,000, in round figures.

The Chairman: $569,000.

Mr. Forrestall: What was the federal cost?

Mr. Hamel: Our election cost $1.25 per elector and we had 412,791 electors in Nova Scotia, so it was roughly $525,000.

Mr. MacDermaid: Ours cost us about $1.20 or $1.25, roughly.

Mr. Hickey: I have a breakdown of the enumeration costs if you are interested. The cost of the enumeration was $170,938; the printing of the voters' lists was $73,026; returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerks and poll clerks totalled $257,290; the revising officers, $19,413; the forms, the ballot paper, trucking and miscellaneous items cost approximately $30,000; salaries and additional help, $10,000; rent for the polling booths and the constables' fees on election day, $8,345, and rough and ready that totals $569,000.

Mr. MacDermaid: The province's tariff of fees is practically identical with the federal, and that is why our costs per voter is the same as yours.

Mr. Forrestall: We found it slightly higher in Quebec, did we not, the cost of having a provincial election?

The Chairman: The cost of the provincial election in Quebec included the reimbursement of the election expenses to candidates. This is why it is difficult to make comparisons between the two systems before they apply in both provinces. Do you have any estimated figures on what this amendment is going to cost the province?

[Interprétation]

$9,250 et le remboursement est de $0.25 par électeur? Il pourrait être remboursé pour un maximum de $2,500.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Ils auraient pu dépenser $13,250? J'ai compris, Vous n'êtes pas aussi généreux que je le pensais.

Le président: Ceci n'a pas encore été mis en vigueur.

M. Benjamin: Non.

Le président: Avez-vous une idée des frais des élections provinciales de la Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. Hickey: Les dernières élections en 1967 ont coûté $569,000 en chiffres ronds.

Le président: $569,000.

M. Forrestall: Quel est le coût d'une élection fédérale?

M. Hamel: Notre élection coûte $1.25 par électeur et nous avions 412,791 électeurs en Nouvelle-Écosse, ce qui fait environ $525,000.

M. MacDermaid: La nôtre nous a coûté environ $1.20 ou $1.25.

M. Hickey: J'ai fait une ventilation des frais d'énumération. Frais de l'énumération: $170,938; impression de la liste des électeurs: $73,026; officiers rapporteurs, leurs adjoints, commis etc.: $257,290; reviseurs: $19,413, papier, camionnage, etc.: $30,000 environ; salaires, traitements, aide supplémentaire, etc.: $10,000; loyer des bureaux de votation, honoraires des constables: $8,345, ce qui fait un total de $569,000.

M. MacDermaid: Les frais des provinces sont à peu près les mêmes; voilà pourquoi le coût par électeur est le même que le vôtre.

M. Forrestall: Dans le Québec, le coût est légèrement supérieur, n'est-ce pas? Le coût de tenir une élection provinciale?

Le président: Le coût des dernières élections fédérales comprenait le remboursement aux candidats. C'est la raison pour laquelle il est difficile de faire des comparaisons entre les deux régimes avant qu'ils n'aient été appliqués dans les deux provinces. Avez-vous une estimation des frais aux provinces à cause de cet amendement?

[Text]

Mr. Hickey: No, I have not completed that yet.

Mr. MacDermaid: It would be one quarter of $550,000, whatever that works out to.

Mr. Hamel: It is more than that because you have more than one candidate per elector.

Mr. MacDermaid: You are quite right. It is double.

Mr. Hamel: It depends on the number of candidates. You almost have to work on the actual figures of the last election because you may have one candidate who gets 85 per cent of the votes and he is the only one who will be reimbursed. The others do not get anything. However, in another district all the candidates may be reimbursed for the whole amount.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask one further question?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: It is going back a bit, but what was the percentage of electors on the list who actually voted in the last provincial election?

Mr. MacDermaid: It was 77 per cent, I believe.

Mr. Hamel: It was 77 per cent in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacDermaid: It is usually higher than that.

Mr. Hamel: It was 82 per cent in the federal election in 1968 in Nova Scotia.

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Going back to this business of the limits on expenses, I notice there is a section here which states:

164A (1) Election expenses of a party during a general election...

It is not specific regarding candidates, it just says:

(3) Election expenses of a candidate shall not exceed...

What is to prevent a party from spending large amounts of money immediately before a general election? Do you have any safeguards or provisions in your legislation that prior to the calling of an election—I presume you are safe enough with your candidate because it just says: "His expenses shall not exceed." It does not say during an election. Yes it does,

[Interpretation]

M. Hickey: Non, je n'ai pas terminé encore.

M. MacDermaid: Ce serait un quart de $550,000.

M. Hamel: C'est plus que cela car vous avez plus d'un candidat par électeur.

M. MacDermaid: C'est tout à fait juste. C'est le double.

M. Hamel: Cela dépend du nombre de candidats. Il faut vraiment utiliser des chiffres réels de la dernière élection car vous pouvez avoir un candidat qui obtient 85 p. 100 des votes et il sera le seul à être remboursé. Les autres n'obtiennent rien. Néanmoins, dans un autre district tous les candidats peuvent être remboursés pour tout le montant. Monsieur le président, puis-je poser une autre question?

Le président: Oui, monsieur Hamel.

M. Hamel: Je fais un retour en arrière. Quel a été le pourcentage des électeurs qui ont voté aux dernières élections provinciales?

M. MacDermaid: 77 p. 100, je crois.

M. Hamel: 77 p. 100 en Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. MacDermaid: C'est plus que cela ordinairement.

M. Hamel: En Nouvelle-Écosse, pour l'élection fédérale de 1968, le pourcentage était de 82 p. 100.

Le président: Oui. Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Revenons à la question des restrictions des dépenses électorales. Je remarque qu'un article stipule que:

164A(1) Les dépenses d'élection engagées par un parti au cours des élections générales...

En ce qui concerne les candidats, on y trouve rien de précis.

(3) Les dépenses d'élection d'un candidat ne doivent pas excéder ..

Qu'est-ce qui empêche un parti de dépenser de fortes sommes immédiatement avant les élections? Est-ce que vous avez des dispositions dans votre loi qui assurent une certaine sécurité avant le déclenchement d'une élection. Je suppose que vous êtes en sécurité vis-à-vis de votre candidat puisqu'on lit: Les dépenses d'élection d'un candidat ne doivent pas ex-too, so in both cases either the candidates and the party—would prevent them from expending much greater amounts of money prior to the actual issue of the election writ?

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Mind you, they would have to be a little careful here because if you look at the definition of “during an election” it includes the period between the dissolution of the House of Assembly or the appearance of a vacancy in consequence of which a writ for election is eventually issued and when a candidate is declared elected. You may have a little period there before you issue your writ, I would assume, under that definition.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, you might be covered here in a by-election, but in a general election when the House is dissolved...

Mr. MacDermaid: You go right to the polls.

Mr. Benjamin: ... the election is not on the same day and everybody in the province knows there is an election coming any time, so you have no way of overseeing expenditures immediately prior to it.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is a good point. I will have to remember that.

Mr. Benjamin: I am thinking of the parties. They have got lots to spend.

The Chairman: Mr. Francis.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask one other question and sort out the answer which, no doubt is very simple, but I just have not been able to find it. Who nominates the Deputy Returning Officer and the Poll Clerk? How are the Deputy Returning Officer and the Poll Clerk named?

Mr. MacDermaid: They are selected by the Returning Officer.

Mr. Francis: Is there any recommendation from any of the official parties in this respect?

Mr. MacDermaid: I would not know.

Mr. Francis: But the Act allows the discretion to the Returning Officer?

Mr. MacDermaid: Right.

Mr. Francis: I understand in Quebec they have this split between the Deputy Returning Officer and the Poll Clerk, the two official céder... Il n'est pas dit au cours des périodes électorales, si oui c'est ce qui est dit, de sorte que pour les candidats aussi bien que pour les partis, dites-moi ce qui les empêche de dépenser des sommes beaucoup plus fortes avant qu'on ait déclaré des élections, avant la parution du «bref» d'élection?

[Interprétation]

M. MacDermaid: Il faut qu'ils soient très prudents parce que cette période «durant les élections» va depuis le moment de la dissolution des chambres ou la création d'une vacance grâce à laquelle un bref d'élection fait son apparition, jusqu'au moment où le candidat est déclaré élu. En vertu de cette définition, il reste peut-être peu de temps avant la tenue du bref d'élection.

M. Benjamin: Vous pouvez être protégés dans une élection complémentaire mais aux élections générales au moment où la Chambre est dissoute...

M. MacDermaid: Vous prenez directement part au vote.

M. Benjamin: On dissout les chambres dès qu'on déclare des élections. Tout le monde sait qu'une élection aura lieu très prochainement. Vous n'avez aucun moyen de contrôler les dépenses immédiatement avant les élections.

M. Lefebvre: C'est une excellente étude du problème. J'essaierai de m'en souvenir.

M. Benjamin: Je pense aux partis qui ont beaucoup à dépenser.

Le président: Monsieur Francis.

M. Francis: Je voulais poser une autre question et saisir la réponse qui est très simple, sans doute. Je ne parviens pas toutefois à la trouver. Qui nomme le président général des élections et le greffier du bureau de scrutin?

M. MacDermaid: C'est le président général actuel qui les nomme.

M. Francis: Est-ce que les partis officiels ont formulé des recommandations à ce sujet?

M. MacDermaid: Je ne le sais pas.

M. Francis: Mais la loi n'accorde-t-elle pas une certaine latitude au président général?

M. MacDermaid: C'est juste.

M. Francis: Dans le Québec, si je comprends bien, il existe une division entre le président général et les greffiers des deux parties, which seems to me to have some merit because that guarantees two opposite and opposed interests being present to watch each other during election day. Has this been considered in Nova Scotia?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: No.

Mr. Francis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Macquarrie: I noticed, Mr. Chairman, you have Tuesday set as the day of election. Is this a long-standing practice in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, it was a variable factor before this Election Act came into force.

Mr. Macquarrie: I wonder what prompted the fixation upon Tuesday. Over in Prince Edward Island we had a Royal Commission of which I was a member, I may say. They moved the date from Thursday which it had been for a long long time to Monday believing that that was the best possible day. Why do you have Tuesday? Does anyone recall any particular reason for that?

Mr. MacDermaid: There may be an answer for it in the Royal Commission's report.

Mr. Muggah: What is the cut-off date for radio or television broadcasts?

Mr. MacDermaid: Forty-eight hours.

Mr. Muggah: This gives you two or three days I suppose, Saturday night, Sunday and Monday.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, the Radio Act—I think this is what the Chief Electoral Officer said on the broadcasting side of things—has cut it down to 24 hours in the federal jurisdiction, whereas the Canada Elections Act still has it at 48 hours. Many people find that this Sabbath calm is literally a God send to candidate, people and everyone else.

Mr. MacDermaid: To go back to your earlier question, Mr. Chairman, on why polling day was on a Tuesday. During recent years, Tuesday has been the most frequently chosen day by the Governor in Council for polling day in their general elections was the main reason they chose it. They noticed that the Canada Elections Act was on Monday, but they felt that that ran into quite a few holidays and those were the two reasons for selecting Tuesday.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

partis officiels. Ceci me semble bon car cela assure une garantie à un des deux adversaires. Ils ont la possibilité de surveiller leur comportement réciproque. A-t-on envisagé une formule semblable en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. MacDermaid: Non.

M. Francis: Merci, monsieur le président.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, généralement, vous choisissez le mardi comme jour d'élection. Est-ce une tradition en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. MacDermaid: Non c'était un facteur variable avant que la Loi électorale ne soit en vigueur.

M. Macquarrie: Je me demande pourquoi vous vous êtes arrêtés au mardi. Dans l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, une commission royale dont j'ai été membre a passé du jeudi au lundi, le jeudi étant une journée traditionnelle, pensant que c'était la journée la plus avantageuse possible. Pourquoi avez-vous choisi le mardi? Y a-t-il quelqu'un ici qui se souviendrait d'une raison spéciale attachée à ce choix?

M. MacDermaid: Peut-être que le rapport de la Commission donne des justifications.

M. Muggah: A cause de la cessation des rapports? Quel est le délai de la publicité électorale?

M. MacDermaid: Quarante-huit heures.

M. Muggah: Ceci vous laisse le samedi soir, le dimanche et le lundi j'imagine.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, ce que le président général des élections a dit, je pense, concernant la loi sur la radio et l'aspect de la radiodiffusion est que la loi fixe un délai de 24 heures, alors que la loi des élections fédérales garde toujours le délai de 48 heures. Bien des gens estiment que ce calme sabbatique est très bénéfique aux candidats et aux partis.

M. MacDermaid: Si nous revenons à une question antérieure, monsieur le président, en ce qui a trait à la raison de l'élection du mardi, c'est que le Gouverneur général a choisi ce jour pour les élections générales et nous avons suivi ses pas. Ils ont remarqué que la loi sur les élections fédérales était fixée au lundi, mais ils ont pris conscience que ceci se heurtait à bien des jours de congé. Voilà pourquoi on a proposé le mardi.

M. Macquarrie: Merci.

[Texte]

The Chairman: May we say that the Chief Electoral Officer in Quebec suggested yesterday that one of the three best days for an election was Tuesday.

Mr. MacDermid: One of the things we did do in our new Elections Act and this is apropos of nothing that anybody has brought up, was to reduce the number of people required to sign nomination papers. I notice you have 25 people signing the nomination papers as we used to have, but we reduced it to 5. This is just a little point.

Mr. Macquarrie: We used to have 10 not long ago and then we put it up to 25.

The Chairman: Do you have another point, Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Jerome just pointed out what might be the answer. I notice on the first page as he has pointed out to me;

...a candidate or party and includes expenditures incurred before an election for literature, objects or materials of an advertising nature...

I guess that covers you in general elections.

Mr. MacDermid: Yes.

An hon. Member: Is that the definition of election expenses on the first page?

Mr. Benjamin: This leads me then to another question. Is there anyone in the Chief Electoral Office or do Returning Officers monitor literature and advertisements on T.V. and radio? What check do you have in terms of expenditures for literature and the dissemination of advertising on media before an election? Do you do any monitoring or do you envisage doing any monitoring since you have not had any experience with this as yet?

Mr. Hickey: It is all brand new. We have not had any experience with it at all.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you intend to monitor advertising, run a check on printing plants and this sort of thing?

Mr. Muggah: The Commission recommended a full-time chief electoral officer with an adequate staff to scrutinize expense accounts and generally to keep an eye constantly on party activities. I know this is being studied by the government, but they have not yet created an organization. How far that will go I could not say.

[Interprétation]

Le président: On peut dire que le chef général des élections du Québec, disait hier qu'un des trois jours les plus propices pour les élections était le mardi.

M. MacDermid: Un des effets de notre nouvelle loi, effet qui n'a été soulevé par personne ici, fut de réduire le nombre de gens nécessaires pour signer les papiers de mise en candidature. J'ai remarqué que vous avez 25 personnes pour cette fonction et que le nombre a été réduit à 5 personnes.

M. Macquarrie: Nous en avions 10, il n'y a pas très très longtemps, puis nous en avons demandé 25.

Le président: Vous avez un autre point à souligner, monsieur Benjamin?

M. Benjamin: M. Jerome vient de suggérer ce que pourrait être la réponse. Je lis à la page 1, que la politique d'un candidat ou d'un parti englobe les dépenses encourues avant une élection pour la diffusion de brochures, objets et matériel de nature publicitaire...

Ceci couvre les dépenses des élections.

M. MacDermid: C'est exact.

Une voix: Est-ce la définition des dépenses électorales en première page?

M. Benjamin: Ceci m'amène à poser une autre question, est-ce que quelqu'un du bureau du directeur général des élections ou du bureau du président général, assure une vérification des émissions publiques, des réclames électorales à la TV et à la radio? Du point de vue pécuniaire, quel contrôle exercez-vous sur les moyens publics de diffusion, de renseignements avant l'élection? Est-ce que vous avez une méthode de contrôle? Prévoyez-vous en organiser une si vous n'en avez pas encore fait l'expérience?

M. Hickey: Tout cela est neuf. Nous n'avons aucune expérience dans ce domaine.

M. Benjamin: Avez-vous l'intention d'exercer un contrôle sur la publicité auprès des imprimeries?

M. Muggah: La commission recommandait au directeur général des élections d'avoir suffisamment de personnel pour contrôler les dépenses, veiller constamment sur les activités des partis. Ceci a été examiné par le gouvernement mais il n'y a pas encore une organisation créée à cette fin. Dans quelle mesure, cela ira? Je ne saurais dire.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: The other point is where do you draw the line? How do you differentiate between what is election advertising and ordinary political education that any political party might put out before the actual calling of an election, such as the advertising of a political leader and the party's platform two months or one month before an election is called? Could that be construed as election advertising or not? Where do you draw the line?

Mr. Muggah: You might have to have the courts do that. It says:

...during an election for the purpose of promoting or opposing directly or indirectly the election of a candidate, or a person who becomes or is likely to become a candidate, or the program or policy of a candidate or a party...

Mr. Benjamin: This goes on all the time between elections. I mean elections are never over in that sense. All parties put out literature and advertisements, promoting themselves and opposing other parties. Do you not feel that you need some sort of a cut-off date prior to an election being called because even if you intend or plan to do some monitoring, when you have your first experience with these amendments, where do you draw the line?

Mr. Muggah: I do not know that any of us would have the answer. I doubt it. I think probably we had better send our chief electoral officer, when we get one, to Quebec and see how they handle it there.

The Chairman: Are there any more questions?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, is it possible—assuming that we are now about to adjourn, which appears likely—if any of the members have private questions or would like discussions will our guests be available for some time this afternoon in the event that there is the possibility of exploring some of these subjects further with informal discussion? I just wanted to find this out.

Mr. MacDermid: Yes.

The Chairman: They said that they will be.

Mr. Jerome: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter: Maybe the question was asked during my absence, but I wonder if the Chief

[Interpretation]

Mr. Benjamin: Où est la limite? Comment définissez-vous ce qui est de la publicité électorale ou simplement de la publicité éducative émanant d'un parti ou d'un autre avant le déclenchement d'une élection? La publicité électorale, un mois ou deux avant des élections, peut-elle être considérée comme publicité électorale? Où faut-il établir la ligne de démarcation?

Mr. Muggah: La cour devra peut-être se charger de cela. Le statut dit:

pendant une élection dans le but de favoriser ou combattre directement ou indirectement l'élection d'un candidat, ou d'une personne qui devient ou peut devenir candidate, ou le programme ou la politique d'un candidat ou d'un parti...

Mr. Benjamin: Ceci est constamment entre les élections. Ceci se passe continuellement entre deux élections. La période électorale n'est jamais terminée dans ce sens; chacun des partis diffuse des imprimés pour se mettre en valeur et s'opposer à d'autres partis politiques. N'avez-vous pas besoin d'une ligne de démarcation avant le déclenchement d'une élection même si vous avez l'intention d'exercer une certaine surveillance lorsque vous aurez fait vos premières expériences dans l'application de cet amendement? Où tracez-vous la ligne de démarcation?

Mr. Muggah: Je ne pense pas que nous ayons pour le moment une réponse à ce sujet. Il faudra peut-être prendre conseil du directeur général des élections du Québec pour voir comment ils règlent la question là-bas.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions à poser messieurs?

Mr. Jerome: Monsieur le président, à supposer que nous allons ajourner, ce qui semble très possible, et si les députés ont des questions privées, serait-il possible que nos invités soient à notre disposition pour un peu de temps cet après-midi, pouvons-nous nous entretenir cœur à cœur avec eux? Je voudrais bien savoir si cela est possible?

Mr. MacDermid: Oui.

Le président: Nos invités disent qu'ils y seront.

Mr. Jerome: Je vous remercie.

Le président: M. Carter.

Mr. Carter: Il se peut que cette question ait été posée pendant mon absence. Je me

[Texte]

Electoral Officer, Mr. MacDermaid, could tell us whether or not posters are allowed to be displayed on polling day in or near polling stations?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, not within a certain distance, other than the official ones.

Mr. Carter: Do you have a set limit or distance?

Mr. MacDermaid: It is a limit by distance, in or without the polling station. I will try to find it.

Mr. Benjamin: How far out is it?

Mr. MacDermaid: I think it is 3,000 feet.

Mr. Forrestall: I think it is 500 or 600 feet or something like that.

Mr. Francis: That is a healthy provision and I think it is a good thing.

The Chairman: Is that different, Mr. Hamel, from the Canada Elections Act?

Mr. Hamel: There is no restriction whatsoever in the Canada Elections Act.

The Chairman: There is no restriction?

Mr. Hamel: The only thing we can control is in the poll itself because we rent the place and, therefore, we act not as owner, but as renter, so we take down everything, but there could be a banner or there could be a sign right across the street. The only provision in the Canada Elections Act covers banners, signs on cars and trucks and that kind of thing.

Mr. MacDermaid: This is covered under Section 178 of our Act and it is within 200 feet. Also, the one Mr. Hamel referred to about the loud speakers, flags and so on, is covered under Paragraph (b).

Mr. Carter: Do you allow loud speakers to be used in the cities on polling day by a candidate?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, they are not allowed on election day.

Mr. Carter: Not allowed?

Mr. MacDermaid: No.

Mr. Francis: There would be municipal ordinances regulating that in the cities. In the rural areas it is not usually desirable.

[Interprétation]

demande si le directeur général des élections pourrait nous dire si nous avons le droit d'afficher des placards le jour des élections, près des bureaux de scrutin?

M. MacDermaid: Non, pas à l'intérieur d'une certaine distance, qui est autre que la distance officielle.

M. Carter: Avez-vous une limite fixe ou précise?

M. MacDermaid: C'est une limite imposée par la distance entre ou en dehors des bureaux de vote. Je vais tout faire pour vous renseigner.

M. Benjamin: Quelle serait cette distance?

M. MacDermaid: Je pense que c'est 3,000 pieds.

M. Forrestall: Je pense que c'est 500 ou 600 pieds.

M. Francis: Je crois que c'est une bonne disposition et qu'elle aura d'heureux effets.

Le président: Monsieur Hamel, est-ce différent pour la Loi sur les élections fédérales?

M. Hamel: Aucune restriction à ce sujet dans la loi fédérale.

Le président: Aucune restriction?

M. Hamel: Le seul contrôle que nous pouvons exercer est à l'intérieur du bureau de scrutin parce que nous le louons et dès lors nous n'agissons pas en propriétaire mais en locataire, nous tenons compte de tout, mais il pourrait y avoir banderoles et signes de l'autre côté de la rue.

La seule disposition qui figure dans la loi fédérale régit les oriflammes, les banderoles sur les voitures dans les rues, etc. Les affiches aussi.

M. MacDermaid: Ceci est couvert en vertu de l'article 178 de la loi et il ne permet pas une distance à l'intérieur de 200 pieds. Quant aux haut-parleurs et aux drapeaux monsieur Hamel dit que l'alinéa (b) s'occupe d'eux.

M. Carter: Vous autorisez les hauts-parleurs dans les villes, le jour de l'élection?

M. MacDermaid: Non, nous ne les permettons pas.

M. Carter: Ils ne sont pas permis?

M. MacDermaid: Non.

M. Francis: Dans les villes, il y a normalement des règlements à cet effet. Ce n'est habituellement pas souhaitable dans les régions rurales.

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: It has happened and we have stopped it. We also had posters in a polling booth on one occasion and we had them removed.

Mr. Jerome: There is perhaps one final question I would like to ask. Have any representations been made about keeping open drinking establishments and liquor stores in the Province of Nova Scotia? Have any representations been made to any of the gentlemen here in that direction?

Mr. MacDermaid: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Are they closed all day or do you open them after the polls close?

Mr. MacDermaid: I think the bars are allowed to open after the polls close. I have forgotten the exact regulation.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. MacDermaid, there is an amendment proposed to our federal Act which will make it much easier to accommodate the principle of the utilization of public buildings, such as schools in the location of polling booths. Is this a practice that is prevalent here?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, that is very strongly recommended to the returning officers. We do use schools, universities and so on where it is convenient to get a number of polling stations located in the one building. There is a provision in our Act permitting that.

Mr. Forrestall: There has been no trouble arising from that?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, none at all.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am delighted with your sample ballot on which you have a Christmas tree exporter. That is good. I take it that the printer's name is on the back of your ballot?

Mr. MacDermaid: That is correct, that is on the next page.

Mr. Macquarrie: There is the old joke, of course, that when they used to have the printer's name on the front he got a good many votes in the olden days.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, does the Province of Nova Scotia retain the requirement of marking the ballot with an "x" or a cross?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, with a cross or an "x", but let me check.

Mr. Jerome: Yes, I notice the instructions are for making an "x" and I take it then that

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermaid: C'est arrivé mais on y a mis fin. Nous avons aussi des affiches dans les bureaux de votation et nous les avons fait enlever.

M. Jerome: C'est peut-être la dernière question que je voudrais poser. Est-ce qu'on a demandé que les régies des alcools et les débits de boissons soient ouverts les jours des élections en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. MacDermaid: Non.

M. Benjamin: Ces établissements sont-ils fermés toute la journée, ou les ouvre-t-on après la fermeture des bureaux de votation.

M. MacDermaid: Je crois que les bars peuvent ouvrir à la fermeture des bureaux de votation. Je ne me souviens pas du règlement exact.

M. Forrestall: M. MacDermaid, on a proposé qu'une modification soit apportée à notre loi fédérale ce qui faciliterait l'utilisation de bâtiments publics comme les écoles pour en faire des bureaux de votation. Cette pratique existe-t-elle ici?

M. MacDermaid: Ceci est recommandé aux présidents d'élection. Nous installons en effet les bureaux de votation dans les écoles, les universités partout où plusieurs bureaux peuvent être installés dans un seul bâtiment. Notre loi comporte une disposition à cet effet.

M. Forrestall: Il n'y a pas eu de problèmes?

M. MacDermaid: Non aucun.

M. Macquarrie: Votre modèle de bulletin me plaît beaucoup. Vous avez un exportateur d'arbres de Noël. Si je comprends bien, le nom de l'imprimeur figure au recto?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact, à la prochaine page.

M. Macquarrie: Autrefois paraît-il, le nom de l'imprimeur figurait au recto et il obtenait ainsi un grand nombre de votes.

M. Jerome: Est-ce que la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse exige toujours qu'on marque le nom du candidat avec une croix ou un X?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, avec un X ou une croix, permettez-moi de vérifier.

M. Jerome: Les directives demandent que l'on marque un X. Je pense que d'après les your regulations would require that any two lines which cross one another in the space opposite the candidate's name would be accepted as a properly marked ballot?

[Texte]

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, it says:

... by making a cross with a black lead pencil within the white space containing the name of the candidate.

Mr. Jerome: Do you require in the Province of Nova Scotia that the elector use the pencil that is provided or can he use a ballpoint pen or any other—

Mr. MacDermaid: No, he has to use the pencil.

Mr. Jerome: Failure to do so results in a spoiled ballot?

Mr. MacDermaid: That is right.

Mr. Jerome: Thank you.

Mr. Benjamin: There is no exception on the mark that is made, it has to be an "x" or a cross?

Mr. MacDermaid: There are various kinds of "x's", as Mr. Hamel knows, which are quite legal. They have been before the courts. As long as it comes within the legal definition of a cross.

Mr. Benjamin: It is limited to that and the matter of what is obviously the voter's intent with some other mark is not allowed.

Mr. MacDermaid: No, for instance, we have had them mark them on the back of the ballot in the exact space where it should go, but that would not be counted.

Mr. Forrestall: Judges of jurisdiction who have presided over recounts, though, have historically been very lenient. Many of them have been very lenient in accepting as a general principle the intention of the voter in the marking of the ballot. We have had some pretty diversified examples here in Nova Scotia of ballots that have been accepted by judges at recounts, including double "x's" and. .

Mr. MacDermaid: The only problem you get into there, Mr. Forrestall, is that it may be a means of identification of the voter that he cast his ballot for the proper party and I could see if you had two "x's" that it might be read that way.

Mr. Forrestall: In many years involved with it I never saw any ballots identified.

[Interprétation]

règlements deux lignes qui se croisent et sont apposées près du nom du candidat seront acceptées?

M. MacDermaid: Le texte est le suivant:

... en faisant une croix avec un crayon à mine noire dans l'espace blanc qui contient le nom du candidat.

M. Jerome: En Nouvelle-Écosse, l'électeur doit-il se servir du crayon fourni ou s'il peut se servir d'un stylo à bille ou d'autre chose?

M. MacDermaid: Non, il doit se servir du crayon.

M. Jerome: Autrement, le bulletin de vote est nul?

M. MacDermaid: C'est exact.

M. Jerome: Merci.

M. Benjamin: Le règlement concernant les marques ne souffre pas d'exception? Il doit s'agir d'un X ou d'une croix?

M. MacDermaid: Comme M. Hamel le sait, divers genres de X sont permis. Le cas a été porté devant les tribunaux. Du point de vue juridique la marque est admissible tant qu'on peut la définir comme étant une croix.

M. Benjamin: Le règlement se limite à cela, on ne tient pas compte de ce que pourrait être l'intention du voteur qui appose toute autre marque.

M. MacDermaid: Par exemple, certains ont marqué au verso du bulletin, à l'endroit même où la marque devait figurer mais cela n'a pas compté.

M. Forrestall: Les juges qui s'occupaient de recompter les votes ont montré beaucoup d'indulgence dans le passé. Ils acceptaient comme principe général l'intention du voteur. Par exemple, en Nouvelle-Écosse, il y a eu des bulletins qui ont été acceptés lors du recompte, alors qu'ils étaient marqués d'une double croix ou de deux traits.

M. MacDermaid: Il n'y a qu'un seul problème, M. Forrestall. Le voteur pourrait indiquer ainsi qu'il vote pour le bon parti. Je pense que les deux X pourraient être interprétés de cette façon.

M. Forrestall: Je m'occupe d'élections depuis des années et je n'ai jamais vu reconnaître l'auteur d'un bulletin de vote.

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: You would be amazed how people can identify their ballot.

The Chairman: With this new amendment which dealt with the request to put the recognized party on the ballot, will the ballot be different from the one shown on page 143?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, if you cross out the word "barrister" and put in "recognized party" instead, you will see the way it will look.

The Chairman: But you have kept the same form of ballot?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Muggah: We just replaced the occupation by the party name or the independent designation.

Mr. Forrestall: When does this amendment come into effect?

Mr. MacDermaid: Six months after it was passed, October 22.

Mr. Benjamin: Does it apply to any by-elections from here on or only general elections?

Mr. Forrestall: On the 25th day, 6 months hence.

The Chairman: In a few days. Mr. Peddle.

Mr. Peddle: I would like to ask Mr. Hickey a question. Some time ago, not too long ago, there was a statement made by a senator, I think Senator Stanbury, regarding Nova Scotian politics. I wonder if he was referring to the election practices in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Hickey: I did not hear your question. I am sorry.

Mr. Peddle: Yes, Senator Stanbury made a statement a while ago, was he referring to election practices?

Mr. Hickey: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Francis: Without a direct quotation from the Senator, I do not quite know what the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Forrestall: A deliberate malicious attack on the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Francis: I am not aware of the problem. I am sure that the hon. member knows that press reports are hardly the basis on which to form an opinion.

[Interpretation]

M. MacDermaid: Vous seriez surpris de voir les moyens que prennent les gens pour faire reconnaître leur bulletin.

Le président: Avec cette modification demandant que les partis admis figurent sur le bulletin, est-ce que cela signifie que le bulletin sera différent de celui qui figure à la page 143?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, si vous supprimez le mot, avocat pour mettre «parti admis» vous verrez de quoi cela aura l'air.

Le président: ... Est-ce que vous conservez le même genre de bulletin? Uniquement remplaçant la profession par le parti.

M. MacDermaid: Oui.

M. Muggah: Nous avons simplement remplacé l'occupation par le nom du parti ou la désignation indépendante.

M. Forrestall: Quand cet amendement est-il entré en vigueur?

M. MacDermaid: Six mois après son adoption, le 22 octobre.

M. Benjamin: Le règlement s'applique-t-il aux élections complémentaires futures, ou seulement aux élections générales?

M. Forrestall: Le 25^e jour dans six mois.

Le président: Dans quelques jours. M. Peddle.

M. Peddle: Je voudrais poser une question à M. Hickey. Il n'y a pas très longtemps, un sénateur, le sénateur Stanbury, je crois, a fait une déclaration à propos de la politique en Nouvelle-Écosse. Est-ce qu'il parlait des pratiques électorales de la Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. Hickey: Je n'ai pas compris la question. Je m'excuse.

M. Peddle: Oui. Dans sa déclaration d'il y a quelque temps, le sénateur Stanbury faisait-il allusion aux pratiques électorales?

M. Hickey: Pas que je sache.

M. Francis: Je ne sais pas ce que le député veut dire, s'il ne cite pas les paroles du sénateur.

M. Forrestall: C'était une méchante attaque contre la province de la Nouvelle-Écosse.

M. Francis: Je ne connais pas le problème. Je suis certain que le député sait que l'on ne peut formuler une opinion personnelle d'après ce que rapportent les journaux.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Peddle: This was a press statement and I wonder if Mr. Hickey knew if the Senator was referring to election practices in Nova Scotia as being corrupt.

Mr. MacDermaid: As was reported in the paper, it had nothing to do with the operation of the election machinery.

Mr. Peddle: I see.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask about Section 125, "Time to Employees" and so on. I thought Mr. Peddle would bring this up since he did yesterday. Your section dealing with this seems a bit more detailed than in other acts. Has there been any experience in Nova Scotia that has brought difficulty to employees in getting this hour off?

Mr. MacDermaid: This is a new provision in the Act. I believe we basically copied it from the federal Act.

Mr. Peddle: It is better than in the federal Act, actually.

Mr. MacDermaid: It is a little better; there have been no difficulties with it other than inquiries on what the law is.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, I would agree with my colleague, it is better than the other two. I also am glad, considering what happened in Newfoundland during the last election where many things happened, that you clarified what kind of time you are using, whether it is daylight or standard.

The Chairman: Are there any other points?

Mr. Francis: I have a question and it is the last one I have in mind which relates to procedures for the revision of the enumerated list which has always been a bit of a difficulty. Is there a distinction in your revisal procedures between rural and urban polls, to start with?

Mr. MacDermaid: No, it is run in exactly the same way in both areas. The Revising Officer sits for the required number of days.

Mr. Francis: The procedure is somewhat similar, I take it, to the federal Act in the representation before the Revising Officer and so forth?

[Interprétation]

Le président: A l'ordre s'il vous plaît!

M. Peddle: Monsieur le président, il s'agit d'une déclaration qui a été relevée par les journaux. Je voudrais savoir si M. Hickey savait si le sénateur disait que les pratiques électorales de la Nouvelle-Écosse étaient malhonnêtes.

M. MacDermaid: D'après le journal, cela n'a rien à voir avec le mécanisme électoral.

M. Peddle: Je vois.

M. Macquarrie: M. le président je voulais poser une question à propos de l'article 125, «Temps pour voter». Je croyais que M. Peddle en parlerait puisqu'il l'a fait hier. Votre article qui touche à ce sujet semble un peu plus détaillé que dans les autres lois. Est-ce qu'en certaines occasions des employés ont eu, en Nouvelle-Écosse, des difficultés à obtenir cette heure de congé?

M. MacDermaid: C'est une nouvelle disposition dans la Loi. Nous nous sommes fondés sur la loi fédérale.

M. Peddle: En réalité, elle est supérieure à la loi fédérale.

M. MacDermaid: Elle est un peu mieux; nous n'avons pas eu de difficulté à ce sujet sinon des demandes de renseignements sur la teneur de la loi.

M. Macquarrie: C'est vrai, je suis d'accord avec mon collègue; la Loi est supérieure aux deux autres. En vue de ce qui s'est passé à Terre-Neuve aux dernières élections, je suis heureux que vous ayez précisé si l'on doit se servir de l'heure avancée ou de l'heure normale.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions?

M. Francis: Ma question est la dernière qui se rapporte aux procédures de la révision de la liste électorale qui a toujours présenté certaines difficultés; est-ce qu'il y a une distinction entre les électeurs ruraux et les électeurs urbains dans vos procédés de revision?

M. MacDermaid: Non, la révision des listes se fait de la même façon dans les deux régions. Le reviseur des listes électorales siège pendant le nombre de jours requis.

M. Francis: La procédure est semblable à celle de la loi fédérale. Il y a représentation devant le reviseur des listes électorales et ainsi de suite?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermid: It is exactly the same as yours for the urban areas, but ours applies to the rural areas as well.

Mr. Francis: Yes, thank you, Mr. Chairman, that is all.

Mr. Muggah: On that point, Mr. Chairman, in a recent by-election in a fairly large constituency there were two Revising Officers rather than the one. It is possible to have more than one.

Mr. Francis: You have not had any particular difficulty with this feature of the Act?

Mr. MacDermid: No, we would not because in any event if the worst comes to the worst they can swear to it on election day.

Mr. Francis: That they cannot do under the federal Act. It can be done only in a very limited range where there is a proved error and omission between the enumeration and the printing of the list. I think that is the only circumstance under which this can be done with the federal Act, is that not so, Mr. Hamel?

Mr. Hamel: I am sorry I did not get the beginning.

Mr. Francis: The only situation, I believe in which someone could vote on election day if his name were not on the printed list and he had not gone before a Revising Officer would be because of an error in the list and proof of enumeration.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Francis: I think the only situation is a printing error and omission from the list.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct. If he can prove, in other words, that he actually was enumerated.

Mr. Francis: Yes, with the enumerator's slip.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, if he goes to the Returning Officer's office he will give him a statement or certificate and then he can vote with that.

Mr. Francis: That is the only circumstance in which we permit a person to vote on election day who has not gone through the formal procedure before a Revising Officer. I gather the Nova Scotia procedure is a little different on election day than the federal one.

Mr. Hamel: In urban areas.

Mr. MacDermid: No, your Section 46 is pretty well what we followed. If your name is

[Interpretation]

Mr. MacDermid: La méthode est la même que la vôtre pour les régions urbaines, mais la nôtre concerne aussi les régions rurales.

Mr. Francis: Oui. Merci, M. le président, c'est tout.

Mr. Muggah: A ce sujet, M. le président, lors d'une récente élection complémentaire dans une grande circonscription, il y a eu deux réviseurs au lieu d'un seul. Il est possible d'en avoir plus d'un.

Mr. Francis: Cette disposition de la loi ne vous a pas causé de difficulté?

Mr. MacDermid: Non, parce que si le pire se produit, ils peuvent en jurer le jour des élections.

Mr. Francis: Ils ne peuvent le faire en vertu de la loi fédérale sauf d'une façon très limitée lorsqu'il y a une erreur ou une omission trouvée entre l'impression et la parution de la liste. Au fédéral, la chose ne peut se faire qu'en une circonstance pareille, n'est-ce pas, monsieur Hamel?

Mr. Hamel: Je regrette, je n'ai pas compris le début.

Mr. Francis: Si le nom d'une personne ne figure pas sur la liste imprimée et qu'il n'a pas vu le réviseur, la seule raison qui lui permettrait de voter le jour de l'élection serait une erreur dans la liste et le recomptage des votes.

Mr. Hamel: C'est juste.

Mr. Francis: La seule exception serait une erreur d'impression et l'omission sur la liste.

Mr. Hamel: C'est juste. S'il peut prouver en d'autres mots que son nom avait réellement été porté sur la liste.

Mr. Francis: Oui, avec le bulletin de recensement.

Mr. Hamel: Oui, s'il va au bureau du réviseur, il peut lui donner une déclaration ou un certificat et voter.

Mr. Francis: C'est le seul cas où on autorise une personne à voter le jour des élections s'il n'a pas passé par la procédure normale de révision. Je crois qu'en Nouvelle-Écosse la procédure n'est pas tout à fait la même qu'au fédéral.

Mr. Hamel: Dans les régions urbaines.

Mr. MacDermid: Non, votre article 46 est à peu près le même que le nôtre. Si votre nom not on the list you can go and be vouched for in a rural area.

[Texte]

Mr. Francis: In a rural area, yes, that is so. I thought we were talking about the urban areas. In the urban areas it is not possible to vote.

Mr. MacDermaid: It is possible to vote in the urban areas with the added precaution that you must go before the Revising Officer on election day to get a certificate from him which you then take along with your voucher so it can be sworn on.

Mr. Francis: But you cannot do this under the federal Act?

Mr. MacDermaid: No.

Mr. Francis: In other words, you have added something of the rural procedures in the federal Act for election day only, but otherwise you followed the urban procedures of the federal Act.

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes.

Mr. Francis: I think that is a fair summary.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: If we find, even on the day before polling day, that a group of people were left out, we could by virtue of subsection 3 of Section 5 extend for that revisal district or that polling division the period of revision.

Mr. Francis: You have done so. I remember one instance where you did.

Mr. Hamel: Oh yes, but we would not do it for one or two people. We would do it for perhaps 10 or 12 people.

Mr. Forrestall: I know of many instances where people have presented themselves at the polls, found their names not on the list and have had to go back to a revising agent, and they get furious.

Mr. MacDermaid: Actually we are giving them something that they did not have before in the urban areas.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps this was not dealt with by the Commission in any way but would it not be more useful to have the simplicity of an oath. You said that as an added precaution you require the elector to go to a ne figure pas sur la liste, l'on peut se porter garant de vous dans une région rurale.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Francis: Il en est ainsi dans les régions rurales. Je pensais que nous parlions des régions urbaines. Dans les régions urbaines, il n'est pas possible de voter.

Mr. MacDermaid: Oui, il est possible de voter à condition que vous voyiez le reviseur le jour de l'élection et qu'il vous remette un certificat que vous apportez lorsque vous prêtez serment avec votre garant.

Mr. Francis: Mais vous ne pouvez pas le faire en vertu de la loi fédérale?

Mr. MacDermaid: Non.

Mr. Francis: Autrement dit, vous avez ajouté quelque chose de la procédure rurale de la loi fédérale pour le jour de l'élection, mais autrement vous vous en tenez aux procédures de la loi fédérale en ce qui concerne les régions urbaines?

Mr. MacDermaid: Oui.

Mr. Francis: Je crois que nous avons là un bon résumé?

Le président: Oui. M. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: Si nous constatons, la veille même d'une élection que les noms d'un groupe de personnes ont été omis, nous pouvons, en vertu du paragraphe 5 prolonger la période de révision pour ce district ou cette division électorale.

Mr. Francis: Vous l'avez fait. Je me souviens d'une occasion où vous l'avez fait.

Mr. Hamel: Oh oui, mais nous ne l'aurions pas fait s'il s'agissait d'une ou de deux personnes. Nous l'aurions fait peut-être s'il y avait 10 ou 12 personnes.

Mr. Forrestall: J'ai entendu plusieurs cas où des gens se sont présentés aux bureaux de scrutin et ont constaté que leurs noms n'étaient pas inscrits sur la liste et ont dû aller voir l'agent de revision; cette situation les rend furieux.

Mr. MacDermaid: En fait, nous leur fournissons quelque chose qui n'existait pas auparavant dans les régions urbaines.

Mr. Forrestall: Il se peut que la Commission ne s'en soit pas occupée du tout, mais ne serait-il pas préférable de les faire assermenter, tout simplement? Vous avez dit que par mesure de précaution supplémentaire, vous certain place and establish, I suppose, certain evidence. Why would that be required?

[Text]

Mr. MacDermaid: The reason we put it in is that in the rural areas the population is generally known to the people at the poll, whereas here they are not.

Mr. Forrestall: What is the process at the revising agent's office?

Mr. MacDermaid: It is not the revising agent, it is the revising officer, and he sits during certain hours on election day, when a person may appear before him.

Mr. Forrestall: But it is a simple oath he takes? Does he fill out a form?

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, form 48; Section 114 is the one that governs it.

Mr. Forrestall: A certification...

Mr. MacDermaid: All that says is that he has to obtain form 48 from the revising officer, so he has to satisfy to the revising officer that he is eligible to vote.

Mr. Forrestall: And he has to appear with another elector, a qualified one, whose name is on the same list?

Mr. MacDermaid: Oh yes, who swears to and signs form 47 in the poll room. So it is an oath.

Mr. Forrestall: It just seems to me to be a cumbersome process which is hotly resented by ..

Mr. MacDermaid: Well, we are giving people something they do not have anywhere else, as far as I am aware, so I think this is a step in the right direction. Maybe we do not require this certificate—I do not know. However they thought that it should go in with this expanded feature of the Act.

Mr. Forrestall: Mind you, I think it is the best Act in Canada.

The Chairman: Have you a count of how many people went to the revising officer to get a certificate?

Mr. MacDermaid: You could ask Mr. MacLellan if he recalls any, because the revising officer must sit in his headquarters.

[Interpretation]

exigez de l'électeur de se présenter à un endroit déterminé et d'établir son identité. Quelle en est la raison?

M. MacDermaid: La raison en est que dans les régions rurales, les gens sont généralement connus des agents, alors qu'ici c'est le contraire.

M. Forrestall: Quelle est la procédure suivie au bureau du reviseur des listes électorales?

M. MacDermaid: Durant certaines heures, le jour de l'élection, il demeure au bureau et rencontre les gens qui peuvent se présenter devant lui pour être assermentés.

M. Forrestall: Mais s'agit-il simplement d'accepter le serment? Est-ce qu'il y a une formule à remplir?

M. MacDermaid: Oui, la formule 48; et c'est l'article 114 qui la régit.

M. Forrestall: La certification.

M. MacDermaid: Tout ce que l'article prévoit, c'est qu'il doit obtenir du reviseur des listes électorales la formule 48 pour qu'il puisse être admis à voter.

M. Forrestall: Et il doit se présenter avec un autre électeur dont le nom est inscrit sur la même liste?

M. MacDermaid: Oh oui, il est assermenté et signe la formule 47 dans le bureau de scrutin. Par conséquent, il s'agit bien d'une assermentation.

M. Forrestall: Il me semble c'est un petit peu compliqué cette façon de procéder.

M. MacDermaid: Eh bien, à mon avis nous leur fournissons quelque chose qui n'existait pas auparavant. Alors, je crois que c'est un pas dans la bonne voie. Nous n'avons peut-être pas besoin de ce certificat, je ne puis l'affirmer. Cependant, ils ont cru bon de l'inclure dans cette disposition de la loi.

M. Forrestall: Je crois que c'est vraiment la meilleure loi électorale que nous ayons au Canada.

Le président: Pouvez-vous nous dire combien de personnes se sont adressées au reviseur des listes électorales pour obtenir un certificat?

M. MacDermaid: Vous pourriez demander cela à M. MacLellan, si toutefois il s'en souvient, car le reviseur doit demeurer dans son bureau.

[Texte]

Mr. MacLellan: I think at the last election there were 55 or 60.

The Chairman: Fifty-five to sixty people.

Mr. MacLellan: In one constituency.

The Chairman: That many in one constituency?

• 1605

Mr. Hickey: Oh, yes. The total number of people eligible to vote there would be 100,000.

Mr. MacDermaid: It is amazing the number of people that do not get on the list and do not get to the revising officer. There are quite a few.

The Chairman: And you still have the proxy system?

Mr. MacDermaid: You have to be on the list for that.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I draw upon an interesting personal experience in this connection. I am referring to your qualification for an elector. At the time of the writ he does not have to have the age requirement, he is all right if he is of age on election day. But in respect of citizenship, if he meets that qualification before voting day but after the writ he does not have a chance to vote. I remember a new voter going through great personal anguish over this because he wanted to get his first vote. He had a child who became of age in that period and he became a citizen, but he had the devil's own time to exercise his franchise. In other words, one is projected in the future . .

Mr. MacDermaid: Yes, there is no reason that you should not have the qualifying words in paragraph (b) that you have in paragraph (a).

Mr. Macquarrie: Except that you cannot always be sure. But it is a group of people, and I suppose in a place like Halifax there would be a substantial number of people.

Mr. MacDermaid: Mind you, he could still go to the revising officer on election day and get put on it if he had become a Canadian citizen in the meantime. In such case he is still all right under our Act.

Mr. Macquarrie: There are ways.

[Interprétation]

M. MacLellan: Je pense qu'il y en avait 55 ou 60 lors des dernières élections.

Le président: Cinquante-cinq à soixante personnes.

M. MacLellan: Dans une seule circonscription.

Le président: Tant que ça dans une circonscription?

M. Hickey: Oh, oui. Il y a là 100,000 personnes qui ont le droit de vote.

M. MacDermaid: C'est vraiment surprenant le nombre de gens qui ne figurent pas sur les listes et qui ne s'adressent pas au reviseur. Il y a en a beaucoup.

Le président: Vous avez toujours le système de la procuration.

M. MacDermaid: Oui mais votre nom doit figurer sur la liste.

M. Macquarrie: Permettez-moi de mentionner un cas personnel très intéressant à ce sujet. Il s'agit de l'admissibilité d'un électeur. Au moment de la publication de la tenue de l'élection, l'âge ne joue aucun rôle; il suffit que l'électeur atteigne l'âge voulu le jour des élections. Mais dans le cas de la citoyenneté, s'il remplit cette condition avant le jour de l'élection, mais après la déclaration de la tenue de l'élection, il n'a aucune chance de voter. Je me souviens de l'angoisse qu'a souffert un nouvel électeur à ce sujet car il voulait participer au premier vote. Il y avait un enfant qui venait d'atteindre l'âge requis à ce moment-là et il a obtenu la citoyenneté mais il a éprouvé toutes les difficultés du monde pour se prévaloir de ce droit. Autrement dit on est brutalement projeté dans l'avenir.

M. MacDermaid: Oui, je ne vois pas pourquoi l'on ne devrait pas ajouter à l'alinéa c) les termes d'admissibilité qui se trouvent à l'alinéa a).

M. Macquarrie: Sauf que l'on ne peut pas toujours être sûr. Mais il s'agit d'un groupe de personnes et je suppose qu'à Halifax, il y a certainement pas mal de personnes.

M. MacDermaid: Oui, mais elles peuvent toujours s'adresser au reviseur le jour de l'élection et faire inscrire leur nom si, dans l'intervalle, elles avaient obtenu la citoyenneté. Dans pareil cas, c'est conforme aux dispositions de la loi.

M. Macquarrie: Évidemment il existe d'autres moyens.

[Text]

The Chairman: What about the federal Act on this citizenship question?

Mr. Hamel: Our Act reads almost word for word the same as the Nova Scotia Act but it has been decided by a ruling that provided the elector becomes 21 years of age or a Canadian citizen on or before polling day, he is qualified. Now in a series of amendments I am respectfully suggesting that we clarify this to make it absolutely clear that provided he becomes a Canadian citizen on or before polling day he should be eligible to be put on the list and vote.

The Chairman: Are there any more questions?

Mr. Macquarrie: I have to admit that you have a mighty good Act here.

Mr. Forrestall: The best province is bound to have the best Act.

Mr. MacDermid: The Act works very well from an administrative point of view.

Mr. Forrestall: How long does it take you to wind up after it is all over, Mr. MacDermid?

Mr. MacDermid: We simplified the way we paid everybody. We gave them basically a flat fee, except for the revising and returning officers. So it now works out that we have all enumerators paid before the election, whereas before it took a couple of months after the election. We just give them a flat amount. It would probably take us two months, let us say, to wind it up completely.

Mr. Hickey: Six weeks to two months.

Mr. Forrestall: How would that compare with the federal Act?

Mr. Hamel: First of all, our enumerators are paid a basic pay plus so much per name. And there is a provision in the Act which says that we cannot pay the enumerator until the revision has been completed. So that if we discover that an enumerator has padded his list, for instance, or has neglected to do his work, we could either forfeit his pay or take some action against him.

Mr. MacDermid: We did delete such things as travelling expenses, postage and all this sort of thing, which really adds a lot of work.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Qu'en pensez-vous de la loi fédérale au sujet de cette question de citoyenneté?

M. Hamel: Notre loi est presque la même que celle de la Nouvelle-Écosse mais il a été décidé qu'à condition que l'électeur atteigne l'âge de 21 ans, ou obtienne la citoyenneté le jour des élections... ou avant, il est admissible. Dans le cas d'une série d'amendements, je propose que nous devrions rendre ceci beaucoup plus clair et nous assurer que pourvu qu'un électeur obtienne la citoyenneté avant ou le jour même des élections, il devrait être admissible pour faire inscrire son nom sur la liste électorale et se prévaloir du droit de vote.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions?

M. Macquarrie: Je dois admettre que la Loi est vraiment très bien rédigée.

M. Forrestall: Les meilleures provinces ont les meilleures lois.

M. MacDermid: Oui, du point de vue administratif, la loi donne de très bons résultats.

M. Forrestall: Combien de temps mettez-vous à déterminer tout le processus?

M. MacDermid: Nous avons simplifié la façon de rémunérer tout le monde. Nous leur payons un taux fixe sauf dans le cas du réviser et du président général. De sorte qu'à présent tous les recenseurs sont payés avant l'élection, alors qu'auparavant, cela pouvait durer deux mois après la tenue des élections. Nous leur versons un montant global. Cela nous prendrait probablement deux mois avant de finir tout le travail.

M. Hickey: De six semaines à deux mois.

M. Forrestall: Combien cela se compare-t-il avec ce que nous faisons au gouvernement fédéral?

M. Hamel: Tout d'abord, nos énumérateurs reçoivent un salaire de base, plus tant par électeur. Et la loi prévoit que nous ne pouvons pas payer l'énumérateur avant que la revision soit terminée.

Donc si nous voyons qu'un énumérateur a augmenté par trop sa liste ou a négligé son travail il risque de perdre sa rémunération, ou faire l'objet de sanctions.

M. MacDermid: Nous avons éliminé les frais de déplacement, les frais d'affranchissement, et toutes sortes de choses pour simplifier le travail.

[Texte]

Mr. Hamel: There are always cases pending after the election but the bulk of the work is cleaned up in roughly two months.

The Chairman: Is the function of your returning officer such that he is completely free from political interference? I am referring to his expenses and the decisions he makes.

• 1610

Mr. Hamel: I would say so.

Mr. MacDermid: He has pretty wide authority and if the parties do not co-operate with him he can go ahead on his own.

The Chairman: Thank you. On behalf of the members may I thank our witnesses for the information they have given us. This will prove very helpful in our review of our Canada Elections Act. Thank you very much for the co-operation you have shown.

Thursday, October 16, 1969.

The Chairman: I see that we have a quorum. First, I would like to introduce to you the chief electoral officer of the province of New Brunswick, Mr. Whalan.

M. J. Donald Whalan (Chief Electoral Officer of the Province of New Brunswick): Donald Whalan. Glad to know you, sir.

The Chairman: With Mr. Whalan I believe we will have an opportunity to discuss thoroughly the Province of New Brunswick Elections Act and many problems that are related to the Canada Elections Act.

Je crois opportun, au début de cette séance, de signaler aux membres du Comité que, lorsque notre témoin aura terminé, il y aura certaines questions dont nous devrons peut-être discuter ensemble, après cette séance; voilà pourquoi, je demande à tous les députés de demeurer dans la salle afin de poursuivre cette discussion, s'il y a lieu.

Now, Mr. Whalan, I will ask if you have any general comments to make about your views as to the improvements that could be made to your Elections Act and what difficulties you have, or any general comments that you may find fit to bring to the attention of our members.

Mr. Whalan: Not at the moment, Mr. Chairman. Following our 1967 election the provincial election, certain recommendations were made. One of them I stole more or less from

[Interprétation]

M. Hamel: Il y a toujours certaines choses à régler par la suite, mais en général le gros du travail est terminé dans l'espace de deux mois.

Le président: La fonction de président général rend-elle le titulaire libre de toute intervention politique? Je veux dire les frais et les décisions qu'il prend.

M. Hamel: Oui.

M. MacDermid: Il a pas mal de pouvoir et si les partis ne collaborent pas, il peut agir à sa guise.

Le président: Merci. Au nom des membres, je vous remercie d'avoir consacré votre après-midi et de nous avoir fourni tant de renseignements utiles qui nous aideront à revoir la Loi électorale du Canada.

Merci pour votre collaboration.

Le jeudi 16 octobre 1969

Le président: Je vois que nous sommes en nombre. Je voudrais vous présenter tout d'abord le Président général des élections du Nouveau-Brunswick, M. Whalan.

M. J. Donald Whalan (Président général des élections du Nouveau-Brunswick): Donald Whalan. Heureux de vous connaître, monsieur le président.

Le président: Nous aurons la possibilité de discuter à fond la Loi électorale du Nouveau-Brunswick et de nombreux problèmes qui se rapportent à la Loi électorale du Canada.

I think that at the beginning of this meeting, it would be a good thing to point out to the members of the Committee that when we have finished hearing the witness, there will be certain matters that it might be useful to discuss following this meeting. That is why I would ask all the members to stay here so that we can carry on this discussion, if necessary.

Et maintenant, monsieur Whalan, peut-être avez-vous des remarques générales à formuler sur les améliorations qu'il faut apporter à votre Loi électorale et les difficultés auxquelles vous pouvez vous heurter et, en général, toutes les remarques générales que vous croyez pouvoir nous signaler. Nous vous écoutons très volontiers.

M. J. Donald Whalan: Pas pour le moment, monsieur le président. A la suite des élections de 1967 dans notre province, quelques recommandations ont été formulées. L'une d'entre one of Mr. Castonguay's previous recommendations. I do not know whether it was adopted in the federal Elections Act. That was in regard to counting the ballots in advance polls. I believe he had the theory or made the recommendation that in advance polls the ballots should be placed all in one box and then counted as of one box in one electoral riding, in each electoral riding, so that the identity of a few or one vote in any one advance poll would not be disclosed.

[Text]

We have had the experience here previous to my taking this office whereby, in an attempt to give the electorate every opportunity to vote at an advance poll, we increased the advance polls in Northumberland, for instance. I am thinking of Northumberland County where I came from and which is the largest county in the province, a distance of 135 miles from east to west. They had only two advance polls in the county. Then they tried to set up advance polls at both ends, with the result that there was one vote cast in one advance poll and two in another, which forever alienated the person from the secret ballot. So, I think Mr. Castonguay's recommendation was that these advance poll boxes could be dumped into one box, and counter as one box, and then the secrecy would be contained. I think that is a very important one. I am waiting for the legislature to approve of this recommendation. That is the major one.

The only other item that we are very much concerned with is the item of cost. Elections are very costly and we are trying to evolve some method whereby we can reduce costs. I would like to hear any recommendations that you people, and particularly Mr. Hamel, would have towards mitigating this problem. I think enumeration is the biggest problem in costs and we are not only affected by the provincial election in this same category but as you may know, we conduct a municipal election every two years in this Province. I am municipal electoral officer in charge of that operation, and we have the same problem every two years in addition to the provincial. Those costs are becoming increasingly more difficult. If some other method of enumeration could be devised—another thought, too, would be the method of voting machines.

That is another problem, I think, that should be carefully considered. I think Saskatchewan has that system at the moment and they find it economical, or at least the paper that I have read on it indicated that they could write it off in ten years. Now, true or false, I do not know. I would like to hear. I would like to find out more about it and to that end we are looking into it.

[Interpretation]

elles a en fait été reprise à M. Castonguay. Je ne sais pas si elles ont été incorporées à la Loi électorale du Canada. Elle conserve le compte des votes dans les bureaux de votation M. Castonguay préconisait que les bulletins de vote soient placés dans une urne dans chacune des circonscriptions électorales de sorte que l'identité d'un ou plusieurs votants ne puisse être révélée.

Avant d'entrer en fonction j'ai connu des cas où, pour donner aux électeurs toute la possibilité voulue de voter avant les élections, le nombre de bureaux provisoires ont été augmentés; cela a été le cas au Northumberland, le comté d'où je viens et qui est le plus important de la province, et s'étend à 135 milles à l'Ouest de l'Atlantique. Il n'y avait que deux bureaux provisoires dans le comté. On a créé ensuite des bureaux des deux côtés du comté. Il y a eu un vote dans un bureau et deux dans l'autre, de sorte que le votant n'a plus jamais pu participer à un scrutin secret. Voilà pourquoi il me semble que tous les bulletins devraient être jetés dans une seule urne. C'est très important. J'attends que l'Assemblée législative approuve cette recommandation. C'est la seule recommandation de poids que je formulerai.

Une autre question qui nous occupe est celle des frais. Les élections sont très coûteuses. Nous cherchons à mettre au point une méthode qui nous permettrait de faire baisser le coût. J'aimerais entendre les recommandations que vous, et particulièrement M. Hamel, auraient à formuler à ce sujet. Le recensement occasionne des frais énormes et nous ne devons pas seulement faire des élections provinciales mais aussi des élections municipales tous les deux ans dans la province. Personnellement, je suis directeur des élections au niveau municipal et de tels problèmes se représentent tous les deux ans, en plus des problèmes posés par les élections provinciales. Et les frais augmentent. Il faudrait mettre au point une méthode pour réduire les frais, il faudrait aussi penser à mettre au point une machine à voter.

C'est un autre problème qui devrait être examiné à fond. Je crois que la Saskatchewan se sert de ce système et on le trouve économique. C'est du moins ce que dit le journal que j'ai lu et qu'on pourrait amortir le coût des machines en dix ans. Maintenant, je ne sais pas si c'est vrai ou faux, je voudrais qu'on m'informe. J'aimerais en savoir plus et nous faisons une petite enquête à ce sujet.

[Texte]

I think Mr. Thomas indicated that he was interested in the referendum that was submitted to the electorate in 1967 here in New Brunswick re the voting age, the lowering of the voting age from 21 to 18. They did not meet with much success here, although I see in other provinces they found the legislature has taken it on themselves to make it mandatory. I do not know whether they went to the people with it or not, but here in New Brunswick the government did go to the people and it met with a decisive "no". I have a copy here with a breakdown percentage-wise for rural and urban.

The Chairman: Do you have enough copies for the members?

Mr. Whalan: I think there are enough to go around, yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: Could I ask a question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: Did you say, sir, that the legislature was about to pass this new clause permitting the advance poll?

Mr. Whalan: No, this is a recommendation that I am making to the provincial secretary's department which has to gain approval from the legislature.

Mr. Lefebvre: I think you brought up a very valid point. There were a couple of advance polls, I believe, in my riding that had only one or two votes cast in them, and there were about six advance polls in the riding. So it would have been quite easy to dump them all in together and count them.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer, Government of Canada): May I make a comment on this?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: I believe that particularly at the federal level, we should make a difference between an urban advance poll and a rural advance poll. It is very seldom in urban areas that you have a small number of voters at the advance poll. In fact, our problem at the last general election was just the reverse. We had not provided enough documents and so on.

Mr. Francis: But we have opened up the advance pools ..

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Francis: ...and we have a much broader range of people who vote at them.

[Interprétation]

M. Thomas a dit, je crois, que le référendum présenté à l'électorat en 1967 au Nouveau-Brunswick sur l'abaissement du droit de vote de 21 à 18 ans l'intéressait beaucoup. Ce référendum n'a pas connu un grand succès ici, alors que dans d'autres provinces, l'Assemblée législative a rendu cet abaissement obligatoire. Je ne sais s'ils ont demandé l'avis de la population pour ce faire, mais ici au Nouveau-Brunswick, le gouvernement a consulté la population et le «non» a été formel. Je puis vous fournir le détail en pourcentage pour les populations rurale et urbaine.

Le président: Avez-vous suffisamment d'exemplaires pour les distribuer à tout le monde?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Puis-je poser une question?

Le président: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Dites-vous que l'Assemblée législative allait adopter la disposition autorisant les bureaux provisoires de votation?

M. Whalan: Non, c'est une recommandation que j'avais faite au secrétariat provincial et que l'Assemblée législative doit encore adopter.

M. Lefebvre: Vous avez soulevé une question très importante. Nous avons eu deux ou trois bureaux provisoires dans ma circonscription, dont l'un ou l'autre n'a eu que deux ou trois bulletins et il y avait environ six bureaux provisoires dans mon comté. Il aurait donc été très facile de verser ces bulletins ensemble.

M. J. M. Hamel (directeur général des élections du gouvernement du Canada): J'aimerais faire un commentaire à ce sujet.

Le président: Oui.

M. Hamel: Surtout au niveau fédéral, je trouve que nous devrions faire une différence entre les bureaux provisoires urbain et rural. Il est très rare que dans les villes on ait peu d'électeurs qui veulent voter d'avance. En fait, il en a été bien autrement lors des dernières élections fédérales. Nous n'avions pas assez de bulletins.

M. Francis: Mais nous avons ouvert les bulletins de vote des bureaux provisoires.

M. Hamel: C'est juste.

M. Francis: ...et nous avons une plus grande variété d'élections.

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: Yes. In the rural areas, so long as the provisions of the law will be what they are now, that we have to open an advance poll in any village or town of 1,000 population or more, we will be faced with this kind of situation wherein you have some advanced polls at which no votes at all are cast, or one vote or two votes.

By the way, the auditor general did criticize this on one or two occasions as being very costly. I do not think Mr. Castonguay ever presented this suggestion to the Committee because he, I believe, had second thoughts afterwards. There is only one problem and that is who is going to assume responsibility for the counting because at an advance poll, there are a deputy returning officer, a poll clerk and party representatives. Now, who are going to preside or look at the actual counting of the votes? If you put three or four boxes together, who is going to be in charge? Who are going to be the representatives? Some people might suspect that there could be some fooling around with the boxes in the meantime. This is the only problem. So it seems to me that it is a question of trying to decide on or to choose the lesser of two evils.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to inquire as to whether or not Mr. Whalan or someone in his office expressed any objection to coming to Ottawa to meet with the Committee, following upon your statement that two or three chief electoral officers did so refuse.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment here.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Francis: The first thing is that our witness is not an elected representative. He is a civil servant. He is in a very different category when this type of question is asked. I think I understand quite well what is behind Mr. Howard's question.

We are breaking a pattern for committee work. I personally do not believe our committees should be in the United States style of congressional investigation. We have seen a good deal of this before the television cameras and so on. I think it would be a very grave mistake if we were to follow that pattern.

I personally feel that this type of question is a very proper question for Mr. Howard to put to the parties involved when we get back to Ottawa. I personally would be very reluc-

[Interpretation]

M. Hamel: Dans les régions rurales, tant que les dispositions de la loi seront les mêmes, c'est-à-dire que nous devons ouvrir, je voudrais demander si M. Whalan ou ville dont la population compte 1,000 habitants ou plus, nous aurons parfois des bureaux provisoires où personne ne vote, ou seulement une ou deux. L'auditeur général a critiqué cette pratique en disant qu'elle était coûteuse. Je ne crois pas que M. Castonguay ait jamais présenté cette suggestion au Comité car il s'est ravisé par la suite. La seule question est la suivante: qui assumera la responsabilité du dépouillement, car au bureau provisoire, il y a un scrutateur, un secrétaire d'élection et des représentants des partis. Qui contrôlera le dépouillement des votes? Si vous réunissez les urnes, qui sera le responsable. Quels seront les représentants? Certains pourraient penser qu'on a pu manipuler indûment les urnes. C'est le seul problème. De deux maux, il faut choisir le moindre.

Le président: Monsieur Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander si M. Whalan ou à quelqu'un de son bureau, a refusé de venir à Ottawa devant le comité, car vous avez dit, monsieur le président, que deux ou trois présidents d'élection avaient refusé.

M. Francis: J'aimerais donner mon avis à ce sujet.

Le président: Oui.

M. Francis: Premièrement, notre témoin n'est pas un représentant élu. Il est un fonctionnaire. Il est dans une catégorie très différente pour répondre à cette sorte de question. Personnellement, je ne crois pas que nos comités devraient se comporter comme les comités sénatoriaux aux États-Unis. Nous avons vu à la télévision comment ils se comportent. Ce serait une grave erreur que de suivre cette ligne de conduite. Personnellement, ce genre de question est une question que M. Howard pourrait très bien poser à Ottawa lorsque nous serons de retour.

Personnellement, je verrais d'un mauvais œil un témoin répondre à une question semblable. Je crois qu'il faudrait tenir note de la présence au Comité. Si un membre est tant to see a witness requested to answer this line of questioning, this type of questioning, at this time.

[Texte]

I think there should be an attendance record of the Committee. I think if a member is here for 15 minutes, that should be recorded in the minutes of the Committee. But that is going into a subject that does not really involve this witness, and I suggest that this line of questioning is not the kind of thing that I would like to see the Committee undertake with this witness.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I assume Mr. Francis has raised a point of order, and I would like to express my thoughts about it. Without making reference to the rather slight innuendo in the comments, apart from that the question, Mr. Francis, was posed to Mr. Chairman, because it was the Chairman of the Committee who two days ago volunteered the information to the Committee, without query about it, that one of the reasons why the Committee had to come to Quebec and Halifax and Fredericton to meet only chief electoral officers or their staffs and thus entail a fair amount of expense—and this is one thing I am concerned about—was that two or three chief electoral officers had refused to come to Ottawa. I am simply inquiring of you, Mr. Chairman, not of Mr. Whalan, but of you, whether or not that is the case, and whether your statement that two or three chief electoral officers did refuse to come to Ottawa to meet with the Committee is applicable here in Fredericton.

Mr. Francis: Well, I just think that this is not a line of questioning to which the witness should be subjected. I am going to raise a fundamental point of order. I do not think the witness should be requested by this Committee to answer that question. I am raising it now.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If I could underline that, Mr. Chairman, I wish Francis would get it clear in his head that I am not asking Mr. Whalan; I am asking the Chairman of this Committee, who volunteered to this Committee the information that two or three chief electoral officers refused to come to Ottawa to meet with the Committee and thus entailed the spending of—I do not know how much—$9,000. or $10,000. to meet them in three provincial capitals.

Mr. Francis: I think you have made the point every day in every hearing, Mr. Howard, and I am going to come back and say this...

[Interprétation]

présent pendant 15 minutes, cela devrait être inscrit au compte rendu. Mais le sujet dont nous parlons n'implique pas le témoin et je prétends que des questions de ce genre ne devraient pas être posées.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je suppose que M. Francis a invoqué le Règlement et j'aimerais donner mon opinion à ce sujet. Sans me reporter aux insinuations, la question avait été posée au président du Comité qui, il y a deux jours, nous a donné ces renseignements. Il a dit que la raison pour laquelle le Comité devait venir à Québec et à Halifax et à Fredericton était pour rencontrer le président des élections et leur personnel (ce qui représente de fortes dépenses) et que deux ou trois directeurs des élections avaient refusé de venir à Ottawa. Je voudrais vous demander, monsieur le président, à vous et non à M. Whalan, si c'est bien vrai et si ce que vous avez dit est vrai pour Fredericton.

M. Francis: Je crois que nous ne devrions pas pouvoir poser de telles questions au témoin. J'entends invoquer le Règlement. J'estime que le témoin ne devrait pas être prié de répondre à une question semblable.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je voudrais que M. Francis le comprenne, je demande au président du Comité qui a bien voulu nous informer que deux ou trois présidents généraux des élections avaient refusé de venir à Ottawa. Voilà pourquoi nous dépensons environ $10,000 pour les rencontrer dans trois capitales provinciales.

M. Francis: Cette question est soulevée à chaque réunion monsieur Howard et je vais dire...

[Text]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I will say it again, regardless of whether you like it or not.

Mr. Francis: That is fine; I have no doubt...

Mr. Howard (Skeena): What can it be that you are trying to cover up other than the old incompetence of your party?

The Chairman: Order; order, please.

A l'ordre! Je pense que la question de M. Howard devrait m'être posée. J'avais pensé tout simplement pouvoir y répondre à la suite du témoignage de notre témoin, alors que nous discuterons de choses qui concernent le comité lui-même.

J'ai lu certains commentaires et il y a certaines précisions que je veux donner immédiatement pour ne pas être mal interprété; je veux être clairement cité. Personnellement, je n'ai fait aucune démarche directe auprès des présidents d'élection des provinces. Après que le Comité eut décidé d'aller rencontrer les présidents d'élection des provinces, on m'a fait remarquer que nous aurions des difficultés et que certains présidents d'élection de diverses provinces, comme la province de l'Ontario, préféraient que nous allions les rencontrer chez eux. Certains présidents d'élection eux-mêmes ont fait savoir qu'il y avait certaines difficultés à ce qu'ils se rendent à Ottawa pour témoigner et cela, après que le comité eut décidé d'aller les rencontrer sur place.

Ainsi, ce que j'ai dit à Québec n'a pas été une condition ou une raison déterminante du voyage que le Comité a décidé d'entreprendre, mais simplement un incident. A ce sujet, je voudrais dire à mon collègue, M. Howard, que si j'ai pu dire à Québec, dans la langue qui n'est pas la mienne, que la raison pour laquelle nous étions en tournée pour rencontrer les présidents d'élection était simplement que certains d'entre eux ne voulaient pas venir à Ottawa, j'ai l'impression qu'à ce moment-là, j'ai été mal interprété, j'ai été mal compris.

C'est pourquoi, j'exprime clairement et simplement dans ma langue que ces événements m'ont été rapportés après que le Comité eut décidé d'entreprendre le voyage. Le sous-comité de l'ordre du jour et de la procédure s'est réuni et il fut décidé d'entreprendre simplement une partie de ce voyage-là. C'était pour voir de quelle façon le tout pourrait fonctionner et pour voir de quelle façon nous pourrions obtenir les renseignements qui vont nous permettre d'étudier la refonte de notre loi. Quant au reste, je

[Interpretation]

M. Howard: Je vais le répéter, que cela vous plaise ou non.

M. Francis: Très bien, je ne doute pas...

M. Howard (Skeena): Se pourrait-il que vous essayez de dissimuler autre chose que l'incompétence reconnue de votre parti?

Le président: Messieurs, à l'ordre s'il-vous-plait.

The Chairman: Order, please I think Mr. Howard's question ought to be put. I simply thought that I might have been able to answer this after we had listened to this witness, when we would be discussing matters of interest to the Committee itself. I have read certain comments and these are some details that I wish to give immediately so that I will not be misinterpreted. I want to be quoted correctly. Personally, I did not make any direct approaches with respect to the Chief Electoral Officers of the provinces. After the Committee had decided to go and meet the Chief Electoral Officers of the provinces, I was told that we would have difficulties and that some Chief Electoral Officers of various provinces, such as Ontario, would prefer that we meet them in their own provinces. Some Chief Electoral Officers told us that difficulties would arise if they were to come to Ottawa to give evidence, and they told us this after the Committee had decided to go and see them.

Hence, what I said in Quebec City was not a determining condition or reason for the trip which the Committee decided to make, but simply an incident. I wish to tell my colleague, Mr. Howard, in this regard, that if what I said in English which is not my own language, while in Quebec City, was made to sound as though the reason why we were taking the trip to meet the Chief Electoral Officers was simply because some of them did not want to come to Ottawa, then I have the impression that I was not properly interpreted.

That is the reason why I am saying simply and clearly, in my own language, that these events were reported to me after the Committee had decided to make the trip. The Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure met and it was decided that only part of this trip would be made. I was to see how everything could operate and to see how we could get the information that will enable us to study the revision of the Canada Elections Act. Insofar as the rest is concerned, I shall inform you later on, after having heard the witness.

[Texte]

réserve mes informations pour tout à l'heure, après que nous aurons entendu les témoignages.

Excuse these incidents, witness. Perhaps we should get back to the purpose of our meeting with the present witness. I will call on the members who have questions of the witness. Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, if I may begin the questioning, I wonder if...

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If you had done that earlier perhaps we would not have got into so much difficulty, with respect.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, in my recollection, in our visits to Quebec and to Nova Scotia we have run across a number of differences between their election acts and proceedings and those of the federal government. Could this witness comment on some of these areas?

Aside from the plebiscite here on the voting age, I am thinking particularly of the very interesting information we got yesterday about proxy-voting in Nova Scotia, or, alternatively, the effort of this provincial government to see to it that, for example, people in hospitals are enabled to vote on election day. This is a matter with which I have been concerned since I first got on this Committee. In my opinion, the proxy system in Nova Scotia offers the best opportunity for people in hospital being able to cast their ballot, of any I have seen so far. Could Mr. Whalan comment on whether or not they take any steps to see to it that people who are in hospitals during the course of an election can vote, and whether or not they have considered the possibility of proxy-voting of any sort.

Mr. Whalan: First of all, we have made every effort to accommodate every electorate in the province, by setting up polls, regardless of numbers, to ensure that anyone capable of voting will have an opportunity to vote.

On the second question of proxy-voting, I certainly am not aware of any effort made to entertain that idea.

Mr. Jerome: Could you, then, enlarge on what steps the Province of New Brunswick has taken to see to it, for example, that people in hospitals are enabled to vote? Is there any effort to see, for example, that they are enabled to cast a ballot in their own constituency rather than in the hospital that the constituency is in?

Mr. Whalan: They are enumerated in the hospital in which they are confined and they vote in that polling division, so to speak.

[Interprétation]

Et je prie le témoin d'excuser cet incident. Revenons-en au but de notre rencontre avec le témoin d'aujourd'hui. Je voudrais passer la parole aux membres du Comité qui veulent poser des questions au témoin. Monsieur Jerome?

M. Jerome: Monsieur le président, si je puis commencer, je me demande si...

M. Howard (Skeena): Avec tout le respect que je vous dois, si vous aviez parlé ainsi plus tôt, nous n'aurions pas eu toutes ces difficultés.

M. Jerome: Lors de notre visite au Québec et en Nouvelle-Écosse nous avons constaté plusieurs différences entre leur loi électorale et celle du gouvernement fédéral. Peut-on demander à notre témoin de nous parler de ces différences? A part le référendum concernant l'âge de vote, je pense particulièrement aux commentaires très intéressants que nous avons entendus hier à propos du vote par procuration en Nouvelle-Écosse et des efforts du gouvernement provincial qui veut s'assurer que les hospitalisés puissent voter le jour des élections. C'est une question qui m'intéresse depuis que je suis membre du Comité. Et quant à moi, le système de vote par procuration préconisé par la Nouvelle-Écosse donne vraiment aux hospitalisés la meilleure chance possible de voter. Est-ce que M. Whalan pourrait nous dire si sa province a pris des mesures pour que les hospitalisés puissent voter et a considéré la possibilité d'introduire le système de vote par procuration?

M. Whalan: Premièrement, nous prenons toutes les mesures voulues pour que tout le monde puisse voter en organisant un nombre suffisant de bureaux de vote pour que tous les électeurs puissent exercer leur droit. Quant aux votes par procuration, je ne suis pas au courant de ce qui se fait dans ce domaine.

M. Jerome: Quelles mesures le Nouveau-Brunswick a-t-il prises pour que les hospitalisés puissent voter. Est-ce qu'ils peuvent voter dans leur circonscription ou dans celle où est situé l'hôpital?

M. Whalan: Ils sont dénombrés dans les hôpitaux où ils se trouvent de sorte qu'ils votent dans la circonscription de l'hôpital.

[Text]

Mr. Jerome: To all intents and purposes, then, you make them residents of the hospital?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Jerome: Is there a ballot box in every hospital on election day?

Mr. Whalan: Yes, wherever it was felt that there was controversy, either in the electorate or in the parties—regardless of whom.

Mr. Jerome: How many hospitals are there in New Brunswick, sir?

Mr. Whalan: I would not be able to tell you offhand—I would not be able to begin to tell you.

Mr. Jerome: I suppose they will be located principally in Fredericton and Moncton?

Mr. Whalan: No; we have rural hospital. We have a very large hospital in Caraquet, for instance, and we have one in Ste Anne de Kent, about 50 miles north of Moncton, in a very rural area.

Mr. Jerome: Let me put it this way: Are there hospitals in the Province of New Brunswick that are too small to have a polling station in them?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Jerome: Then you have a polling station in every hospital?

Mr. Whalan: We have a polling station wherever we are asked; or even if there is a semblance of a question, we set up a polling station. We try to, and do, accommodate every electorate, regardless of how many are involved in that poll.

Mr. Jerome: Therefore, anyone who is going to be, or anticipates that they will be, in hospital on voting day should, in your opinion, be enabled to be registered as a resident of the hospital and vote there?

Mr. Whalan: He would have to be enumerated in, and a resident of, that hospital; that is right. He could not vote in another area if he was resident in a hospital. For example, he could not vote for the electorate in Restigouche if he was confined in Moncton.

Mr. Jerome: I think we all recognize that one of the weaknesses of this system is that it deprives the man of the right to vote in his own home riding, if that is important to him. But we all recognize that.

Does your system then require that the elector be in the hospital both on the date of enumeration and on the voting day?

[Interpretation]

M. Jerome: Par conséquent, ils sont donc considérés comme résidents de l'hôpital?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Y a-t-il une urne dans chaque hôpital le jour de l'élection?

M. Whalan: Oui. Chaque fois qu'il y controverse ou entre les partis ou entre les électeurs.

M. Jerome: Combien y a-t-il d'hôpitaux au Nouveau-Brunswick?

M. Whalan: Je ne puis pas vous le dire au pied levé.

M. Jerome: Je suppose qu'ils se trouvent surtout à Fredericton et Moncton?

M. Whalan: Non, nous avons des hôpitaux de campagne. Caraquet a un hôpital important, de même que Ste Anne-de-Kent, à 50 milles au nord de Moncton environ. C'est un secteur rural.

M. Jerome: Ce sont des hôpitaux ruraux?

Est-ce qu'il y a des hôpitaux ruraux qui sont trop petits pour avoir un bureau de vote.

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Jerome: Vous avez donc un bureau de vote dans tous les hôpitaux.

M. Whalan: Chaque fois qu'on en fait la demande, ou que nous prévoyons des différends. Nous cherchons à satisfaire tous les électeurs.

M. Jerome: De sorte que quiconque s'attend à être à l'hôpital le jour des élections devrait être enregistré comme résident de l'hôpital?

M. Whalan: Il doit être énuméré comme résident de cet hôpital. Il ne peut voter ailleurs s'il est décrété résident de l'hôpital. Par exemple, il ne peut voter à Restigouche s'il est hospitalisé à Moncton.

M. Jerome: Nous reconnaissons tous que une des faiblesses du système c'est qu'il prive l'électeur du droit de voter dans sa propre circonscription. Est-ce que l'hospitalisé doit se trouver à l'hôpital et le jour de l'énumération et le jour du scrutin?

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: It would have to be that way under our system.

Mr. Jerome: So that if he is enumerated...

Mr. Whalan: He would have to be a resident in that particular electoral riding in order to be enumerated.

Mr. Jerome: If he is resident at home during the time of enumeration, which, I suppose, is about six weeks before election...

Mr. Whalan: About that, yes.

Mr. Jerome: ...and in the intervening time is called into hospital, he would not then be able to cast his ballot in the hospital?

Mr. Whalan: He would not be, no.

Mr. Jerome: And if he is not out of the hospital on election day he cannot go home and cast it?

Mr. Whalan: If it was a rural area, under our system, he could take an affidavit and vote in that electoral riding; but he could not vote for the candidate in his home constituency. He would have to vote for the candidate in the hospital. I am thinking now, for instance, of the hospital in Kent County which is classified as rural. If a patient from, say, Saint John went to Kent, and was enumerated in Saint John and being confined in Kent County, he could not vote in Saint John. He would not be able to get back. He could vote in Kent County, under affidavit, but he could not vote for his members in Saint John. He would have to vote for the members in Kent County.

Mr. Jerome: In any event, this privilege, with whatever difficulties it may pose, is available only to rural residents?

Mr. Whalan: On affidavit.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Whalan: In the urban areas they cannot. They have to be on the voters' list up to revision. Revision is the final day.

Mr. Jerome: For example, in your provincial capital here, how many counties do you have, or how many electoral districts?

Mr. Whalan: Twenty-two.

Mr. Jerome: Two?

Mr. Whalan: Twenty-two. Here in...

Mr. Jerome: Here in Fredericton.

Mr. Whalan: In Fredericton; we have two elected members in the City of Fredericton.

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Il en serait ainsi dans ce système.

M. Jerome: De sorte que s'il est démontré...

M. Whalan: Il lui faudra résider dans cette circonscription le jour de l'énumération.

M. Jerome: S'il habite chez lui lors de l'énumération—c'est environ six semaines avant les élections, je crois...

M. Whalan: Environ, oui.

M. Jerome: Et qu'entre-temps il est appelé à l'hôpital, il ne pourrait pas voter à l'hôpital?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Jerome: Et s'il n'est pas sorti de l'hôpital le jour du scrutin, il ne pourra pas rentrer chez lui pour voter?

M. Whalan: Si c'est une région rurale, il pourrait prendre un affidavit et voter dans sa circonscription, mais il ne pourrait pas voter pour le candidat de la circonscription où il réside. Il devra voter pour le candidat du district de l'Hôpital. Par exemple, l'hôpital de comté de Kent est un hôpital rural. Supposons qu'un malade de St-Jean, après avoir été énuméré à St-Jean, est hospitalisé à Kent, il ne pourra pas voter à St-Jean. Il pourra voter dans le comté de Kent, sur affidavit, pas pour son député de St-Jean mais pour le député qui se présente dans le comté de Kent.

M. Jerome: Et ce privilège, quelles que soient les difficultés qu'il comporte n'est à la disposition que des résidents ruraux.

M. Whalan: Sur affidavit.

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Whalan: Dans les villes, non. Ils doivent être inscrits sur la liste, jusqu'au jour de la révision qui est le dernier jour.

M. Jerome: Par exemple, dans votre capitale provinciale, combien de districts électoraux avez-vous?

M. Whalan: Vingt-deux.

M. Jerome: Deux?

M. Whalan: Vingt-deux. Ici à...?

M. Jerome: Ici à Fredericton.

M. Whalan: A Fredericton; nous élisons deux députés dans la Cité de Fredericton.

[Text]

Mr. Jerome: And what about Moncton?

Mr. Whalan: Four.

Mr. Jerome: In Moncton, then, if a person living in one of the three constituencies other than the one where the hospital is located was enumerated at home and wound up in hospital on or near the election day—principally, of course, on election day—he would not be able to vote?

Mr. Whalan: In the electoral riding of Moncton?

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Whalan: It would not matter where he lived in Moncton. He could still vote for his four representatives.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a four-member seat?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Jerome: All right. That is a peculiarity in that city that does not exist in the rest of the country.

Mr. Whalan: You are thinking about individual representation. I think that is what you are talking about.

Mr. Jerome: Then you do not have the problem in Moncton, and you have only two constituencies in Fredericton. The rest of...

Mr. Whalan: There is only one constituency. Fredericton is a riding by itself.

An hon. Member: Two members.

Mr. Whalan: Two members.

Mr. Jerome: Two members again; and the rest of it is rural; so that...

Mr. Whalan: There is York County. Fredericton is in York County, for instance. There is the electoral riding of Fredericton, and there is the electoral riding of York, and each has two members. York has two members and the City of Fredericton has two members.

Mr. Jerome: What about Saint John?

Mr. Whalan: Saint John is divided into three districts. Saint John Centre is the metropolitan district, and has four members; and Saint John East and Saint John West each has one.

Mr. Jerome: Hospital voting obviously is not as serious a problem in New Brunswick...

[Interpretation]

M. Jerome: Et à Moncton?

M. Whalan: Quatre.

M. Jerome: A Moncton, si une personne vit dans une des trois circonscriptions autre que celle de l'hôpital, qu'elle a été énumérée à la maison et qu'elle se retrouve à l'hôpital le jour des élections, elle ne pourrait pas voter?

M. Whalan: Dans la circonscription électorale de Moncton?

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Whalan: Il importe peu où cette personne vit à Moncton. Elle pourra toujours voter pour un de vos quatre représentants.

M. Benjamin: C'est une ville à quatre députés?

M. Whalan: C'est exact.

M. Jerome: C'est une particularité qui n'existe pas ailleurs au pays.

M. Whalan: Est-ce que vous pensez à la représentation individuelle?

M. Jerome: Alors vous n'avez pas ce problème à Moncton et vous n'avez que deux circonscriptions à Fredericton.

M. Whalan: Une seulement.

Une voix: Il y a deux députés.

M. Whalan: Deux députés.

M. Jerome: Deux représentants, le reste est rural.

M. Whalan: Il y a le comté de York. Fredericton se trouve dans le comté de York. Il y a le district électoral de Fredericton et celui de York. Chacun des deux a deux représentants.

M. Jerome: Et St-Jean?

M. Whalan: St-Jean est divisé en trois districts électoraux: le centre métropolitain qui a quatre représentants, St-Jean-Est, St-Jean-Ouest qui ont chacun un représentant.

M. Jerome: Ce vote à l'hôpital n'est pas un problème très important au Nouveau-Brunswick.

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: It has never been a problem. There may be individual problems which we were not able to overcome, perhaps because we were not notified in time to accommodate them. But it has not been a problem.

Mr. Jerome: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. This is my last question. In New Brunswick can a person who anticipates being in hospital during the course of an election vote at an advance poll?

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: That is all. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am going on to another subject, unless someone wants to talk further about hospitals.

An hon. Member: I think Mr. Lefebvre had a question.

Mr. Lefebvre: No; it was on another subject.

Mr. Macquarrie: I gather from your Elections Act, Mr. Whalan—which I have not read as fully as I should—that you have made some changes recently in your ballots—their form and their distribution. My recollection is that in New Brunswick there was an involvement of party people—party representatives—with the actual distribution or presentation of a ballot to an incoming voter on election day. Do you have any of that, or did you make a change recently?

Mr. Whalan: The ballot has been changed. We have a ballot similar to the federal ballot.

Mr. Macquarrie: What was it like previously?

Mr. Whalan: I do not recall, actually. You see I am new here since 1967, the first election I ran, so I am not too familiar with what the form was. As a matter of fact, they had no permanent seat such as Gloucester prior to 1967, and now they have. All documents more or less went by the board when the election was over.

Mr. Macquarrie: My recollection is—and I think they had this fantastic system in the Third Republic of France long ago—that at polls representatives of parties would have some role in assisting in distributing the ballots.

Mr. Whalan: Not to my knowledge here; because I remember working as a D.R.O. at elections and that problem never existed.

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Au Nouveau-Brunswick, non. Il peut y avoir des problèmes particuliers qu'on ne peut pas surmonter, faute de préavis. Mais ce n'est généralement pas un problème.

M. Jérôme: Ma dernière question. Est-ce qu'une personne au Nouveau-Brunswick qui s'attend à être à l'hôpital le jour des élections peut voter à un bureau provisoire?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jérôme: C'est tout. Je vous remercie, monsieur.

M. Macquarrie: Je vais aborder un autre sujet, à moins que quelqu'un veuille encore parler des hôpitaux.

Une voix: Je crois que M. Lefebvre a une question.

M. Lefebvre: Non, c'était sur un autre sujet.

M. Macquarrie: Au sujet de votre loi électorale que je n'ai pas étudiée aussi à fond que je l'aurais dû, je crois que vous avez récemment apporté certaines modifications aux bulletins de vote et à leur distribution. Si je me souviens bien, au Nouveau-Brunswick, des représentants de partis ont été impliqués dans la présentation d'un bulletin à un électeur le jour du scrutin. Est-ce arrivé ou si vous avez récemment effectué des changements?

M. Whalan: La forme du bulletin a été changée. Nous avons des bulletins semblables à ceux du fédéral.

M. Macquarrie: Comment était-il avant?

M. Whalan: Je ne m'en souviens pas. J'ai été nommé en 1967 seulement, et je suis nouveau dans le domaine. En fait, il n'y avait pas de siège permanent comme Gloucester avant 1967. Nous en avons un maintenant. Tous les documents étaient plus ou moins mis de côté lorsque l'élection était finie.

M. Macquarrie: Si je me souviens bien—et je pense que ce système fantastique a existé dans la troisième République française il y a longtemps—les représentants du parti au bureau de votation devaient aider à la distribution des bulletins.

M. Whalan: Pas ici à ma connaissance. Ce problème n'a jamais existé lors des élections où j'ai travaillé.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: Did you always use official ballots?

Mr. Whalan: It was an official ballot—a booklet—and it was torn off and folded and handed to the elector, and he marked it and returned it to the D.R.O. who placed it in the box.

Mr. Macquarrie: In my recollection it was the opposite, when I was living in Sackville. But we will have to look into that. In any case, I do not see it here so that it is not a problem we need to worry about.

The Chairman: Do you have the party affiliations on your ballots?

Mr. Whalan: Yes; the name of the party. This is the official ballot.

Mr. Francis: What is on the official ballot?

Mr. Whalan: The name of the candidate.

Mr. Francis: The name of the candidate.

Mr. Whalan: As it appears on the nomination papers.

Mr. Francis: And the name of the party?

Mr. Whalan: And the name of the party.

Mr. Francis: Any occupation?

Mr. Whalan: Occupation and address.

Mr. Lefebvre: Do you have other copies of the Act?

Mr. Whalan: I have. I was saying before I came in here that I should have brought extra copies and distributed them. I have plenty of them. I will do that. My clerk is not in at the moment. He will not be in until 1.45 p.m.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you adhere throughout, Mr. Whalan, to the alphabetical form?

Mr. Whalan: That is right. They are placed on the ballot alphabetically.

Mr. Forrestall: Completely alphabetically, by the name of the party?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: If a party had a name beginning with "A" it would be on top of the ballot?

Mr. Whalan: Am I following you correctly, now? Under the Liberal banner, for instance, the names appearing on that ballot...

[Interpretation]

Mr. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous avez toujours eu des bulletins de vote officiels?

Mr. Whalan: Oui. C'était un bulletin officiel qu'on détachait d'un livret. On donnait ce bulletin plié à l'électeur. Celui-ci y indiquait son choix et le remettait au surveillant du scrutin qui le jetait dans la boîte.

Mr. Macquarrie: Si mes souvenirs sont fidèles, c'était l'opposé quand je demeurais à Sackville. De toute façon, je ne vois pas cette disposition dans la Loi, de sorte que nous pouvons passer à autre chose.

Le président: Est-ce que les affiliations politiques sont indiquées sur les bulletins de vote?

Mr. Whalan: Oui, le nom des partis figure sur le bulletin de vote.

Mr. Francis: Qu'y a-t-il sur le bulletin de vote?

Mr. Whalan: Le nom du candidat.

Mr. Francis: Le nom du candidat...

Mr. Whalan: ...paraissant dans les documents de mise en nomination.

Mr. Francis: Et le nom du parti?

Mr. Whalan: Et le nom du parti.

Mr. Francis: On indique la profession?

Mr. Whalan: La profession et l'adresse.

Mr. Lefebvre: Avez-vous d'autres exemplaires de la Loi?

Mr. Whalan: J'en ai. Si j'avais su, j'en aurais apporté d'autres exemplaires, que j'aurais distribués. Nous en aurons cet après-midi.

Mr. Forrestall: Vous en tenez-vous, monsieur Whalan, à un ordre alphabétique?

Mr. Whalan: C'est ça. Les noms sont placés par ordre alphabétique.

Mr. Forrestall: Par ordre alphabétique et en indiquant le nom du parti?

Mr. Whalan: C'est bien ça.

Mr. Forrestall: Si le nom du parti commence par «A», il est placé au début.

Mr. Whalan: Est-ce que je vous suis bien? Pour le parti libéral par exemple, les noms figurant sur le bulletin de vote...

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Why are the Liberal candidates at the top of the ballot?

Mr. Whalan: I cannot tell you that.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps not; but it happens that "L" comes before "P" but there is the "I" for the independent candidate.

Mr. Lefebvre: It may be in the Act that the government party is first on the ballot.

Mr. Whalan: No; this is the official ballot. If the government changed tomorrow it would still remain the same unless they changed the Act.

Mr. Macquarrie: I suppose if the Progressive Conservatives changed their name to "Conservatives" they would get top spot forever?

Mr. Whalan: They would be eliminated. They would have to change the Act in order to change that ballot. This is the way it was drafted. I was not apprised of the drafting of this Act. The hon. Mr. Michaud was the drafter of this Act. Presumably it would be...

Mr. Lefebvre: Would it have anything to do with the fact that the name of the top Liberal candidate starts with a "D", which is the first letter, and then they go on from there?

Mr. Whalan: No, the names of the candidates are filed alphabetically—appear alphabetically. The names of the candidates appearing on the ballot appear alphabetically.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes. In this specimen here the Liberal candidate is Joseph Black.

Mr. Whalan: We go by the surname, though.

An hon. Member: It does not matter though.

Mr. Jerome: It is the same for every riding.

Mr. Francis: In other words, the alphabetical order of the first letters of the candidates' names determines the position on the ballot?

Mr. Whalan: The surname.

Mr. Francis: Yes. In other words, it is not the party that appears first?

An hon. Member: No; this is what he is saying.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Pourquoi les candidats du parti libéral figurent-ils en premier sur le bulletin?

M. Whalan: Je ne saurais vous le dire.

M. Forrestall: Peut-être que vous ne pouvez pas. Il est vrai que «L» précède «P», mais il y a le «I» pour le candidat indépendant.

M. Lefebvre: Il se peut que les dispositions de la Loi prévoient que le parti gouvernemental figure en premier sur le bulletin.

M. Whalan: Non, il s'agit du bulletin de vote officiel. Même si l'on changeait de gouvernement, il en serait encore ainsi, à moins qu'on n'apporte une modification à la Loi.

M. Macquarrie: Je suppose que si les progressifs conservateurs changeaient de nom pour ne s'appeler que «Conservateurs» ils seraient au sommet de la liste à jamais.

M. Whalan: Il faudrait que la Loi soit modifiée pour en arriver là. Je ne connais pas la teneur de cette Loi. L'honorable M. Michaud en a été le rédacteur.

M. Lefebvre: Serait-ce parce que le nom du premier candidat libéral commence pas un «D»?

M. Whalan: Les noms des candidats y figurent dans l'ordre alphabétique.

M. Lefebvre: Dans le modèle que nous avons sous les yeux, le nom du candidat libéral est Joseph Black.

M. Whalan: Cela va d'après le nom de famille.

Une voix: Peu importe.

M. Jerome: De toute façon, c'est la même chose pour toutes les circonscriptions?

M. Francis: Non. La première lettre du nom du candidat détermine la place qu'il occupe sur le bulletin?

M. Whalan: Le nom de famille.

M. Francis: Autrement dit, ce n'est pas le parti qui figure en premier?

Une voix: Non, c'est ce qu'il dit.

[Text]

Mr. Whalan: That is what I am saying, yes. Mr. Black is the first one on the ballot...

Mr. Francis: In other words, if you have a candidate whose surname begins with "A" he appears first on the ballot?

An hon. Member: Mr. Black was the Conservative...

Mr. Macquarrie: I thought they were alphabetical as to the party and then, within that, alphabetical relative to the candidate.

Mr. Whalan: Within the party they are alphabetical. I cannot speak for the reason for the Liberals and the Progressive Conservatives being in that order.

Mr. Francis: I am basically confused on something that appears simple. Perhaps it is just me. Is there a set order in which the parties' candidates will appear on the ballot? For example, will the name of the government candidate invariably be the first one on the ballot?

Mr. Whalan: Not necessarily; as I say again, this was to be the official ballot. It was drafted that way.

Mr. Francis: In other words, in your opinion the Act has been written in such a way as to determine which party's candidate will appear first on the ballots.

Mr. Whalan: Apparently so.

Mr. Francis: I wanted to clarify that. That is all.

Mr. Jerome: May I ask a supplementary on this, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Jerome on a supplementary.

Mr. Jerome: This ballot, of course, is obviously designed for Fredericton where you elect two members. Everybody votes for two. In Moncton do you have a ballot that would show four members under the Liberal heading?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Jerome: In the rest of the constituencies, where you vote for only one member, do you still divide it up into the Liberal Party and then put one member for the Conservatives and then any other independents?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Jerome: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

M. Whalan: C'est ce que j'ai dit. Le nom de M. Black vient en premier sur le bulletin.

M. Francis: Si le candidat a un nom qui commence par «A», il est le premier sur le bulletin?

Une voix: M. Black est du parti conservateur...

M. Macquarrie: Je croyais que l'ordre alphabétique s'appliquait au parti d'abord, puis suivait le nom des candidats.

M. Whalan: Dans le cadre du parti, les noms figurent dans l'ordre alphabétique. Je ne puis dire pourquoi les choses en sont ainsi avec les libéraux et les progressistes conservateurs.

M. Francis: Il y a quelque chose de bien simple, mais que je ne comprends pas. Y a-t-il un ordre définitif dans lequel les candidats des partis figurent sur le bulletin de vote? Est-ce que le nom du candidat du gouvernement figure en premier?

M. Whalan: Pas nécessairement. Je l'ai dit, ceci est le bulletin officiel; il a été fait de cette façon.

M. Francis: Autrement dit, vous croyez que la Loi a été rédigée de façon à déterminer quel candidat d'un parti apparaîtra en premier sur les bulletins.

M. Whalan: Il semblerait.

M. Francis: Je voulais des précisions. C'est tout.

M. Jerome: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire à ce sujet, monsieur le président?

Le président: Vous le pouvez.

M. Jerome: Il va de soi que ce bulletin était pour Fredericton où vous éliez deux députés. Est-ce qu'à Moncton le bulletin porterait les noms des quatre candidats pour le parti libéral?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Dans les autres circonscriptions électorales, où l'on ne vote que pour un candidat, faites-vous aussi la distinction entre les représentants du parti libéral, du parti conservateur et les indépendants.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Merci.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Might I ask a further supplementary on this? Was there a provincial general election in 1967?

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: And the plebiscite was conducted at the same time as the provincial general election?

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: This ballot was not an integral part of it?

Mr. Whalan: It was part of it.

Mr. Forrestall: It was on the bottom?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: One piece of paper...

Mr. Whalan: One piece of paper—added to the bottom of it; that is right.

Mr. Forrestall: Did you find any difficulty in that?

Mr. Whalan: No, we had no complaints. I will put it that way. We had no difficulty, and I received no complaints about it.

Mr. Forrestall: Is this the actual size of the ballot?

Mr. Whalan: That is the actual size.

Mr. Forrestall: This is the actual size of the plebiscite, an addition to it?

Mr. Hamel: I have a specimen here, Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: Had you used the principle of having a plebiscite, or seeking answers to other questions, at the time of a general election previously, or was the 1967 experience the first one?

Mr. Whalan: It is the only one I recall. I have no recollection of any others.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am sure they were asked for before your time.

Mr. Whalan: Perhaps; I do not know.

An hon. Member: We all went through that in these provinces. It took a long while to get the right answer, too.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps, Mr. Hamel, you could comment on that from your background. Is it a practice among provincial governments in Canada to attach other questions when there are general elections?

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Autre question supplémentaire. Y a-t-il eu des élections générales provinciales en 1967?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Forrestall: C'est lors de la tenue de ces élections que le plébiscite a eu lieu.

M. Whalan: C'est vrai.

M. Forrestall: Ce bulletin n'en faisait-il pas partie?

M. Whalan: Ce bulletin en faisait partie.

M. Forrestall: Il apparaît au bas?

M. Whalan: C'est juste.

M. Forrestall: C'était une feuille de papier...

M. Whalan: Une feuille de papier ajoutée au bas. C'est vrai.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que ceci a posé des problèmes?

M. Whalan: Non, il n'y a pas eu de plaintes à ce sujet.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que c'est le format exact?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Il s'agit là du format réel des bulletins de plébiscite?

M. Hamel: En voici un exemplaire specimen, M. Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Avez-vous déjà, lors de la tenue d'élections générales, fait appel à la méthode du plébiscite pour obtenir des réponses à d'autres questions? L'expérience de 1967 était-elle la première?

M. Whalan: C'est la seule dont je me souviens.

M. Macquarrie: Je suis sûr qu'on a dû y recourir auparavant.

M. Whalan: Peut-être. Je ne sais pas.

Une voix: Ça été la même chose dans ces provinces. La bonne réponse a tardé à venir.

M. Forrestall: Je me demande si M. Hamel pourrait nous dire quelque chose à ce sujet, d'après son expérience? Est-ce que, au Canada, les gouvernements provinciaux ont l'habitude d'ajouter d'autres questions au bul-

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: In recent years I believe New Brunswick is the only province that has conducted one. In fact, Quebec did not even have any legislation. There was just introduced last week the necessary legislation to make possible in the future the conduct of the referendum, and this is going to be part of the Elections Act, or the Bill that was introduced to amend the Quebec Elections Act. But up to now they did not even have the machinery to do it. I believe we have had two in Canada. One was in 1940 or 1941 and the other was in the 1890's, I believe.

Mr. Forrestall: Does our federal act provide for that, or was it a special act?

Mr. Hamel: It was special legislation that was passed at that time.

Mr. Forrestall: For each question?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Macquarrie: On the subject of this plebiscite, Mr. Whalan, I do not understand the last sentence on your second page—that only 50.07 per cent of those of 21 years and older spoke on the questions put before them two years ago.

Mr. Whalan: What was your question?

Mr. Macquarrie: What does it mean?

Mr. Whalan: Fifty per cent of those who voted. That is, out of a possible 313,000 eligible voters in the province 257,000 cast votes, and of those only 50 per cent answered the questions.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am taking too liberal a meaning of the word "spoke". Yes; I understand it now.

Mr. Lefebvre: After these percentages were compiled was an effort made to find out why, in the rural areas, almost half of the people did not wish to express an opinion on lowering the voting age, compared to roughly 24 per cent in the urban? Why was there such a reluctance? Was any effort made to have a study on this?

Mr. Whalan: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Lefebvre: Then, there are certain ridings where the electorate can vote for four different candidates.

[Interpretation]

letin, quand se tiennent des élections générales?

Mr. Hamel: Ces dernières années, je crois que le Nouveau-Brunswick a été la seule province. Le Québec vient justement de passer une loi qui rendra possible la tenue de référendums à l'avenir. Ceci entrera dans la cadre de la Loi sur les élections ou du projet de loi adopté pour modifier la Loi sur les élections. Jusqu'à présent, on n'avait pas l'autorité de le faire. Je crois que, au Canada, nous avons eu deux référendums, un en 1940 ou 1941, l'autre, vers 1890.

Mr. Forrestall: Est-ce que notre loi fédérale a une disposition à ce sujet?

Mr. Hamel: Non. Cela a été une loi spéciale qui a été votée à cette époque-là.

Mr. Forrestall: Dans chaque cas?

Mr. Hamel: C'est juste.

Mr. Macquarrie: Il y a quelque chose que je ne comprends pas au sujet du plébiscite, M. Whalan. A la page 2, vous dites que seulement 50.07 p. 100 des électeurs de 21 ans ou plus se sont prononcés sur les questions qui leur avaient été posées il y a deux ans.

Mr. Whalan: Je ne comprends pas votre question.

Mr. Macquarrie: Qu'est-ce que cela veut dire?

Mr. Whalan: Seulement 50.7 p. 100 de ceux qui ont exercé leur droit de vote. Cela veut dire que sur 313,000 votants dans la province, 257,000 ont exercé leur droit de vote et 50 p. 100 d'entre eux ont répondu à la question.

Mr. Macquarrie: Je comprends maintenant.

Mr. Lefebvre: A-t-on essayé, sur la foi de ces données, de découvrir pourquoi, dans les régions rurales, presque la moitié des gens n'ont pas voulu se prononcer sur la question de la réduction de l'âge des votants alors que dans les régions urbaines il y en a eu à peine 24 p. 00. Pourquoi cette réticence? A-t-on cherché à savoir si cette réticence était motivée?

Mr. Whalan: Non, je ne pense pas.

Mr. Lefebvre: Maintenant, pour en revenir à ces circonscriptions, il y a des endroits où les électeurs peuvent voter pour quatre candidats.

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: Yes; and for five.

Mr. Lefebvre: Can you vote for one, if you wish, or for three or four?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Lefebvre: There are also ridings where you have the opportunity of voting for only one person?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Lefebvre: Have you ever had representations from these people that votes in New Brunswick are not equal for everybody?

Mr. Whalan: I have not, no.

Mr. Lefebvre: You have not?

Mr. Whalan: No. There have been editorials in the newspapers, but I have never had any complaints nor even discussions on it.

Mr. Lefebvre: I would be very surprised if no representations were made to the government relative to one man, one vote. This, to me, does not stand up to the principle of one man, one vote.

Mr. Whalan: Of course, this has long been a subject for hash and rehash, but how serious it is, I do not know.

Mr. Lefebvre: Thank you.

Mr. Macquarrie: You were here at the time of this plebiscite, Mr. Whalan, but not in the electoral officer's chair. At that time did any group, or groups, advocate either a "yes" or a "no" answer? Do you recall any activity...

Mr. Whalan: Not organized groups; there may have been small activity, as I recall, on some campuses, but, of course, the percentages there would not indicate anything because probably those who were conducting such a campaign were not eligible to vote. My purpose in breaking that down for you is to show you—whether or not it serves any useful purpose I do not know—that in most urban centres there is a university of one kind or another, and it is rather striking to notice that in those centres they voted more definitely against it than for it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. One is impressed by the large number of people who did not get down to the bottom at all. It was on the one sheet. I thought it might be a separate paper. It is quite interesting.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Whalan, does the section of the Act dealing with this plebiscite

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Parfois cinq.

M. Lefebvre: Est-ce qu'on peut voter pour un candidat, ou pour trois ou quatre?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Il y a aussi d'autres circonscriptions où l'on ne peut voter que pour un seul candidat?

M. Whalan: C'est juste.

M. Lefebvre: Est-ce que ces personnes vous ont déjà fait savoir que le droit de suffrage n'est pas égal pour tout le monde au Nouveau-Brunswick?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Lefebvre: Jamais?

M. Whalan: Il en a déjà été question dans les journaux, mais je n'ai reçu aucune plainte à ce sujet.

M. Lefebvre: Je suis très étonné qu'on ne se soit pas plaint auprès du gouvernement, qu'on n'ait pas demandé qu'il n'y ait qu'un vote par personne. Ceci ne répond pas à cette exigence, il me semble.

Whalan: Eh bien, ceci, évidemment, est à l'étude depuis longtemps, mais jusqu'à quel point la question est grave, je l'ignore.

M. Lefebvre: Merci.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur Whalan, vous n'étiez pas directeur des élections à ce moment-là, mais vous étiez ici au moment du plébiscite. Est-ce qu'il y a eu un ou des groupes qui préconisaient qu'on réponde oui ou non?

M. Whalan: Non, il n'y avait pas de groupes organisés. Il y a peut-être eu un petit mouvement dans certaines universités, mais, évidemment, les pourcentages ne seraient pas significatifs, parce que d'ordinaire ceux qui menaient de telles campagnes ne pouvaient voter. Je vous dis ces choses—je ne sais pas si ceci vous sera utile—pour vous indiquer que, dans la plupart des centres urbaines, il y a une université et c'est assez étonnant de voir que dans ces centres, on s'est prononcé dans la négative.

M. Macquarrie: On est surpris de voir le grand nombre de ceux qui n'ont pas lu jusqu'au bas de la feuille.

M. Forrestall: Au sujet du plébiscite, est-ce que la Loi prévoit un engagement quelpermit of municipal involvement at the time of a general election? That is to say, could a municipality, or a civic unit, come forward and ask that a referendum be held, or a question be put on the ballot, in their particular area for the purpose of answering a specific question?

[Text]

Mr. Whalan: No; that question has never arisen. I do not think it could arise. Elections in all municipalities, as well as those of school boards, are now conducted under the provincial legislatures—the Department of Municipal Affairs. I have that responsibility, as well. We elect 1,270 trustees every two years, as well as...

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Whalan how could a neighbouring Nova Scotian forget the Byrne report?

Mr. Whalan: You are quite right. Quite a few municipalities have their referenda on their own ballots every two years. They have that opportunity.

The Chairman: Mr. Peddle?

Mr. Peddle: I have one question, Mr. Whalan. With your experience, do you approve of the idea of having another question included on a general election ballot?

Mr. Whalan: It is not for me to say whether I approve or disapprove. It is the consensus in the legislature, or the government...

Mr. Peddle: But from time to time surely you suggest amendments, do you not?

Mr. Whalan: I recommend amendments in relation to the efficiency of the Act. The recommending of policy is not my province.

Mr. Peddle: No; but it would appear to me—this is just a comment, Mr. Chairman—that there would be a great opportunity there for a political party very subtly to make a promise. For argument's sake, the question could be something ridiculous, such as: How would you each like to have $1,000 a month? The suggestion would certainly be: If you vote for us you will get it. You see what I am getting at?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You do not need to go to that sort of subtlety.

Mr. Forrestall: You might find us asking for national approval of the just society!

Mr. Whalan: As I say I have nothing to do with policy. My only concern is with the efficiency of the Act. I try to find any difficulties arising from the Act, and recommend changes.

[Interpretation]

conque par les municipalités lors de la tenue d'une élection générale? Je m'explique. Est-ce qu'une municipalité peut demander qu'un référendum ait lieu ou qu'une question d'ordre régional soit inscrite sur le bulletin de vote?

M. Whalan: Non, la question ne s'est jamais posée. Je doute fort qu'elle se pose, parce que dans toutes les municipalités et Commissions scolaires, les élections sont un domaine qui relève du ministère des Affaires municipales. Je m'en occupe également, nous élisons 1270 commissaires tous les deux ans.

M. Forrestall: Il ne faut pas oublier le Rapport Byrne, n'est-ce pas?

M. Whalan: Oui, mais la plupart des municipalités ont des référendums tous les deux ans.

Le président: M. Peddle?

M. Peddle: Une question que j'adresserai à M. Whalan. Avec vos connaissances de la chose, approuvez-vous cette idée d'ajouter une question au bulletin de vote?

M. Whalan: Ce n'est pas à moi d'approuver ou de désapprouver; cela est l'affaire du gouvernement.

M. Peddle: De temps à autre, il vous est certes donné de proposer des modifications à la loi?

M. Whalan: Oui, pour rendre la Loi plus efficace, mais je ne recommande pas la politique à suivre.

M. Peddle: Un simple commentaire. Il me semble qu'il y aurait là une occasion pour un parti politique de faire une promesse de façon très subtile, même si la chose peut sembler ridicule. Comment l'idée de recevoir $1,000 par mois vous paraît-elle? Si vous votez pour nous, vous l'aurez. Vous voyez où je veux en venir.

M. Howard (Skeena): Vous n'avez pas à donner dans ces subtilités.

M. Forrestall: On pourrait demander une approbation nationale de la société juste.

M. Whalan: Je ne m'occupe pas du tout de la politique à suivre. Ce qui me préoccupe, c'est l'application efficace de la loi. Comme je vous disais, j'essaie de voir s'il y a des diffi-

[Texte]

It is then up to the legislature to give effect to them if they adopt them.

Mr. Forrestall: In order to keep track of things as we move along, I wonder if I could go back to the general area of the first question. I am not referring specifically to the hospital but the area of general conformity between provincial and federal Acts, and I would like to ask you first if at any time your principles have indicated to you their thoughts or their general attitudes about the present differences between your system and the federal system. That is one part of it but, more basically, whether or not there is a need to sit down nationally, perhaps, to try to work out a more uniform system from province to province and with the federal authority perhaps being the principal guiding factor in terms of the detail or the efficiency of the Act, at least.

Mr. Whalan: I cannot speak for the Elections Act. I feel confident that any recommendations would certainly be entertained and the more study that is made of this, and by study I mean joint communication because we are conducting municipal elections every two years.

Mr. Forrestall: Would the form of a non-going national...

Mr. Whalan: Excuse me, but when it is municipal it is non-political and it makes it that much easier to execute changes which might in turn possibly rub off in provincial and federal amendments.

Mr. Forrestall: As the person responsible for—and I will defer to my senior colleague—processing the sections of the act and making it work, do you think it would be useful if from time to time in Canada there were a national body or a forum perhaps at the academic level, or perhaps a combination of the academic and political levels, for the purposes of discussing acts?

Mr. Whalan: I would certainly welcome it.

Mr. Forrestall: It would be useful and a functional thing?

Mr. Whalan: I would say so, yes, very definitely.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you.

Mr. Macquarrie: Are you moving toward a situation where, as the man who keeps the municipal and also the provincial elections cultés dans l'application de la loi. Je le signale à l'Assemblée législative, je propose des modifications, mais il appartient au gouvernement de les adopter.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Eh bien, pour en revenir à la première question, non pas à celle des hôpitaux, mais à la correspondance qui existe entre la loi électorale de notre province et celle du gouvernement fédéral, est-ce que vos supérieurs vous ont dit ce qu'ils pensaient des différences actuelles entre votre système et le système fédéral? Il s'agit d'une partie de la question, mais est-il nécessaire de chercher à mettre au point un système uniforme entre les provinces en gardant le gouvernement fédéral comme principal guide face aux détails ou à l'efficacité de la loi, à tout le moins.

M. Whalan: Je ne peux pas plaider en faveur de la Loi électorale. Je pense que toute recommandation serait sans aucun doute acceptée et que la question sera approfondie, j'entends par des échanges de vues car nous avons des élections municipales tous les deux ans.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que...

M. Whalan: Excusez-moi, mais au niveau municipal, il n'y a pas de politique en jeu et cela facilite les changements qui pourraient à leur tour être enlevés des modifications au niveau provincial et fédéral.

M. Forrestall: A titre de préposé à l'application et à la mise au point des articles de la loi, ne seriez-vous pas d'avis qu'il serait utile que de temps en temps, un organisme national se réunisse au niveau universitaire, qu'un forum soit organisé, ou même aux niveaux universitaire et politique combinés, afin d'étudier ces lois?

M. Whalan: Oui, j'estime que ce serait très utile.

M. Forrestall: Ce serait utile?

M. Whalan: Je suis tout à fait de cet avis.

M. Forrestall: Merci.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous entrevoyez le jour où, comme vous vous occupez des élections municipales et provinciales, vous going, you are thinking of the day when you might have an identical voters' list?

[Text]

Mr. Whalan: We are working toward that end. The amendments in the Municipalities Act are quite complex when you are dealing with so many municipalities; the different problems of cities as against towns and towns as against villages.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Mr. Whalan: For instance, we have 92 villages all having different numbers of councillors, from 2 to 12, and we are continually trying to bring our Municipalities Act in line with the provincial act.

Mr. Macquarrie: You might have quite an opportunity all over the province.

Mr. Whalan: And there again we would like very much, as things evolve, to be able to bring our Elections Act in line with federal act as well, if it is an improvement. This is where I think consultations and communications are important if this is going to be achieved.

Mr. Carter: I was going to raise a subject, Mr. Chairman, that was raised in the other hearings in connection with parties being reimbursed a part of their campaign expenses. Do you want me to wait and see if this comes up later?

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome, did you have a supplementary?

Mr. Jerome: I wanted to get into the question of enumeration and the length of the election time, and so on. I do not really know whether we have sort of slid into that subject now or not.

The Chairman: If you all have new subjects, then I will recognize Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, there is one section here that intrigues me. It is Section 127(1), Peace and Good Order at Public Meetings. I do not know if I have ever seen that in another election act, although it may well be there. This means public meetings of political parties. What has been the experience in this connection? Have there been any problems which required the enforcement of this section?

Mr. Whalan: We have never run into a problem where we had to call on this section. No doubt there have been some disorders, but it has never come to my attention officially.

[Interpretation]

n'aurez qu'une liste d'électeurs?

M. Whalan: Nous espérons y arriver. Les modifications à apporter à la Loi des municipalités sont très compliquées, surtout quand il y a autant de municipalités; car il y a les différents problèmes qui opposent les cités aux villes et les villes aux villages.

M. Macquarrie: En effet.

M. Whalan: Aussi, nous avons 92 villages qui possèdent tous un nombre différent de conseillers entre 2 et 12. Nous essayons constamment de concilier la Loi des municipalités et la loi provinciale.

M. Macquarrie: Vous devez en avoir souvent l'occasion dans la province.

M. Whalan: Nous souhaiterions aussi conformer notre loi à celle du Canada si c'est un signe de progrès. C'est à ce niveau que la consultation et l'échange de vues sont importants dans ce domaine.

M. Carter: J'allais poser une question déjà soulevée lors d'autres séances à savoir si les candidats seront remboursés d'une partie de leurs dépenses électorales? Est-ce que vous voulez que j'attende? Cette question peut être posée plus tard.

Le président: Monsieur Jérôme, aviez-vous une question complémentaire?

M. Jerome: Je voulais parler de l'énumération et de la durée de la période électorale et autres. Je ne sais pas si l'on a déjà lancé ce sujet.

Le président: Si vous avez tous de nouveaux sujets, je vais céder la parole à M. Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Il y a une disposition qui m'intrigue. Il s'agit du paragraphe (1) de l'article 127: l'ordre et la paix dans les réunions publiques. Je ne pense pas avoir déjà vu quelque chose de semblable dans une loi fédérale. Cela s'adresse aux séances publiques des partis politiques? Quelle a été votre expérience dans ce domaine? Est-ce qu'il y a des problèmes qui vous ont forcé à adopter une telle disposition?

M. Whalan: Nous n'avons jamais dû invoquer cet article. Il y a eu des désordres, bien entendu, mais ils ne m'ont jamais été signalés de manière officielle.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: I see. It has probably been in the Act for some time, then, as a result of an experience many years ago.

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: I have another question which I think leads into this matter of absentee balloting. A voter who reaches the age of 21 between the time of enumeration and election day, can he go to the polls on election day and be sworn in and vote or does he have to get a certificate?

Mr. Whalan: Under the Act he can if he lives in a rural riding, but in an urban area, if he became 21 after revision day, he is out.

Mr. Benjamin: There is no way he can get a certificate from the returning officer?

Mr. Whalan: No, not in an urban centre. This is rather unfortunate and it should be corrected.

Mr. Benjamin: The only way they could do it would be to have themselves enumerated or put on the revision list, even though they were not 21 on the day of revision.

Mr. Whalan: They might try that but then they might be up against the perjury provisions.

Mr. Benjamin: But if a man were 21 by or on election day he surely would not be questioned.

Mr. Whalan: He would not be questioned then but when he fills out his enumeration certificate he might be creating an untruth there. It is a delicate thing. Nevertheless, I see your point. There must be some way of circumventing that as well.

Mr. Benjamin: Are there any other provisions of any kind for absentee balloting?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Benjamin: None whatsoever.

Mr. Jerome: I have a supplementary on this system. Are there any provisions for penalizing a person for doing that? As far as I can see, the expedient for a person who is going to be 21 on election day but who is not 21 on enumerating day is to do exactly that, when the enumerator calls at the door to report himself as an eligible voter. Is there a penalty for that in the Province of New Brunswick?

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Vous avez sûrement inséré cette disposition à cause de faits qui se sont passés il y a plusieurs années?

M. Whalan: Très probablement.

M. Benjamin: Voici une autre question relative au vote des absents. Le voteur qui atteint 21 ans, entre la période de l'énumération et le jour des élections peut-il se rendre au bureau de votation au jour dit, être assermenté et voter ou doit-il se procurer un certificat?

M. Whalan: En vertu de la loi, s'il réside dans une circonscription électorale, il peut être inscrit mais dans une région urbaine, s'il a 21 ans après la date de la révision, il ne peut pas.

M. Benjamin: Il ne peut se procurer de permis du président d'élection?

M. Whalan: Pas dans un centre urbain. Cet état de choses devrait être rectifié.

M. Benjamin: La seule façon d'y remédier serait de les énumérer ou de les inscrire sur la liste de crutin même s'ils n'ont pas 21 ans lors du scrutin.

M. Whalan: On pourrait essayer cette méthode dans on pourrait s'opposer en vertu des dispositions de parjure.

M. Benjamin: Mais si un jeune homme a 21 ans le jour des élections ou avant, on ne mettrait pas sa parole en doute.

M. Whalan: Pas à ce moment-là, mais lorsqu'il signe son certificat d'énumération, on peut l'accuser de fausser la vérité. Il s'agit d'une question délicate. Néanmoins, je comprends votre argument. Il doit y avoir un moyen de se soustraire à la Loi.

M. Benjamin: Y a-t-il d'autres dispositions de ce genre pour le vote des absents?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Benjamin: Non, aucune.

M. Jerome: Voici une question complémentaire à ce sujet. Existe-t-il des dispositions destinées à pénaliser la personne qui se rend coupable d'un tel délit? A mon avis, la personne qui aura 21 ans le jour des élections, mais qui n'a pas 21 ans le jour de l'énumération, doit agir ainsi; lorsque l'énumérateur frappe à sa porte, il déclare avoir 21 ans. Est-ce qu'au Nouveau-Brunswick il y a une disposition permettant de le poursuivre?

[Text]

Mr. Whalan: If he gives incorrect information at the time of enumeration, then he may be committing an offence which is punishable under the clauses of the Act. If this is brought to the attention of the authorities then, of course, when it comes polling day and he is challenged as not being 21, he can safely say that he is 21.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr Whalan: But he is taking that chance.

Mr. Jerome: He does not give a sworn statement at the time he is enumerated, does he?

Mr. Whalan: He is sworn when he is given that certificate. The enumerator is obliged—and this is also a problem because sometimes the enumerator does not contact the electorate personally, although he is supposed to; they say they do but I know that in many cases they do not—to contact the electorate in order to answer the questionnaire before he issues the certificate on the enumeration slip. If he gives the wrong information then he may be committing an offense.

Mr. Benjamin: On this same point, Mr. Chairman, in the case of rural polls...

Mr. Whalan: There is no problem there because they can vote on polling day under an affidavit.

Mr. Benjamin: They are sworn?

Mr. Whalan: Yes, sworn at the poll.

Mr. Benjamin: I see. They do not have to go ahead of time and get a certificate from the returning officer, or anything like that?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Do they need someone to vouch for them or can they just go in and take an oath and vote?

Mr. Whalan: No, the DRO has to give him a ballot if he signs the affidavit.

Mr. Benjamin: I see.

Mr. Whalan: If he is challenged, of course, someone may have to vouch for him.

The Chairman: Are you finished, Mr. Benjamin?

[Interpretation]

M. Whalan: En vertu de la Loi, tous ceux qui donnent de faux renseignements lors de l'énumération, peuvent être tenus coupables d'un délit et être punis en vertu de la loi. Si cette situation est portée à l'attention des pouvoirs, le jour des élections, on peut contester la validité de sa déclaration. Il peut alors dire en toute assurance qu'il est âgé de 21 ans.

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Whalan: Mais il prend une chance.

M. Jerome: Il n'est pas assermenté par l'énumérateur, n'est-ce pas?

M. Whalan: Non, seulement lorsqu'on lui remet le certificat. L'énumérateur est obligé, et c'est aussi un problème car il arrive parfois qu'il ne communique pas avec les électeurs, même s'il est censé, on dit qu'on le fait, mais dans plusieurs cas, ce ne sont que des dires, afin de répondre à un questionnaire avant qu'il ne fasse paraître le certificat sur la liste d'énumération. Si la personne fournit de faux renseignements, il est passible d'une action en justice.

M. Benjamin: A propos de la même question, monsieur le président, dans les bureaux de scrutin ruraux...

M. Whalan: Aucun problème ne se pose parce qu'on peut voter le jour d'élection sur présentation d'une déposition.

M. Benjamin: Ces personnes sont-elles assermentées?

M. Whalan: Oui, au bureau de scrutin.

M. Benjamin: Elles ne doivent pas se procurer un certificat auparavant?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Benjamin: Quelqu'un doit-il témoigner ou peut-il simplement se présenter au bureau, être assermenté et voter?

M. Whalan: Non, le président adjoint d'élection doit lui remettre un bulletin de vote s'il signe une déposition.

M. Benjamin: Je vois.

M. Whalan: Si on doute de sa parole on peut demander à quelqu'un qu'il vienne témoigner en sa faveur.

Le président: Avez-vous terminé, monsieur le président?

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Whalan can tell us if the Government of New Brunswick reimburses political parties a part of their campaign expenses?

Mr. Whalan: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Carter: And no thought is being given to such a plan?

Mr. Whalan: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Carter: That is fine.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary. The same is true of the individual candidates, no consideration is being given to programs such as those that are presently under way in the Province of Quebec and for which legislation has recently passed in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Whalan: You mean to reimburse the candidates?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes. Along the same line, is anything being done in terms of limiting the amount of money being spent by candidates on campaigns?

Mr. Whalan: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask if it is a matter of a social question? Is it being discussed editorially?

Mr. Whalan: If you have been following the papers recently I think you would have seen where the Leader of the Opposition made those recommendations.

Mr. Forrestall: It is a matter of discussion, though?

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Jerome.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring the witness to the subject of the length of time it takes to run an election in New Brunswick, the method of enumeration that is used and the time absorbed between the calling of the election and the completion of the enumeration and the compilation of the voters' lists. I wonder if we could get a little information about that.

Mr. Whalan: This is one of the recommendations that is before the provincial secretary at the present time. We submitted that the

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Oui.

Le président : Monsieur Carter.

M. Carter: Monsieur le président, M. Whalan peut-il nous dire si le gouvernement du Nouveau-Brunswick rembourse aux partis politiques une partie des dépenses de leur campagne électorale?

M. Whalan: Pas à ma connaissance.

M. Carter: Et on n'envisage pas cette solution?

M. Whalan: Pas à ma connaissance.

M. Carter: Merci.

M. Forrestall: Une question complémentaire. Il en va de même pour les candidats indépendants. Vous n'envisagez pas l'adoption de programmes semblables à ceux qui sont actuellement en voie d'application au Québec et qui ont fait l'objet d'une mesure législative en Nouvelle-Écosse?

M. Whalan: Vous parlez du remboursement des candidats?

M. Forrestall: Oui. Faites-vous quelque chose pour limiter les dépenses des candidats en période d'élection?

M. Whalan: Non, pas à ma connaissance.

M. Forrestall: S'agit-il d'une question d'ordre social? La question est-elle débattue dans les journaux?

M. Whalan: Si vous aviez lu les journaux récemment, vous auriez vu où le chef de l'opposition a fait ces recommandations?

M. Forrestall: On examine la question, toutefois?

M. Whalan: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Jérôme.

M. Jerome: J'aimerais amener le témoin à parler de la période de temps nécessaire pour organiser des élections au Nouveau-Brunswick, la méthode d'énumération employée et le temps qui s'écoule entre l'annonce de la tenue d'élection, la fin de l'énumération et la compilation des listes d'électeurs.

M. Whalan: A l'heure actuelle, voilà une des recommandations qui a été présentée au secrétaire provincial. Nous avons proposé de periodic periods in the election be extended. Right now we have 42 days from the issue of the writ. I find difficulty in getting sufficient time, for instance, from nomination day to the printing of the ballot.

[Text]

Mr. Jerome: You would prefer to have more time?

Mr. Whalan: Oh, yes, we have to. In 1967 there were not enough printers in the Province of New Brunswick to get the ballots printed. We had to go across the line to get some of our ballots printed in time. We only had three days.

Mr. Forrestall: That is what I was going to ask.

Mr. Whalan: Three days to get the ballots printed and distributed for the advance poll. It was practically impossible. It is not impossible but it ties you up, and if the printer falls down and makes an error on a ballot it has to be re-run.

Mr. Jerome: Do you have the same difficulty with the printing of voters' lists, or do you do the printing of voters' lists?

Mr. Whalan: For the urban centres, yes, but not for the rural.

Mr. Jerome: Would it save time if you used the system which is now in vogue at least in the Province of Nova Scotia? I do not know if it is in vogue any place else, that does not matter. We learned yesterday that in the Province of Nova Scotia they have achieved what they consider to be a saving in time by having the enumerators make a direct entry into a book, which then becomes an alphabetical list of voters. I see that Mr. Hamel has one of those books with him. After that book is completed by the enumerators they make use of it by sending copies to the candidates, and so on, and posting up others, things of this nature, and they seem to feel that they were able to achieve a considerable time saving, which was mentioned yesterday by Mr. MacDermaid to be in the range of about 10 days.

Mr. Whalan: In what area?

Mr. Jerome: This was his information.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It operates in the area of the preparation of the list.

Mr. Whalan: When you prepare your enumeration lists you are suggesting that a copy of the enumeration slip be mailed?

[Interpretation]

prolonger la période de chaque étape électorale. En ce moment, nous avons 42 jours à partir de l'émission de l'ordonnance. Il m'est assez difficile de trouver suffisamment de temps, par exemple, entre le jour de la mise en candidature et l'impression des bulletins de vote.

M. Jerome: Vous préféreriez avoir plus de temps?

M. Whalan: Oui. C'est nécessaire. En 1967, nous n'avions pas assez d'imprimeurs au Nouveau-Brunswick pour faire imprimer les bulletins de vote. Nous avons dû passer la frontière pour faire imprimer les bulletins à temps. Nous n'avons eu que trois jours.

M. Forrestall: C'est ce que j'allais demander.

M. Whalan: Trois jours pour imprimer et distribuer les bulletins de vote dans les bureaux de scrutin anticipé. C'était presque impossible. C'était possible, cela vous accorde un mince délai, car si l'imprimeur fait une erreur sur le bulletin, il faut recommencer.

M. Jerome: Avez-vous la même difficulté avec l'impression des listes d'électeurs. En fait, imprimez-vous cette liste?

M. Whalan: Dans les centres urbains, mais pas dans les campagnes.

M. Jerome: Est-ce que vous économiserez du temps en appliquant le régime en vogue en Nouvelle-Écosse au moins? Peu importe s'il est appliqué ailleurs. Nous avons appris hier, que dans cette province on économise du temps parce que les énumérateurs inscrivent directement dans un livre le nom des électeurs par ordre alphabétique. Je vois que monsieur Hamel a un de ces livres sous la main. Après y avoir inscrit le nom des électeurs, l'énumérateur en envoie des copies aux candidats. En l'envoyant par la poste, ils réalisent une économie considérable de temps, d'après monsieur MacDermaid, de l'ordre de dix jours.

M. Whalan: Dans quel domaine?

M. Jerome: C'est ce qu'il disait.

M. Howard (Skeena): Dans la préparation de la liste.

M. Whalan: Lorsque vous préparez les listes d'énumération vous voulez dire que vous envoyez une copie du talon d'énumération?

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: The difference between using this system and using an alphabetical approach rather than any other is that they say by having the enumerators make direct entries into this book in an alphabetical system that after the work has been completed by the enumerator the book itself becomes a voters list. I think this is the impact of their system.

Mr. Whalan: I see what you mean.

Mr. Jerome: In your opinion would this achieve a time saving so far as New Brunswick is concerned?

Mr. Whalan: I cannot see it. That is not our problem as far as time goes. Our problem is the time from nomination to the advance polls. By advancing one date you have to keep on advancing the other dates. The enumerator has five days to complete his enumeration, and then of course there is the job of printing the lists.

Mr. Jerome: How long does that take? In your experience, how long does it take from the last day of the enumeration to the day the list is published?

Mr. Whalan: There again it varies depending on the facilities that are available. For instance, some of our urban centres—what we call our urban centres are the municipalities which have a population of 5,000 or over—do not have those facilities. I am thinking now of, say, Newcastle and Dalhousie. Their facilities are not just that good that they can get out those lists in the required time without working around the clock and it is not easy to get them to work around the clock.

Mr. Jerome: This is exactly my point. I am interested to know if you run into a delay between the completion of the enumerating work and the publication of the lists because of printing and other difficulties?

Mr. Whalan: Oh, yes.

Mr. Jerome: Would it not be right then, through the adoption of an alphabetical system like this if it were feasible, that on the fifth day of the enumeration each enumerator would then and there be in possession of sufficient copies of a properly prepared alphabetical list that could go into immediate use as a voters' list? Would that save you time?

Mr. Whalan: It might save time, but when you get 1,500 or 1,600 enumerators, half of whom do not write very well, the lists would not be very legible...

[Interprétation]

M. Jerome: La différence entre ce système et de la méthode alphabétique plutôt qu'une autre, c'est que d'après eux en faisant inscrire directement dans le livre le nom de l'électeur par l'énumérateur, le livre lui-même tient lieu de liste des électeurs. Voilà l'importance de leur méthode.

M. Whalan: Je vois ce que vous voulez dire.

M. Jerome: Est-ce que cela permettrait une économie de temps au Nouveau-Brunswick?

M. Whalan: Je ne vois pas comment. Nous n'avons pas de problème de temps à ce moment-là. Le problème survient entre le moment de la mise en candidature et de la création des bureaux de vote anticipé. En avançant une date, il faut en avancer d'autres. Les énumérateurs ont 5 jours pour finir leur énumération et il y a ensuite l'impression des listes.

M. Jerome: Combien de temps ça prend à partir du dernier jour de l'énumération jusqu'à la parution de la liste?

M. Whalan: Là aussi, ça varie suivant les moyens mis à notre disposition. Certains centres urbains, par exemple, ce que nous appelons les centres urbains sont des municipalités de 5,000 habitants et plus, n'ont pas ces installations. Certains bureaux d'imprimerie n'ont pas les moyens, par exemple, comme ceux de Newcastle et Dalhousie, mais ils n'ont pas les machines voulues pour imprimer ces listes dans le temps voulu. Même ils devraient travailler 24 heures sur 24.

M. Jerome: Ce qui m'intéresse, c'est de savoir si vous avez un retard entre l'énumération et l'impression des listes.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Est-ce qu'il ne serait pas possible d'adopter un système alphabétique? Si cinq jours après l'énumération les énumérateurs avaient suffisamment d'exemplaires à leur disposition d'une liste alphabétique qui pourrait servir immédiatement de listes d'électeurs? Est-ce que cela vous épargnerait du temps?

M. Whalan: Oui. Ça économiserait du temps mais si vous avez 1,500 à 1,600 énumérateurs, ça ne serait pas très pratique, car la plupart ont une écriture illisible.

[Text]

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Whalan: ...for the most part, certainly. I doubt if they could read my writing if I were to write a list, so it becomes a matter of typing then and in the rural areas most of them do not have a typewriter, let alone the paper. Of course, if there were forms...

Mr. Jerome: Of course, if you are going to take this list and type it you might just as well do it by any other system that we know. The only saving as far as I can see that would be achieved by this would be if the actual list when completed were put into use immediately.

Mr. Whalan: It certainly would, but I would hesitate to believe that you could read the writing.

The Chairman: I believe Mr. Hamel has some comments to make.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Jerome has misunderstood where the saving comes in.

Mr. Hamel: That is what I was going to say. At least there is one aspect which may not have been explained completely yesterday. They still print the lists in Nova Scotia, the only difference being that out of this they make four copies, one copy for each political party, which makes two, and two for the returning officer, one of which is sent immediately to the printer from which he prints his list. In our case we complete the enumeration on Saturday and on Monday morning the enumerators have to have their lists in the hands of the returning officer or on their way to the office of the returning officer and they are sent to the printers that same day.

Mr. Jerome: Essentially the systems are the same with the exception that we take the slips, type and distribute them to the candidates while they just send the original list.

Mr. Hamel: We would say that at the most we spend half a day with this, maybe a day, but on the other hand, we would lose at the other end because where there are four political parties we would have to run either photo copies or have books about that size which would not be practicable. In cases where there were 10 candidates we would have to make mimeographed copies or photo copies.

Mr. Forrestall: There was a suggestion yesterday, Mr. Chairman, if I might interrupt, that one of the saving features—there are two or three—was that we can do an enumeration in three days as opposed to five which is a saving of two days. We would save the day or

[Interpretation]

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Whalan: Il serait préférable de le faire taper à la machine mais dans les localités rurales ils n'ont pas de machine à écrire encore moins du papier.

M. Jerome: Le seul avantage à cela serait de se servir de la liste aussitôt qu'elle serait complétée.

M. Whalan: Ça aiderait certainement, mais je doute que vous puissiez lire l'écriture.

Le président: Je crois que M. Hamel a des commentaires à faire.

M. Forrestall: M. Jerome n'a pas bien compris ou serait l'économie.

M. Hamel: Je crois que cet aspect n'a peut-être pas été bien expliqué hier. Ils impriment encore la liste en Nouvelle-Écosse. La seule différence c'est que, en plus de ceci, ils font quatre exemplaires—un exemplaire pour chaque parti politique et deux exemplaires pour les présidents d'élection. Un exemplaire est envoyé immédiatement à l'imprimeur et l'imprimeur imprime sa liste de sorte que dans notre cas nous finissons l'énumération le samedi et le lundi matin les énumérateurs doivent donner la liste aux présidents d'élection et est envoyée aux imprimeurs la journée même.

M. Jerome: Le système est le même sauf que nous prenons les talons et les envoyons aux candidats tandis qu'eux envoient la liste originale.

M. Hamel: Nous économiserions une demi-journée, peut-être une journée mais par ailleurs nous perdriions du temps parce que lorsqu'il y a quatre partis politiques, il nous faudrait faire des copies pour chacun ou nous aurions des livres très épais. Quand il y a dix candidats, il faut faire des photocopies ou mimiographier ces formules.

M. Forrestall: Un des éléments qui permettrait d'économiser du temps, et il y en a deux ou trois, c'est qu'on peut faire l'énumération en trois jours plutôt qu'en cinq. Il y a deux jours qu'on peut économiser là. On pourrait économiser le retard dont a parlé monsieur that delay that Mr. Hamel has spoken of and I think the experience of returning officers show that nothing is ever done really on time. You are always doing something at 12 o'clock that you wish had been done at 6 o'clock the night before and the totality of this. There are one or two other significant areas, for example, if this list were well printed and clearly identifiable—in some cases, as you know, the printer has it on the second day of enumeration when the enumeration has been completed—it lends a facility that we do not have because something has to be done under the federal Act that involves literally a day and you are lucky if you get it done in a day and a half or two days. When they talked of five or six days' saving, that is generally what they were talking about.

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: I think I have a clearer understanding of that aspect of it as far as the potential time saving federally is concerned, but can you tell us more about this problem that you have with the ballots which, you have said, is a serious problem.

Mr. Whalan: It is a serious problem, yes. I have asked for three more days in the election period. You see the time gap between each process or each step in the election just is not enough. You might squeeze by, but accidents can happen and what very nearly happened in 1967 would give you nightmares. In order to forestall anything like that...

Mr. Jerome: Do you mind expanding on that?

Mr. Whalan: It was just the closeness of the step procedure from the printing of the ballots, for instance, to the advance polls. In some areas we have 130 miles to travel to get those ballots out.

Mr. Jerome: When do you have your advance polls?

Mr. Whalan: We have them on the second Friday before the election. No, I am wrong, on the second Saturday and Monday.

Mr. Jerome: By what time do you require that a candidate be nominated?

Mr. Hamel: The provisions are exactly the same as in the federal Act. Nomination day is 14 days before polling day and the two days for advance polls are the Saturday following nomination day and the Monday following, that means a week before normal polling day.

[Interprétation]

Hamel. Les présidents d'élection savent que ce que l'on fait à midi aurait du être fait à 6 heures la veille. Par exemple, si cette liste est bien imprimée, dans certains cas, l'imprimeur la reçoit le deuxième jour de l'énumération, ce qui facilite les choses. Parce que, en vertu de la loi fédérale, certaines formalités prennent une journée et nous sommes chanceux si nous pouvons l'avoir une journée et demi ou deux jours après. C'est ce qu'ils veulent dire lorsqu'ils parlent d'une économie de cinq à six jours.

M. Jerome: J'ai bien compris. Pouvez-vous nous donner des précisions sur le problème soulevé par les bulletins de vote? Vous avez dit que c'est un problème grave.

M. Whalan: C'est un problème grave, c'est vrai. J'ai demandé trois jours de plus à la période électorale. Vous voyez, le temps écoulé entre chacune des opérations de l'élection ne suffit pas. On peut arriver juste mais il y a toujours un accident qui peut arriver. Ce qui a failli se produire en 1967 vous donnerait des cauchemars. En vue de prévenir une telle situation...

M. Jerome: Pouvez-vous expliciter?

M. Whalan: C'est simplement le peu de temps qu'il y a entre l'impression des bulletins de vote jusqu'au vote par anticipation. Dans certaines régions nous devons parcourir 130 milles pour distribuer ces bulletins.

M. Jerome: Quand est-ce que vous avez votre bureau provisoire de votation?

M. Whalan: Le deuxième vendredi avant l'élection, non, pardon le deuxième samedi ou lundi.

M. Jerome: Quand est-ce que la mise en candidature a lieu?

M. Hamel: Les dispositions sont les mêmes que dans la loi fédérale—24 jours avant le jour de votation et deux jours pour les bureaux provisoires, le samedi suivant la nomination et le lundi suivant.

[Text]

However, I believe I can explain one of his problems, Mr. Chairman, if I may comment on this. The main difference is that in our case we have standard ballot paper with which we provide the returning officers. In his case he cannot because the candidates are listed in blocks and he may have one candidate of a party in a given place or three or four, so he cannot have standard paper shipped ahead of time.

Mr. Francis: Why not?

Mr. Hamel: Well, because...

Mr. Francis: He could have special ones made up anticipating those constituencies.

Mr. Hamel: This would be the only solution.

Mr. Jerome: What you really need, if I am not mistaken, which is even more appropriate than that and I would like to be corrected on this so I can get a better understanding of it, is simply more time between the nomination day and the advance polls.

Mr. Whalan: That is why we are stepping up the other period as well—the enumeration period. If you step one up you have to step the others ahead.

Mr. Jerome: Before we leave this subject, I do not fully understand why, for example, if the election writ were issued on a certain day, it makes all that difference if you say that nomination day will be 21 days before polling day instead of 14. If it is 21 days before polling day then you would have plenty of time to print your ballots before the same court of revision as you have now. Why would making nomination day 21 days before polling day force you back with the issue of the writ and election?

Mr. Whalan: There is the completion of the enumeration, the printing of the lists and the mailing of the lists in the urban centres.

Mr. Jerome: Why do the lists have to be printed in order to have a nomination day?

Mr. Whalan: They do not, but they have to be out on a certain day as well. I just do not know how to explain it any further than that. The lists have to be printed and in the hands of the parties and in the hands of the electorate prior to nomination day.

Mr. Jerome: The lists...

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: ...have to be printed and in the hands of the electorate prior to nomination day?

[Interpretation]

Cependant, dans notre cas nous avons des formules que nous donnons aux présidents d'élection. Mais dans son cas c'est différent.

M. Francis: Pourquoi?

M. Hamel: Eh bien, parce que...

M. Francis: Il pourrait en faire faire spécialement pour ces circonscriptions.

M. Hamel: Ce serait la seule solution.

M. Jerome: Ce dont vous avez besoin, si j'ai bien compris, c'est plus de temps entre le jour de la nomination et les bureaux provisoires.

M. Whalan: Voilà pourquoi nous avançons la période de l'énumération. En accélérant une période vous accélérez aussi les autres.

M. Jerome: Je ne comprends pas bien pourquoi, par exemple, si l'ordonnance d'élection est émise à une date, je ne vois pas pourquoi il y aurait une grosse différence si vous dites que la mise en candidature aura lieu 21 jours et non 14 jours avant le jour de votation? Si c'est 21 jours avant alors vous avez tout le temps de faire imprimer vos bulletins de vote. Pourquoi est-ce qu'en faisant la nomination 21 jours avant l'élection, cela vous retarderait à émettre l'ordonnance et l'élection?

M. Whalan: Il faut compléter l'énumération, imprimer les listes et les expédier dans les centres ruraux.

M. Jerome: Pourquoi faut-il que les listes soient imprimées avant la nomination?

M. Whalan: Ce n'est pas nécessaire, mais les listes doivent être publiées à un moment donné, à un jour prescrit. Comment vous l'expliquer? Les listes, il faut les imprimer, les remettre à la disposition des partis et de l'électorat avant la mise en candidature.

M. Jerome: Les listes...

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Ces listes doivent être imprimées et envoyées aux électeurs avant la mise en candidature? Pourquoi?

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: Why?

Mr. Whalan: This is the way the Act reads.

Mr. Jerome: That is the way the Act reads. That is fine. I do not mean to put you on the spot, but I am very much concerned that our election periods are too long.

Mr. Whalan: To follow the steps of the Act, it ties you down in the two...

Mr. Jerome: Oh, yes, I appreciate that what you are doing is in conformity with the Act, but the reason I asked you this is because I believe our election periods are too long. I would like to see if we could shorten them and I just wanted to get your personal views on the problems you would be faced with by a shortening of the period and to make sure that I understood. Thank you.

Mr. Francis: The provincial period is already substantially shorter than the federal...

Mr. Jerome: Oh no, it is not shorter here. It is about 42 days here, about a week shorter, whereas ours is about 49.

An hon. Member: Yes, it is 49.

Mr. Jerome: And you would like it to be 45?

Mr. Hamel: We have 60 days.

Mr. Francis: Yes, ours is 60, so there is a substantial increase.

An hon. Member: And yours is 42, is it not?

Mr. Whalan: Yes, it is 42 days.

Mr. Lefebvre: And you would like about 45?

Mr. Whalan: I am asking for 45 days.

Mr. Francis: This is very useful information to have.

Mr. Whalan: In the municipal election the actual election period is only 38 days, but our enumeration is completed a month before so that enumeration does not affect our election...

Mr. Francis: Because you have a fixed election date.

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Francis: You know when it is going to be and you can anticipate...

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Pourquoi?

M. Whalan: Monsieur, c'est prescrit dans la loi.

M. Jerome: Très bien. Ce qui me préoccupe c'est que la période électorale est trop longue.

M. Whalan: En suivant les dispositions de la Loi...

M. Jerome: Je sais bien que vous agissez conformément à la Loi, mais je trouve nos périodes d'élection trop longues. Je me demande si on ne pourrait pas les raccourcir. Je voudrais avoir votre opinion là-dessus. Merci.

M. Francis: La période électorale provinciale est beaucoup plus courte que la période fédérale...

M. Jerome: Elle n'est pas plus courte ici. Ici c'est environ 42 jours, tandis que nous, c'est 49.

Une voix: Oui, c'est 49 jours.

M. Jerome: Vous aimeriez mieux 45?

M. Hamel: Nous avons 60 jours.

M. Francis: Oui, chez vous c'est 60. C'est beaucoup plus long.

Une voix: Et vous c'est 42, n'est-ce pas?

M. Whalan: Oui, c'est 42 jours.

M. Lefebvre: Et vous voudriez avoir 45 jours?

M. Whalan: Je demande 45 jours.

M. Francis: Ce renseignement est très utile.

M. Whalan: Dans les élections municipales, la période électorale n'est que de 38 jours mais l'énumération est terminée un mois avant de sorte que ça ne nuit en rien aux élections.

M. Francis: Parce que vos élections sont à date fixe.

M. Whalan: C'est exact.

M. Francis: Vous savez quand l'élection aura lieu, et vous pouvez vous préparer...

[Text]

Mr. Whalan: Every year it is held on the second Monday in June and that is it. You can anticipate all those things.

Mr. Jerome: We keep bumping up against this business of the fixed election day which is difficult to combine with a parliamentary system in the true sense of the word where the government can come down theoretically any day. It is your position then that a fixed election day achieves an enormous saving in time so far as the election period is concerned.

Mr. Whalan: Oh, yes, it could save time due to the fact that you could get your enumeration completed ahead of time.

The Chairman: Mr. Francis.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I want to open up again, one other relatively small point. I would like to ask Mr. Whalan, through you, if there is any difficulty with candidates' agents having access on election day to the office of the returning officer for a constituency?

Mr. Whalan: What do you mean by access?

Mr. Francis: A candidate's agent normally can go to each voting subdivision, but there is a defect in the federal Act, in my opinion, which would prevent a candidate's agent from having any access whatsoever to the officer of a returning officer on election day. Is there such a bar in your Act?

Mr. Whalan: No, they have access to the returning officer. Do you mean to visit the office?

Mr. Francis: He cannot go inside the office or near it.

Mr. Whalan: No, there is nothing to prevent him from doing that.

Mr. Francis: Did you realize that? I know it is so because I have specifically requested permission in writing of Mr. Hamel's predecessor to have an agent in the office of the returning officer for the constituency on election day and was refused that in advance. That is why I asked you sir, if, in your opinion, there would be any reason for refusing a candidate's agent the right to be present in the office of the returning officer of a constituency during election day.

Mr. Whalan: We have never run up against that problem, but I can see that it could cause a lot of trouble within the office.

Mr. Francis: Just to be there?

[Interpretation]

M. Whalan: Les élections ont lieu le deuxième lundi de juin, chaque année. Nous pouvons nous y préparer.

M. Jerome: Il est difficile de concilier cela avec le régime parlementaire parce qu'un gouvernement peut être renversé n'importe quel jour. Par conséquent, vous estimez qu'un jour fixe permet de réaliser une grande économie de temps en ce qui concerne la période électorale?

M. Whalan: Oh oui, une grande économie de temps naturellement parce que l'énumération peut se faire à l'avance.

Le président: M. Francis.

M. Francis: Y a-t-il des difficultés quand les agents des candidats se présentent le jour de l'élection au bureau du président d'élection?

M. Whalan: Que voulez-vous dire?

M. Francis: L'agent d'un candidat peut aller dans chacune des subdivisions, mais la loi fédérale comporte une lacune qui fait qu'un agent ne peut pas se présenter au bureau du président d'élection le jour de l'élection. Y a-t-il un tel empêchement dans votre Loi?

M. Whalan: Non, ils peuvent aller voir le président d'élection.

M. Francis: Il ne peut y aller, ni à l'intérieur ni même près de là.

M. Whalan: Non, il n'y a rien qui l'en empêche.

M. Francis: Pas dans notre système. Parce que j'ai demandé par écrit au prédécesseur de M. Hamel d'avoir un agent dans le bureau du président d'élection et on m'a refusé la permission. A votre avis, y aurait-il une raison pour refuser à un candidat, le droit d'aller au bureau du président d'élection le jour de l'élection?

M. Whalan: Nous n'avons jamais eu à faire face à ce problème. Ça pourrait causer beaucoup d'ennuis au bureau.

M. Francis: Simplement, le fait d'être là?

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: I would think so. If you had half a dozen agents in there all wrangling over nothing...

Mr. Francis: All right, but I should think that you might be coloured a little today, sir.

Mr. Whalan: No, I am not, I am very unbiased. But...

Mr. Francis: I realize you are. I do not wish to suggest in any way...

Mr. Whalan: No, but I can visualize the state of confusion if there were half a dozen agents in there all fighting over the same thing.

Mr. Francis: But surely in the poll, for example...

Mr. Whalan: It is bad enough at the poll if a bunch of agents get in there all scrambling and all trying to express their own opinion over, sometimes an illiteral D.R.O.

Mr. Francis: Do you think they should be kept out?

Mr. Whalan: I do not say they should be kept out, but certainly this is why there is a constable there to maintain law and order.

Mr. Francis: Is there not a parallel situation with regard to the returning officer? In my own constituency there are 220 places where a poll is conducted and where, as a candidate, I could have an agent, but there is one place where the whole machinery is directed on election day where I cannot have an agent. It seems to be anomalous.

Mr. Whalan: I could see it if each party had one agent.

Mr. Francis: That is right.

Mr. Whalan: I could see no objection to that...

Mr. Francis: Thank you. That was the question I intended to ask you.

Mr. Whalan: ...provided it was not bombarded with agents.

Mr. Francis: No.

Mr. Whalan: Not more than one.

Mr. Francis: No, no, just one agent.

Mr. Whalan: I cannot see any objection to that.

Mr. Francis: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Whalan: We have never run up against the problem.

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Oui, si vous aviez une demi-douzaine d'agents qui se cassent le chignon...

M. Francis: Très bien, mais je crois que vous êtes partial aujourd'hui.

M. Whalan: Non, non, je suis très impartial.

M. Francis: Je crois que vous l'êtes.

M. Whalan: Mais je puis très bien voir la confusion qui serait créée ainsi si tous les agents discutaient à propos de tout et à propos de rien.

M. Francis: Mais, sûrement, au bureau de votation.

M. Whalan: C'est assez ennuyeux, dans le bureau de votation, lorsque plusieurs agents essaient de faire valoir leur opinion.

M. Francis: Devrait-on les tenir à l'écart?

M. Whalan: Je ne prétends pas qu'ils doivent être tenus à l'écart, mais il y a un constable pour maintenir l'ordre.

M. Francis: N'est-ce pas la même chose pour le président d'élection? Dans ma circonscription, il y a 220 bureaux où je peux avoir un agent. Il y a un seul endroit où je ne le peux pas. Ceci me semble être une anomalie.

M. Whalan: Si chaque parti avait un agent, il n'y aurait rien à redire.

M. Francis: C'est exact.

M. Whalan: Je n'ai aucune objection à cela.

M. Francis: Merci. C'était ma question.

M. Whalan: A condition de ne pas être envahi par les agents.

M. Francis: Non.

M. Whalan: Pas plus qu'un.

M. Francis: Non, seulement un.

M. Whalan: Je n'ai pas d'objection.

M. Francis: Merci.

M. Whalan: Nous n'avons jamais eu ce problème.

[Text]

Mr. Francis: Thank you.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary question in a sense. Are you satisfied with the provisions of your own Act as it relates to your ability as the Chief Electoral Officer to resolve difficulties that come up, as I am sure they do or must, that are not provided for in the Act? Are you satisfied with it...

Mr. Whalan: Yes, I think so.

Mr. Forrestall: ...as it relates to your authority?

Mr. Whalan: Yes, I think so. With a few minor changes the Act can be very successfully executed.

Mr. Forrestall: Does the authority in your own Act conform generally or broadly with the federal Act in this area?

Mr. Whalan: Yes, it does, broadly.

Mr. Benjamin: On this business of agents at the polls which Mr. Francis raised, in the case of multiple constituencies, let us take, for example, a four-member seat in Saint John, there would be two agents whether there was one candidate or four? You only are allowed two agents, not eight.

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: Why do you allow only one for an independent candidate? I do not mean you personally, but why does the Act only allow one? Do you know of any reason why it was specified...

Mr. Whalan: No, I do not know of any reason. I really do not know.

Mr. Jerome: It would be theoretically possible, I guess, to have four different independent candidates and, therefore, four agents...

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: .. whereas if the candidates in the same area have a party affiliation they are limited to two.

Mr. Whalan: Yes, that is quite true. It could happen.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall, do you have something to ask?

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder, Mr. Whalan, if you could describe for us the provisions of your Act as they relate to members of the Canadian Armed Forces, particularly at Gagetown and particularly as they relate to the secrecy of their ballots, generally speaking.

[Interpretation]

M. Francis: Merci.

M. Forrestall: En votre qualité de directeur général d'élection, êtes-vous satisfait des provisions de la loi?

M. Whalan: Oui, oui.

M. Forrestall: En ce qu'elle touche à votre autorité.

M. Whalan: Oui, je crois. Avec quelques modifications la loi pourrait très bien s'appliquer.

Mr. Forrestall: L'autorité telle que stipulée dans votre loi est-elle conforme à la loi fédérale d'une façon générale?

M. Whalan: Oui, d'une façon générale.

M. Benjamin: A propos de la question de l'agent dans les bureaux de votation, pour ce qui est des circonscriptions multiples, ou quadruple comme celle de Saint-Jean, par exemple. Il y aurait deux agents qu'il y ait un candidat ou quatre? Vous n'avez droit qu'à deux agents et non à huit.

M. Whalan: C'est exact.

M. Benjamin: Pourquoi n'en autorisez-vous seulement un pour les candidats indépendants?

M. Whalan: Non, je ne peux pas vous donner la raison. Je n'en vois pas.

M. Jerome: Ce serait possible, en principe, d'avoir quatre candidats indépendants et par conséquent, quatre agents.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Jerome: Tandis que si les candidats d'une région sont affiliés à un parti ils ne peuvent en avoir que deux?

M. Whalan: Oui, c'est cela qui se produirait.

Le président: M. Forrestall, avez-vous une question à poser?

M. Forrestall: Monsieur Whalan, pouvez-vous nous dire quelles sont les dispositions de votre loi concernant les militaires canadiens, surtout à Gagetown, et surtout dans la mesure où elles ont trait au caractère secret de leurs votes?

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: Do you mean proxy votes?

Mr. Forrestall: No, but I might perhaps ask a series of specific questions. Are all the members of the Canadian Armed Forces at Camp Gagetown enumerated in the same manner?

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: All of them, including those living on the base? I am trying to separate married quarters from...

Mr. Whalan: If they are on the base, they are within an electoral riding and are enumerated in that electoral riding.

Mr. Benjamin: No matter where they come from in Canada?

Mr. Whalan: No matter where they came from, if they are Canadian citizens or British subjects.

Mr. Benjamin: With the same residence requirements?

Mr. Whalan: That would be their residence.

Mr. Benjamin: But do they still have to be there six months prior to election?

Mr. Whalan: Oh, yes.

Mr. Forrestall: You do not adhere to the principle, as some provinces do, of permitting the elector to vote on the basis of his choice, which he elects once a year to designate to his superior officer?

Mr. Whalan: No. The residence laws apply to them as well as to anyone else.

Mr. Forrestall: How many polling stations would there be in Gagetown?

Mr. Whalan: I would not know offhand.

Mr. Forrestall: Twenty in Gagetown, 15?

Mr. Whalan: Oh, no.

Mr. Forrestall: Not that many?

Mr. Whalan: Polling stations?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes. Well, polling divisions.

Mr. Whalan: Polling divisions?

Mr. Forrestall: Places where people go and vote.

Mr. Whalan: There is a distinction between polling divisions and polling stations. You might have three polling stations in one polling division.

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Voulez-vous parler du vote par procuration?

M. Forrestall: Non, mais je pourrais poser une série de questions précises. Les militaires de Camp Gagetown sont-ils tous énumérés de la même façon?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Tous, même ceux qui vivent à la base? J'essaie d'établir une distinction entre les quartiers des gens mariés et...

M. Whalan: S'ils vivent à la base, ils se trouvent dans une circonscription électorale et ils y sont inscrits.

M. Benjamin: Quel que soit l'endroit où ils vivent au Canada.

M. Whalan: Quel que soit l'endroit d'où ils viennent, s'ils sont sujets britanniques ou citoyens canadiens.

M. Benjamin: Avec les mêmes exigences du point de vue de la résidence.

M. Whalan: Cela serait leur résidence.

M. Benjamin: Mais ils doivent quand même être là six mois avant les élections?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Ne suivez-vous pas le principe de certaines provinces qui autorisent l'électeur à voter en fonction de l'option qu'il exerce une fois l'an auprès de son officier supérieur?

M. Whalan: Non. Les lois du domicile s'appliquent à eux comme à tous les autres.

M. Forrestall: Combien de bureaux de vote y aurait-il à Gagetown?

M. Whalan: Je n'ai pas les chiffres en tête.

M. Forrestall: 20, 15?

M. Whalan: Oh, non!

M. Forrestall: Moins que ça?

M. Whalan: Des bureaux de vote?

M. Forrestall: Oui. Disons, des divisions de vote.

M. Whalan: Des divisions de vote?

M. Forrestall: Les endroits où l'on va voter.

M. Whalan: Il y a une différence entre les divisions et les bureaux de votation. Il peut y avoir trois bureaux de vote dans une division.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: I was not thinking of the riding, generally. I was thinking in terms of 350 people, roughly, to what I would call a polling division. That would be serviced by one polling station, would it not? Just in that sense. How many of those would there be in Camp Gagetown?

Mr. Whalan: The armed forces, if I recollect, is one polling division. It would be classified as one polling division. In Oromocto you see a great part of Camp Gagetown married quarters. Unmarried as well as married, in other words, live in Oromocto, which is an urban centre. I think Oromocto has, if I recall, about 10 divisions.

Mr. Forrestall: For the purposes of my next question, it is perhaps irrelevant. It is an identifiable area. Is there concern that the secrecy of the serviceman's ballot is perhaps not properly provided for in the general sense?

Mr. Whalan: I am not aware of that. I have heard no comment on it or no criticism of it in our relations, either in municipal or provincial elections.

Mr. Forrestall: There is a mixture under your system at Gagetown of civilians and service people voting—physically putting a ballot in the same box—so as to dilute any possibility of somebody's saying, oh, well, the army voted.

Mr. Whalan: Oh, yes.

Mr. Forrestall: I am concerned because the armed forces have not, in my opinion, had the privacy of the ballot for a long time and I hope you will be able to do something about it.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not ask for a moral judgment on this but just an appraisal of the administrative effectiveness of the election of candidates through several multiple or dual ridings as against single-member ridings. I am one of the victims of the dissolution of one of the last two dual ridings that we had in the Dominion House. In terms of electing 52 men or women to Fredericton, would your job, your total process from start to finish, be much simplified and therefore potentially of a shorter period if they were single-member constituencies?

Mr. Whalan: I do not think I am in a position to pass an opinion on it. We have never had it. As I say, they have discussed this in the press many times and the leader of the M. Forrestall: Je ne parlais pas de la circonscription en général. Je pensais à 350 personnes ce que j'appellerais un arrondissement électoral et qui aurait un bureau de vote, dans ce sens-là. Combien y en aurait-il au Camp Gagetown?

[Interpretation]

M. Whalan: Les Forces armées, si je me souviens bien, constituent une division de vote. Ce serait considéré comme une division de vote. A Oromocto, vous voyez une grande partie des quartiers des gens mariés du Camp Gagetown. Il y a des gens mariés et des gens non mariés qui vivent à Oromocto qui est un centre urbain et qui, je crois, comprend dix divisions.

M. Forrestall: Aux fins de ma prochaine question, cela n'est peut-être pas très approprié. Il s'agit d'un domaine qui peut être identifié. S'inquiète-t-on que le caractère secret des votes des militaires n'est pas toujours observé?

M. Whalan: Je ne suis pas au courant. Je n'ai entendu aucune critique dans nos relations, que ce soit aux élections municipales ou provinciales.

M. Forrestall: En vertu de votre système, vous avez des civils et des militaires à Gagetown qui votent ensemble et qui mettent leurs bulletins dans les mêmes urnes pour supprimer la possibilité que l'on dise: «les militaires ont voté».

M. Whalan: Oh oui.

M. Forrestall: Je suis préoccupé parce qu'à mon avis, les militaires n'ont pas eu l'avantage du secret lorsqu'ils votent pendant longtemps et j'espère que vous pourrez remédier à la situation.

Le président: Monsieur MacQuarrie.

M. Macquarrie: Je voudrais simplement qu'on me dise quelle est l'efficacité administrative de l'élection des candidats dans plusieurs circonscriptions multiples ou doubles comparativement à celles où il n'y a qu'un seul député. Je suis une des victimes de la dissolution d'une des deux dernières circonscriptions doubles que nous ayons eues à Fredericton. Pour ce qui est de l'élection de 52 hommes ou femmes à Fredericton, est-ce que, du début jusqu'à la fin, le travail serait simplifié s'il n'y avait qu'un candidat par circonscription?

M. Whalan: Je ne suis pas en mesure d'émettre une opinion à ce sujet. Nous n'avons jamais eu un cas semblable. Il en a souvent été question dans les journaux. Le

[Texte]

Opposition has made reference to it several times recently as well as during the last election. But I have never looked into it that deeply to see whether or not it would facilitate the operation of an election.

Mr. Macquarrie: You do not find that there are really built-in delays on these multiple things? I know that some people did not like having to write in 'we' instead of 'I' on some of the forms for dual ridings, but I never could think that was a terribly big job. I was going back to Mr. Castonguay, as a matter of fact. I knew he was death on dual ridings. You do not find it all that difficult, then, in administrative terms?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Macquarrie: Because I know there are sociological reasons for them.

Mr. Forrestall: How many ridings are there?

Mr. Whalan: Twenty-two.

An hon. Member: Twenty-two ridings and 58 members.

Mr. Macquarrie: Do you have a set day of the week for elections?

Mr. Whalan: Monday.

Mr. Francis: Do you have views on whether it is a good thing to always have an election on a Monday? Would any other day of the week be preferable, from your point of view?

Mr. Whalan: I really do not know. I cannot visualize any objection with the exception of Saturday. Saturday is objectionable, apparently.

Mr. Francis: Do the schools close so that you can use them as polling booths?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Francis: If you had an election on a Saturday, you could more easily use schools, with less difficulty, perhaps.

Mr. Whalan: That is a question that was posed in the municipal elections, particularly where the municipal government is now the owner of all the schools, and we felt that by using the schools we would be able to reduce our costs of rented quarters considerably. Naturally, all the school boards were opposed—not all but some. Some school boards opposed the letting of the schools or relinquishing of the schools on a Monday because it meant they had to close the class-chef de l'Opposition en a parlé plusieurs fois dernièrement et durant les dernières élections, mais je n'ai jamais étudié la question pour voir si ceci faciliterait les choses ou non.

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Vous ne trouvez vraiment pas qu'il y a vraiment des retards dans ces cas?

Je sais que certains n'aiment pas inscrire « nous » au lieu de « je » sur certaines formules, mais je n'ai jamais cru que c'était là une tâche monumentale. Je retournais d'ailleurs à M. Castonguay. Vous ne voyez donc pas de difficultés, du point de vue administratif?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Macquarrie: Car je sais que cela peut s'expliquer par des raisons sociologiques.

M. Forrestall: Combien de circonscriptions y a-t-il?

M. Whalan: Vingt-deux.

Une voix: 22 circonscriptions et 58 députés.

M. Macquarrie: Avez-vous un jour fixe de la semaine pour les électeurs?

M. Whalan: Lundi.

M. Francis: Est-ce que vous croyez que c'est bon de tenir des élections le lundi? Est-ce que vous croyez qu'un autre jour serait préférable?

M. Whalan: Je ne sais pas. Je ne vois aucun inconvénient à ce que les élections aient lieu un autre jour, sauf le samedi. Il semble qu'on s'oppose au samedi.

M. Francis: Est-ce que les écoles ferment pour que vous puissiez vous en servir comme bureaux de vote?

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Francis: Si vous aviez des élections le samedi, vous pourriez vous servir des écoles plus facilement.

M. Whalan: C'est une question qui s'est posée aux élections municipales, surtout puisque le gouvernement provincial possède maintenant toutes les écoles, et nous avons pensé pouvoir ainsi réduire nos frais de location considérablement. Évidemment, toutes les commissions scolaires se sont opposées à cette proposition, à ce que l'on se serve des écoles le lundi parce qu'on perdrait un jour de classe. Certains ont proposé que les élections aient lieu le samedi, mais là vous vous heurtez au rooms and lose a day of school. There were some who advocated having it on Saturday, but immediately you come up against the problem of the Jewish people. That eliminated that. So we are still back to Monday.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: Your only exception is that if a holiday falls on a Monday, then it is on Tuesday.

Mr. Whalan: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you have any provisions in the Act regarding the display of election posters, signs, banners or whatever, in or near a polling station?

Mr. Whalan: On election day?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes. What is the prohibition? None at all or within a certain distance?

Mr. Whalan: None at all around the polling stations; and no banners on cars, no loudspeakers.

Mr. Benjamin: Is there a prescribed distance from the polling station?

Mr. Whalan: In the area of the polling station, cars are not allowed to carry them.

Mr. Benjamin: All broadcasting must cease midnight Friday.

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: Newspapers can go along merrily, though, can they? Newspaper advertising can just carry on. It is permissible in New Brunswick on election day for a candidate or a party on behalf of its candidates to run ads, for example transportation ads and that type of thing.

Mr. Whalan: I am not sure of that. I guess it just deals with radio stations and television stations.

Mr. Francis: Do you have a prohibition of posters near the polls on election day? What is the distance? Pardon me, I do not have a copy of the Act.

Mr. Whalan: In or around the polling station. That is all.

Mr. Benjamin: It is just up to the D.R.O., then, as to what he considers to be in or around the grounds.

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: I notice in paragraph (2) of Section 117 on page 108, starting about halfproblème des Juifs. Donc, nous nous en tenons toujours au lundi.

[Interpretation]

M. Benjamin: Vous ne faites exception que s'il y a une fête le lundi, alors vous les tenez le mardi.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Est-ce que vous avez des dispositions dans la loi en ce qui concerne les affiches ou les banderoles près des bureaux de votation?

M. Whalan: Le jour des élections?

M. Benjamin: Oui. Quelle est l'interdiction? Aucune affiche ou seulement à une certaine distance?

M. Whalan: Aucune banderole près des bureaux; sur les voitures, pas de haut-parleurs.

M. Benjamin: Est-ce qu'il y a une distance prévue du bureau de votation?

M. Whalan: Les voitures ne peuvent pas porter de banderoles dans le secteur du bureau.

M. Benjamin: Toute radiodiffusion doit cesser le vendredi à minuit.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Pourtant, les journaux ne sont pas affectés? Les annonces dans les journaux sont permises. Il est possible pour un candidat ou un parti au Nouveau-Brunswick, le jour des élections, de faire passer des annonces.

M. Whalan: Je ne suis pas certain. Il ne s'agit que des stations de radio et de télévision.

M. Francis: Est-ce que vous interdisez des affiches près des bureaux de votation le jour des élections? Quelle est la distance? Excusez-moi, je n'ai pas d'exemplaire de la loi.

M. Whalan: Au bureau ou aux environs de ce dernier. C'est tout.

M. Benjamin: Il incombe donc au sous-officier rapporteur de décider ce qu'il estime être «au bureau ou aux environs du bureau».

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Benjamin: A la page 108, l'article 117, alinéa 2), au milieu de l'alinéa 2), 4^e ligne, way down the paragraph there, the fourth line, "or within two days before polling day." That means that every party must cease putting up posters, stickers or anything else and handing them out on midnight Friday.

[Texte]

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: But even on election day, people could still keep posters up on their houses or stickers on their cars as long as they did not come in or near the polling station? Everything does not have to be taken down.

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Macquarrie: Would there be any problem if candidates' representatives distributed pamphlets on some policy—in other words propaganda—on the day before election—Saturday or even Sunday?

Mr. Whalan: I think that is covered here as well.

Mr. Macquarrie: Favours and flags and so on, but I am thinking of a political message.

Mr. Whalan: We had a problem with that in a by-election in Dalhousie where right across the river in the Province of Quebec they were broadcasting prerecorded election speeches. That created quite a turmoil. The difficulty was to pinpoint who was responsible for that program. You could not nail the broadcasting station. If it could have been proven that political parties were involved, there would have been trouble. It is quite a problem to try to prove those things.

Mr. Macquarrie: I presume all of these are to prevent the kind of roorback at the last minute against which someone else is unable to respond. There are people who believe that it might be well to consider the printed media too; that some things come out on the morning of the election which should perhaps be contradicted and it is a little too late. We hear that sometimes heavy activity in the distribution of pamphlets is a bit difficult at the last minute. I think it might be worth considering that and a stop put to it.

Mr. Whalan: I think where it can be proven that the parties involved are accomplices to these actions they are liable, but there again it is difficult to prove because a lot of party workers or supporters could do that and get away with it.

Mr. Benjamin: The use of a radio station across the border in another province might well be looked into, Mr. Chairman, as to a recommendation to the Canadian Radio-

[Interprétation]

«ou dans les deux jours avant les élections». Il faut donc ôter les affiches, les collants et les banderoles le vendredi à minuit.

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Même le jour des élections, les gens peuvent encore avoir une affiche chez eux à condition de ne pas les apporter près des bureaux de votation ou à l'intérieur de ces derniers. Tout ne doit pas être enlevé.

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Macquarrie: Y aurait-il un problème si des représentants des candidats distribuaient des brochures la veille d'une élection, autrement dit s'ils faisaient de la propagande, le samedi ou même le dimanche?

M. Whalan: Cela est également prévu.

M. Macquarrie: Je pense à un message politique.

M. Whalan: Nous avons eu des problèmes en ce sens dans une élection complémentaire à Dalhousie alors qu'en face, au Québec, il y avait un programme radiodiffusé et des discours préenregistrés. Il y a eu un tollé. Quant à dire qui était le responsable, là je ne sais pas. On ne pouvait accuser la station. Si on avait pu prouver que les partis politiques étaient responsables, il y aurait eu des ennuis. C'est très difficile de prouver ces choses-là.

M. Macquarrie: Je suppose que tout cela est destiné à empêcher des faussetés de dernière minute que l'on ne peut réfuter. Certains pensent qu'il serait peut-être bon de songer aux journaux. Il y a des choses qui paraissent dans les journaux le matin de l'élection qu'on pourrait peut-être contredire, mais à la dernière minute ce n'est plus possible. Nous entendons dire que quelquefois la distribution des brochures à la dernière minute est difficile. Je crois qu'il serait bon qu'on arrête ces choses.

M. Whalan: Lorsqu'on peut établir que les partis sont complices, ils deviennent passifs, mais c'est difficile à prouver car beaucoup de travailleurs pour les partis arrivent à se dérober.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, l'utilisation d'une station de radio d'une frontière provinciale à l'autre pourrait être étudiée et faire l'objet d'une recommandation à la Com-

[Text]

Television Commission, listing the regulations that prohibit any stations anywhere from broadcasting anything on any kind of election, be it municipal, provincial or federal.

Mr. Whalan: This is where I had to go to get it stopped.

Mr. Benjamin: You did. And they did stop it?

Mr. Whalan: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: But there was nothing already in the regulations on this.

Mr. Whalan: No, not as far as we were concerned.

Mr. Francis: Surely, it would be fair to make the recommendation to the Radio-Television Commission that no station be permitted to make any broadcast which would violate any municipal or provincial requirements or provisions, no matter what the location of the station was. I think this kind of recommendation would be a healthy one to make.

Mr. Whalan: I am just using a specific case there.

Mr. Francis: I know, but you could make a general provision and then the onus is on the station to defend themselves under it. I think this would be a healthy thing to do.

Mr. Jerome: How do you control an American station?

Mr. Francis: You can control a station in one province affecting an election in another province.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: I had this occur once in Saskatchewan. A station in Montana was used by a party the night before election, and what do you do? But in the case where one was tried in Alberta when there was an election on in Saskatchewan, a couple of telephone calls fixed that. It should not be necessary to have to worry about it.

Mr. Francis: You certainly have it in the Ottawa Valley.

Mr. Benjamin: This might also be a case of asking our own radio and television commission to take it up with their counterparts in mission canadienne de radio et télévision pour énumérer les règlements qui empêcheraient toute station de radiodiffuser quoi que ce soit, qu'il s'agisse d'élection municipale, provinciale ou fédérale.

[Interpretation]

M. Whalan: C'est ce que j'ai dû faire pour arrêter ces choses.

M. Benjamin: Ont-ils arrêté?

M. Whalan: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Mais il n'y avait rien dans le règlement qui l'interdisait.

M. Whalan: Non, pas en ce qui nous concerne.

M. Francis: Il me semble qu'il serait juste de recommander à la CRTC qu'aucune station-émettrice ne puisse diffuser une émission qui violerait des dispositions municipales ou provinciales, quel que soit l'endroit où la station est située. Je crois qu'il s'agit là d'une bonne recommandation.

M. Whalan: J'utilise uniquement un cas concret.

M. Francis: Mais vous pouvez établir une disposition générale et ainsi la station de radio doit se défendre en vertu de cette dernière. Je pense que cela serait une chose utile à faire.

M. Jerome: Comment pouvez-vous avoir le contrôle d'une station de radio américaine?

M. Francis: Vous pouvez contrôler une station radiophonique dans une province qui s'occupe de faire de la propagande pour une élection dans une autre province.

M. Jerome: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Ceci s'est déjà produit en Saskatchewan. Une station au Montana a été utilisée par l'un des partis la nuit précédant l'élection. Que pouvez-vous faire dans ce cas? Mais dans le cas qui a fait l'objet d'un jugement en Alberta lorsqu'il y avait une élection en Saskatchewan, quelques coups de téléphone ont arrangé l'affaire. Je pense qu'il n'y a pas de souci à se faire de ce côté-là.

M. Francis: Vous avez certainement le même cas dans la vallée de l'Outaouais.

M. Benjamin: On pourrait dans ce cas, demander à notre propre Commission de la radio et de la télévision de régler le problème the United States, and have a mutual regulation that applies.

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, it is my information that American stations, for example, who are contacted respecting this practice seem very willing to co-operate in every respect with the Canadian law. But the question is whether or not you should have to contact them, or whether you can prohibit it by other means. If we take the trouble to contact them and request that they conform with our laws, they are quite willing to do so. But whether or not you can always depend on co-operation or whether you can enforce it are two different things.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if I could ask a brief question to both Mr. Whalan and Mr. Hamel. I am sorry that I did not ask it yesterday in Nova Scotia, or earlier in Quebec. Under your schedule A, is your tariff of fees for conduct of the election based on ours?

Mr. Whalan: No, it is not. Some of the fees have been amended. They were discretionary.

Mr. Hamel: The Nova Scotia tariff fees are very close to ours, but they have many more districts than we do and because of the number of electors within each district, the end result is that each returning officer gets much less than each of our own. This is the source, I understand, of bitter complaints in Nova Scotia. That is what I was told yesterday.

Mr. Whalan: We have tried gradually to upgrade these fees to conform with the federal fees. In item I, for instance, we found immediately when we got into the 1967 election, that there were complaints from the returning officers, particularly in the urban ridings. An urban riding might have, say, 65 polling stations, for which there is allowed only $10 each, making $650. The election clerk would be getting more than the returning officer. So what we did was pass an Order in Council giving a minimum of $1,000 to each returning officer, and item II was increased to $12. In other words, we have $12 a polling station with a minimum of $1,000.

[Interprétation]

avec sa contrepartie aux États-Unis et de créer les règlements mutuels qui pourraient s'appliquer dans ces cas.

M. Jerome: Monsieur le président, selon des renseignements, ces stations américaines par exemple, lorsqu'on les appelle à ce sujet, semblent très coopératives dans tous les aspects de la loi canadienne. Mais la question est de savoir si oui ou non nous devons les contacter, ou plutôt si vous pouvez empêcher de telles actions par d'autres moyens. Si nous prenons la peine de les contacter et de leur demander qu'ils se conforment à nos lois, elles le font de bon cœur. Mais à savoir si oui ou non vous pouvez toujours dépendre de cette coopération ou si vous pouvez réglementer la chose, ce sont deux choses différentes.

Le président: Monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Je me demande si je pourrais poser une courte question à M. Whalan et à M. Hamel. Je suis désolé de ne pas l'avoir fait hier en Nouvelle-Écosse ou plus tôt, lorsque nous étions au Québec. Selon votre cédula A, est-ce que votre tarif concernant les droits pour la campagne électorale est basé sur le même que celui du Canada?

M. Whalan: Non. Certains des droits ont été modifiés car ils étaient sujets à discrétion.

M. Hamel: Le tarif des droits de la Nouvelle-Écosse ressemble beaucoup aux nôtres. Mais comme il y a plusieurs districts supplémentaires et parce que le nombre d'électeurs par district est plus faible, il en résulte que chaque président d'élection reçoit un montant plus faible que ceux des présidents d'une élection fédérale. Voilà, je crois, la source de plaintes amères dans la Nouvelle-Écosse. C'est ce qui nous a été dit hier.

M. Whalan: Nous avons essayé d'augmenter graduellement ces droits afin d'en arriver aux mêmes droits que ceux versés par le gouvernement fédéral. À l'article 1, par exemple, nous avons découvert que lors de l'élection de 1967 nous avons reçu des plaintes, il y avait des plaintes formulées par les présidents d'élection et tout spécialement dans les circonscriptions urbaines. Une circonscription urbaine, par exemple, pourrait avoir environ 65 bureaux de vote, pour lesquels on octroie dix dollars à chacun, ce qui fait $650. Ainsi le préposé aux élections pourrait faire plus d'argent que le président d'élection. Ainsi nous avons passé un ordre en conseil leur garantissant un minimum de $1,000 à chacun des présidents d'élection, et selon l'article 2, nous avons augmenté la somme par vote à $12. En d'autres mots, nous versons $12 par vote électoral et un minimum de $1,000 par bureau.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: Do you have anything in your Act anywhere that requires where possible the use of public buildings, for example, for polling stations?

Mr. Whalan: No.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Hamel: On this point, I would like to mention something to the Committee and, of course, if you do not agree with the practice I have been carrying on for a few years I would be pleased if you would tell me. Ever since I took this job, I have made it a point that each time we published something such as the report of the general election, such as a new tariff of fee, such as my report to the House of Commons, I send a copy to my provincial counterparts, hoping to get reciprocal treatment from them because I believe in constant exchange of information. I may say it is a two-way street with Quebec, with Ontario, and with most provinces. It is not a very expensive thing, except perhaps the big report which is published after each election which is a fairly expensive publication. But I do not know if the Committee approves of this. If you do, I will continue to do so; if not...

Mr. Forrestall: I do not know whether it is for us to say or not, but I hope you would not stop the practice.

Mr. Hamel: Thank you.

Mr. Forrestall: The question of conformity, I think, is too important. We are dealing with an awful lot of money in the course of conducting elections federally, provincially, and municipally. Anything that can be done to make life easier at all levels and cheaper is, I think, a responsibility that you have, and it is not necessarily one about which we have to tell you.

Mr. Hamel: Thank you.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Forrestall, I would just like to say I cannot conceivably see any harm in the practice. I think this is certainly something that should be continued.

The Chairman: Any more questions? Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: May I just bring up a point. I meant to ask this, and I wish, like Mr. Forrestall, I had done so in Nova Scotia or in

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: Avez-vous une disposition dans votre loi qui demande lorsqu'il est possible que des bureaux de vote soient installés dans des édifices publics?

M. Whalan: Non.

Le président: Monsieur Hamel.

M. Hamel: A ce sujet, j'aimerais mentionner quelque chose au Comité et bien sûr si vous n'êtes pas d'accord avec la pratique que j'utilise depuis quelques années, j'aimerais que vous me le disiez. Depuis la prise en charge de mon travail, chaque fois que nous publions quelque chose au sujet d'une élection, soit un rapport, soit des nouveaux tarifs de droits, soit mon rapport à la Chambre des communes, nous envoyons un exemplaire de ces documents aux directeurs d'élections de chacune des provinces. J'espère avoir un traitement réciproque de leur part car je crois qu'un échange continu de renseignements est important. Je dois dire que c'est déjà le cas avec la province de Québec, avec l'Ontario et avec plusieurs autres provinces. Ce n'est pas une activité bien dispendieuse, à l'exception des gros rapports qui sont publiés après chaque élection qui sont des publications plutôt coûteuses. Je ne sais pas si le Comité approuve cette façon de faire. Si vous l'approuvez, je continuerai cette pratique. Sinon...

M. Forrestall: Je ne sais pas si c'est à nous de dire oui ou non, mais j'espère que vous n'arrêterez pas cette pratique.

M. Hamel: Merci.

Mr. Forrestall: La question de l'uniformité est, je crois, très importante. Nous touchons à des montants énormes d'argent lorsque nous organisons des élections fédérales, provinciales ou municipales. Ce qui peut être fait pour rendre la chose plus facile à tous les niveaux et surtout moins chère, je crois, est du ressort de votre responsabilité et je crois qu'il n'est pas nécessaire pour nous d'avoir à vous le dire.

M. Hamel: Merci.

M. Francis: Monsieur Forrestall, je voudrais juste vous dire que je ne peux concevoir aucune mauvaise chose dans cette pratique. Je pense que c'est quelque chose qui devrait être poursuivi.

Le président: D'autres questions? Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Puis-je juste soulever une question? Je voudrais juste poser cette question et comme M. Forrestall, je regrette de ne

[Texte]

Quebec. Do you have any provisions for the matter of constituency boundaries? Is this left to the Governor in Council or do you have any provisions for independent commissions to do this?

Mr. Whalan: No.

Mr. Benjamin: I guess each province—no they do not either. Do you have a separate provision for provincial constituency boundaries being done by an independent commission?

Mr. Whalan: No. This is set up by the legislature whenever they feel as though it is. .

Mr. Benjamin: What is your minimum? Do you have any minimum number of electors per constituency?

Mr. Whalan: These new boundaries were based on population, one representative out of 10,000 or a fraction thereof.

The Chairman: Are you through Mr. Benjamin? Well, if there are no more questions, we thank you very much, Mr. Whalan.

Mr. Whalan: It has been my pleasure. Thank you, gentlemen.

Le président: J'ai exprimé tout à l'heure certaines remarques qui ont, je crois, clarifié la situation qui semblait quelque peu confuse. Je n'ai rien d'autre à ajouter, à moins que les membres aient quelque point à soulever, nous allons lever la séance.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a procedural question. Am I right in assuming that these are not in fact in camera meetings and that we will have a report of proceedings?

The Chairman: Yes, with the exception of Quebec where the proceedings were in camera.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not want to lose any of the pearls that we have had. That is good.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder about the matter of our subsequent tours or trips, even though they are tentative at the moment and hinge upon getting authority to do this. But I still come back to the point that I think that if we are going to continue further tours, we should do so in a more public way than has been the case here. We should conduct a pas l'avoir fait en Nouvelle-Écosse ou au Québec. Avez-vous une disposition quelconque touchant les circonscriptions électorales frontalières? Est-ce que ces matières sont laissées au jugement du gouverneur en conseil ou avez-vous des dispositions spéciales touchant une commission indépendante à ce sujet?

[Interprétation]

M. Whalan: Non.

M. Benjamin: Je parle de chaque province. Avez-vous une disposition spéciale pour les circonscriptions provinciales frontalières traitées par une commission indépendante?

M. Whalan: Non. Ceci est réglé par le Parlement lorsqu'il en a besoin.

M. Benjamin: Avez-vous un minimum? Avez-vous un nombre minimum d'électeurs par circonscription?

M. Whalan: Ces nouvelles limites sont basées sur la population, soit un député par 10,000 habitants ou fraction de ce chiffre.

Le président: Avez-vous fini, monsieur Benjamin? Si nous n'avons pas d'autres questions, je remercie infiniment M. Whalan.

M. Whalan: Ce fut un grand plaisir pour moi. Merci, messieurs.

The Chairman: I made certain remarks a moment ago which, I think, have cleared up the situation which seemed to be rather confused. I have nothing further to add, and unless the members have something to say, we will adjourn the meeting.

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais poser une question de procédure. Ai-je raison lorsque je présume que ces séances à huis clos n'en sont pas réellement et que nous aurons un compte rendu des délibérations?

Le président: Oui, à l'exception de nos délibérations au Québec où celles-ci étaient réellement à huis clos.

M. Macquarrie: Je ne voudrais pas perdre certaines des perles que nous avons obtenues. C'est bien.

Le président: Monsieur Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, j'aimerais savoir en ce qui concerne nos voyages, même si nos voyages subséquents sont à l'état de projet en ce moment et dépendent de l'autorisation de la Chambre, cependant j'aimerais toujours en venir au point où si nous continuons, nous devrions avoir une possibilité de le faire d'une façon plus ouverte limited advertising campaign, making information available to people in the area, groups, organizations, and political parties who want to present some ideas to us as to how more effectively the electoral process can work. I think we should do that. I put it forward as a proposition. I do not know if you desire a formal motion to that effect or not?

[Text]

The Chairman: No, I would just like to give some information to Mr. Howard on this precise subject.

This matter was raised, if I recall, at the last steering committee we held, and it was felt at the time that we did not receive enough requests from people, and also there was a suggestion by Mr. Hamel who was attending our last steering committee that he needed advice from the Committee on all the technical aspects of the Canada Elections Act for which he is pressed right now to prepare amendments. He felt that it would be better for us to get information from the most competent people on all the technical aspects and that after that, if the Committee is of the opinion that we should secure information from the intermediary groups, then it would be up to the Committee to decide. If I recall well—I do not know if we have the documents here—all the letters we received so far from any intermediary groups either from Saskatchewan or from other places, have been answered and they have been informed that if and when we go to their provinces they will be informed and they will be invited, if they wish to do so, to present their briefs.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, could I comment on this please?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Francis: I understand why Mr. Howard is making this suggestion, and I think the Committee should certainly give serious consideration to it. I have been chairman of another committee that had a similar problem of deciding who it should hear, and what kind of witnesses it should call outside of the public service. This was the Veterans Affairs Committee, and was that they would invite briefs from recognized associations that had an interest in the field. They attempted to draw the line at individual representations before the Committee.

[Interpretation]

que ça été le cas jusqu'ici. Nous devrions concevoir une campagne de publicité limitée afin de renseigner les gens de la région que nous visitons les groupes, les organismes et les partis politiques qui désirent présenter certaines de leurs idées afin de conduire le processus électoral d'une façon plus efficace. Je pense que nous devrions faire cela. J'aimerais en faire une proposition. Je ne sais pas si vous désirez avoir une motion officielle pour ce faire?

Le président: Non, j'aimerais juste donner quelques renseignements à M. Howard à ce sujet.

Ce dernier a été soulevé, si je me souviens bien, au cours du dernier comité directeur que nous avons tenu et nous avons pensé à cette époque que nous n'avions pas reçu suffisamment de demandes de la population et M. Hamel avait aussi suggéré lors de notre dernier comité directeur, qu'il avait besoin d'obtenir l'avis du Comité au sujet de tous les aspects techniques de la Loi électorale du Canada pour laquelle on lui demande de préparer de nouvelles modifications. M. Hamel a pensé qu'il serait peut-être mieux pour nous d'obtenir des renseignements des gens les plus compétents, sur les aspects techniques de la chose, et qu'après cela, si le Comité opine que nous devrions obtenir de plus amples renseignements des groupes intermédiaires, le Comité alors déciderait de le faire. Si je me souviens bien, je ne sais pas si nous avons les documents avec nous ici, dans toutes les lettres que nous avons reçues jusqu'à présent les deux groupes intermédiaires, soit de la Saskatchewan ou de d'autres endroits, ont reçu une réponse et ces groupes ont été informés que si nous décidons d'aller leur rendre visite, ils en seraient avisés et invités, si tel est leur désir, à présenter leurs mémoires.

M. Francis: Monsieur le président, pourrais-je faire un commentaire?

Le président: Oui.

M. Francis: Je comprends pourquoi M. Howard nous fait cette suggestion, et je pense que le Comité devrait l'étudier sérieusement. J'ai déjà été président d'un autre comité qui a un programme semblable, un problème semblable à savoir de décider si oui ou non nous devrions entendre des témoins et de la sorte de témoins qu'il aurait dû convoquer en dehors des fonctionnaires. Il s'agissait du Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants et la décision prise fut que tous les groupes d'organisations reconnues qui avaient un intérêt dans cette question, soient

[Texte]

I am not saying that is is a hard and fast line. If someone who is a recognized authority in the field wanted to present an individual brief, I am sure the Committee might be disposed to hear it. But there is a problem. If you insert an add in the newspaper, as a royal commission usually does, saying that they will be in Regina on such and such a day and will be pleased to meet with everyone, you do get a number of briefs that cannot really be taken seriously. They do not have the same intellectual or other content and the screening process in terms of the time and agenda of the Committee is essential.

A compromise that might be considered might be an advertising process stating that those who wish to appear might submit an abstract of what they are going to say, a precis of some kind, ahead of time. Then the Committee would extend an invitation on the basis of the obviously indicated seriousness of the representation. So you are not in a position where you might have extended hearings on the spot when you get there. I think a parliamentary committee can be away from Ottawa only for limited periods. But I do think the principle of inviting opinion outside the scope, for example, of what this Committee has heard so far is basically a sound proposition.

The Chairman: I just want to add to this that Mr. Hamel has had circulated among the members photostat copies of all the letters of complaints or suggestions that have been received through his office, and I would say that more than 80 per cent of those complaints or requests from individuals or groups are precisely on the subject of the absentee voting system or organizing new systems to permit the crippled people or those in hospitals to vote. I would say that more than 80 per cent of their requests fall in these categories. But I believe that the members with the experience they have can themselves make up decisions that could meet their views. Yes Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not disagree at all with the suggestions of Mr. Hamel and the fact that the Committee has been thinking of meeting with the people who are expert in the field, provincial chief electoral officers and so forth. I think this is valuable and worthwhile. But the electoral process is the business of everybody in Canada.

[Interprétation]

invités à présenter leur mémoire. Le Comité à l'époque avait essayé d'empêcher les représentations individuelles devant le Comité.

Je n'ai pas à juger si cela est une bonne ou une mauvaise ligne de conduite. Si quelqu'un, qui est reconnu comme étant une autorité en la matière, désire présenter un mémoire individuel, je suis certain que le Comité serait disposé à l'entendre. Mais il y a là un problème. Si vous passez une annonce dans les journaux tel que le fait habituellement une commission royale d'enquête, disant que le Comité se réunira à Regina à telle ou telle date, et qu'il sera prêt à rencontrer tout un chacun, vous recevez ainsi un nombre de mémoires qui ne peuvent pas tous être pris au sérieux. Ils n'ont pas tous le même contenu et les travaux de déblaiement dans ces mémoires, en ce qui touche le temps et l'ordre du jour du Comité, est essentiel. Vous pouvez par contre étudier une façon d'annoncer l'autre séance en disant que ceux qui désirent témoigner devant le Comité devront soumettre un projet de leur déclaration suffisamment à l'avance. Ainsi le Comité pourra inviter ces personnes sur la base évidemment du sérieux de leur présentation. Ainsi vous n'êtes pas dans la position où vous devez allonger les audiences parce que vous êtes sur place. Je pense qu'un comité parlementaire ne peut s'absenter d'Ottawa uniquement que pour une période limitée. Et je pense que le principe d'inviter l'opinion du public à l'extérieur de l'objectif que le Comité s'est donné jusqu'à présent, est une proposition utile.

Le président: J'aimerais ajouter ceci. M. Hamel a fait circuler auprès des membres du Comité des exemplaires photocopiés de toutes les lettres de plaintes ou de suggestions qui ont été reçues à son bureau. J'aimerais dire que plus de 80 p. 100 de ces lettres ou de ces requêtes provenant soit d'individus soit de groupes, touchent particulièrement le sujet du système de vote des absents ou l'organisation de nouveaux systèmes permettant aux handicapés ou aux personnes hospitalisées de voter. Je voudrais ajouter que plus de 80 p. 100 de ces requêtes tombent dans ces catégories. Et je pense que les membres du Comité avec l'expérience qu'ils ont de la chose, peuvent eux-mêmes prendre des décisions qui correspondent à leur point de vue.

M. Benjamin: Je ne m'objecte pas du tout aux suggestions de M. Hamel, ni au fait que le Comité a pensé se réunir afin d'entendre les personnes expertes dans ce domaine, soit les directeurs, et présidents d'élections provinciaux, etc. Je pense que ceci est très valable et précieux. Mais le processus électoral au Canada est l'affaire de tout le monde.

[Text]

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: The Canada Elections Act is not dealt with all that often, maybe once every 10 or 12 years if it gets any sort of thorough review. It seems to me that we are passing up an opportunity. I quite agree that there are limits to how many we can hear. I suspect there will not be all that many who would want to appear before us. I see no reason why the Committee, when it does any further tours anywhere in the country, could not hear chief electoral officers, whether in camera or not according to their wishes. We can quite easily do that.

Our experience with these three meetings now has been only a matter of two and a half to three and a half or four hours of meeting with these people. You have the majority of a day left yet to do it, and if necessary, if there were several, I do not see any reason why the Committee cannot sit in one place for two days.

I think that we may not want to and probably should not go into a major publicity and advertising campaign. But many organizations come to mind that take an active part in the electoral process, not only political parties but also Chambers of Commerce. There is a host of groups. Political science departments of universities would have ideas to present. I think that if we did nothing more than even issue invitations, it would be more than what we are set up to do now. Personally, I would like to see us do it. If it meant another trip back to the Maritimes, after letting all these groups and organizations know, and it turned out that many wanted to hear us, we would come back here to the Maritimes for two or three days, or whatever is necessary.

Mr. Lefebvre: I would like to add a couple of comments. I agree with most of what you said, especially about inviting the political parties in every province because they certainly have ideas. But I do not see why we should go out of our way to invite the Chambers of Commerce or such groups. If we invite the Chamber of Commerce we might as well invite the local farmers union and the labour unions. This is where you are going to get into going way out of your way. Maybe a local university has a political science depart-

[Interpretation]

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: La Loi électorale du Canada n'est pas très souvent remise en question, peut-être une fois tous les 10 ou 12 ans lorsque nous faisons une révision générale de cette dernière. Il me semble, en tout cas pour moi, que nous laissons passer ainsi une autre chance. Je suis tout à fait d'accord que nous devons fixer une limite quant à l'audition des témoins. Je ne pense pas du reste qu'il y ait tellement de personnes qui désirent venir témoigner devant le Comité. Je ne vois aucune raison pourquoi le Comité, lorsqu'il entreprendra d'autres voyages dans notre pays, ne pourrait pas entendre les témoignages des directeurs généraux d'élections à huis clos ou non, selon leur désir. Nous pouvons très facilement faire cela.

Notre expérience acquise avec ces trois séances, n'est seulement vieille que de deux ou trois heures et demie de séances avec ces fonctionnaires. Il nous reste encore une grande partie de la journée pour ce faire avec eux, et si nécessaire, si nous avons plusieurs raisons, je ne vois pas pourquoi le Comité ne pourrait pas siéger dans un endroit quelconque pour deux jours.

Je pense que nous devrions absolument pas faire une publicité importante concernant nos séances. Mais plusieurs organismes me viennent à l'esprit qui prennent une part active dans le processus électoral, non pas seulement les partis politiques, mais aussi les chambres de commerce. Il y a d'autres groupes intéressés. Les départements politiques des universités auraient certainement une idée à nous soumettre. Je pense que si nous ne faisons pas autre chose que d'envoyer des invitations, il n'y a pas grand-chose que nous pourrions faire de plus. Personnellement, j'aimerais voir le Comité agir ainsi. Cela veut dire que nous devrions faire un autre voyage dans les Maritimes, après avoir fait savoir à tous ces groupes et organismes que nous voulons les entendre, et si plusieurs d'entre eux désirent se faire entendre, nous reviendrons dans les Maritimes pour deux ou trois jours si cela est nécessaire.

M. Lefebvre: J'aimerais juste faire quelques commentaires supplémentaires. Je suis d'accord avec la plupart des choses que vous venez de dire, spécialement au sujet des invitations faites aux partis politiques dans chaque province car ces derniers ont certainement des idées à nous soumettre. Je ne vois pas pourquoi nous devrions inviter les chambres de commerce ou les groupes de ce genre. Si nous invitons les chambres de commerce nous devrions tout aussi bien inviter les unions agricoles locales et les syndicats ment; that would be something to invite. But I think this is where the problem will start, when we start by the Chamber of Commerce, et cetera, et cetera.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: I think you will find, though, that most of the same groups you have mentioned, Chambers of Commerce, farm organizations and trade unions, have all expressed the policies of their organizations on the whole matter of the conduct of elections at some time or other. I do not think we should be afraid to make this as open as possible. As Mr. Francis said, there might be some individual citizen we have never heard of who has something very good to present to us.

Mr. Francis: If he could give us proof in advance that he could give a serious representation.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course, I quite appreciate that you would have to ask what it is he wants to present to us. If some kook wanted to appear it would be nice to know about it ahead of time, and we could say we were sorry.

Mr. Francis: If you get somebody who wants to argue about transferable ballots, and his entire representation will be on that kind of thing...

Mr. Lefebvre: Something else you can do is invite the national spokesmen for the farmers group and the Chamber of Commerce to testify in Ottawa and hear the rest of them when you are going out in the field.

The Chairman: It is not the same in every province. The fact is that there has been a tentative scheduled trip to Toronto fixed and organized for September 22, about which I had talked over the telephone with Mr. Benjamin. The problem was that at the time we were informed that a few days prior to September 22—we could not have our own meeting before that time—the Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws went to Quebec and then left for Australia. But they accepted the—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Francis: We are on the Ontario Select committee?

The Chairman: I have not the list.

An hon. Member: Yes, you can be assured.

[Interprétation]

ouvriers. C'est là où nous en viendrons si nous élargissons nos propres structures. Il est possible qu'une université comportant un département politique puisse être invitée. Mais je pense que le problème réside essentiellement à ce point. Si nous commençons à inviter la Chambre de commerce. etc. etc.

M. Benjamin: Je pense que la plupart des groupes que vous avez mentionnés, les chambres de commerce, les organisations agricoles, et les syndicats ouvriers ont tous exprimé le point de vue de leurs organisations sur la conduite des élections d'une façon ou d'une autre. Je ne pense que nous devrions avoir crainte de tenir nos séances aussi ouvertes que possible. Comme M. Francis l'a déjà dit, il y a certains citoyens, dont nous n'avons jamais entendu parler, qui auraient des représentations excellentes à nous faire.

M. Francis: A condition qu'ils puissent nous donner certaine preuve à l'avance que ces idées sont réellement sérieuses.

M. Benjamin: Bien sûr, je suis tout à fait d'accord avec vous, nous devrions d'abord lui demander ce qu'il a à nous présenter. Si certain farfelu désire se présenter devant le Comité il serait plutôt agréable de le savoir à l'avance, et de pouvoir le remercier.

M. Francis: Si vous avez par exemple, quelqu'un qui désire discuter du vote transférable, et que tout son mémoire se rapporte à ce sujet...

M. Lefebvre: Vous pouvez faire autrement, soit d'inviter le représentant national d'un organisme agricole ou le représentant des chambres de commerce et de lui demander de venir témoigner à Ottawa, et lorsque vous allez en voyage, d'interroger les autres témoins sur place.

Le président: Chaque province est différente. Par exemple, nous avons prévu un voyage à Toronto qui avait été fixé et organisé pour le 22 septembre. J'en ai parlé au téléphone avec M. Benjamin. Le problème était que nous fûmes informés quelques jours avant le 22 septembre que nous ne pouvions pas tenir d'autres séances car à cette époque le comité spécial sur les lois électorales de l'Ontario était à Québec et par après quittait le pays pour se rendre en Australie. Mais ils ont accepté... Je vous demande pardon?

M. Francis: Nous faisons partie du comité spécial de l'Ontario?

Le président: Je n'ai pas la liste...

Une voix: Oui, vous pouvez en être assurés.

[Text]

The Chairman: I have talked with Mr. Dunlop, Chairman of the Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws, and he agreed with me about the suggestion that after they have terminated their tour, we could perhaps have, either in Ottawa or in Toronto, a joint meeting. He expressed the view that most of the Ontario members of the legislature on this committee would have liked to get ideas from us about some very crucial points like the lowering of the voting age and some other points and try to reassess their own election act in conformity with the federal Act and those of some other provinces. They have 12 members.

Mr. Benjamin: On this point of the Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws, Mr. Chairman, I do not know if you are aware or not but the Saskatchewan legislature also has a select committee that is now sitting and may well have its work completed by the time we get out there. The Committee might be interested in meeting with them as well. They have heard briefs from a number of organizations and political parties.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I will not restate my general views; I gave them in Quebec. I do recall that when we last did a thorough job on the Canada Elections Act the presentations of groups and individuals were beneficial. I think we must adopt the point of view that we will and must and should hear people, but I think, in a more specific way, we should be giving some special thought to seeking out certain people, such as Professor Cairns, who is doing an excellent job on the whole question of election reform, and Flora Macdonald, who happens to belong to my party, who has spent the winter on this and did a fine paper. No doubt there are people in other parties who are specialists and there are some political scientists who have done a good job on this. I think we should perhaps consider some of these people and extend to them an invitation to come to Ottawa, I would think, in most cases.

The Chairman: Would it be agreeable to the members to have a meeting on Tuesday of the week after next?

An hon. Member: This committee stops on October 22.

The Chairman: The Committee stops, but the members will all survive.

An hon. Member: It will be of all the same members?

[Interpretation]

Le président: J'ai parlé avec M. Dunlop, le président du comité spécial de l'Ontario sur la loi électorale et il était d'accord avec moi sur la suggestion voulant qu'après que ce comité soit rentré de voyage, nous puissions peut-être avoir une réunion, soit à Ottawa soit à Toronto. Il a exprimé le point de vue que la plupart des députés ontariens siégeant sur ce Comité auraient voulu obtenir quelques points de vue de notre comité fédéral au sujet de problèmes primordiaux, tel que l'abaissement de l'âge des votants, ainsi que d'autres points pertinents afin de pouvoir réévaluer leurs propres lois électorales conformément à la loi fédérale et à celle de certaines autres provinces. Le comité ontarien comprend 12 membres.

M. Benjamins: Au sujet de ce comité spécial sur les lois électorales de l'Ontario, monsieur le président, je ne sais pas si vous êtes au courant ou non, mais l'Assemblée législative de la Saskatchewan a elle aussi son comité spécial qui siège actuellement et qui pourrait bien avoir terminé son travail à l'époque où nous nous rendrons dans cette province. Le Comité serait peut-être intéressé à rencontrer ce comité. Ce comité provincial a reçu des mémoires d'un grand nombre d'organismes et de partis politiques.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je ne vais pas redire ce que j'ai dit à Québec. Je me souviens que, lorsque nous avons fait la dernière révision complète de la loi électorale du Canada, les représentations des groupes et des particuliers avaient été fort utiles. Je crois que nous devrions écouter avec attention certaines personnes comme le professeur Cairns, qui fait un excellent travail sur toute la question de la réforme électorale, et Flora Macdonald, qui est un membre de notre parti qui a consacré son hiver à ce travail et qui a produit un document très intéressant. Sans le moindre doute, il y a des membres d'autres partis qui sont des spécialistes de la politique et qui font aussi un bon travail. Je crois que nous devrions leur envoyer une invitation à venir nous voir à Ottawa.

Le président: Les membres du Comité seraient-ils intéressés à avoir une réunion mardi dans deux semaines?

Une voix: Le Comité arrête ses travaux le 22 octobre.

Le président: Le Comité arrête, mais pas les membres.

Une voix: Le Comité se composera-t-il de tous les mêmes membres?

[Texte]

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Francis: I think that could be a technical point. The Standing Committee is usually reappointed, and I would think that the disposition of the House would be to do so with a minimum of delay.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I was not really thinking so much of individuals in the broad sense of permitting anybody to appear but rather of groups and political parties and those who want to make some particular presentation relative to making the electoral processes more valuable to them.

My concern is about the sort of limited advertising approach to it. Perhaps, as others have done, I could relate it to the Fisheries Committee, which had some hearings in British Columbia, and the extent of the kind of information that was given beforehand about it coming. I did not know how extensive it was, but there were some newspaper ads, and there was also the word-of-mouth information by which people from British Columbia on the Committee advised different groups.

Mr. Francis: Did the Committee insert ads in the local newspaper?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): There was an advertising program, but I do not know to what extent. In addition to that there was the individual who was doing this. We were not swamped. We had what one, I suppose, could loosely call a "crackpot" who appeared before the Committee, but the Committee took what was said with the usual grain of salt. This is the sort of thing I was thinking of, rather than doing what we are doing now. I am very serious about this. It can create a sort of a bad flavour about the whole thing. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I had written out a motion about this. Let me read it to you. I think it has the sense of what has been said here.

That with respect to this Committee's further visits, we authorize a limited advertising campaign in order that interested groups may have the opportunity to appear before us.

Then the steering committee—and I realize this is a delicate area...

The Chairman: Perhaps the next time you should attend!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No; the steering committee, in the sense of what we have been talking about in relation to the manner of proceeding, just does it, if that motion is acceptable.

Mr. Jerome: Perhaps the motion should simply say that this Committee be authorized

[Interprétation]

Le président: Oui.

M. Francis: Je crois qu'il s'agit d'un point technique. Le comité permanent est ordinairement renommé, et je crois que la Chambre le fera dans le plus bref délai.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je ne pense pas tellement à permettre à n'importe quel particulier de venir témoigner, mais plutôt aux groupes, aux partis politiques et à ceux qui seraient désireux d'améliorer le processus électoral dans leur propre intérêt.

Ce qui m'intéresse, c'est la publicité limitée qui entoure ces audiences. Peut-être pourrais-je citer le Comité des pêches, qui tient des audiences en Colombie-Britannique, et la quantité d'information qui a annoncé sa venue. Je ne sais pas quelle ampleur avait l'information, mais il y a eu des annonces dans les journaux, et il y a eu également l'information orale par laquelle des membres de la Colombie-Britannique faisant partie de ce Comité ont averti divers groupes.

M. Francis: Le Comité avait-il fait mettre des annonces dans le journal local?

M. Howard (Skeena): Il y a eu un programme de publicité, mais je ne sais pas quelle en était l'ampleur. De plus, certains particuliers se sont occupés de l'information. Les témoignages n'ont pas été nombreux. Il y a eu quelqu'un, qu'on pourrait appeler «un farceur», qui est venu témoigner, mais le Comité l'avait écouté avec un grain de sel. C'est à ce genre de choses que je pensais, plutôt que ce que nous faisons maintenant. Je crois que c'est un point important. Un tel genre de choses peut gêner tous les travaux. En fait, monsieur le président, j'ai rédigé une motion là-dessus. Permettez-moi de vous la lire.

Que, compte tenu des visites futures du Comité, nous permettons une campagne de publicité limitée de façon à donner aux groupes intéressés l'occasion de venir témoigner devant nous.

Puis, le comité directeur, et je vois bien que c'est un point délicat...

Le président: Peut-être la prochaine fois devriez-vous être présent!

M. Hooward (Skeena): Non; le comité directeur, pour ce qui est de leur façon de procéder, le fait tout simplement, si la motion est acceptable.

M. Jerome: Peut-être la motion devrait-elle dire que ce Comité est autorisé à prendre des to make arrangements for interested parties to attend our future meetings out West, rather than have the words "limited advertising campaign." I think that would contain the sense of it.

[Text]

I think everybody feels that the exercise we have gone through this week is a beneficial use of the Committee's time, but while we are at it we could do very well to expand our work in each centre by hearing other people who could contribute a great deal to the information we have been able to gather.

If we were just to leave it in the hands of the Committee to put it that way, that the Committee be authorized to arrange for other interested parties to present themselves at our future meetings, or something like that, we would perhaps...

The Chairman: Just a moment. It depends on the provinces we are speaking of. In fact, in Ontario they have already done it, and after we have had a two-day joint meeting with Ontario the decision may be not to hear anyone. They may want to readjust their law to ours. They have done the work and may want to benefit from the work they have already done. I personally believe that the suggestion made by Mr. Jerome meets the situation.

Mr. Howard Skeena: That is so; and I agreed previously. It is with respect to the Committee's further visits, that we agree to arrange that interested groups have the opportunity to appear before us.

Mr. Francis: If I may make one further suggestion, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is a job for the steering committee to think through.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is implicit in it. That is the follow up of it.

An hon. Member: We should change the word "visits" to "meetings".

The Chairman: I have the motion. Do you want me to read it?

That, with respect to this Committee's further visits, arrangements be made to give interested groups an opportunity to appear before the Committee.

The motion was proposed by Mr. Howard and seconded by Mr. Macquarrie.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, which provinces are we going to visit?

The Chairman: Our Chief Electoral Officer has said, and some members who were pres-dispositions pour que les parties intéressées assistent à nos futures réunions dans l'Ouest, plutôt que les mots «campagne de publicité limitée». Je crois que ce serait une meilleure formule.

[Interpretation]

Je crois que, cette semaine, le Comité a consacré son temps à des choses fort utiles, mais que nous pourrions étendre notre travail à chaque centre et écouter d'autres personnes qui auraient d'autres renseignements à nous communiquer.

Si nous laissons au Comité la possibilité d'entendre d'autres parties intéressées à venir témoigner à nos futures réunions, ou quelque chose comme ça, peut-être que...

Le président: Un moment. Tout dépend des provinces auxquelles nous avons affaire. C'est déjà fait en Ontario et peut-être qu'après une réunion de deux jours en Ontario, on décidera que nous avons entendu assez de témoins. Ils peuvent vouloir ajuster leur loi aux nôtres. Ils ont fait leurs travaux et ils pourraient vouloir en profiter. Je crois personnellement que la proposition de M. Jerome convient bien à la situation.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je suis d'accord. C'est en tenant compte des visites futures du Comité que nous devrions prendre des dispositions pour donner aux groupes intéressés l'occasion de venir témoigner devant nous.

M. Francis: J'aurais une autre proposition, monsieur le président. Je crois que c'est une décision qui relève du comité directeur.

M. Howard (Skeena): C'est un point sous-jacent, qui en découle.

Une voix: Nous devrions remplacer le mot «visites» par «réunions».

Le président: Voulez-vous lire la motion?

Que, compte tenu des visites futures du Comité, des dispositions soient prises pour donner aux groupes intéressés l'occasion de venir témoigner devant le Comité.

La motion est proposée par M. Howard et appuyée par M. Macquarrie.

La motion est adoptée.

M. Carter: Monsieur le président, quelles provinces visiterons-nous?

Le président: Notre directeur général des élections a dit, et certains membres en ont ent at our last meeting suggested, that British Columbia had an absentee voting system that had worked for years.

[Texte]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Not very well; but it worked.

Mr. Francis: Did it involve proxy voting?

The Chairman: No. In Saskatchewan they had...

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Not now; it used to have.

The Chairman: It used to have. These have been the places where the members have already presented views on what we should consider, and we have these plus the joint meeting with the Ontario legislative assembly. That, I think, would be very beneficial to us, because they have done very thorough work toward amending their law. They have already issued a report, and they have made trips through the country. They are now back from Australia.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, while we are still in this general area, would it not be possible for the steering committee to come up with a name, or possibly two names, from our neighbours to the south, of experts in this field—somebody who might come and possibly shed some light on this subject and on their practices and their difficulties? It is always nice to be aware of traps into which other people are falling.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: I was going to ask, Mr. Chairman, why Manitoba was not thought of. They have had some fantastic operations in that province.

Mr. Francis: In what respect?

Mr. Macquarrie: They have had the most interesting experiences with all sorts of ballots, the preferential system, and they got over to the Privy Council on the initiative on the referendum. It has been quite a boiling pot of new and sometimes "half-baked" ideas.

Mr. Benjamin: They completed some amendments to their Election Act. I do not know how wide-spread they are, but they just went through an exercise of amending their Elections Act.

Mr. Forrestall: Could you tell us, Mr. Chairman, whether our Chief Electoral Officer will accompany us throughout?

[Interprétation]

parlé à notre dernière réunion, que la Colombie-Britannique avait un système de vote pour les personnes absentes, qui fonctionnait depuis des années.

M. Howard (Skeena): Pas très bien, mais il fonctionnait.

M. Francis: Comprenait-il un système de vote par procuration?

Le président: Non. En Saskatchewan, il y avait...

M. Howard (Skeena): Pas maintenant, autrefois.

Le président: Autrefois. Ce sont les endroits où les membres ont déjà présenté des idées que nous devrions étudier, en plus de celles qui ont été émises à des réunions conjointes avec l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario. Ce serait très utile, parce qu'ils ont fait un travail énorme visant à modifier leur loi. Ils ont déjà publié un rapport, et ils ont traversé le pays. Ils reviennent d'Australie.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, serait-il possible que le comité directeur nous fournisse un nom, ou possiblement deux, de nos voisins du sud, experts dans ce domaine, qui pourraient venir jeter un peu de lumière sur ce sujet et sur les pratiques en existence et les difficultés? Il est toujours utile de connaître les pièges dans lesquels on peut tomber.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais savoir, monsieur le président, pourquoi on n'a pas pensé au Manitoba? Cette province jouit de très bons systèmes.

M. Francis: Dans quel domaine?

M. Macquarrie: Ils ont connu des expériences intéressantes avec toutes sortes de bulletins de vote, le système préférentiel, et ils sont même allés jusqu'au Conseil privé sur la question du référendum. C'est une source d'idées nouvelles et parfois «demi-cuites».

M. Benjamin: Ils ont fait certaines modifications à leur loi électorale. Je n'en connais pas la portée, mais ils viennent tout juste de modifier leur loi des élections.

M. Forrestall: Pouvez-vous nous dire, monsieur le président, si notre directeur général des élections nous accompagnera?

[Text]

The Chairman: At any meeting we have on the amendments to the Elections Act Mr. Hamel will be present, whether it be in Ottawa, or elsewhere.

Mr. Forrestall: He will be with us?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: It would be most useful to have him, because sometimes the questions ...

The Chairman: I should inform you that Mr. Hamel has requested that the members obtain all the information before they study his proposed amendments, so that we will not have to readjust when we do so. This is the reason for our being pressed by the House, when we started to review the Act, to obtain all the information we could to assess the amendments proposed by Mr. Hamel. Mr. Hamel feels that he will be in a much better position to reassess his proposed amendments after the members have dealt with the different issues that are involved in the different provinces.

Mr. Forrestall: I raise that, Mr. Chairman, because I feel very strongly that the government, when it gets around to deciding finally how it is going to treat the two general areas that have been removed from our jurisdiction for certain purposes at this time, must bear in mind that there has to be some continuity of information and of thought, because by the structure of the Act, as they found from their experience in Nova Scotia—and indeed in Quebec—the areas are not separable, or are not easily separated. There should be continuity.

My personal belief is that this Committee, once it has done one thing, should do the other thing, or that there should be a substantial representation from this Committee on any ad hoc or special committee that is established to consider the two; because I do not believe they are separable. We might find ourselves in the trap, notwithstanding the expertise of our Chief Electoral Officer, of doing or recommending something that would compromise the other work, or make it difficult and lead to even further work to make the two compatible.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I think, too, that if, in the fall, we are going to solicit briefs and opinions from the people in the provinces then the two eastern provinces, Newfoundland and P.E.I., should also be asked, or given a chance, to express their opinions. They have a stake in this, as well as anybody else. I do not see how you can actually leave them out if you are going to solicit briefs.

[Interpretation]

Le président: M. Hamel sera présent à toutes les réunions où nous parlerons de modifications à apporter à la loi des élections, que ce soit à Ottawa ou ailleurs.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce qu'il sera avec nous?

Le président: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Il sera très utile de le compter parmi nous parce que, dans certains cas, beaucoup de questions...

Le président: Je devrais vous dire que M. Hamel a demandé que les membres obtiennent tous les renseignements avant d'étudier les modifications qu'il propose, de sorte qu'il ne soit pas nécessaire de faire des rajustements. C'est la raison pour laquelle la Chambre, lorsque nous avons commencé à revoir la loi, nous a demandé d'obtenir le plus rapidement possible tous les renseignements pour évaluer les modifications proposées par M. Hamel. M. Hamel croit qu'il lui sera plus facile de réévaluer les modifications qu'il propose, une fois que les membres auront vu ce qui se passe dans les diverses provinces.

M. Forrestall: J'ai parlé de cela, monsieur le président, parce que je crois que le gouvernement, lorsqu'il prendra la décision finale sur les domaines d'ordre général qui nous ont été enlevés pour certaines raisons, devrait tenir compte du fait qu'il devrait y avoir une certaine continuité d'information parce qu'à cause de la structure de la Loi, comme on s'en est rendu compte en Nouvelle-Écosse et au Québec, ces deux questions ne sont pas séparables ou peuvent être difficilement séparées. Il doit y avoir continuité.

Mon opinion personnelle est que, une fois le travail terminé, le Comité devrait envoyer des représentants à tout comité spécial chargé d'étudier ces deux questions parce que je ne crois pas qu'elles soient séparables. Nous pourrions, en dépit des conseils de notre directeur général des élections, recommander quelque chose qui compromettrait ou rendrait difficile la conciliation des deux questions.

M. Carter: Monsieur le président, je crois également que si, à l'automne, nous allons demander des mémoires et des opinions de personnes dans les provinces, nous devrions donner l'occasion aux deux provinces de l'Est, Terre-Neuve et l'Île du Prince-Édouard, d'exprimer leurs opinions. Ils ont un mot à dire, comme tout le monde. Je ne vois pas comment on peut les oublier.

[Texte]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, in the original phraseology of the motion I left it sufficiently vague, by referring to "further meetings", or "further visits", that this could be dealt with by the steering committee; and whatever mechanism is necessary could be worked out to determine whether Newfoundland and/or Prince Edward Island should be involved in it, or other Maritime provinces, or Alberta, or anyone else.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we will adjourn. This morning I asked our Clerk to try to arrange for the chartered flight to leave at 6 o'clock instead of at 8 o'clock, so that members could be in Ottawa at five to seven Ottawa time. I will not be on the plane, because I am going back to Quebec. As I do not want to cause any additional expense I am paying my own fare back.

You will be leaving the front door at 5.30 p.m.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Interprétation]

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, ma motion était assez générale en parlant de «réunions futures» ou «visites futures» pour laisser une certaine liberté au comité directeur qui décidera si on doit comprendre Terre-Neuve et (ou) l'Île du Prince-Édouard, ou d'autres provinces maritimes, ou l'Alberta, ou tout autre province.

Le président: Messieurs, nous allons ajourner. J'ai demandé, ce matin, à notre secrétaire de voir à ce que le vol spécial parte à 6 heures au lieu de 8 heures, de façon que les membres puissent être à Ottawa à 7 heures moins cinq, heure d'Ottawa. Je ne partirai pas avec vous, puisque je retourne à Québec. Comme je ne veux pas occasionner des dépenses supplémentaires, je paie mon propre passage de retour.

Vous partirez de l'entrée principale à 5 h. 30.

La réunion est ajournée.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

COMITÉ PERMANENT

ON

DES

PRIVILEGES
AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES
ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 1

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1969

LE JEUDI 13 NOVEMBRE 1969

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1969

LE MARDI 25 NOVEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

La Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir les procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman
and Messrs.

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Président
Vice-président
et MM.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
³ Côté (Richelieu),
⁴ Duquet,
Forest,

⁵ Forrestal,
Fortin,
Francis,
Howard (Skeena),
¹ Howe,
Jerome,

Lefebvre,
Macquarrie,
Marceau,
Murphy,
² Nesbitt,
Trudel—20.

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65 (4) (b), Suivant l'article 65 (4) b) du Règlement,

¹ Replaced Mr. Carter on November 12, 1969 ¹ Remplace M. Carter le 12 novembre 1969

² Replaced Mr. Peddle on November 13, 1969 ² Remplace M. Peddle le 13 novembre 1969

³ Replaced Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) on November 13, 1969 ³ Remplace M. Lessard (LaSalle) le 13 novembre 1969

⁴ Replaced Mr. Gibson on November 17, 1969 ⁴ Remplace M. Gibson le 17 novembre 1969

⁵ Replaced Mr. Aiken on November 24, 1969 ⁵ Remplace M. Aiken le 24 novembre 1969

ORDER OF REFERENCE

WEDNESDAY, November 19, 1969

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to study the following matters and to report to the House such proposals as the Committee may deem advisable:

1. The Canada Elections Act, exclusive of Sections 62 and 63;

2. The Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, made pursuant to Section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act; and

That the evidence adduced by the Committee in its study of the aforementioned times during the First Session of the Twenty-Eighth Parliament be referred to the Committee.

ATTEST:

Le Greffier de la Chambre des communes,
ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

ORDRE DE RENVOI

Le MERCREDI 19 novembre 1969

Il est ordonné,—Que le comité permanent des privilèges et élections soit autorisé à étudier les questions suivantes et à formuler dans son rapport les propositions qui lui sembleront opportunes:

1. La Loi électorale du Canada, à l'exclusion des articles 62 et 63;

2. Le rapport du Commissaire à la représentation sur les méthodes d'inscription des électeurs et le vote des absents (1968), établi en vertu de l'article 9 de la Loi sur le commissaire à la représentation;

Et que les témoignages recueillis par le comité dans son étude des questions précitées pendant la première session du vingt-huitième Parlement soient déférés au comité.

ATTESTÉ:

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY, November 26, 1969

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee recommends that the subject matter of Private Members' Bills and Notices of Motions of this session pertaining to the Canada Elections Act, exclusive of Sections 62 and 63 and to the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, be referred to your Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

Le président,
OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

RAPPORT À LA CHAMBRE

Le MERCREDI 26 novembre 1969

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections a l'honneur de présenter son

PREMIER RAPPORT

Le Comité recommande que la teneur des bills publics inscrits au nom des députés et des avis de motion de la présente session relatifs à la Loi électorale du Canada, à l'exclusion des articles 62 et 63, et au Rapport du commissaire à la représentation sur les méthodes d'inscription des électeurs et le vote des absents (1968), soit renvoyée au Comité.

Respectueusement soumis,

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, November 13, 1969
(1)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 10.20 a.m. for the purpose of organization.

Members present: Messrs. Aiken, Benjamin, Fortin, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lessard (LaSalle), Macquarrie, Murphy, Nesbitt, Paproski, Trudel—(12).

The Clerk attending and having called for nominations for Chairman, it was moved by Mr. Trudel that Mr. Laflamme be elected Chairman of this Committee.

There being no other nominations, the Clerk put Mr. Trudel's motion and it was unanimously resolved in the affirmative.

Mr. Laflamme took the Chair and thanked the Committee for the honour.

The Chairman called for nominations for the election of a Vice-Chairman.

It was moved by Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) that Mr. Jerome be elected Vice-Chairman of the Committee.

It was moved by Mr. Macquarrie that Mr. Paproski be elected Vice-Chairman of the Committee.

On motion of Mr. Lessard (LaSalle), it was agreed that nominations be closed.

Mr. Lessard's motion that Mr. Jerome be elected Vice-Chairman was resolved in the negative.

And the question being put that Mr. Paproski be elected Vice-Chairman, it was unanimously resolved in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. Murphy,
Agreed,—That the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure be comprised of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and five

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAUX

Le JEUDI 13 novembre 1969
(1)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit à 10 h. 20 du matin à des fins d'organisation.

Présents: MM. Aiken, Benjamin, Fortin, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lessard (LaSalle), Macquarrie, Murphy, Nesbitt, Paproski, Trudel—(12).

Le greffier du Comité préside à l'élection du président. Sur la proposition de M. Trudel il est proposé que M. Laflamme soit élu président du Comité.

Aucune autre nomination étant proposée, le greffier accepte la proposition de M. Trudel et celle-ci est entérinée à l'unanimité par les membres du Comité.

M. Laflamme occupe le fauteuil et remercie le Comité de la confiance qu'il lui a témoignée.

Le président demande ensuite que l'on procède à des nominations pour l'élection d'un vice-président.

M. Lessard (LaSalle) propose que M. Jerome soit élu vice-président du Comité.

M. Macquarrie propose que M. Paproski soit élu vice-président du Comité.

M. Lessard (LaSalle) propose que la période de nominations soit close.

La proposition de M. Lessard voulant que M. Jerome soit élu vice-président a été rejetée.

Et la proposition voulant que M. Paproski soit élu vice-président a été acceptée à l'unanimité.

Sur la proposition de M. Murphy
Il est convenu,—Que le sous-comité du programme et de la procédure soit constitué du président, du vice-président et de other members appointed by the Chairman after the usual consultations with the Whips of the different parties.

On motion of Mr. Trudel,

Agreed,—That the Committee print 1,000 copies of its bilingual Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence including a Sessional Index.

At 10.35 a.m., there being no further business, the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

TUESDAY, November 25, 1969
(2)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 10:15 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Alkenbrack, Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Francis, Howe, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Murphy, Paproski, Trudel—(13).

Witness: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Chairman reviewed briefly the discussions of the Steering Committee held on November 24, 1969.

And the Clerk, having read the Committee's Order of Reference,

And the debate thereon

On motion of Mr. Benjamin

Agreed,—that the Committee recommend to the House that the subject matter of the current Session's Private Members Bills and Notices of Motions pertaining to the Canada Elections Act exclusive of Sections 62 and 63 be referred to the Committee.

On motion of Mr. Macquarrie

Agreed,—that the paper entitled "Electoral Legislation in Canada" prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer be printed as an appendix to this day's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (See Appendix No. 1).

On motion of Mr. Forest

Agreed,—that the Steering Committee would prepare a list of items on which cinq autres membres du Comité nommés par le président après les consultations habituelles avec les whips des différents partis.

Sur la proposition de M. Trudel,

Il est convenu,—Que le Comité face imprimer 1,000 exemplaires bilingues des comptes rendus et délibérations, y compris l'index sessionnel.

A 10 h. 35, après l'épuisement de l'ordre du jour, le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'à nouvelle convocation du président.

Le MARDI 25 novembre 1969
(2)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit aujourd'hui à 10 h. 15 du matin. Le président, M. Laflamme, occupe le fauteuil.

Présents: MM. Alkenbrack, Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Francis, Howe, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Murphy, Paproski, Trudel—(13).

Témoin: M. J. M. Hamel, directeur général des élections.

Le président repasse brièvement les délibérations du comité de direction qui s'est réuni le 24 novembre 1969.

Le greffier lit l'ordre de renvoi du Comité.

Une discussion suit et,

Sur une proposition de M. Benjamin,

Il est décidé,—Que le Comité recommande à la Chambre que les bills privés des députés pour la session en cours et les avis de motions relativement à la Loi électorale du Canada, à l'exception des articles 62 et 63, soient renvoyés au Comité.

Sur une proposition de M. Macquarrie,

Il est décidé,—Que le document intitulé «Les lois électorales au Canada» préparé par le directeur général des élections soit imprimé en appendice au procès-verbal et témoignages de la réunion d'aujourd'hui (voir appendice 1).

Sur une proposition de M. Forest,

Il est décidé,—Que le comité de direction prépare une liste des questions qui exigent policy decisions are required for presentation to the Committee.

The Committee agreed to invite Miss Flora MacDonald of Queen's University and Prof. A. C. Cairns to appear before the Committee on December 11, 1969, if possible.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin

Agreed,—that the Committee seek permission to travel to Toronto, if necessary, to meet with the Provincial Select Committee on Election Laws.

On motion of Mr. Forrestall

Agreed,—that the Chairman be authorized to hear witnesses and print evidence when a quorum is not present providing two parties are represented and five members are present.

At 11:30 a.m. the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. Thursday, November 27, 1969.

une décision de politique et la soumettre au Comité.

Le Comité décide d'inviter M^{lle} Flora MacDonald de l'université Queens et le professeur A. C. Cairns à comparaître devant le Comité, le 11 décembre 1969, si possible.

Sur une proposition de M. Benjamin,

Il est décidé,—Que le Comité demande la permission de se déplacer, à Toronto, si nécessaire, pour rencontrer le comité spécial provincial sur les lois électorales.

Sur une proposition de M. Forrestall,

Il est décidé,—Que le président soit autorisé à entendre des témoins et à imprimer les témoignages en l'absence du quorum à condition que deux partis soient représentés et qu'il y ait 5 députés présents.

A 11 h. 30, le Comité suspend ses travaux jusqu'au jeudi, 27 novembre 1969, à 11 h.

*Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.*

[Texte]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 25 novembre 1969.

• 1015

Le président: Alors, messieurs, je remarque que nous avons quorum ce matin.

Je voudrais d'abord faire part aux membres du Comité que la semaine dernière, nous avons tenu une réunion du sous-comité du programme et de la procédure au cours de laquelle, on a discuté de différentes questions, en particulier de l'idée générale d'établir la liste de toutes les principales questions sur lesquelles les membres du Comité pourront obtenir un consentement rapide, sans trop de discussions, et séparer les autres ensuite; deuxièmement, étudier la possibilité d'entendre certains témoins comme, par exemple, le professeur Kearns, de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique, le professeur Norman Ward de l'Université de la Saskatchewan, Mlle Flora MacDonald, de l'Université Queens, ainsi que les présidents ou directeurs généraux des élections des provinces de la Colombie-Britannique et de la Saskatchewan.

On a discuté également de l'opportunité de tenir un comité conjoint avec le comité choisi par la province d'Ontario, en vue d'étudier, pour la Législature, la loi électorale de cette province.

La question a été posée également à savoir si nous allions faire d'autres voyages à l'extérieur.

I will start by asking the members of the Committee to put forth their views on the advisability of drawing up a list of policy questions on which there seems to be general agreement. Then we can isolate those items on which discussion is required. In this way an indication of our general views can be given to the Chief Electoral Officer in advance and he could then prepare draft legislation for referral to and study by us. Then we can come to a final decision on the drafting of any required legislation. Does this suggestion meet with the approval of members of the Committee?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, would it be possible for this Committee to hear somebody who has spent a reasonable amount of time on the voting regulations of the armed forces,

[Interprétation]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, November 25, 1969.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see that we have a quorum this morning.

First of all, I would like to tell the members of the Committee that last week we held a meeting of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure during which we discussed different questions, especially the general idea of making a list of all the main questions on which the members of the Committee could have quick agreement, without too much discussion, and we could keep the other questions separate. Secondly, we could consider the possibility of hearing certain witnesses, such as Professor Kearns of the University of British Columbia, Professor Norman Ward of the University of Saskatchewan, Miss Flora MacDonald of Queen's University, as well as the Returning Officers of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

We also discussed the opportunity of holding a joint committee meeting with the committee appointed by the Province of Ontario to study the Elections Act of this province for the Provincial Government. Also, the question was raised if we would make other journeys to other parts of the country.

Je commencerai d'abord par demander aux membres du Comité d'exposer leurs idées sur l'opportunité de dresser une liste des lignes de conduite au sujet desquelles il semble y avoir consentement général. On peut choisir les questions que nous devons étudier. On peut donner des directives au Directeur général des élections concernant nos opinions générales afin qu'il puisse préparer des projets de loi qui pourraient nous être renvoyés pour qu'on les étudie. Nous pouvons enfin parvenir à une décision finale en ce qui concerne la rédaction de tout projet de loi. Est-ce que les membres de ce Comité sont d'accord avec cette proposition?

M. Forrestall: Monsieur le président, est-ce que le Comité pourrait faire témoigner une personne qui a consacré beaucoup de temps à l'étude des règlements de vote des Forces as this is an area of very particular concern to myself.

[Text]

The Chairman: Yes, but before we discuss the possibility of having witnesses come before us I believe we should first decide what the members' views are on drawing up a list of items on which there is general agreement.

Yes, Mr. Howe?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I do not seem to have the terms of reference for this Committee.

Mr. Lefebvre: They are in your folder there.

Mr. Howe: I mean, have private members' bills brought this matter before this Committee or what is it? What were the terms of reference from the House?

The Chairman: I will ask the Clerk to read them to you.

• 1020

Mr. Howe: I would like to hear just what the terms of reference are.

The Clerk:

...that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to study the following matters and to report to the House such proposals as the Committee may deem advisable:

1. The Canada Elections Act, exclusive of Sections 62 and 63;

2. The Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, made pursuant to Section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act; and

That the evidence adduced by the Committee in its study of the aforementioned items during the First Session of the Twenty-Eighth Parliament be referred to the Committee.

Mr. Howe: One question arises, Mr. Chairman, and it is in connection with the reduction of the voting age from 21 to 18. Is this not pretty well a foregone conclusion of this government? It was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. Am I not correct in saying that any report this Committee makes will not make any difference?

The Chairman: Well, if you refer to the Speech from the Throne you will note that it says the government will ask the Committee armées, domaine qui m'intéresse tout particulièrement.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Oui, mais avant de discuter de la possibilité d'entendre des témoins, je pense que nous devrions d'abord connaître les opinions des membres concernant le fait de dresser une liste des questions au sujet desquelles il existe un accord général.

Oui, monsieur Howe.

M. Howe: Il me semble que je n'ai pas le mandat de ce Comité.

M. Lefebvre: Il est dans votre chemise.

M. Howe: Je voulais vous demander si cette question était présentée à ce Comité par des bills privés des membres. Quel a été le mandat qui nous a été donné par la Chambre?

Le président: Je vais demander au greffier de vous lire.

M. Howe: Je voudrais simplement connaître en quoi consiste le mandat.

Le Greffier:

...que le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections soit autorisé à étudier les questions suivantes et à formuler dans son rapport les propositions qui lui sembleront opportunes:

1. La Loi électorale du Canada à l'exclusion des articles 62 à 63.

2. Le rapport du Commissaire à la représentation sur les méthodes d'inscription des électeurs et le vote des absents (1968), établi en vertu de l'article 9 de la Loi sur le commissaire de la représentation. Et que les témoignages recueillis par le comité dans son étude des questions précitées pendant la première session du vingt-huitième Parlement soient déferés au comité.

M. Howe: Il y a une question qui se pose, Monsieur le Président, c'est concernant la réduction de l'âge de vote de 21 à 18 ans. Le gouvernement n'a-t-il pas, de toute façon, décidé de cette question à l'avance? Le discours du Trône en faisait une mention, en parlait. Mais c'est exact de dire que tous les rapports que ce que notre Comité pourrait présenter n'y sont pour rien?

Le président: Si vous vous reportez au discours du Trône, vous noterez qu'on nous dit que le gouvernement demandera au Comité on Privileges and Elections to study the advisability of lowering the voting age. The matter is legally referred to us is by an Order of the House which has just been read by the Clerk.

[Texte]

Mr. Howe: Thank you.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: One further point, Mr. Chairman. Is it felt that there is no need for these private members' bills, which were referred to us last Session and which we did not reach to be referred to us now, or should we not ask the House to refer these?

The Chairman: I have before me a list of those which already have been referred to us.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, I see. They are still before us under—

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: ...our Terms of Reference from the last Session?

The Chairman: Yes. Would you like me to read those which have been referred? They are precisely the same as the ones which have been referred by the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, I see.

An hon. Member: Would you read the list?

The Chairman: Yes.

October 18, 1968—Subject-matter of Bill C-16 (Students Franchise).

November 15, 1968—Subject-matter of Bill C-8 (Qualifications of Voters and Candidates).

December 13, 1968—Subject-matter of Bill C-13 (Repeal of Cour of Revision).

January 20, 1969—Subject-matter of Notice of Motion No. 20.

February 20, 1969—Vote 45 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer.

February 25, 1969—Subject-matter of Bill C-21 (Age of Voters).

On April 2, 1969 the report of the Representation Commissioner on methods of registration of electors in absentia voting was referred to us but this already has been studied and has been the subject matter of a report by the Committee to the House.

The private bills that have been tabled in the House this Session are as follows:

Bill C-14—an act to amend the Canada

[Interprétation]

des Privilèges et Élections d'étudier l'opportunité de réduire l'âge des électeurs. Un Ordre de la Chambre qui vient de nous être lu par le secrétaire, nous enjoint de considérer la question sous ses aspects juridiques.

M. Howe: Merci.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Une autre question, Monsieur le Président. Les députés pensent-ils que les bills privés qui nous ont été renvoyés lors de la dernière session et dont nous n'avons pas eu le temps de faire lecture aujourd'hui, devraient nous être renvoyés maintenant ou bien ne devrions-nous pas demander à la Chambre de les renvoyer.

Le président: J'ai devant moi la liste des bills privés qui nous ont déjà été renvoyés.

M. Benjamin: Bien. Je suppose que nous devons encore en faire lecture...

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: ...conformément au mandat que nous avons reçu lors de la dernière session?

Le président: Oui. Je peux, si vous voulez, vous lire la liste des bills qui nous ont été renvoyés. Ce sont exactement les mêmes que ceux qui ont été renvoyés par la Chambre des communes.

M. Benjamin: Très bien.

Une voix: Voudriez-vous lire la liste?

Le président: Oui.

Le 18 octobre 1968—Sujet du bill C-16: (Droit de vote des étudiants).

Le 15 novembre 1968—Sujet du bill C-8: (Qualités requises des votants et des candidats).

Le 13 décembre 1968—Sujet du bill C-13: (Suppression du tribunal de Revision).

Le 20 janvier 1969—Sujet de l'Avis de motion n° 20.

Le 20 février 1969—Le crédit 45 concernant le directeur général des élections.

Le 25 février 1969—Sujet du bill C-21: (Âge des votants).

Le 2 avril 1969, le rapport du commissaire à la représentation sur la limite de temps de l'enregistrement des électeurs absents nous a été renvoyé, mais nous avons déjà étudié cette question qui fut l'objet d'un rapport du Comité à la Chambre.

Les bills privés qui ont été présentés en Chambre à propos de cette question sont les suivants: le bill C-14, Loi modifiant la Loi

[Text]

Elections Act to provide for the appearance of the Political Affiliations of the Candidates on the Ballot Papers, by Mr. Anderson.

Bill C-72, first reading on October 30, 1969—an act to amend the Canada Elections Act—(Youth Vote Participation).

Bill C-78—an act to amend the Canada Elections Act—(Qualification of voters and candidates). This is precisely the same as the one I have referred to.

Bill C-87—an act to amend the Canada Elections Act—(Qualification of electors).

Mr. Benjamin: Is that the same as C-8?

The Chairman: C-87?

Mr. Benjamin: No. Is C-87 the same as C-8 from the previous Session?

The Chairman: Yes—by Mr. Allmand.

Mr. Benjamin: All right.

● 1025

The Chairman: Bill C-97—an act to amend the Canada Elections Act—(Students' Franchise). This is precisely the same as one tabled before.

Bill C-101—an act to amend the Canada Elections Act—(Proxy Voting), by Mr. Comeau.

Bill C-120—(Qualifications of Electors and Candidates).

Mr. Forest: Last year the bills changing the name of a constituency were referred to this Committee. Mr. Howe had one and I had one.

Mr. Howe: Oh yes.

Mr. Forest: Most of them have been presented again this year. I will try to file mine this week. Perhaps those bills again could be referred to this Committee.

Mr. Howe: I think Mr. Monteith had one.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Monteith had one, Tom Goode had one—there were about six or seven.

Mr. Howe: I did not get mine in yet.

[Interpretation]

électorale du Canada (affiliations politiques des candidats sur les bulletins des votes). Ce projet de loi a été présenté par M. Anderson.

Le bill C-72 dont la première lecture a été faite le 30 octobre 1969, loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada.

Le bill C-78, loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada (qualités requises des votants et des candidats). Il s'agit ici du même bill que celui dont j'ai parlé précédemment.

Le bill C-87, loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada (qualités requises des électeurs).

M. Benjamin: Est-ce le même bill que le bill C-8?

Le président: Le bill C-87?

M. Benjamin: Non. Le bill C-87 est-il le même que le bill C-8 qui a été présenté lors de la session précédente?

Le président: Oui, M. Allmand a présenté ce bill.

M. Benjamin: Très bien.

Le président: Le bill C-97: loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada (droit de voter des étudiants). Il s'agit exactement du même projet de loi que celui qui a été déposé à la Chambre précédemment.

Le bill C-101, loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada (vote par procuration) est le bill présenté par M. Comeau.

Le bill C-120, loi modifiant la Loi électorale du Canada (qualités requises des électeurs et des candidats).

M. Forest: Lors de la dernière session, les projets de loi abolissent le nom des circonscriptions électorales étaient renvoyés à notre Comité. M. Howe en avait présenté un, ainsi que moi-même.

M. Howe: Oui.

M. Forest: La plupart des bills privés ont été représentés cette année. J'essaierai de représenter le mien cette semaine. Et peut-être pourrait-on renvoyer ces projets de loi à notre Comité.

M. Howe: Je crois que M. Monteith voulait en présenter un.

M. Forest: M. Monteith voulait en présenter un, ainsi que M. Tom Goode. Il y en avait en tout six ou sept.

M. Howe: Je n'ai pas encore présenté le mien.

[Texte]

The Chairman: These bills do not fall under our Terms of Reference. They do not relate to the amendments to the Elections Act.

Mr. Forest: Last year they were referred just the same.

The Chairman: They were referred. It does not much matter if they are referred or not. We are entitled to study the full list of amendments to the Elections Act, so anything which is related...

Mr. Howe: That would include change-over. Is that what you mean?

The Chairman: It might be indirectly. Yes, Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, out of courtesy to the private members, and I stand to be corrected, it seems to me that we should at least go through the formality of asking the House to refer these bills by their reference number to us, as occurred in the previous session, so that these private members as well as everybody else can see that something is being done with them.

The Chairman: Could you then make a motion?

Mr. Benjamin: I would be glad to move that:

...the Committee recommend to the House that the subject matter of the current Session's Private Members Bills and Notices of Motions pertaining to the Canada Elections Act, exclusive of Sections 62 and 63, be referred to the Committee.

In a report to the House our Committee would recommend...

The Chairman: Yes, we would make a report to the House recommending that all private bills related to the Elections Act should be referred to us.

Mr. Benjamin: And any notices of motion too—the resolutions, if there are any.

The Chairman: Well, I do not think we are entitled to proceed by any measure other than making a report to the House recommending...

Mr. Benjamin: Well, there was a private member's resolution or a notice of motion referred to us last year.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Ces projets de loi ne font pas partie de notre mandat. Ils ne se rapportent pas aux modifications à la Loi électorale.

M. Forest: Monsieur le président, on les a envoyés à notre Comité lors de la session passée.

Le président: Évidemment. Peu importe qu'ils soient envoyés au Comité ou pas. Nous pouvons étudier la liste de modifications à la Loi électorale du Canada. Par conséquent tout ce qui s'y rapporte...

M. Howe: Cela comprendrait les projets de loi qui traitent de ces changements de noms n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Indirectement, oui. Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, j'espère, si je ne me trompe, il me semble que par courtoisie envers messieurs les députés, nous devrions au moins demander à la Chambre des communes de nous envoyer ces projets de loi en utilisant le numéro de référence, comme c'était le cas lors de la session passée, afin que ces députés ainsi que les membres parmi nous puissent réaliser qu'ils ne sont pas tombés dans l'oubli.

Le président: Voudriez-vous formuler une motion à ce sujet?

M. Benjamin: Je propose que:

...le Comité recommande à la Chambre que le sujet des bills privés de la session actuelle ainsi que les Avis de motions ayant trait à la Loi électorale du Canada, soient renvoyés devant le Comité, à l'exception des articles 62 et 63.

Dans son rapport à la Chambre, notre Comité recommande...

Le président: Oui, nous allons faire rapport à la Chambre en recommandant que les bills privés se rapportant à la Loi électorale du Canada soient renvoyés devant notre Comité.

M. Benjamin: Ainsi que tous les Avis de motions et les propositions, s'il en est.

Le président: De toute façon, nous ne pouvons rien faire d'autre que de présenter un rapport à la Chambre recommandant...

M. Benjamin: Lors de la dernière session on nous a renvoyé la proposition d'un député ou un Avis de motion.

[Text]

The Chairman: Oh, I see. All right.

Mr. Benjamin: It would be private members' bills and notices of motion.

The Chairman: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forest: Yes, we should do that quite soon because there are some coming out—like the one of Mr. Anderson, which I think is next on the public bills. Mr. Howe could file his bill to change the name of his riding with mine and then we could ask the House Leader to make a motion immediately...

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Forest: ...and then it would be complete.

The Chairman: But subject to the exclusion of those related to Sections 62 and 63, if there are any, related to the expenses.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

The Chairman: Thank you.

May we revert now to the first matter discussed by the Steering Committee—the possibility of trying to draw up a list on all the items on which there could be general agreement reached soon. Then we could hear witnesses on all items on which we would require further evidence.

Before proceeding, may I say that a paper has been circulated among the members which I believe is very important to our study. You will recall that at one of the last meetings we had in October it was requested that the Chief Electoral Officer prepare for us some of the main features contained in all the elections acts of the provinces as they relate to the federal Elections Act. Mr. Virr, our Clerk, has circulated this paper. Do you have it in hand?

• 1030

Mr. Forest: Are you referring to the one that was sent to us yesterday?

The Chairman: If we do start on Article 1, relating to the Chief Electoral Officer, perhaps we should note what Mr. Hamel has reported to us:

[Interpretation.]

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Il s'agissait de bills privés et d'avis de motion.

Le président: D'accord!

Des voix: D'accord.

M. Forest: Oui, nous devrions faire cela assez rapidement parce que nous devrions bientôt en étudier d'autres, comme le projet de loi présenté par M. Anderson qui vient ensuite dans la liste des bills publics. M. Howe, ainsi que moi-même, pourrions présenter notre projet de loi en vue de modifier le nom de notre circonscription électorale; nous pourrions ensuite demander au leader de la majorité à la Chambre de présenter une motion immédiatement.

M. Howe: Oui.

M. Forest: ...et le problème serait réglé.

Le président: En excluant ceux qui portent sur les articles 62 et 63, s'il en est qui traitent des dépenses.

M. Benjamin: Oui.

Le président: Merci.

Nous allons nous reporter maintenant à la première question qui s'est discuté au Comité de direction afin d'essayer de dresser la liste sont lesquels on pourrait se mettre d'accord rapidement. Par la suite, nous pourrions entendre les témoins sur tous les articles pour lesquels nous avons besoin d'autres témoignages.

Avant de continuer, je dois signaler que les députés possèdent maintenant un mémoire qui, je crois, est de grande importance pour notre étude. Vous savez sans doute que lors d'une dernière séance du mois d'octobre, nous avons demandé au directeur général des Elections de préparer un document qui nous renseignerait sur certaines des principales dispositions des lois électorales des provinces dans leur rapport avec Loi électorale du Canada. M. Virr, notre greffier, a distribué ce document. Est-ce que tous nous en avons une copie?

M. Forest: Voulez-vous parler du document qui avait été envoyé hier?

Le président: Si l'on commence par l'article 1, relativement au directeur général des élections, nous pourrions peut-être tenir compte de ce que monsieur Hamel a dit:

[Texte]

1. Chief Electoral Officer

In all provinces, except Quebec, the Chief Electoral Officer (or Chief Election Officer) is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

The provisions of the Quebec Election Act with respect to the appointment, salary and tenure of office of the Chief Returning Officer are very similar to the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. In addition, during an election period, the Chief Returning Officer of Quebec is vested with some of the powers conferred by the Act on the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

In British Columbia, the Elections Act further provides for the appointment of a Registrar-General of Voters who, subject to the Chief Electoral Officer, has supervision over the registration of voters and the preparation of the lists of voters.

Have you read this document that has been circulated.

Mr. Macquarrie: If it is only a case of true confessions, I have read it very carefully, and I found it very valuable. Unless the Chief Electoral Officer has some tender feelings of provincialism, I think it should be printed and become part of our record. It is a very valuable summary and it is very helpful.

Mr. Howe: Is it the idea that we go over this particular paper number by number? Are we going to discuss it item by item?

Mr. Macquarrie: That is up to the Chair. I was just suggesting...

The Chairman: Would you move that it be made part of our minutes?

Mr. Macquarrie: At the appropriate time I will so move. Or would you like me to do it now?

The Chairman: Yes, you can.

Mr. Macquarrie: I move that the paper entitled "Electoral Legislation in Canada" prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer be printed as an appendix to this day's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence. (See Appendix No. 1).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, by way of confession, I have not read it as yet, but may I ask Mr. Hamel, before I do so, if this is a good summary of those areas where there

[Interprétation]

1. Directeur général des élections

Dans toutes les provinces, excepté au Québec, le Directeur général des élections est nommé par le Lieutenant-Gouverneur en Conseil.

Les dispositions de la Loi électorale du Québec relatives à la nomination, au salaire et à la durée du mandat du Président général des élections sont en tous points semblables aux dispositions de la Loi électorale du Canada. De plus, durant une période électorale, le Président général des élections du Québec est investi de certains pouvoirs conférés par la Loi électorale au Lieutenant-gouverneur en Conseil.

La Loi électorale de la Colombie-Britannique prévoit en outre la nomination d'un Registraire-général des électeurs qui, sous la direction du Directeur général des élections, voit à surveiller l'inscription des électeurs ainsi que la préparation des listes des électeurs.

Avez-vous lu ce document qui a été distribué?

M. Macquarrie: Oui je l'ai lu très attentivement et je crois qu'il a beaucoup de valeur à moins que le directeur général des élections ait un esprit chauvin je crois qu'il devrait être souligné et faire partie de votre compte rendu.

M. Howe: C'est un résumé de grande valeur et il est très utile. Est-ce que nous allons étudier ce document article par article, numéro par numéro?

M. Macquarrie: Cela dépend du président. Je proposais simplement...

Le président: Proposez-vous qu'il fasse partie des procès-verbaux?

M. Macquarrie: Je vais le proposer en temps voulu. Est-ce que vous voulez que je le fasse maintenant?

Le président: Oui. Vous pouvez le faire.

M. Macquarrie: Je propose que le document intitulé «Législation électorale au Canada» préparé par le directeur général des élections soit publié en appendice aux procès-verbaux et témoignages d'aujourd'hui (Voir Appendice n° 1).

Des voix: Adopté.

M. Forrestall: Monsieur le président je n'ai pas encore lu le document, mais puis-je demander à monsieur Hamel avant de le lire s'il s'agit d'un bon sommaire de ces questions still are inconsistencies between the Canada Elections Act and the provincial general elections acts?

[Text]

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): I tried to stress the main differences between the provincial and federal legislation.

In some cases you will see that I have said that it is done exactly the same at all levels. I do not claim this to be all-inclusive, because I tried to make it as short as possible. There are a few things, furthermore, that I covered very rapidly in a very short sentence and may require further study or may call for a look at the legislation. In some cases, to try to explain the procedure for revision, for instance, or, in a few other areas, had we gone into details, it would have meant perhaps a 25- to 35- page document, and I wanted to keep it as short as possible.

What I tried to do, primarily, was to show the main features. When I say that, I mean the areas in which the provincial legislation may be unique. In some other cases, I have just said, "It is done the same way across the board."

Mr. Forrestall: That is fine. In other words, a careful reading of this will give us a general indication of the areas of difference between the federal act and the several provincial acts

• 1035

Mr. Hamel: Yes. If I may just illustrate my idea here, in paragraph No. 4, on Citizenship, I have said that Quebec and P.E.I. restrict voting to Canadian citizens. In the other provinces, as well as at the federal level, it is Canadian citizens and British subjects. This is how I tried to cover the various subjects.

Mr. Forrestall: Then, by way of confession again, I will look forward to reading it.

Mr. Lefebvre: Pouvez-vous répondre à des questions...

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre.

Mr. Lefebvre: ...sur les autres articles, monsieur Hamel?

Mr. Hamel: Je suis à votre service, bien entendu.

Mr. Lefebvre: A la page 2, article 3, en vertu de la Loi électorale du Québec, les fonctions du secrétaire d'élection sont beaucoup plus onéreuses que celles de ses homologues où il y a encore certaines contradictions.

[Interpretation]

Entre la Loi électorale du Canada et les Lois électorales provinciales?

M. Jean-Marc Hamel (directeur général des élections): J'ai essayé surtout de signaler les principales divergences entre la législation provinciale et la législation fédérale.

Dans certains cas, vous verrez que ce n'est pas tout à fait la même chose à tous les niveaux. Je ne dis pas que c'est un document compréhensif mais j'ai essayé de le faire le plus bref possible. Il y a certaines questions que j'ai mentionnées très rapidement et brièvement et qui pourraient demander des études supplémentaires ou une consultation de la législation. Dans certains cas, pour essayer d'expliquer les procédures de révision, par exemple ou certaines autres questions, si l'on avait entré dans les détails—cela aurait voulu dire un document de 25 à 35 pages, et je voulais qu'il soit aussi bref que possible.

Ce que j'ai essayé de faire surtout, c'est d'indiquer les grands traits. J'entends par là les questions où la législation provinciale peut être unique. Dans d'autres cas, j'ai dit que cela se fait partout de la même façon.

M. Forrestall: C'est bien. Autrement dit, une lecture attentive de ce document nous donnerait une indication générale des questions où il y a des divergences entre les lois provinciales et la loi fédérale?

M. Hamel: Oui. Pour illustrer mon idée, l'alinéa n° 4 par exemple sur la citoyenneté, j'ai dit qu'au Québec et dans l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, seuls les citoyens canadiens sont habilités à voter. Dans les autres provinces, comme au niveau fédéral, ce sont les citoyens canadiens et les sujets britanniques. Voilà ce que j'ai essayé de faire pour chaque sujet.

M. Forrestall: Donc, je dois dire que j'ai hâte de le lire.

Mr. Lefebvre: Could you answer questions...

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre.

Mr. Lefebvre: ...on the other items, Mr. Hamel?

Mr. Hamel: I am at your disposal, of course.

Mr. Lefebvre: On page 2, item 3, under the Quebec Elections Act however, the functions of the Election Clerk are much broader than in any those of their counterparts in other dans les autres juridictions. Pouvez-vous donner plus d'explications?

[Texte]

M. Hamel: Voici, je devrais peut-être commencer par vous expliquer très brièvement les fonctions du secrétaire d'élection au niveau fédéral. Au niveau fédéral, un président d'élection doit s'adjoindre un secrétaire d'élection dès qu'il a lui-même été nommé. Nous exigeons que le secrétaire d'élection soit présent dans le bureau du directeur du scrutin en quatre ou cinq circonstances, à savoir, lors de la mise en candidature, lors de l'aménagement des bureaux de vote, lors du scrutin et, finalement, lors du dépouillement du scrutin, et on lui paie un certain montant pour sa présence ces journées-là. Le reste du temps, bien entendu, le directeur du scrutin peut retenir le secrétaire d'élection à sa guise, mais il le paie alors suivant une entente entre eux.

Dans la plupart des provinces, le rôle du scrutateur n'est pas plus important que cela, excepté au Québec où le secrétaire d'élection entre en fonction la journée de l'émission du bref. Celui-ci ou le président d'élection doit être dans le bureau du président d'élection en tout temps, pendant toute la période de l'élection, et non pas simplement à trois, quatre ou cinq circonstances définies. Alors, le secrétaire d'élection, par le fait même est payé par l'État, c'est-à-dire de la même façon que le directeur du scrutin et je pense que son traitement est 75 p. 100 de celui du président d'élection. Alors quand j'emploie le mot onéreux, en français, je veux dire que ses devoirs sont beaucoup plus considérables, mais qu'en même temps et par voie de conséquence, si vous voulez, c'est beaucoup plus onéreux, beaucoup plus dispendieux pour l'État. Par contre, il y a, je pense, certains avantages, comme vous pouvez très facilement le constater.

Le président: Monsieur Duquet.

M. Duquet: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Me reportant à votre dernière phrase, monsieur Hamel, je comprends qu'à votre point de vue, il est plus avantageux, suivant la loi du Québec plutôt que la loi fédérale, d'avoir le secrétaire en permanence, de façon officielle.

M. Hamel: Disons de façon générale, que le service du bureau du président d'élection, doit être certainement meilleur, puisque la loi oblige ou le directeur du scrutin ou son secrétaire à être au bureau désigné dans la proclamation en tout temps, du moins pendant les heures difficiles au cours de la période électorale.

The Chairman: Before discussing the details of the points raised by Mr. Hamel in this jurisdictions. Could you give us some more explanation about this?

[Interprétation]

Mr. Hamel: I should start maybe by explaining to you, the functions of the Election Clerk at the federal level. At the federal level, the Returning Officer must nominate an Election Clerk as soon as he himself is appointed. We require that the Election Clerk be present in the office of the Returning Officer in four or five circumstances, i.e. during the nomination, during setting up of the provisional polls, during the vote itself and during the official counting of the votes, and he is paid a certain amount of money for his presence on those days. For the rest of the time, of course, the Returning Officer may retain the services of the Election Clerk as he wishes, but he then pays him under an agreement concluded between him and the Election Clerk.

In most of the provinces, the role of the Election Clerk is not more important than this, except in Quebec, where the Election Clerk begins his functions the day the official notice is issued. He or the Returning Officer must be at the office of the Returning Officer at all times during the entire election period, and not only in three, four or five definite circumstances. So the Election Clerk ipso facto is paid by the State i.e. the same way as the Returning Officer, and I think his salary is 75 per cent of the Returning Officer's salary. So, when I use the term onéreux in French, I mean by this that his powers are much broader, but that at the same time and as a consequence, if you wish, it is far more burdensome or costly for the state. I think there are certain advantages however, as you can see rather easily.

The Chairman: Mr. Duquet.

Mr. Duquet: A supplementary question, Mr. Hamel. In your last sentence, Mr. Hamel, I seem to understand that according to you it is more advantageous, according to the Quebec legislation as compared with the federal legislation, to have the Election Clerk officially on a permanent basis.

Mr. Hamel: Let us say that in a general way the service provided by Returning Officer's Office must certainly be better since the law obliges either the Returning Officer or the Election Clerk to be at the designated Office at all times, at least during the crucial hours during the election period.

Le président: Avant d'entrer dans les détails au sujet des questions soulevées par document, which will be part of our record for today, may I ask the members of the Committee to advise me on whether the steering committee should prepare a list of all policy questions on which perhaps we could reach very rapid agreement? Perhaps you would care to comment on the advisability of having this list prepared so that we could proceed by way of elimination, in a sense.

[Text]

As in private bills, I believe that the discussion on certain of the items raised would be very short.

• 1040

For example, we may reach very rapid agreement on points such as showing party affiliations on ballots. This has been recommended and has been presented in private bills.

If we do get a decision on this rapidly enough, the Chief Electoral Officer can prepare a draft copy of the amendments required which could then be referred to the members for study.

You may want the steering committee to prepare a list if you have any items in mind which you feel are related to policy.

As you know, the Chief Electoral Officer within his function is not entitled to make any policy recommendations.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I think I would so move. It would be a good idea, if there is much involved, for the steering committee to make a list of all items on which there seems to be general agreement. Then at the next meeting we could go over it. That would speed up our work. Then we could concentrate on items on which there would not be general agreement or on which there could be discussion before we did agree.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I am in complete agreement with my colleague in that it would save a lot of time. I will go a little further and ask the steering committee perhaps to include all questions that seem valid and outstanding, whether or not at the time there would seem to be agreement; to simply list them in some sensible order.

The Chairman: This has been discussed in the steering committee and it was decided to monsieur Hamel dans ce document, qui sera consigné dans notre compte rendu d'aujourd'hui, est-ce que je peux demander aux membres du Comité s'ils recommandent ou non que le comité de direction prépare une liste de toutes les questions de principe sur lesquelles nous pourrions peut-être tomber d'accord assez rapidement? Aimerez-vous faire des commentaires concernant l'opportunité de préparer cette liste pour que nous puissions procéder par voie d'élimination.

[Interpretation]

Comme dans le cas des bills privés, je crois que l'étude de certaines questions qui sont soulevées pourrait se faire très rapidement et brièvement.

Par exemple, nous pourrions tomber d'accord assez rapidement sur certaines questions notamment le fait de mentionner les affiliations politiques sur les bulletins de vote. Cela a été recommandé et présenté dans les bills privés.

Si nous pouvons en arriver à une décision assez rapide à ce sujet, alors, le Directeur général des élections pourrait rédiger un projet d'amendement qu'on pourrait soumettre aux députés pour étude.

Il se peut que vous vouliez que le Comité directeur prépare cette liste si certaines questions vous viennent à l'esprit qui se rattachent à cette politique. Comme vous le savez, il n'entre pas dans les fonctions du Directeur général des élections de formuler des recommandations portant sur la ligne de conduite à suivre.

M. Forest: Monsieur le président, j'en fais la proposition. Le Comité de direction pourrait établir une liste de tous les articles où il semble y avoir un accord général. A la prochaine réunion, nous pourrions la revoir ce qui accélérerait nos travaux, puis nous pourrions nous concentrer sur les questions qui semblent un peu controversées et qui pourraient donner lieu à discussion.

Le président: Monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Je suis complètement d'accord avec mon collègue. Cela épargnerait beaucoup de temps. Je demanderai donc au comité directeur d'inclure les points saillants et les questions valides, qu'il semble ou non y avoir accord.

Le président: Cela a été discuté au comité directeur et c'est là qu'on a décidé de soumetrefer the idea to the main Committee so that you could decide whether to prepare this list yourselves or to have the steering committee make a tentative list and then submit it to the members for approval or rejection; but if, when we raise the points, there seems to be long discussion on it, this will be referred after we have heard evidence.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, to be helpful, I hope it might be possible for members around the table today, members of the Committee, to assist the steering committee with some suggestions that they have. I suppose that most members have in mind some A-1 amendments that they would like to see adopted and some they think would be easy.

Just to start the ball rolling, I think that the suggestion of Mr. Francis in reference to an agent's being in the returning officer's office on election day—though I do not know that I would ever use it if I were a candidate—is a very fine idea, and I cannot see any problem there.

The affiliation might have some interesting ramifications since this country has a constitution which acts as if there were no such things as political parties usually, and I believe there is a great opinion in favour of this. I myself am a convert. I used to be against party affiliation on ballots. I thought it was denigration of the individual but now I have been converted.

I think we will find that the absentee voting question perhaps will be the biggest and most important and this one would have to be left until the last because it may encompass military voting, overseas voting and so on.

There are many things, and despite what I said and still believe about the government's recommendation, I do not think that we will have any need to delay the question of lowering the voting age. I have a feeling that there is pretty strong opinion in favour of the 18-year voting age—in fact we showed that when we discussed it in a previous committee which never did get around to reporting. So perhaps members might help the steering committee by bringing in what they consider the most important, and this could go on the list.

•1045

Mr. Howe: I have just one suggestion. If the steering committee goes over this paper which was prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer—a very comprehensive paper—and takes into consideration most of the subjects that we will be discussing, then if we take it item by item, we might get practically all of the things that we were discussing before us, tre la question aux députés, en comité plénier pour que vous puissiez préparer cette liste, ou bien demander au comité directeur d'en préparer une provisoire pour fin d'approbation ou de rejet. Enfin, lorsqu'on soulève les questions qui pourraient donner lieu à discussion, cela pourrait être déferé après avoir entendu les témoignages.

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais que ce comité présente des suggestions au comité de direction. Je suppose que la plupart des députés ont quelques amendements à l'esprit qu'ils aimeraient voir adopter. Je crois que la proposition de M. Francis concernant un agent affecté au Bureau du Directeur du scrutin le jour du scrutin serait une idée excellente. Je n'exploiterais pas cette idée si j'étais candidat, mais je n'y vois aucun inconvénient. L'affiliation peut avoir des ramifications intéressantes à cet égard puisque le Canada jouit d'une Constitution qui fonctionne comme s'il n'existait pas de partis politiques. Je crois que la plupart des gens sont en faveur de cette idée. J'étais moi-même à un moment donné, opposé à l'affiliation politique qui me semblait se faire au détriment de l'individu. Maintenant je pense que le vote des absents est la question la plus importante qu'on pourrait laisser pour la fin parce qu'elle embrasse le vote militaire et le vote d'outre-mer. Quant à la recommandation du gouvernement, je ne crois pas qu'il y ait lieu de remettre à plus tard la question de diminuer l'âge requis des votants; il faut voter à 18 ans et c'est l'opinion la plus forte. Cette opinion s'est manifestée lors des dernières réunions. Nous pourrions aider le comité directeur à dire ce qui semble le plus important et à insérer sur la liste l'âge des votants.

M. Howe: Je n'ai qu'une recommandation. Le comité directeur étudie le dossier que le Directeur général des élections a préparé. C'est un dossier qui couvre l'ensemble des sujets que nous sommes sur le point de discuter. Il le dépouille article par article, mais malheureusement nous ne trouverions rien sur le vote militaire dans ce dossier. J'ai le although I could not find anything about the Canadian Forces voting in this. It may be here but I do not see it. I have this bill before me but I do not find it in this paper.

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: If I may, Mr. Howe, this is federal only, because the Canadian Forces voting rules apply only at the federal level.

Mr. Howe: Oh, I see. This is a comparison between the provincial and the federal.

This is the feeling that I have, having gone over this paper: that it does bring into focus many of the things that we have considered as being important for this Committee to discuss.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: On the point of the Canadian Forces voting, I believe that at least one province has somewhat different provisions for the eligibility of Armed Forces voters. Would it be possible for Mr. Hamel to look into what differences there are, if any, or into any special provisions in any of the provinces on Armed Forces voting as compared to the provisions under the federal election act?

Mr. Hamel: In the legislation itself I do not recall anything specific. The Ontario Government, by Order in Council passed for the general election of 1967, gave Canadian Forces personnel whose permanent residence is in Ontario the right to vote, and I have some figures here. What they did was to obtain from the Department of National Defence the complete list of Canadian Forces personnel who, according to their statement of ordinary residence, are permanent residents of Ontario. I believe the total number was in the vicinity of 35,000. These members of the Forces were invited to write to the Chief Election Officer's office in Toronto to obtain a ballot. I understand that roughly 2,000 members availed themselves of this opportunity and eventually only 1,527 votes were received on time and counted.

You probably saw that one of the recommendations of the Ontario committee on electoral matters was to extend proxy voting to members of the Forces. I do not know whether this is in the light of that experience in 1967—this perhaps may be discussed with the Ontario committee if and when you meet with them—but in 1967, as I say, the total number of members of the Forces who were eligible to vote was in the vicinity of 34,000.

By comparison, at the general election of 1968, the federal election, 20,172 votes were cast by Ontario residents under the Canadian Forces voting rules, and of these 20,172 votes, 19,706 were valid votes and counted for canprojet de loi devant moi mais je ne vois pas ce détail dans le dossier.

[Interpretation]

M. Hamel: Il s'agit du domaine fédéral, parce que les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes relèvent du fédéral.

M. Howe: Je vois. Il y a une distinction à établir entre le domaine fédéral et celui des provinces. J'ai donc l'impression et je le répète que ce document met en lumière bon nombre de points que le Comité a jugé bon de discuter.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Au sujet du vote des Forces armées, je crois qu'il y a au moins une province où l'admissibilité des votants diffère de celle des autres provinces. M. Hamel pourrait-il nous dire comment diffèrent ces dispositions de celles que prévoit la Loi électorale du Canada.

M. Hamel: Il n'y a rien de particulier dans la loi comme tel. Par un décret-loi adopté à l'occasion des élections de 1967, le gouvernement ontarien a donné aux personnes des Forces canadiennes dont la résidence permanente était en Ontario, le droit de vote. J'ai des chiffres ici. Ils ont donc obtenu du ministère de la Défense nationale la liste complète des soldats canadiens qui ont déclaré qu'ils étaient résidents de l'Ontario. Le nombre total de votants s'élevait approximativement à 35,000. On invitait ceux-ci à écrire au bureau du directeur général des élections à Toronto pour obtenir un bulletin de vote. Deux mille membres ont saisi cette opportunité dont 1,527 ont voté parce qu'ils ont été reçus à temps.

Vous avez probablement vu que l'une des recommandations du Comité ontarien sur les questions électorales étendaient le vote par procuration aux membres des Forces armées. Je ne sais pas si l'on s'est fondé sur l'expérience de 1967, mais le nombre total des membres des Forces armées admis à exercer leur droit de vote s'élevait aux environs de 34,000.

Pour fins de comparaison, aux élections fédérales de 1968, quelque 20,172 membres des Forces canadiennes ayant leur résidence en Ontario ont exercé leur droit de vote dont 19,706 votes ont été valides, par rapport à didates, as compared with 1,527. I would suspect that the potential eligible number was quite similar. There should not be that much difference.

[Texte]

This is not very recent history, but in 1944 the House of Commons appointed a special committee to look into what we called at that time the Canadian Forces Voting Regulations, which had been passed at the very beginning of the war, and the question was raised whether members of the Forces would prefer to vote directly under some procedure such as the one provided under the Canadian Forces voting rules or by proxy. They received some testimony and on this specific matter, one of the witnesses, Colonel Brooks, said at one time that the members of the Forces would prefer to vote direct and so on, and finally the Chairman of the Committee said:

• 1050

THE CHAIRMAN: If I may interject here I have received information from Major Lewis, chief election officer of the Province of Ontario, that about 15 per cent of the possible voters returned their completed proxies in the last Ontario election in time, and about 6 per cent of the possible votes were polled.

That was during the war, though. The explanation given was that this happened at the same time as the movement of troops from England to Italy which might have affected the turnout. As I said, this was in 1944, so the result was relatively discouraging, but in 1967, when the members of the forces were afforded direct vote by mail, only 1,500 out of roughly 35,000 actually voted.

Mr. Forrestall: That is a substantial number and I think it would make it worthwhile. I think, Mr. Hamel, you are giving rise to the question of whether or not that small percentage makes the cost and trouble worthwhile and it is my opinion that it does, but I think, Mr. Chairman, on this whole question of the Canadian forces voting rules that the overriding thing that people are concerned about is the loss of the secrecy of the ballot. Over the years there have been many attempts through various amendments and various other ways to collect and register the vote of the armed forces, but never to the complete satisfaction of the secrecy of the ballot. For example, the subject matter of a Notice of Motion No. 20(b), which was referred to us reads as follows:

(b) to provide the Armed Services ballots shall henceforth be called absentee ballots and be counted simultaneously with

[Interprétation]

1,527. Je dirais que le nombre possible de votants admissibles est plus ou moins le même. Il ne devrait pas y avoir tellement de différence.

En 1944, la Chambre des communes a nommé un comité spécial chargé de l'étude des Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes adoptées au début de la guerre. On a alors soulevé la question de savoir si les membres des forces armées préféreraient voter directement suivant une procédure comme celle qui est prévue dans lesdites Règles ou bien par procuration. On a alors entendu des témoignages à ce sujet. Un des témoins, le colonel Brooks, a dit alors que les militaires préféreraient voter directement et le président du Comité a dit:

LE PRÉSIDENT: Le major Lewis, directeur des élections pour la province d'Ontario, m'a appris qu'environ 15 p. 100 des votants possibles avaient retourné à temps leurs formules de procuration remplies lors de la dernière élection ontarienne, et qu'environ 6 p. 100 des votes possibles avaient été déposés.

Ceci se passait durant la guerre, cependant. On a expliqué ce fait en disant qu'il y avait alors un mouvement de troupes du Royaume-Uni à l'Italie. Cela s'est passé en 1944, mais les résultats ont été assez décevants. En 1967, lorsque les militaires ont eu l'occasion de voter directement par le courrier, seulement 1,500 militaires sur environ 35,000 ont voté.

M. Forrestall: C'est quand même un nombre assez important. Je crois que M. Hamel se demande si les frais et les peines en cause peuvent se justifier par ce faible pourcentage. Monsieur le président, à propos des Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes, ce qui prime tout, à mon avis, c'est la perte du secret du suffrage. Au cours des ans, on a présenté divers amendements à la loi électorale pour recueillir et inscrire le vote militaire, sans assurer entièrement le suffrage. Par exemple, l'avis de motion 20 b) qui nous a été présenté se lit comme il suit:

b) porter que les bulletins de vote des membres des Forces armées seront désormais appelés bulletins de vote d'absents other absentee ballots without, however, altering the present method of balloting by the Armed Services;...

[Text]

This type of question on the surface seems to me to be just another ad hoc attempt to provide secrecy for the voters in the Canadian armed services. This section might do it; it might well be that this would provide secrecy.

The point I am trying to get at really is that the question is so broad that it, indeed, should be an item on your list of topic headings, but I would hope that we would not attempt to deal with it without a fairly lengthy discussion—perhaps a whole meeting or, if necessary, even more than one meeting. I would hope that we would have an opportunity to call in front of us one or two people who have had a particular responsibility in connection with the collection of the armed services vote in recent years.

Mr. Hamel: I am sorry, Mr. Forrestall, I was not trying to prove that it was not worth the cost.

Mr. Forrestall: I did not say you did; I just said that what you were saying gave rise in my mind to the question of whether or not it was worth the cost.

Mr. Hamel: The only thing I wanted to point out was that the members of the forces vote in much greater number under the procedure provided under the Canadian Forces voting rules, if we go by the experience of Ontario, and if they are offered a ballot paper. When I said that in 1967, 1,527 ballots were cast while at the last federal election in the same area 20,000 ballots were cast, I meant that this was the only thing the figures seemed to indicate.

Mr. MacQuarrie: For clarification, you were referring, however, to proxy voting.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, as discussed in 1944.

Mr. MacQuarrie: There is a great dilution of the voter's will between proxy voting and absentee voting, perhaps.

Mr. Forrestall: You see, the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that it is quite possible in my riding, for example, to stand outside the gates of the base, and if you were politically-inclined to wack three out of four on the chops, be reasonably accurate and know that you were striking out at your enemies. This is wrong, this is basically wrong and surely in 1970 we can find some way of changing this.

[Interpretation]

et comptés en même temps que ceux des autres personnes absentes de la circonscription électorale, sans, toutefois, modifier la méthode actuelle de vote des membres des Forces armées.

Ce genre de question, superficiellement parlant, me semble une simple tentative pour assurer le secret du suffrage militaire. Cet article pourrait l'assurer.

Ce que je veux faire ressortir, c'est que la question a tant d'ampleur qu'elle devrait figurer sur la liste des sujets à étudier. J'espère qu'elle fera l'objet d'une assez longue discussion, peut-être pour toute une réunion. J'espère qu'on aura l'occasion de faire venir une ou deux personnes qui ont des responsabilités particulières à l'égard du vote militaire depuis quelques années.

M. Hamel: Je suis désolé, monsieur Forrestall, je n'essayais pas de prouver que ça n'en valait pas la peine.

M. Forrestall: Ce n'est pas ce que j'ai dit; ce que vous avez dit m'a amené à me poser cette question.

M. Hamel: La seule chose que je voulais signaler, c'est que les votes des militaires sont beaucoup plus nombreux avec les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes si l'on tire profit de l'expérience de l'Ontario et si l'on offre aux militaires des bulletins de vote. Lorsque j'ai dit qu'en 1967, il n'y avait eu que 1,527 bulletins alors qu'il y a eu 20,000 lors de l'élection précédente, je voulais dire que c'était ce que semblaient indiquer.

M. Macquarrie: Vous parliez cependant du vote par procuration.

M. Hamel: Selon la formule étudiée en 1944.

M. Macquarrie: On semble très indécis entre le vote par procuration et le vote des absents.

M. Forrestall: Il reste que, monsieur le président, dans une circonscription comme la mienne, par exemple, où l'esprit politique est très développé, quelqu'un pourrait se tenir près des portes de la base et frapper les trois quarts des gens en pleine figure en pensant frapper l'ennemi. Cela est fondamentalement mauvais et nous trouverons sûrement moyen de remédier à la situation. Le vote des

[Texte]

That, essentially, was my point. Perhaps absentee voting does get around it, but, again, my question was that when this item comes up—and I hope it would be included on your list—I would hope that Mr. Hamel could get the last armed forces electoral officer to come to talk to us about his experiences.

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Benjamin.

• 1055

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I apologize, but I think I need to be straightened out on the order in which we are taking things. If we are off the document that you wanted us to discuss, it is my fault for bringing up the armed forces.

The Chairman: As far as the agenda for today is concerned, I raised all the points that were discussed at the steering committee meeting. I would like you, as a Committee of the whole, either to request the steering committee to prepare a tentative list of all the policy items on which we could reach an early decision or to give us suggestions of items that should be put on this list. I think, first, this is what we need to know. I believe the steering committee would welcome suggestions and views from the members of the Committee as a whole on the items that should be put on this list.

Do you agree with the principle that we should proceed by way of trying to eliminate in advance all the items on which we could reach an early agreement? If there are some points on which members oppose our making an early decision, this is all right as we then will discuss them thoroughly.

Mr. Forrestall: I do not believe Mr. Macquarrie's motion would include the right of any member to make any other suggestions to the steering committee, to the Chairman or any other member of the steering committee, either verbally or in writing. I think Mr. Macquarrie's motion was designed to place in your hands, or the steering committee's hands, the initiative of reducing the items, perhaps, to 38 different points and to use your judgment on their order.

The Chairman: To the contrary, we do not want to have the initiative of suggesting the items. We would like to have suggestions from you on the items that should be put on this list. The steering committee will discuss this list thoroughly in advance and then submit it to the members item by item and if we reach a decision, the Chief Electoral absents sera peut-être la solution, mais j'espère que lorsque cette question viendra à l'étude—et j'espère qu'elle figurera sur votre liste—le dernier directeur des élections pour les forces armées pourra venir témoigner.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Oui, monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, je m'excuse, mais j'aimerais avoir quelques précisions sur la façon dont nous abordons les sujets à l'étude. Si nous nous sommes écartés de notre sujet, c'est un peu ma faute, car c'est moi qui ai soulevé la question du vote dans les Forces armées.

Le président: Quant à l'ordre du jour d'aujourd'hui, j'ai soulevé tous les points dont on a discuté au comité de direction. J'aimerais que vous tous, en tant que comité plénier, demandiez au comité de direction de préparer une liste provisoire de toutes les questions de principe sur lesquelles nous pourrions arriver à un accord rapidement, ou de formuler des propositions quant aux questions qui devraient figurer sur cette liste. C'est la première chose que nous devons savoir. Je crois que le comité de direction aimerait avoir les propositions du comité plénier à ce sujet.

Premièrement, est-ce que vous êtes d'accord pour procéder en essayant d'éliminer toutes les questions sur lesquelles nous pourrions tomber d'accord rapidement? S'il y a certaines questions à l'égard desquelles des membres ont des vues divergentes, nous pourrions alors en discuter.

M. Forrestall: Je ne crois pas que la motion de M. Macquarrie prévoie que les membres du Comité puissent faire des suggestions, verbalement ou par écrit, au président ou à un membre quelconque du comité de direction. M. Macquarrie voulait vous laisser libre de réduire à 38 le nombre des questions et de vous servir de votre jugement quant à leur priorité.

Le président: Au contraire, nous ne voulons pas avoir le choix de proposer toutes ces questions. Nous voulons avoir vos propositions sur les questions qui doivent figurer sur la liste, et nous allons en discuter en détail au comité de direction et la soumettre aux membres point par point. Le directeur général des élections aura beaucoup plus de temps pour

[Text]

Officer then will have much more time to prepare his draft amendments to the Canada Elections Act and refer them to us. Does this meet with your approval?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Alkenbrack?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, has Mr. Hamel had many requests from the electorate regarding any of these non-contentious questions that would give us some indication of those items on which we could give ready and almost unanimous agreement?

The Chairman: I believe Mr. Hamel regards—and, I think, quite rightly—all problems which involve politics, as policy questions.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, but as a director of a federal office he probably receives mail as well as the elected members sitting on this Committee. My question is this, has he received any requests or recommendations from the electors at large across the country regarding some of these questions that might arise or develop into contentious ones?

Mr. Hamel: All the requests or recommendations I received either directly, through a member of Parliament or through a Minister have been distributed to the members of the Committee, I believe, or were tabled at the first meeting of the Committee. As the Committee progresses I intend to submit to the Chairman any new recommendations that I may receive during that period.

• 1100

The Chairman: If you have not received these, the Clerk will have them circulated. Is it agreed that the steering committee prepare a tentative list of all the items on policy matters on which to reach an early decision?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: At the steering committee, as I have already stated, we discussed possible witnesses who might be able to contribute to our hearings. There is Professor A. C. Cairns from the University of British Columbia; Professor Norman Ward of the University of Saskatchewan; Miss Flora MacDonald, of Queen's University, and the Chief Electoral Officers of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

Last week I asked our Clerk, Mr. Virr, to get in touch with these people to see if they were available. Would Mr. Virr indicate if he préparer un projet d'amendement à la Loi électorale du Canada. Cela vous va?

[Interpretation]

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Alkenbrack?

M. Alkenbrack: Monsieur le président, est-ce que M. Hamel a reçu beaucoup de demandes de la part des électeurs au sujet de ces diverses questions non litigieuses? Pourrait-il nous donner une idée du genre de questions sur lesquelles nous pourrions nous mettre d'accord plus ou moins à l'unanimité?

Le président: Je crois que M. Hamel envisage uniquement les questions de principe qui donnent lieu à des problèmes d'ordre politique.

M. Alkenbrack: Oui, mais en tant que directeur d'un bureau fédéral, il reçoit certainement du courrier, tout comme les députés, et je me demande s'il a reçu de la part des électeurs des demandes ou des recommandations au sujet de questions qui pourraient prêter à litige?

M. Hamel: Toutes les demandes ou recommandations que j'ai reçues soit directement, soit par l'intermédiaire d'un député ou d'un ministre, ont été présentées à la première réunion du Comité. Au fur et à mesure du progrès des travaux du Comité, je soumettrai au président toutes les recommandations que je recevrai dans l'intervalle.

Le président: Si vous ne les avez pas reçues, le greffier vous les fera parvenir. Êtes-vous d'accord, messieurs, que le Comité de direction prépare une liste provisoire de toutes les questions de principe sur lesquelles nous pourrions nous entendre rapidement?

Des voix: D'accord!

Le président: Lors de la réunion du Comité de direction, comme je l'ai déjà dit, nous avons parlé des témoins qui pourraient comparaître: le professeur A. C. Cairns de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique, le professeur Norman Ward de l'Université de la Saskatchewan, M^{lle} Flora MacDonald de l'Université Queen et les directeurs des élections de la Colombie-Britannique et de la Saskatchewan.

La semaine dernière, j'ai demandé à notre greffier, monsieur Virr, de communiquer avec ces personnes et de leur demander si elles has been in touch with these people and what their answers are?

[Texte]

The Clerk of the Committee: I have been in touch with Miss Flora MacDonald, of Queen's University, and she would not be available before Tuesday, December 9, but she would be quite happy to come down on that date.

Professor Cairns, from the University of British Columbia, has indicated possibly December 11, but he will confirm that either tomorrow or the next day.

Professor Ward indicated that all his views on this subject had already been documented and put on paper and that he could only reiterate them before the Committee. However, he is going to write a memo to the Chairman explaining this in further detail.

The Ontario Select Committee on Elections has been approached; I have been speaking to the Clerk of the Committee and she is going to discuss with the Chairman, Mr. Dunlop, the feasibility of their Committee's coming down here or perhaps, if that is not possible, this Committee travelling to Toronto to have a joint meeting with them. I have not heard yet from the Ontario Committee.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I am perhaps a little bit at sea now that I realize from a quick perusal of the Act that the rules under the Canadian Forces Regulations or sections of the general Act come directly under your sole responsibility. I assume there was appointed someone who assumes for you, as an assistant to you or in some capacity, some responsibility for the administration of this Act. While you assume responsibility, you do not, in fact, preoccupy yourself with it.

Mr. Hamel: Well, the same applies to the rest of the Act; I cannot do the whole thing alone. Mr. Nash is primarily responsible for the Canadian Forces Voting Rules, with the staff of the Judge Advocate General in National Defence.

Mr. Forrestall: That was the point. I wonder if I may add to your list and request that Mr. Nash—is it?

The Chairman: I am sorry. I should have introduced these gentlemen earlier. Mr. Walter Nash is Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, and Mr. Maurice Villeneuve is an Administrative Officer in the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

[Interprétation]

pouvaient se présenter devant le Comité. J'aimerais que monsieur Virr nous dise s'il a communiqué avec ces personnes et quelle a été leur réponse.

Le greffier: J'ai communiqué avec M^{lle} Flora MacDonald de l'Université Queen. Elle ne sera pas disponible avant mardi le 9 décembre, mais elle serait heureuse de venir témoigner ce jour-là.

Le professeur Cairns de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique a mentionné la date du 11 décembre. Il va confirmer sa réponse demain ou après-demain. Le professeur Ward a déclaré que toutes ses opinions avaient déjà été consignées dans un document et qu'il ne viendrait que les répéter devant le Comité. Toutefois, il enverra un mémoire au président avec plus de détails. On a communiqué avec le Comité spécial de l'Ontario sur les élections; j'ai parlé au greffier de ce Comité et elle va étudier avec le président, Monsieur Dunlop, la possibilité d'envoyer des représentants de leur Comité ici, ou si cela n'est pas possible, notre Comité pourrait se rendre à Toronto pour tenir une réunion avec eux. Je n'ai pas encore eu de réponse du Comité de l'Ontario.

Le président: Monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Je me trouve un peu désemparé maintenant que je me rends compte, après avoir examiné rapidement la Loi, que les Règles électorales concernant les Forces armées ou des articles de la Loi générale relèvent entièrement de vous. Je présume qu'on a nommé une personne qui se charge pour vous à titre d'assistant, de l'application de la Loi. Même si vous en avez la charge, en fait, vous ne vous en préoccupez pas.

M. Hamel: La même chose s'applique au reste de la Loi. Je ne peux pas tout faire seul. En ce qui concerne les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes, c'est monsieur Nash qui s'en occupe principalement avec le personnel du juge-avocat général du ministère de la Défense nationale.

M. Forrestall: Je me demande si je peux ajouter un nom à votre liste et demander que M. Bash,—est-ce son nom?

Le président: Je m'excuse. J'aurais dû présenter ces messieurs plus tôt. Monsieur Walter Nash est directeur adjoint des élections et M. Maurice Villeneuve est un fonctionnaire du bureau du directeur général des élections.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: That is fine. There is no difficulty. We could ask him if he will appear then.

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, on this matter of witnesses appearing, should the Committee indicate to people such as Professor Cairns, Miss MacDonald and any others who might appear what it is we want them to give us their views on any detail or should we just leave it wide open and let them cover the waterfront if they wish? They might want to know so that they can prepare something in advance.

The Chairman: That is a very good point you raise. I do not think we need much evidence from these people on the items on which we can make up our own minds.

• 1105

Mr. Benjamin: Right.

The Chairman: Perhaps they could indicate what particular points they wish to discuss. I do not think it would be wise to ask them to come then merely to have a general discussion on elections.

Mr. Benjamin: I think it might be helpful if, as a general principle, we asked them to comment on the areas on which we know there is going to be a lot of discussion and difficulty in arriving at conclusions such as absentee balloting, methods of enumeration, armed forces voting and any of the areas which are going to take us some time. I think we should get their views on these.

The Chairman: I do not know if as Chairman I may make a suggestion but I think they could give us some views on the lowering of the voting age, which will have a very profound significance and which will add more than 1 million voters to the electoral list.

Mr. Benjamin: I quite agree. I think it would be helpful to them if we were to list at least a number of areas on which we would like their views, including these and any others we might think of. And if there are any we do not think of on which they choose to comment anyway, there is nothing wrong with that.

The Chairman: Such as proxy voting, absentee voting and so on.

Mr. Benjamin: Surely.

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: C'est bien. Il n'y a pas de difficultés. Nous lui demanderons donc de comparaître.

Le président: Oui. Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, en ce qui concerne les témoins qui doivent comparaître, est-ce que le Comité devrait faire savoir à M. Cairns, à M^{lle} MacDonald et aux autres témoins possibles, ce que nous tenons à savoir, sur quel sujet nous voulons qu'ils nous éclairent, ou est-ce qu'on doit leur laisser tout le loisir de parler de ce qui les intéresse. Ils voudront peut-être le savoir afin de se préparer d'avance.

Le président: Vous avez tout à fait raison, monsieur Benjamin. Je ne pense pas qu'il faille que ces personnes nous donnent leurs idées sur des questions au sujet desquelles nous pouvons nous-mêmes prendre une décision.

M. Benjamin: C'est exact.

Le président: Ils pourraient peut-être vous faire savoir quels sont les sujets qu'ils désirent étudier. Je ne pense pas qu'il serait sage de leur demander de venir ici pour discuter simplement des élections en général.

M. Benjamin: A mon avis, cela serait peut-être utile que nous leur demandions de nous éclairer sur des sujets à propos desquels on sait qu'il y aura beaucoup de discussions et de difficultés avant de prendre une décision, notamment le vote des absents, les méthodes d'énumération, le vote des Forces armées et toutes les autres questions qui prendront du temps à être réglées. Je crois qu'on devrait connaître leurs idées sur ces sujets.

Le président: A titre de président, je ne sais pas si je peux faire une suggestion, mais, je pense qu'ils pourraient nous exprimer leurs idées sur la question d'abaisser l'âge requis pour voter, question qui aura une très grande importance et qui ajoutera plus de 1 million de votants à la liste électorale.

M. Benjamin: Je suis d'accord avec cela. Je pense qu'il leur serait utile si nous établissions une liste d'un certain nombre de questions sur lesquelles nous aimerions avoir leurs opinions, notamment celles qui nous préoccupent et d'autres auxquelles nous pourrions penser. Quant aux autres sujets auxquels nous ne pensons pas, ils seraient libres de formuler des commentaires.

Le président: Notamment, le vote par procuration, le vote des absents, et d'autres.

M. Benjamin: Certainement.

[Texte]

Mr. Paproski: Have you heard from the Chief Returning Officer of British Columbia if he was coming?

The Chairman: No. Mr. Paproski has made a very good suggestion.

Mr. Paproski: I asked, Mr. Chairman, if we were going to give terms of reference to these people who are coming to be our witnesses.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, what particular, unique qualifications do these three witnesses have to speak to us on all the broad subjects applying to Canadian general elections? It might be embarrassing to ask any one of them to speak on all subjects.

The Chairman: An election in itself is not only a technical procedure. It is up to us to decide now if it is useful for them to come. If we do decide to have them come, we should try to derive the most benefit from it.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I asked that question because I think terms of reference should be a matter of good ethics and should be laid down for each one. We could contact them before they come and ask them what they wish to speak on.

The Chairman: I do not think these people will come here and discuss the entire Canada Elections Act. I think they will stick to major issues. Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, perhaps because I am an ex-egghead myself I am one of the advocates of bringing before us occasionally people who might stand back a little from the machinery. With many years of thought and study they might give us some ideas that we might just not have thought of, although all of us do think a lot about election acts.

One of these witnesses is Miss Flora MacDonald, who used to be in a certain political party, and who has had quite a bit of experience. I was chided the other day for not suggesting someone from another political party, and a name has been submitted to me—a very prominent academician of the Liberal Party—but I do not know that you could go too far in tying these people down and telling them, “You can talk about Section 13 (a), but we do not want to hear a damn word about Section 14 (2).”

Perhaps the Chairman, or the Clerk—it might be a good job for the Vice-Chairman—

[Interprétation]

M. Paproski: Est-ce que vous savez si le président général des élections de la Colombie-Britannique viendra?

Le président: Non. M. Paproski a fait une bonne suggestion.

M. Paproski: J'ai demandé à monsieur le président si nous allions donner un mandat aux personnes qui vont venir témoigner.

M. Alkenbrack: Monsieur le président, quelles qualifications particulières possèdent ces trois témoins pour nous parler de tous les sujets relatifs aux élections générales du Canada. Il serait peut-être embarrassant de demander à ces personnes de parler de tous les sujets.

Le président: Il n'y a pas que le côté technique dans des élections. Nous devons décider maintenant s'il est utile qu'ils viennent témoigner. Si l'on décide de les faire comparaître, nous devrons essayer d'en tirer le plus d'avantages possibles.

M. Alkenbrack: J'ai demandé cette question car, à mon avis, on devrait leur exposer notre mandat avant de leur demander de venir comparaître. Nous pourrions communiquer avec eux avant leur arrivée et leur demander sur quels sujets ils veulent parler.

Le président: Je ne crois pas que ces personnes viendront ici pour nous parler de toute la Loi électorale du Canada. Je pense qu'ils s'en tiendront aux sujets importants. Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, c'est peut-être parce que je suis un ancien intellectuel moi-même que je voudrais que l'on fasse venir de temps en temps devant le Comité des personnes qui peuvent voir les choses d'une manière différente. Puisqu'ils ont étudié pendant de nombreuses années, ils pourraient nous faire part de certaines opinions qui ne nous sont pas venues à l'idée, même si nous étudions tous beaucoup les lois électorales.

Un de ces témoins est M^{lle} Flora MacDonald, qui faisait partie d'un certain parti politique et qui a eu pas mal d'expérience à ce sujet. L'autre jour, on m'a reproché de n'avoir pas suggéré de faire venir une personne qui représente un autre parti politique, et on m'a soumis un nom, celui d'un membre très en vue du parti libéral, mais, je ne pense pas qu'on puisse limiter ces gens à parler de certains sujets et non pas d'autres, par exemple de leur dire de parler de l'alinéa a) de l'article 13—mais non du paragraphe (2) de l'article 14. Le président du Comité, le greffier ou même le vice-président, pourraient peutshould send them along the terms of reference and perhaps a summary of what we have discussed today and this list, if we ever get it drawn up, and tell them that this is what they are likely to be interrogated on. I think they would be able to cope with it and be helpful to us.

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre?

Mr. Lefebvre: I have no objection to the person Mr. Macquarrie named—Miss MacDonald, I believe it is, but I do not see why we should not go a little further. Politics is the name of the game and the electoral act and politics are tied very closely together, as you were mentioning. Why not invite the leaders of the opposition parties in some of the provinces to give us their views on what they think is wrong with the electoral law? Why not go right into it? They may have personal opinions, through their years of experience, and perhaps can suggest things that we may not have thought of.

Also, I believe the meeting we were to have with the Select Committee on Election Laws in Ontario is a very important one. I understand they have travelled half way around the world to look into this subject, if that is correct. Instead of our travelling all the way around the world perhaps we can use some of their experiences. I just make this suggestion to the Committee.

The Chairman: This is a good discussion. You have raised the idea of meeting with the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. I think we would have to get authority for either deciding to invite them here or for going to them. Mr. Dunlop, who is the Chairman, thought it would be much more appropriate for us to go to Toronto we would need authority to go. I personally would request authority from the members for our Clerk to get in touch with these people, and if Mr. Dunlop says it is all right to come Toronto then I will call a meeting and the Committee can decide if they want the authority to go. Do not let us put ourselves in what I consider might be a ridiculous situation.

Mr. Lefebvre: Does this Committee have authority to travel?

The Chairman: No. We had it earlier, but in the terms of reference by the House there is no mention of it.

Mr. Lefebvre: Then if the Select Committee in Ontario feels that they have done enough être leur communiquer le mandat et leur donner un sommaire de ce que nous avons étudié aujourd'hui, et leur communiquer la liste si on parvient à l'établir aujourd'hui, et de les prévenir qu'ils seront interrogés sur ces questions. Je pense qu'ils pourraient être à la hauteur de la tâche et nous être utiles.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre.

M. Lefebvre: Je ne m'oppose pas à la personne qu'a nommée monsieur Macquarrie, M^{lle} MacDonald, mais nous pourrions aller un peu plus loin. Il s'agit vraiment de politique et la loi électorale et la politique sont étroitement liées. Pourquoi ne pas inviter les chefs des partis de l'Opposition dans quelques-unes des provinces pour nous exprimer leurs idées sur les corrections à apporter dans la loi électorale? Pourquoi ne pas entrer immédiatement dans le sujet? Ils ont peut-être des idées personnelles à la suite de leurs nombreuses années d'expérience et ils pourraient peut-être nous suggérer certaines choses auxquelles nous n'avons pas pensé.

Je crois aussi que la réunion que nous devons tenir avec le Comité spécial de l'Ontario sur les lois électorales est très importante. Je pense qu'ils ont fait le tour du monde pour étudier ce sujet. Au lieu d'aller partout dans le monde, nous pourrions peut-être profiter de l'expérience de ces personnes.

Le président: C'est simplement une suggestion que je fais au Comité. Vous avez mentionné l'idée d'une réunion avec ce Comité spécial de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario. Je pense qu'il faut obtenir l'autorisation de les faire venir ou d'aller les voir. Si monsieur Dunlop qui est le président, croit qu'il vaut mieux que nous allions à Toronto, il nous faudrait autorisation nécessaire pour y aller. Je demanderais personnellement l'autorisation des membres de ce Comité pour que le greffier communique avec ces personnes et, si monsieur Dunlop est d'accord et qu'on nous dit de venir à Toronto, alors je convoquerai une réunion et le Comité décidera s'il veut obtenir l'autorisation d'y aller. Ne nous mettons pas dans une situation qui pourrait être ridicule.

M. Lefebvre: Est-ce que ce Comité a l'autorisation de se déplacer?

Le président: Non, nous l'avions plus tôt, mais le mandat que la Chambre nous a donné n'en fait pas mention.

M. Lefebvre: Si le comité spécial de l'Ontario pense qu'il a suffisamment voyagé et s'il travelling for a while and would like us to go to Toronto we would have to ask the House for permission?

[Texte]

The Chairman: We would have to ask the House for permission, yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is fine.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, once the list of all the items we agree upon is made up I think we could ask them to deal with it. We could send them the list of the items on which there is to be discussion and they could comment on whatever they want to in that list of controversial subjects. I think that would be easier for them than to concentrate on and discuss all the amendments or all of the act. This would allow them to concentrate on the items on which we want to get special advice.

The Chairman: I understand from Mr. Dunlop that they want to get our views on the proxy voting system, on the absentee voting system and on the lowering of the voting age. These are the three major items which they want to discuss with us.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to belabour this. I agree with this, but there is the other aspect that we are asking these people because they are experts, and I think we have to leave them some scope for their own expertise.

One of these men, Professor A. C. Cairns, is an expert in proportional representation. I personally am not sold on proportional representation, but we would probably be a bit irresponsible if we did not look at that. That is a very important, broad concept. It is difficult to keep professors in line, anyway, but I think we should hear from him on that. I quite agree that they would find it helpful to have an idea of what we ourselves were considering to be important. I think a good letter from the Chairman or the Clerk, or a telephone call, will tie everything up pretty well.

I like the idea of hearing in some way from political parties. Whether it be the leaders of the parties or those in the headquarters, these people should have experiences that might be worth while bringing out in relation to the operation of the electoral machinery. But the general idea of hearing from political parties, as structures, is, I think, a pretty good one.

• 1115

Mr. Lefebvre: We could leave it to the parties to appoint the persons they wish to come before us.

[Interprétation]

veut nous inviter à nous rendre à Toronto, il faudrait demander à la Chambre l'autorisation de nous y rendre.

Le président: Oui, nous devons demander la permission à la Chambre.

M. Lefebvre: C'est bien.

M. Forest: Monsieur le président, une fois qu'on aura dressé la liste des sujets sur lesquels nous sommes d'accord, je pense qu'on devrait leur demander de s'en occuper. Nous pourrions leur envoyer la liste des sujets que nous étudierons, et ils pourraient donner leurs idées sur les sujets controversés de cette liste. A mon avis ce serait plus facile pour eux au lieu d'avoir à examiner et d'étudier toutes les modifications et toute la Loi. Cela leur permettrait d'étudier les sujets sur lesquels nous voulons avoir leur avis.

Le président: D'après monsieur Dunlop, ils voudraient avoir nos idées sur le système du vote par procuration, celui du vote des absents et sur le fait d'abaisser l'âge requis pour voter. Ce sont les trois principaux sujets qu'ils veulent étudier avec nous.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président je ne veux pas prendre trop de temps sur ce sujet. Je suis d'accord avec cela, mais il y a un autre aspect à savoir que nous demandons les opinions de ces gens-là parce que ce sont des spécialistes, et, à mon avis, il ne faut pas limiter le champ de leur expertise. Parmi ces personnes, monsieur Cairns est un spécialiste sur la représentation proportionnelle. Pour ma part, je ne suis pas convaincu que nous devrions avoir la représentation proportionnelle, mais je pense qu'il faudrait étudier ce sujet. C'est une question très importante. Il est difficile de restreindre les professeurs, de toute façon, mais je pense que nous devrions lui demander son opinion sur ce sujet. Je suis d'accord qu'ils trouveraient très utile de connaître les sujets que nous considérons les plus importants. A mon avis, une lettre du président ou du greffier ou un appel téléphonique, arrangera les choses.

Je suis d'accord avec l'idée de faire venir des représentants de partis politiques. Que ce soit les chefs des partis ou des membres du quartier général nous pourrions tirer profit de leurs expériences concernant le fonctionnement de la machine électorale. Je pense que c'est une bonne idée d'entendre des représentants de partis politiques.

M. Lefebvre: On pourrait laisser aux partis politiques l'opportunité de choisir les personnes qui viendraient comparaître devant nous.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is it agreed, then, that perhaps we call two people, one who would be available on December 9 and the other on December 11? We could decide to hear Miss Flora MacDonald on December 9 and Mr. Cairns on December 11? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Or if Miss MacDonald could come on December 11, we could hear them both on the same day. Would that be practical, as another alternative?

The Chairman: She said she would not be available before December 9, so perhaps she could be here on the December 11. Do you agree with the suggestion made by Mr. Benjamin that we hear them both on December 11?

Mr. Benjamin: If this can be arranged, yes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: And what of the idea raised by Mr. Lefebvre, of requesting the views of opposition parties?

Mr. Duquet: All parties, or their representatives.

The Chairman: All parties.

Mr. Lefebvre: All parties, I should have said, yes.

The Chairman: I believe we touched a bit on that. I understand that Miss Flora MacDonald presented a very valuable paper at the last meeting of the thinkers of the Conservative Party. Is that right?

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

The Chairman: I will advise the Clerk on getting in touch with the parties so that they can indicate to us who will be the person assigned, either to assist or take part. Do you agree with this?

And on the third item, the joint meeting with the Ontario Select Committee, about one or two months ago we did attach great importance to this meeting, because these people have been working on the same matter, and they accepted the principle and the idea of meeting jointly with us either in Toronto or in Ottawa. Should we present a report to the House requesting that we travel to meet them in Toronto, if requested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Nous sommes donc d'accord d'entendre deux personnes; une qui pourrait venir le 9 décembre, et l'autre, le 11 décembre, n'est-ce pas? Nous pourrions décider si nous allons entendre M^{lle} Flora MacDonald le 9 et monsieur Cairns le 11? Vous êtes d'accord?

Des voix: D'accord.

M. Benjamin: Ou si M^{lle} MacDonald pouvait venir le 11 décembre, on pourrait les entendre tous les deux le même jour. Est-ce que ce serait une autre éventualité d'ordre pratique?

Le président: Elle a dit qu'elle ne serait pas disponible avant le 9 décembre, elle pourrait donc comparaître le 11. Êtes-vous d'accord avec la suggestion de monsieur Benjamin pour que nous les entendions tous les deux le 11?

M. Benjamin: Si cela peut se faire, oui.

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Que dire de la suggestion de monsieur Lefebvre selon laquelle on demanderait les opinions des partis de l'Opposition.

M. Duquet: Tous les partis, ou leurs représentants.

Le président: Tous les partis.

M. Lefebvre: J'aurais dû dire tous les partis, oui.

Le président: Je crois que nous en avons parlé un peu. M^{lle} Flora MacDonald a présenté un mémoire de très grande valeur lors de la dernière réunion du parti conservateur.

M. Macquarrie: Oui, c'est vrai.

Le président: Je demanderai au greffier de communiquer avec les partis politiques afin qu'ils nous disent quelle sera la personne désignée pour assister à la réunion ou pour participer à la discussion. Êtes-vous d'accord?

Et à propos de la troisième question, la réunion conjointe avec le Comité spécial de l'Ontario, il y a environ un ou deux mois, nous avons attaché beaucoup d'importance à cette réunion vu que ces personnes ont étudié les mêmes questions, et ils ont accepté le principe et l'idée de tenir une réunion conjointe avec vous à Toronto ou à Ottawa. Devrions-nous présenter un rapport à la Chambre demandant l'autorisation de nous rendre à Toronto pour les rencontrer, s'il le faut.

Des voix: D'accord.

[Texte]

The Chairman: They may say that they will not come here. Could I have a motion that, if requested, the Committee will travel to Toronto to meet jointly with the Select Committee of Ontario?

Mr. Benjamin: I move that the Committee seek permission to travel to Toronto, if necessary, to meet with the provincial Select Committee on Election Laws.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Then what about the schedule of the meetings we will hold? Would two meetings on Tuesday and two on Thursday be acceptable, or do you believe that we should sit in the evening, with three meetings a day, or on Monday or on Friday? What are your views on that?

• 1120

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask one question. Is there a deadline?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Paproski: It seems to me that we are going to get bogged down in exactly the same way we did last session. Quite a few of us are on other committees and the lists are getting larger and larger because we are trying to close the session on December 19. If it is possible that there is no deadline, and this committee has a little longer time to study the items than some of the other committees, I think we should have one meeting a week instead of two. I am simply saying that if there is no hurry...

The Chairman: There is a hurry.

Mr. Paproski: But there is no deadline to meet for the end of this session.

The Chairman: There is no deadline for this report, but legislation has to be put before the House before the end of this session.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, but it is two years before the next election, so that gives us another two years, I think you said.

The Chairman: But before drafting the legislation we have to table our report in the House.

Mr. Paproski: I am only suggesting this because I know that members on both sides of the House are swamped with committee work now and it is going to get worse before it gets

[Interprétation]

Le président: Ils vont peut-être nous dire qu'ils ne veulent pas venir ici. Est-ce que quelqu'un veut bien faire une motion selon laquelle, si on en fait la demande, le Comité se rendra à Toronto pour tenir une réunion conjointe avec le Comité spécial de l'Ontario.

M. Benjamin: Je propose que le Comité demande la permission de se rendre, à Toronto si nécessaire, pour rencontrer le Comité provincial spécial sur les lois électorales.

Motion adoptée.

Le président: Et à propos de l'horaire des réunions que nous allons tenir? Est-ce que deux réunions le mardi et deux le jeudi, seraient suffisantes, ou pensez-vous que nous devrions siéger le soir et tenir trois réunions par jour, ou le lundi et le vendredi? Qu'est-ce que vous en pensez?

M. Paproski: Monsieur le président, y a-t-il une date limite?

Le président: Non.

M. Paproski: J'aimerais poser une question. Je pense que nous allons être débordés tout comme pendant la dernière session. Bon nombre d'entre nous sommes membres de d'autres comités et les réunions se multiplient parce nous essayons d'ajourner le 19 décembre. S'il est possible de ne pas imposer de date limite, et si notre Comité a plus de temps à sa disposition pour étudier les questions que n'en ont certains autres comités, je pense que nous devrions tenir une réunion par semaine au lieu de deux. Je veux simplement dire que s'il n'y a pas urgence...

Le président: Si, il y a urgence.

M. Paproski: Mais il n'y a pas de délai pour la fin de la session.

Le président: Il n'y en a pas pour le rapport, mais il faut présenter un projet de loi à la Chambre avant la fin de la session.

M. Paproski: Oui, mais deux ans nous séparent des prochaines élections, par conséquent il nous reste encore deux ans, c'est ce que vous avez dit, je crois.

Le président: Avant de préparer des mesures législatives, nous devons déposer notre rapport à la Chambre.

M. Paproski: C'est simplement une suggestion, car je sais que les députés des deux côtés de la Chambre sont débordés par les comités et la situation ne va pas s'améliorer.

[Text]

better. If there is any possibility of our just having one day a week this would...

Mr. Duquet: You say one day a week, but we could have one in the evening...

Mr. Paproski: Yes, one in the evening with the possibility of...

Mr. Duquet: For instance, if we sat on Tuesday we could sit three times a day.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, at 10 o'clock, 3 o'clock and 8 o'clock.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, while we have the Chief Electoral Officer here, if we make some major changes in the Elections Act about balloting and everything else, perhaps Mr. Hamel could give us some idea how many months it would take—a year, or whatever it might be—for him to change all his machinery and documents in order to be ready. This is very important.

Mr. Hamel: Unless you were to merely adopt something like permanent lists, and that kind of thing, but if you make fairly major changes in the present Act I would be in a rather impossible situation if the new Act were not adopted by the House during the present session. When I say during the present session I mean before May or June of next year. It would be almost impossible for me because I would have less than two years from the normal date of the next election, and this is a strict minimum.

Mr. Lefebvre: In other words, we would have to finish our deliberations early this winter so that it could go through the House by the middle of April or sometime around there—May at the latest.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Benjamin: In that context, Mr. Chairman, I think there is some urgency in terms of our getting a report to the House, because the legislation is then going to have to come back to this Committee and we are going to be thrashing over some old straw a second time. I think we should plan to meet twice a week and to meet twice on each of those days. In the event of additional witnesses, and what not, we may have to add a third meeting on a particular day or a third day in some week. I would like to see us get the investigative and the hearing of witnesses stage of our work completed by the Christmas recess, and then we may have to have one, two or three meetings after the recess on the matter of

[Interpretation]

S'il y a possibilité d'avoir qu'un seul jour dans la semaine, cela...

M. Duquet: Vous avez dit un jour par semaine, mais nous pourrions nous réunir le soir...

M. Paproski: Oui, le soir, avec la possibilité de...

M. Duquet: Par exemple, si nous nous réunissons le mardi, nous pourrions siéger trois fois par jour.

M. Paproski: Oui, à 10 heures, 3 heures et 8 heures.

M. Lefebvre: Pendant que nous avons le Directeur général des élections avec nous, si nous apportons des modifications importantes dans la Loi électorale pour ce qui est du scrutin et de bien d'autres choses, M. Hamel pourrait peut-être nous dire combien de mois ou d'années il lui faudrait pour changer tous les documents et toute la structure afin d'être prêt. Cela est très important.

M. Hamel: Si vous n'adoptez simplement que des listes permanentes et autres choses du genre ça va, mais si vous apportez des changements assez importants à la loi actuelle, je serais dans une situation à peu près intenable, si la nouvelle Loi n'était pas adoptée par la Chambre pendant la présente session. Je veux dire, par présente session, avant le mois de mai ou de juin l'année prochaine. La situation serait presque impossible pour moi, parce que j'aurais moins de deux ans à partir de la date normale de la prochaine élection, et c'est là le strict minimum.

M. Lefebvre: Autrement dit, il nous faudrait terminer nos délibérations au début de cet hiver, afin que la Loi puisse être adoptée par la Chambre vers le milieu d'avril, au mois de mai au plus tard.

M. Hamel: Vous avez raison.

M. Benjamin: Par conséquent, monsieur le président, il faut se hâter de présenter le rapport à la Chambre, parce qu'on va nous renvoyer la loi et nous allons tout reprendre une seconde fois. Je crois que nous devrions prévoir deux réunions par semaine, avec deux réunions chaque jour. S'il y a d'autres témoins, nous devrions peut-être tenir une troisième réunion pendant une certaine journée, ou nous réunir une troisième journée. J'aimerais que l'on finisse la phase d'enquête et d'interrogation des témoins d'ici Noël. Ensuite, nous devrions peut-être tenir une, deux ou trois réunions à la rentrée pour étudier la question de terminer notre rapport à présenter au Parlement pour le 12 janvier, ou completing our report to present to Parliament on January 12, or as early after the session starts again as we can, and even then some time is going to elapse between that point and the time we get legislation to work on. The next thing we know we will be into April or May. I think if possible we should try to complete this stage of our work by the Christmas recess.

[Texte]

The Chairman: I believe if we are going to succeed in making a viable report that we should meet at least twice a week and have two sittings each day. I mean meetings in the forenoon and in the afternoon on Tuesdays and Thursdays. If it is required because of the witnesses we will have, then occasionally we can have meetings in the evenings. Later on we will see if we cannot have fewer meetings.

Mr. Lefebvre: Has this Committee agreed to hear witnesses without a quorum?

The Chairman: No, but the question is coming up right now.

Mr. Lefebvre: In view of the fact that there are a lot of committees working and we wish to speed up the work, I think it will be a good idea to do this, as many other committees have done.

• 1125

The Chairman: This is the next item on the agenda and as the matter has been raised I think it should be put right away. May I have a motion in this respect?

Mr. Forrestall: I move that the Chairman be authorized to hear witnesses and print evidence when a quorum is not present.

Mr. McQuarrie: I am sorry to be talking so much, I am usually very reticent everywhere I go, but I remember a very agreeable experience which we had in the Broadcasting Committee last year when we passed a motion along these lines and refined it a bit. We had a minimum of five people representing two parties and it worked very well. If you would accept that I will support your suggestion. I just do not like the idea of some witness talking to each member for five or ten minutes.

Motion as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel will not be available to us after 11.30 a.m., because he has a meeting to attend.

If there is nothing else, I think we will adjourn.

[Interprétation]

le plus tôt possible après la reprise de la session, et même dans ce cas il s'écoulera du temps entre ce moment et celui où nous devrions étudier la loi. Sans nous en rendre compte, nous serons en avril ou en mai. Je pense que nous devrions essayer de compléter cette partie de notre travail avant le congé de Noël.

Le président: Si nous voulons rédiger un bon rapport, nous devrions, à mon avis, nous réunir au moins deux fois par semaine, avec deux séances par jour. Je veux dire les mardis et jeudis, le matin et l'après-midi. Si les témoins à venir nous y obligent, nous devrions alors, occasionnellement, nous réunir le soir. Nous verrons plus tard si nous pouvons nous réunir moins souvent.

M. Lefebvre: Le comité a-t-il convenu d'entendre les témoins sans quorum?

Le président: Non, mais cette question va être abordée maintenant.

M. Lefebvre: Comme il y a beaucoup de comités qui siègent et que nous voulons activer le travail, et je crois que ce serait une bonne idée et beaucoup d'autres comités l'ont fait.

Le président: C'est le poste suivant à l'ordre du jour et puisque la question a été soulevée, on devrait la trancher sans plus tarder. Voulez-vous présenter une motion à cet effet?

M. Forrestall: Je propose que le président soit autorisé à entendre des témoins et à faire imprimer des témoignages même sans quorum.

M. Macquarrie: Je m'excuse de tant parler, d'habitude je suis très réservé, mais je me souviens d'une expérience très agréable au Comité de la Radiodiffusion l'an dernier, alors que nous avons adopté une motion analogue, pour ensuite la perfectionner. Nous avions un minimum de 5 personnes représentant deux partis et tout a très bien marché. Si vous êtes d'accord, j'appuie votre motion. L'idée qu'un témoin parle à chaque député pendant cinq ou dix minutes ne me sourit pas du tout.

La motion modifiée est adoptée.

Le président: M. Hamel ne sera pas disponible après 11h.30, parce qu'il doit assister à une réunion. Si vous n'avez pas d'autres questions, nous allons lever la séance.

[Text]

Mr. Trudel: On absentee and proxy voting will the terms of reference be wide enough to include the civil servants in the Trade Commissioner Service and the foreign service?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Trudel: Thank you, that is all I wanted to know.

Mr. Howe: Could we not sit next week and hear Mr. Nash on the armed forces, or do we have to wait until December 9?

The Chairman: No, we will have a meeting this Thursday. There is no use in having a meeting this afternoon because we are going to a steering committee meeting tomorrow to try to draft this out.

Mr. Duquet: Could we not agree in advance what will be discussed on Thursday, so that we can look at the documentation and in this way possibly shorten the session?

The Chairman: I believe we have already authorized the steering committee to prepare a tentative list of all policy matters on which we could reach early agreement. We will have a steering committee meeting tomorrow and we will prepare a tentative list that will be submitted to the members on Thursday. So, if there are no other points, the Committee is adjourned until Thursday at eleven o'clock.

[Interpretation]

M. Trudel: En ce qui concerne la procuration et le vote des gens absents le mandat sera-t-il suffisant pour inclure les fonctionnaires du Service des délégués commerciaux et du service extérieur?

Le président: Oui.

M. Trudel: Merci, c'est tout ce que je voulais savoir.

M. Howe: Ne pourrions-nous pas nous réunir la semaine prochaine et entendre M. Nash sur les Forces armées ou devons-nous attendre au 9 décembre?

Le président: Non, nous aurons une réunion jeudi de cette semaine. Il est inutile de nous réunir cet après-midi car nous aurons la réunion du comité directeur demain pour essayer de mettre cela au point.

M. Duquet: Ne pourrions-nous convenir à l'avance de ce que nous discuterons jeudi, pour que nous puissions étudier la documentation et, de ce fait, peut-être abréger la séance?

Le président: Je crois que nous avons déjà autorisé le comité directeur à préparer une liste provisoire de toutes les lignes de conduite sur lesquelles nous pourrions tomber d'accord rapidement. Le comité directeur se réunit demain et nous allons préparer une liste provisoire qui sera présentée aux députés jeudi. Donc, si vous n'avez pas d'autres questions, la séance est levée jusqu'à jeudi à 11 heures.

APPENDIX "I"

OFFICE OF THE
CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER
ELECTORAL LEGISLATION IN CANADA*Some of the main features*

1. Chief Electoral Officer

In all provinces, except Quebec, the Chief Electoral Officer (or Chief Election Officer) is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

The provisions of the Quebec Election Act with respect to the appointment, salary and tenure of office of the Chief Returning Officer are very similar to the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. In addition, during an election period, the Chief Returning Officer of Quebec is vested with some of the powers conferred by the Act on the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

In British Columbia, the Elections Act further provides for the appointment of a Registrar-General of Voters who, subject to the Chief Electoral Officer, has supervision over the registration of voters and the preparation of the lists of voters.

2. Returning Officer

The authority to appoint returning officers is vested in all provinces in the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. At the federal level, that authority is with the Governor in Council. Appointments are without a term, except in the case of Ontario, Alberta and Newfoundland. In Alberta, the appointment is for one year. In Ontario and Newfoundland, it is for the duration of the election.

In Alberta, returning officers receive a nominal annual allowance. In Quebec, they are required to prepare annually a complete revision of their polling divisions for which they receive the payment provided in the tariff of fees.

3. Election Clerks

There is no fundamental difference in the provisions of the eleven various pieces of legislation pertaining to the appointment and tenure of office of the election clerk.

APPENDICE «1»

BUREAU DU DIRECTEUR GÉNÉRAL DES
ÉLECTIONS
LÉGISLATION ÉLECTORALE AU CANADA*Quelques-unes des caractéristiques principales*

1. Directeur général des élections

Dans toutes les provinces, excepté au Québec, le Directeur général des élections est nommé par le Lieutenant-gouverneur en Conseil.

Les dispositions de la Loi électorale du Québec relatives à la nomination, au salaire et à la durée du mandat du Président général des élections sont en tous points semblables aux dispositions de la Loi électorale du Canada. De plus, durant une période électorale, le Président général des élections du Québec est investi de certains pouvoirs conférés par la Loi électorale au Lieutenant-gouverneur en Conseil.

La Loi électorale de la Colombie-Britannique prévoit en outre la nomination d'un Registraire-général des électeurs qui, sous la direction du Directeur général des élections, voit à surveiller l'inscription des électeurs ainsi que la préparation des listes des électeurs.

2. Officiers rapporteurs

La nomination des officiers rapporteurs relève dans toutes les provinces du Lieutenant-gouverneur en Conseil. Au niveau fédéral, cette responsabilité est conférée au Gouverneur général en Conseil. Ces nominations sont pour une durée indéterminée, à l'exception de l'Ontario, de l'Alberta et de Terre-Neuve. La nomination des officiers rapporteurs de l'Alberta est pour une durée d'un an. En Ontario et à Terre-Neuve, elle n'est valide que pour la durée de l'élection.

En Alberta, les officiers rapporteurs reçoivent une allocation annuelle. Au Québec, ils doivent faire annuellement une révision complète de leurs arrondissements de votation; ils reçoivent pour ce travail les honoraires prévus.

3. Secrétaires d'élection

Il n'y a aucune différence fondamentale dans les dispositions des différentes législations, tant provinciales que fédérale, relativement à la nomination et à la durée du mandat du secrétaire d'élection.

Under the Quebec Election Act, however, the functions of the election clerk are much broader than in any other legislation.

4. Qualifications of Electors

(a) Citizenship

In the Quebec and Prince Edward Island Election Act, the eligibility to vote is restricted to Canadian citizens.

The provisions of the other provincial election laws in that respect are the same as in the Canada Elections Act.

(b) Residence

All provinces require a minimum of six to twelve months residence in the province.

With the exception of Quebec, the residence of an elector for the purpose of his being registered as such is usually determined as of the date of the issue of the writ. This is also the requirement under the Canada Elections Act. Under the Quebec Election Act, the domicile of an elector is established as of the date fixed for the beginning of the enumeration.

(c) Age

Minimum voting age is twenty-one (21) in Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

It is nineteen (19) in British Columbia, Alberta and Newfoundland.

It is eighteen (18) in Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

At the federal level, it is twenty-one (21), although an exception is made for members of the Canadian Forces and for Veteran electors.

5. Lists of Electors

(a) British Columbia is the only Canadian province to have adopted a system of continuous electoral rolls. More information in this respect may be found on pages 10 to 12 of the Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968 tabled in the House of Commons at the beginning of the last session of the present Parliament.

In the other provinces, as at the federal level, lists must be prepared for each election. Newfoundland, however, allows lists that may have been established up to five years before to be used. Manitoba also allows the use of an existing list if it is not older than two years.

En vertu de la Loi électorale du Québec, toutefois, les fonctions du secrétaire d'élection sont beaucoup plus onéreuses que celles de ses homologues dans les autres juridictions.

4. Conditions du droit de vote

a) Citoyenneté

En vertu des lois électorales du Québec et de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, seuls les citoyens canadiens sont habiles à voter.

Les dispositions des autres lois électorales provinciales à ce sujet sont semblables à celles contenues dans la Loi électorale du Canada.

b) Résidence

Toutes les provinces exigent que l'électeur ait résidé dans la province au moins de six à douze mois.

À l'exception de Québec, la résidence de l'électeur aux fins de son inscription sur les listes électorales est habituellement établie en fonction de la date de l'émission du bref. Cette condition apparaît également dans la Loi électorale du Canada. En vertu de la Loi électorale du Québec, le domicile d'un électeur est déterminé en fonction de la date fixée pour le début de l'énumération.

c) Âge

L'âge minimum requis pour être électeur est de vingt et un (21) ans en Ontario, au Nouveau-Brunswick et en Nouvelle-Écosse.

L'âge minimum est de dix-neuf (19) ans en Colombie-Britannique, en Alberta et à Terre-Neuve.

Il est de dix-huit (18) ans au Québec, à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, au Manitoba et en Saskatchewan.

Il est fixé à vingt et un (21) ans aux fins des élections fédérales, bien que la Loi fait une exception dans le cas des membres des Forces canadiennes et des anciens combattants.

5. Listes des électeurs

a) La Colombie-Britannique est la seule province canadienne qui ait adopté un système d'inscription permanente des électeurs. Pour de plus amples renseignements à ce sujet, on peut consulter le Rapport du Commissaire à la Représentation sur les Méthodes d'inscription des électeurs et le vote des absents, 1968, page 11 à 13, Rapport qui a été déposé à la Chambre des communes au début de la dernière session du présent Parlement.

Dans les autres provinces, tout comme au niveau fédéral, des listes doivent être préparées pour chaque élection. Terre-Neuve, toutefois, permet l'usage de listes qui ont pu être établies jusqu'à cinq ans auparavant. Le Manitoba permet également l'usage d'une liste déjà existante, pourvu qu'elle n'ait pas été établie plus de deux ans auparavant.

(b) Enumeration

The enumeration is generally done by two enumerators in urban areas and by one enumerator in rural areas. Exceptions to this general rule with respect to urban enumeration are found in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland.

The two urban enumerators usually represent different political interests. This is ensured by making provisions for the selection or nomination by political organizations or by candidates.

(c) Revision of the Lists

All provinces, including British Columbia, provide for a revision of the lists of electors during an election period. The procedure followed varies considerably, however, from one jurisdiction to another.

6. Qualifications of Candidates

In all jurisdictions, the overriding qualification to be a candidate is to be qualified as an elector. British subjects other than Canadian citizens are therefore disqualified in Quebec and Prince Edward Island. Some provinces prescribe additional requirements. For example, in Quebec, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, a candidate must be at least twenty-one (21) years of age even if the minimum voting age is eighteen (18) in the first two provinces and nineteen (19) in the other. In British Columbia, in addition to being qualified as an elector, a candidate must be registered as such.

Finally, the Quebec Election Act disqualifies any person who, having been a candidate at a previous election, has failed to submit a declaration relating to his expenses.

7. Nomination of Candidates

(a) There is no provision in the Ontario or British Columbia Elections Act for any deposit. The minimum number of signatures required is one hundred (100) in Ontario and twenty-five (25) or fifty (50) in British Columbia, depending on the number of electors in the electoral district in which the candidate wishes to be nominated.

In Manitoba and Quebec, the requirements are exactly the same as at the federal level, i.e. twenty-five (25) signatures and a deposit of $200.00.

In Saskatchewan and Alberta, the minimum number of signatures is four (4) and the deposit $100.00.

The deposit is also $100.00 in the four (4) Atlantic provinces; the minimum number of

b) Énumération

L'énumération est généralement faite par deux énumérateurs dans les secteurs urbains et par un énumérateur dans les secteurs ruraux. Le Manitoba, la Saskatchewan et Terre-Neuve font exception à la règle relativement à l'énumération urbaine.

Les deux énumérateurs urbains d'habitude représentent des intérêts politiques différents. On s'en assure en confiant aux organisations politiques ou aux candidats la sélection ou la nomination des énumérateurs.

c) Revision des listes

Dans toutes les provinces, y inclus la Colombie-Britannique, on rencontre des dispositions pour la revision des listes des électeurs durant une période d'élection. La procédure suivie varie considérablement, toutefois, d'une juridiction à l'autre.

6. Éligibilité des candidats

Partout, la condition primordiale pour être candidat est d'être un électeur habile à voter. Les sujets britanniques autres que les citoyens canadiens sont par conséquent inéligibles au Québec et à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard. Quelques provinces prescrivent des conditions supplémentaires. Par exemple, au Québec, à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard et à Terre-Neuve, un candidat doit avoir vingt et un (21) ans révolus même si l'âge minimum requis pour être électeur est de dix-huit (18) ans dans les deux premières provinces et de dix-neuf (19) ans dans l'autre. En Colombie-Britannique, en plus d'être un électeur habile à voter, le candidat doit être inscrit comme tel.

Finalement, la Loi électorale du Québec rend inéligible à être candidat toute personne qui, ayant été candidat à une élection précédente, n'a pas fourni une déclaration relative à ses dépenses.

7. Mise en candidature

a) En vertu des Lois électorales de l'Ontario et de la Colombie-Britannique, aucun dépôt n'est requis. Le nombre minimum de signatures requis est de cent (100) en Ontario et de vingt-cinq (25) ou cinquante (50) en Colombie-Britannique, selon le nombre d'électeurs dans le district électoral où candidat désire être mis en candidature.

Les conditions exigées par les lois électorales du Manitoba et du Québec sont exactement les mêmes que celles exigées au niveau fédéral, i.e. vingt-cinq (25) signatures et un dépôt de $200.

En Saskatchewan et en Alberta, le nombre minimum de signatures requis est de quatre (4) et le dépôt est de $100.

Le dépôt est également de $100 dans les quatre (4) provinces de l'Atlantique; le signatures varies, however, from ten (10) in New Brunswick to five (5) in Nova Scotia and two (2) in both Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

(b) The date set for nominations is always mentioned in the writ of election. In Ontario and Quebec, there are provisions to adjourn from day to day in exceptional circumstances.

8. Ballot Papers

(a) Format

The format of the ballot papers in eight (8) of the ten (10) provinces is basically the same as that of the ballot paper used at federal elections.

The main feature of the Quebec and British Columbia ballots is that, completely separate from the space provided for the printing of the names and particulars of the candidates, there is a square space provided solely for marking the ballot by the elector.

(b) Political Affiliations

Political affiliations of candidates are indicated on the ballot papers in the following provinces: Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

(c) Listing of Names

In Quebec and Nova Scotia, the names of the official candidates of recognized parties are listed first, in the alphabetical order of their surnames, on the ballot papers and the names of the other candidates follow, also in the alphabetical order of their surnames.

In New Brunswick, the names of the candidates on the ballot papers are printed in the following order:

- (i) first, the candidate or candidates of the Government party;
- (ii) the candidate or candidates of the party forming the official opposition;
- (iii) the candidate or candidates of any other recognized parties; and
- (iv) independent candidates.

The provisions of the British Columbia Elections Act are similar to those in the New Brunswick Act with a minor deviation with respect to independent candidates.

(d) Special Provision

In one province, namely Alberta, the ballot papers for any city constituency are printed in batches of one hundred (100) and are so nombre minimum de signatures requis varie, cependant, de dix (10) au Nouveau-Brunswick à cinq (5) en Nouvelle-Écosse et à deux (2) tant à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard qu'à Terre-Neuve.

(b) La date fixée pour les mises en candidature apparaît dans tous les cas dans les brefs d'élection. En Ontario et au Québec, des dispositions de la Loi permettent d'ajourner les mises en candidature de jour en jour dans certains cas exceptionnels.

8. Bulletins de vote

(a) Format

Les bulletins de vote en usage dans huit des dix provinces sont foncièrement les mêmes que ceux en usage aux élections fédérales.

La caractéristique principale du bulletin de vote du Québec et de la Colombie-Britannique est que, complètement séparé de l'espace prévu pour l'impression des noms et autres détails relatifs aux candidats, il y a un espace en forme de carré où apparaît la couleur naturelle du papier, spécialement et exclusivement réservé à l'apposition de la croix du votant.

(b) Affiliations politiques

Les bulletins de vote des provinces suivantes font mention des affiliations politiques des candidats: Québec, Nouvelle-Écosse, Nouveau-Brunswick, Île-du-Prince-Édouard, Colombie-Britannique, Alberta et Saskatchewan.

(c) Ordre des noms

Au Québec et en Nouvelle-Écosse, les noms des candidats officiels des partis reconnus sont d'abord indiqués sur les bulletins de vote, dans l'ordre alphabétique des noms de famille, puis les noms des autres candidats suivent, également dans l'ordre alphabétique de leurs noms de famille.

Au Nouveau-Brunswick, les noms des candidats sur les bulletins de vote sont imprimés de la façon suivante:

- (i) d'abord, le ou les candidats du parti formant le gouvernement;
- (ii) le ou les candidats du parti constituant l'opposition officielle;
- (iii) le ou les candidats de tout autre parti reconnu; et
- (iv) les candidats indépendants.

Les dispositions de la Loi de la Colombie-Britannique sont semblables à celles de la Loi du Nouveau-Brunswick avec une légère divergence pour les candidats indépendants.

(d) Dispositions particulières

Dans une province, nommément l'Alberta, les bulletins de vote pour toute circonscription électorale située à l'intérieur d'une cité printed that upon the first batch the surnames of the candidates are in alphabetical order and that upon each successive batch, the alphabetical order of the surnames is altered only by advancing each name one position and by placing at the bottom of the list the name that appeared at the top of the list in the preceding batch.

9. Deputy Returning Officers and Poll Clerks

In all jurisdictions, the deputy returning officers are appointed by the returning officer. In Quebec and Prince Edward Island, the returning officer must appoint his deputy returning officers from a list of names provided by the candidate or a representative of the party forming the government.

Under the Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia legislation, the returning officer is also responsible for the appointment of the poll clerks. In Quebec, they must be nominated by the candidate or a representative of the party forming the official opposition. In the other provinces, as at the federal level, the responsibility for the appointment of the poll clerks is vested in the deputy returning officers. In British Columbia, the deputy returning officer may appoint his poll clerk if the returning officer has failed to do so.

10. Voting

(a) Advance Poll

There is provision in every provincial legislation, including British Columbia, for the establishment of advance polling stations. By and large, however, the facilities of advance polls are much more restricted at the provincial level than at the federal level.

(b) Absentee Voting

Two provinces, Manitoba and British Columbia, make provisions in their electoral legislation for absentee voting. Further information on the British Columbia method of absentee voting may be found at page 29 of the Report of the Representation Commissioner referred to above.

The Legislature of Manitoba, through a recent amendment to its election legislation, has made provision to allow physically incapacitated electors to vote by mail.

(c) Proxy Voting

Two provinces, Ontario and Nova Scotia, make provisions for proxy voting. The provisont imprimés en lots de cent (100), et sont imprimés de telle façon que sur le premier lot les noms de famille des candidats sont par ordre alphabétique; dans chacun des lots suivants, l'ordre alphabétique est changé seulement en avançant d'une place chaque nom et en plaçant au bas de la liste le nom qui, lors du lot précédent, apparaissait en tête de la liste.

9. Sous-officiers rapporteurs et greffiers du scrutin

Dans tous les cas, les sous-officiers rapporteurs sont nommés par l'officier rapporteur. Au Québec et à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, l'officier rapporteur doit nommer ses sous-officiers rapporteurs d'après une liste de noms qui lui est fournie par le candidat ou un représentant du parti formant le gouvernement.

En vertu des législations du Québec, du Nouveau-Brunswick, de la Nouvelle-Écosse et de la Colombie-Britannique, l'officier rapporteur est également responsable pour la nomination des greffiers du scrutin. Au Québec, toutefois, ceux-ci sont désignés par le candidat ou le représentant du parti constituant l'opposition officielle. Dans les autres provinces, de même qu'au niveau fédéral, la responsabilité de la nomination des greffiers du scrutin incombe aux sous-officiers rapporteurs. En Colombie-Britannique, le sous-officier rapporteur peut nommer son greffier du scrutin si l'officier rapporteur a négligé de le faire.

10. Le scrutin

a) Bureau provisoires de votation

Les différentes législations provinciales, y compris celle de la Colombie-Britannique, prévoient l'établissement du bureaux provisoires de votation. De façon générale, toutefois, les dispositions régissant la tenue des bureaux provisoires de votation sont beaucoup plus restrictives au niveau provincial qu'elles ne le sont au niveau fédéral.

b) Vote des absents

Les lois électorales du Manitoba et de la Colombie-Britannique contiennent des dispositions relatives au vote des absents. Pour de plus amples renseignements concernant le vote des absents en Colombie-Britannique, on peut consulter, à la page 32, le Rapport du Commissaire à la Représentation dont il a été fait mention plus tôt.

Par une modification récente à sa législation électorale, la Législature du Manitoba a introduit un système de vote par la poste pour les électeurs souffrant d'une incapacité physique.

c) Vote par procuration

Deux provinces, soit l'Ontario et la Nouvelle-Écosse permettent le vote par procurasions in the Ontario legislation, however, are much more restrictive than those in the Nova Scotia legislation, from an application as well as from a control point of view.

(d) Marking the Ballot

The standard mark for voting seems to be the symbol "X". Ontario and Saskatchewan allow the use of a pen or ball point in addition to the black lead pencil in marking the ballots. The Manitoba legislation, while requesting that ballots be marked with a black lead pencil, specifies that they should not be rejected solely because they were marked with another "writing instrument".

(e) Polling Day

Polling day is always mentioned in the writ of election. Provisions are made in the Ontario and Quebec laws to adjourn the poll from day to day in exceptional circumstances.

11. Official Addition and Recount

Under the Quebec Election Act, the returning officer has and must cast a deciding vote only if there is a tie following a judicial recount. If there is a tie following the official addition of the votes, the returning officer must make an application to the appropriate judge for a recount. The costs of such recount are then borne by the public treasury.

The provisions of the other provincial acts in that respect are similar to those contained in the Canada Elections Act.

12. Miscellaneous

Under the British Columbia legislation, it is an offence to take a straw vote during the period of an election.

tion. Les dispositions de la Loi de l'Ontario, cependant, sont beaucoup plus restrictives que ne le sont celles de la Loi de la Nouvelle-Écosse, tant du point de vue application que du point de vue contrôle.

d) Manière de voter

La façon courante de voter semble être l'usage du symbole «X». L'Ontario et la Saskatchewan permettent l'usage de la plume ou du crayon à bille, en plus du crayon de mine noire, pour marquer le bulletin de vote. La législation du Manitoba, tout en requérant que les bulletins soient marqués avec le crayon de mine noire, précise qu'un bulletin ne doit pas être rejeté seulement parce que le vote a été marqué avec un autre dispositif pour écrire.

e) Le jour du scrutin est toujours indiqué dans le bref d'élection. La législation du Québec et celle de l'Ontario permettent que le scrutin soit ajourné de jour en jour dans certains cas exceptionnels.

11. Addition officielle et recomptage

En vertu de la Loi électorale du Québec, l'officier rapporteur n'a et ne doit déposer un vote prépondérant que lorsqu'il y a égalité de suffrages à la suite d'un recomptage judiciaire. S'il y a égalité à la suite de l'addition officielle des votes, l'officier rapporteur doit demander au juge compétent un nouveau dépouillement. Les frais d'un tel recomptage sont alors à la charge du trésor public.

Les dispositions des autres législations provinciales à ce sujet sont semblables en tous points à celles contenues dans la Loi électorale du Canada.

12. Divers

En vertu de la Loi électorale de la Colombie-Britannique, les sondages électoraux sont considérés comme des manœuvres frauduleuses, si faits pendant une période d'élection.

October 1969

Octobre 1969

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

COMITÉ PERMANENT

ON

DES

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 2

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1969

LE JEUDI 27 NOVEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

La Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir les procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Président
Vice-président

and Messrs.

et MM.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
¹ Code,
Côté (Richelieu),
Duquet,

Forest,
Forrestall,
Fortin,
Francis,
Howard (Skeena),
Howe,

Jerome
Lefebvre,
Macquarrie,
Marceau,
Murphy,
Trudel—20.

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,

R. V. Virr,

Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65 (4) (b), Suivant l'article 65(4)b) du Règlement, ¹Replaced Mr. Nesbitt on November 25, ¹Remplace M. Nesbitt le 25 novembre 1969.
1969.

[Text]

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

THURSDAY, November 27, 1969

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be granted permission to sit in Toronto, Ontario.

Respectfully submitted,

[Traduction]

RAPPORT À LA CHAMBRE

Le JEUDI 27 novembre 1969

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections a l'honneur de présenter son

DEUXIÈME RAPPORT

Le Comité recommande qu'il lui soit permis de siéger à Toronto (Ontario).

Respectueusement soumis,

Le président,
OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, November 27, 1969
(3)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11.10 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrester, Jerome, Laflamme, Macquarrie, Paproski (9).

Also present: Mr. Badanai, M.P.

Witnesses: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer; Mr. Walter Nash, Assistant Chief Electoral Officer; Colonel J. P. Dewis, Assistant Judge Advocate General, Department of National Defence.

The Committee resumed its study of the Canada Elections Act.

The Chairman invited Colonel Dewis to give a brief résumé of the Canadian Forces voting rules. After a short statement, Colonel Dewis, assisted by Messrs. Hamel and Nash responded to questions.

At 12.40 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le JEUDI 27 novembre 1969
(3)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit ce matin à 11h10. Le président, M. Laflamme, occupe le fauteuil.

Présents: MM. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrester, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Paproski (9).

Aussi présent: M. Badanai.

Témoins: M. J. M. Hamel, directeur général des élections; M. Walter Nash, directeur général adjoint des élections; le colonel J. P. Dewis, juge-avocat général adjoint, ministère de la Défense nationale.

Le Comité reprend son étude de la Loi électorale du Canada.

Le président invite le colonel Dewis à donner un bref résumé des règlements électoraux concernant les Forces armées canadiennes. Après une brève déclaration, le colonel Dewis, aidé de MM. Hamel et Nash, répond aux questions.

A 12h40, le Comité suspend ses travaux jusqu'à l'appel du président.

Le greffier du Comité,

R. V. Virr,

Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

[Interprétation]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, November 27, 1969

• 1111

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we have a quorum to hear evidence.

Before putting to the members some items that could be decided in a very few minutes perhaps we should call on Mr. Nash, the Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, or Col. J. P. Dewis, of the Department of National Defence, who are very well acquainted with the procedure followed in the army to have people register their votes.

Would the Committee agree to that procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Either Mr. Nash or Col. Dewis?

Col. (N) J. P. Dewis (Department of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity of being here.

I might say that the Forces are very grateful for the special voting privileges we have. As I believe you know, there are some aspects of the voting system that we do not like, but I have been in this business with the Forces and the Chief Electoral Officer since approximately 1944, and although it has a number of failings we just have not been able to come up with any satisfactory solution to them. But it boils down to the fact that practically nobody in the Canadian forces is not able to vote at a general election.

The regulations are rather complicated to one who is not familiar with them, so I will try to keep my explanation as reasonably short as I can, consistent with clarity.

I am now speaking mainly of the Regular Forces. There are provisions that if a reserve officer or man is on full-time training or service he has the same privilege of voting as a member of the Regular Force, but I will confine my remarks to the Regular Force, which comprises the bulk.

Every person on enrolment in the Regular Force must complete a statement of ordinary residence, in which he designates as his place of ordinary residence for voting purposes the place where he was ordinarily residing at the time of enrolment.

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 27 novembre 1969.

Le président: Messieurs, nous avons quorum et nous pouvons entendre les témoins. Avant de discuter de certains articles dont nous pourrions disposer en quelques minutes, peut-être devrions-nous entendre M. Nash, sous-directeur général des élections, ou le colonel J. P. Dewis du ministère de la Défense nationale qui sont bien au courant de toute la procédure suivie relative au scrutin dans les Forces armées. Le Comité est-il d'accord sur cette procédure?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Monsieur Nash ou le colonel Dewis?

Colonel (N) J. P. Dewis (Ministère de la Défense nationale): Monsieur le président je vous remercie de m'avoir invité.

Les Forces armées vous sont très reconnaissantes pour les privilèges électoraux particuliers que nous avons. Il y a certains aspects du système de votation que nous n'approuvons pas, mais je m'occupe de cela avec les Forces et avec le directeur général des élections depuis environ 1944. Il y a des faiblesses et nous n'avons pas encore trouvé de solution adéquate. Cela se résume au fait que tous les soldats dans les Forces ne peuvent pas voter lors d'une élection générale.

Les règlements sont compliqués pour les personnes qui ne sont pas au courant et je vais être aussi bref que possible mais en même temps aussi clair que possible dans mes explications.

Je parle surtout de l'armée régulière. Il y a des règlements qui stipulent que les officiers de réserve et les soldats en service ou en formation à plein temps ont les mêmes droits que ceux de l'année régulière, mais je restreindrai mes observations à cette dernière catégorie qui est la plus importante. Toute personne lors de son enrôlement dans les Forces armées doit faire une déclaration de résidence habituelle et il indique le lieu de sa résidence habituelle aux fins de votation, son adresse habituelle au moment de son enrôlement dans l'armée.

[Text]

• 1115

In January or February of any year he has the opportunity of changing that place of ordinary residence to where he is then serving as a result of his duties, or of changing it to the address of a relative, such as his mother or father, or, if he is not living with his family, to where his wife and family are living.

When a general election is called service voting places are set up in all the units of the Canadian forces, and the candidate for whom a member of the forces is entitled to vote is the member of the electoral district in which his place of ordinary residence is situated, as designated in the statement. In other words, he is at all times bound by the statement of ordinary residence which he completes at the time of enrolment, or which he can change in January or February. There is a little provision, of course, in the regulations that if there happened to be an election during that period this change would not be applicable to that general election, or to a by-election, should there be one in the electoral district to which he has changed his statement.

For the purpose of taking the service vote, Canada is divided into three voting territories, with the Chief Electoral Officer's civilian officials in Edmonton, which looks after all of western Canada; Ottawa, which looks after all of Ontario and Quebec; and Halifax, which looks after the Maritimes.

There is also a provision that where there are sufficient numbers of members of the Canadian forces in other parts of the globe, the Chief Electoral Officer can establish a territory there. Ever since we have adopted these rules he has always established a headquarters in London, England, to look after the votes of members of the forces in Europe and in the Middle East.

At this point I might say that not only has a member of the force serving outside Canada the right to vote in the service procedure, but his wife also has that right. Her place of ordinary residence is, of course, deemed to be the same as that designated by her husband. So wives of members of the Canadian Forces outside Canada vote in the same manner as members of the forces. In Canada a wife votes as an ordinary Canadian citizen.

In each unit the Commanding Officer is required to establish a service voting place in charge of which is a deputy returning officer, also a member of the Canadian Forces, who is designated by the Commanding Officer.

From these four voting territory headquarters, Ottawa, Edmonton, Halifax and London, the Chief Electoral Officer's officials send to

[Interpretation]

En janvier ou février il a l'occasion de changer son lieu de résidence habituelle pour l'endroit où il est en poste ou l'adresse d'un parent, comme son père ou sa mère, ou s'il n'habite pas avec sa famille l'endroit où habite sa femme et ses enfants.

Lorsqu'on annonce une élection générale on établit des bureaux de votation dans toutes les unités des forces canadiennes et le candidat pour lequel le militaire a le droit de voter est le membre du district électoral où se trouve son lieu de résidence habituelle, tel qu'il est désigné dans sa déclaration. En d'autres termes, il est en tout temps lié par sa déclaration sur son lieu de résidence, qu'il a remplie lors de son enrôlement ou qu'il peut modifier en janvier ou en février. Il n'y a pas une disposition dans les règlements qui prévoit que, s'il y a une élection durant cette période, ce changement ne s'applique pas à l'élection générale ou partielle devrait-il y en avoir dans le nouveau district électoral qu'il a déclaré.

Pour les fins de la votation dans les Forces armées, le Canada est divisé en trois territoires de votation. Les officiers civils du directeur général des élections à Edmonton s'occupent de tout l'Ouest du Canada; Ottawa s'occupe de l'Ontario et du Québec; et Halifax s'occupe des Maritimes.

On a aussi prévu que, lorsqu'il y a un nombre suffisant de membres des forces canadiennes dans d'autres parties du monde, le directeur général des élections peut y établir un bureau. On a toujours établi un poste à Londres pour les forces armées en Europe et au Moyen-Orient.

Non seulement le soldat qui est en service hors du Canada a-t-il le droit de voter à ce bureau spécial, mais sa femme aussi. La femme a le droit de voter à l'endroit désigné comme lieu de résidence pour son mari. Par conséquent, les épouses votent de la même façon que leur mari. Au Canada, les épouses votent comme simple citoyen canadien.

Dans chaque unité, l'officier commandant doit établir un bureau de votation dirigé par un sous-directeur du scrutin qui est aussi un membre des forces armées et qui est désigné par l'officier commandant.

De ces quatre quartiers généraux de votation, soit Ottawa, Edmonton, Halifax et Londres, les officiers du directeur général des every service voting place a sufficient number of ballots and other material required for voting.

[Texte]

The service voting takes place on the Monday preceding the ordinary polling day, and continues for the entire week.

I will not go into the details of the kind of ballots they sign and the envelopes, but in any event when they are voting they have to complete a statement on the outside of an envelope, indicating their place of ordinary residence, as designated in their statement of ordinary residence; the ballot itself is enclosed in a sealed inner envelope in the outer envelope, and it is addressed to the appropriate election official at one of the headquarters I have mentioned; and when it gets there it is then fully in the hands of the Chief Electoral Officer's officials.

The counting is actually done by from six to eight scrutineers, depending on how many the Chief Electoral Officer thinks he needs. The scrutineers are nominated by the various political groups in the House of Commons, and are appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer.

As I have indicated, the voting takes place for the entire week prior to ordinary civilian polling day. No counting is done until Tuesday morning at nine o'clock following ordinary civilian polling day. It takes the Chief Electoral Officer and his officials the better part of the week following civilian polling day to get all of the ballots counted, and each of these four voting territories headquarters report the total vote to the Chief Electoral Officer. He then breaks it down to the various electoral districts in Canada and sends a telegram to the Returning Officer saying how many votes there are for whom in an electoral district.

This, of course, means that the service vote is announced on the Friday night, or perhaps the Saturday, following the civilian polling day. This is one of the features we do not like. It seems to segregate, to quite an extent, the taking of the service vote. We should sooner see it merged with the civilian vote.

As I have indicated, I have worked with the Chief Electoral Officer on this problem ever since about 1944, but to enable all of us in the forces to have the facilities to vote that we have now, we have never have been able to come up with any other solution. There have been suggestions that we should vote earlier, maybe only vote on one day and have all the ballots counted by civilian polling day, but this would mean then that service ballots would be counted prior to the closing of civilian polls and there has been great objec-élections envoient à tous les bureaux de votation un nombre suffisant de bulletins et d'autres accessoires pour la votation.

[Interprétation]

La votation des Forces armées se tient le lundi précédant le jour de l'élection et se continue pendant toute la semaine.

Je n'entrerai pas dans les détails au sujet des bulletins et des enveloppes, mais lorsque les soldats déposent leur bulletin ils doivent indiquer sur la face extérieure d'une enveloppe, le lieu de résidence habituelle qu'ils ont désigné dans la déclaration de leur lieu de résidence habituelle. Les bulletins sont placés dans une enveloppe intérieure scellée à l'intérieur de l'enveloppe extérieure qui est adressée à l'officier d'élection de l'un des quatre bureaux. Une fois rendue à destination, elle est entre les mains des officiers du directeur général des élections.

Le dépouillement est fait par des scrutateurs, 6 à 8, selon le nombre jugé nécessaire pas le directeur général des élections. Ils sont proposés par divers partis politiques à la Chambre des communes et ils sont nommés par le directeur général des élections.

Comme je l'ai déjà indiqué, la votation dure toute la semaine qui précède la date de la tenue des élections pour les civils. On ne dépouille pas les bulletins avant le mardi à neuf heures du matin, qui suit le jour de votation pour les civils. Le directeur général des élections et ses officiers prennent presque toute la semaine pour dépouiller tous les bulletins. Chacun de ces quatre territoires de votation communique le chiffre total de votes au directeur général des élections. Il fait la répartition et envoie un télégramme au directeur du scrutin, lui donnant le résultat du vote dans le district électoral.

Cela veut dire que le vote des forces armées est habituellement annoncé le vendredi soir, ou le samedi, qui suit le jour de l'élection pour les civils. C'est une des caractéristiques que nous n'aimons pas. Cela semble faire une sorte de ségrégation pour les forces armées. Nous aimerions que le vote soit intégré au vote civil.

Je travaille à ce problème depuis 1944 avec le directeur général des élections. Même si nous avons obtenu toutes les installations que nous avons, on n'a jamais pu trouver une solution à cette impasse.

On a suggéré parfois de tenir le vote plus tôt, de n'avoir qu'une journée de vote et que tous les bulletins soient complets pour le jour de l'élection civile, ce qui voudrait dire que les bulletins des militaires seraient comptés avant la fermeture des bureaux civils. On a soulevé des objections à cela. Le directeur tion raised to that. The Chief Electoral Officer has always maintained that he could never guarantee the secrecy of the service vote prior to the counting of the civilian vote. As I said, that is a bad feature, but frankly I know of no way to get around it if we are going to have the free, full voting privileges we now have.

[Text]

I think, Mr. Chairman, this sort of covers it in a thumb-nail way. I would be pleased to answer any particular questions the members might have.

The Chairman: Thank you, Colonel Dewis. I do not want to ask any questions myself, but I will recognize Mr. Badanai.

Mr. Badanai: I would like to ask Mr. Nash what provisions, if any, are made for the convenience of patients in hospitals. Is any provision contemplated to provide facilities for voting for patients in hospitals? This is one of the important problems during election.

Mr. Walter Nash (Assistant Chief Electoral Officer): Mr. Chairman, I am not at all sure that this question should be directed to me.

Mr. Badanai: I am sorry, not being a regular member of your Committee, I did not realize that.

Mr. Nash: There are provisions for taking votes in hospitals, but only within the framework of the rules and the rules, of course, do not extend to the taking of votes in hospitals for ordinary civilians.

Mr. Badanai: I am talking about patients.

Mr. Nash: Yes, if you are a service man and you are a patient in a hospital there are...

Mr. Badanai: No, I am talking about civilian patients.

An hon. Member: But this is for the armed forces this morning.

Mr. Badanai: Oh, I see. I am very sorry.

The Chairman: We are studying the procedure of the Canadian Forces.

Mr. Badanai: All right, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry.

The Chairman: I thought your question was about the voting facilities for veterans, maybe, in National Defence hospitals.

Mr. Macquarrie.

[Interpretation]

générale des élections a toujours dit qu'il ne pouvait pas garantir le secret du vote des Forces armées jusqu'au compte du vote des civils. Comme je l'ai dit, c'est vraiment dommage mais je ne sais pas comment ou pourrait résoudre ce problème, si nous voulons conserver tous les privilèges électoraux que nous avons en ce moment.

Je pense, monsieur le président, avoir touché à tout bien que de façon assez superficielle. Je suis à votre disposition si vous avez des questions à me poser.

Le président: Merci, colonel Dewis. Je n'ai pas de questions à poser moi-même, mais M. Badanai voudrait peut-être commencer?

M. Badanai: Je voudrais demander à M. Nash quelles mesures ont été prises pour faire voter les malades dans les hôpitaux? Prévoit-on prendre des mesures de ce genre? C'est l'un des problèmes importants au cours des élections.

M. Nash (Directeur général adjoint des élections): Je ne sais pas si cette question devrait m'être adressée.

M. Badanai: Je regrette, comme je ne suis pas membre régulier de votre Comité, je ne m'en suis pas rendu compte.

M. Nash: Il existe des mesures en vue de faire voter les malades dans les hôpitaux mais les règlements ne permettent pas de faire voter les simples particuliers hospitalisés.

M. Badanai: Je parle des patients.

M. Nash: Oui, si le militaire est hospitalisé il y a...

M. Badanai: Non, je parle des patients qui sont des particuliers.

Une voix: Il s'agit toutefois ce matin des militaires.

M. Badanai: Je vois. Excusez-moi.

Le président: Nous étudions les procédures qui concernent les Forces armées canadiennes.

M. Badanai: Très bien, monsieur le président, je m'excuse.

Le président: Je pensais que votre question s'appliquait au vote des anciens combattants, dans les hôpitaux de la défense nationale. Monsieur Macquarrie.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: I would like to ask the witness—I know of the position of scrutineers at the various places which he has mentioned such as London, Halifax and Edmonton—what representatives of parties are at the actual place where the balloting is done, what we would call a polling station in civilian parlance.

Colonel Dewis: There is provision, Mr. Chairman, in the voting rules that any accredited representative of a candidate by filling out a certain certificate and giving it to his Commanding Officer, is entitled to be in the service voting poll during the whole time that voting is taking place. I do not know if there is any difference in his function there compared to his counterpart's in a civilian poll.

Mr. Macquarrie: Has it been the experience over the years that these people do show up and are there?

Colonel Dewis: I would say in only a relatively few cases, Mr. Macquarrie, very few, particularly outside of Canada, as I guess there would be quite a financial expense involved. I have heard of a few cases over the years in Canada, but very few, if I said half a dozen, maybe I might be out one or two.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am interested, as I am sure everyone is—and you underlined it yourself—in the problem of the vote being later and therefore isolated. Would a week's earlier start—there would have to be concomitant changes—allow, in your judgment, the job to be done and the counting to be completed by the night of a civilian election?

• 1125

Colonel Dewis: As far as the mechanics, the physical action, are concerned there is no problem, but it would mean setting nomination day one week ahead, too, making the period 21 days, and there are certain objections to that. If you set it ahead it would still end up so that the counting of the service vote would be finished, say, on the Saturday before the closing of civilian polls on the following Monday and the members of the Committee have always taken objection to this. So, physically, mechanically, it could be done, certainly, but there are political objections, I gather, to either moving nomination day ahead one week or counting the service vote before civilian polls are closed. There is no mechanical problem.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have always been impressed with two things, the counting and the releasing of the figures. I believe that

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Je voudrais demander ceci au témoin. Je connais la position des scrutateurs aux divers endroits qu'il a mentionnés, comme London, Halifax et Edmonton. Quels représentants de partis sont sur les lieux du scrutin, dans les bureaux de votation pour employer le terme consacré.

Colonel Dewis: Des dispositions dans le règlement sur le vote prévoient que tout représentant accrédité d'un certain candidat a le droit d'être présent au bureau de votation militaire pendant toute la durée du scrutin, s'il remplit un certificat qu'il remet à son officier commandant. Je ne sais pas s'il existe une différence entre les fonctions de cet homme et celles de celui qui occupe le même poste dans un bureau ordinaire.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que, d'après votre expérience, ces gens se présentent?

Colonel Dewis: Les cas sont très rares, surtout à l'étranger car cela représenterait une dépense assez lourde. Il y a eu certains cas au Canada, mais ils furent très rares, peut-être une demi-douzaine, peut-être moins.

M. Macquarrie: Tout le monde s'intéresse au problème que vous avez souligné, celui du scrutin qui a lieu plus tard et qui est isolé. Si l'on commençait une semaine plus tôt, il y aurait alors des modifications accessoires, est-ce que d'après vous le travail pourrait être fait et le compte se terminer pour le soir du vote des simples particuliers?

Colonel Dewis: Il n'y a pas de problème au point de vue matériel. Cela voudrait dire que la mise en candidature se ferait une semaine avant aussi, la période serait alors de 21 jours et il y aurait certaines objections. Si vous devancez la date, le compte des votes militaires serait terminé, mettons, le samedi avant la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires de votation le lundi suivant, et les membres du Comité s'y sont toujours opposés.

La chose serait possible matériellement, mais il y a des objections d'ordre politique, je crois, à devancer la nomination d'une semaine ou à dépouiller le scrutin militaire avant la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires de votation. Il n'y a pas de problème technique.

M. Macquarrie: J'ai toujours été impressionné par deux choses, soit le dépouillement et la publication des résultats. Je crois que many people have become more interested and more sensitive to the release at a different time, but I am interested in your view on the week's difference.

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: It could be done. There is no mechanical or physical problem if those two dates were moved, but it does raise the question of the longer nomination period and the counting of them before civilian polls close. As far as we in the forces are concerned it would not affect us. We would assume the Chief Electoral Officer would maintain the secrecy, but on the other hand Mr. Hamel's predecessor was not prepared to give assurance that he could maintain the secrecy if the counting were done before the civilian polls closed.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would think that the question of guaranteeing secrecy—I am thinking out loud—would prevail either before or after and that this problem will still be a problem, the maintaining of the secrecy. This was really just an observation of mine.

Colonel Dewis: It is not really a problem now because the counting does not start until the day after the civilian polls close, so the sooner it is counted the better. If the counting could be completed by the Wednesday following the closing of civilian polls, that would be fine and there could be no question of any leakage. The sooner it is counted and the news is out the better, but the Chief Electoral Officer's staff has found it physically impossible to do it under three or four days.

Mr. Macquarrie: The point I am trying to make is that the question of leaks and the secrecy will exist either before or after election day, and, as you mentioned, Mr. Castonguay was concerned about that. I would submit that he would have to be concerned about it either before or after; he has to be concerned about it now.

Colonel Dewis: I do not believe he ever had any concern about any leakage of the service vote once the civilian polls were closed. The only fear of leakage is before the civilian polls close. For example, a scrutineer might say that they had counted all the ballots in Algoma East, which, I believe, is the first electoral district, by Tuesday noon and I do not suppose there would be anything particularly wrong if he sprung that information Tuesday noon because the civilian polls would be closed, although it all should be announced together.

[Interpretation]

bien des gens s'intéressent plus à la publication à un autre moment, mais votre opinion concernant la différence d'une semaine m'intéresse.

Colonel Dewis: La chose pourrait se faire. Il n'y a pas de problème d'ordre matériel si les deux dates sont changées, mais la question soulevée est celle de la période de nomination prolongée et le dépouillement qui aurait lieu avant la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires de votation. En ce qui nous concerne dans les Forces armées, nous ne serions pas touchés. Nous présumerions que le directeur général des élections pourrait conserver ces résultats comme confidentiels, mais d'un autre côté le prédécesseur de M. Hamel n'était pas disposé à assurer qu'il pouvait garder les résultats confidentiels si le dépouillement avait lieu avant la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires.

M. Macquarrie: Je serais porté à croire que la question de garantir le caractère confidentiel—je pense tout haut—prévaudrait soit avant ou après et que le problème du caractère confidentiel demeurerait. Je fais ici une observation personnelle.

Colonel Dewis: Ce n'est pas vraiment un problème maintenant, parce que le dépouillement ne commence pas avant le jour qui suit la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires de votation. Plus le dépouillement se fait tôt, mieux c'est. S'il pouvait être terminé pour le mercredi suivant la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires, ce serait très bien et on ne craindrait pas que les résultats soient dévoilés. Le plus tôt le dépouillement est terminé, le mieux c'est, mais le personnel du directeur général des élections est dans l'impossibilité physique de faire le travail en trois ou quatre jours.

M. Macquarrie: J'essaie de faire ressortir la question de la divulgation. Le caractère confidentiel existera soit avant ou après le jour de l'élection. Comme vous l'avez mentionné, c'est une question qui préoccupait M. Castonguay. Je dirais qu'il doit s'en préoccuper soit avant ou après; il doit s'en préoccuper maintenant.

Colonel Dewis: Je ne crois pas qu'il se soit jamais préoccupé de la divulgation du vote militaire après la fermeture des bureaux ordinaires de votation. Par exemple, un scrutateur pourrait dire que tous les bulletins d'Algoma-Est ont été comptés—il s'agit je crois du premier district électoral—avant mardi midi et je ne crois pas qu'on ait quoi que ce soit à redire s'il donnait ces renseignements le mardi midi, parce que les bureaux ordinaires seraient fermés bien que tous les résultats devraient être annoncés en même temps.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: I will not pursue this any further as we will have to deal with this later on, but he will have to do the same thing with the advance poll.

I have on more question and then I will pass. Would you care to tell us something about the manner in which party designation is conveyed to the military service voters?

Colonel Dewis: Every service voting place receives election supplies from the Chief Electoral Officer, one of which is a book containing the names of the candidates and, as provided in the voting rules, the normally accepted party or political group designation is placed after the candidate's name. In other words, the initials NDP will appear after an NDP candidate, with the same thing applying to a Liberal, Progressive Conservative or independent candidate.

• 1130

Mr. Macquarrie: So this comes from the Chief Electoral Officer?

Colonel Dewis: That is right.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am treasuring this up, Mr. Chairman, for a later day.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Some of these are supplementary to what Mr. Macquarrie asked. On the matter of polling stations for armed forces voters, I assume that they have a DRO and a poll clerk the same as any other normal poll. Is that not correct?

Colonel Dewis: They have a deputy returning officer. He is the only one who is officially appointed. There is no particular provision for assistants, but of course he always has some clerical help. As far as any of the voting procedures are concerned, he has to sign the declaration which the voter makes and it is only the deputy returning officer who signs it. So, the difficulty in distinguishing a service voting place from a civilian poll is that they do not have a polling book. The deputy returning officer has a unit list which is prepared by the commanding officer of all officers and men in his unit showing the address that the voter has stated to be his place of ordinary residence, and a copy of that form is in the unit records with respect to every officer and man. I might say that when those forms are completed at the unit they are sent to headquarters and they go to the chief electoral officer and he looks at the address which

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Je ne poursuivrai pas plus longtemps puisqu'il faudra traiter de ce sujet plus tard, mais il lui faudra faire de même avec le vote devancé.

J'ai une autre question et je céderai la parole. Pourriez-vous nous parler de la façon dont les partis sont désignés aux votants du service militaire?

Colonel Dewis: Chaque bureau militaire de votation reçoit le matériel d'élection du directeur général des élections dont un livre contenant les noms des candidats et, comme on le mentionne dans le règlement sur les élections, le parti ou groupe politique du candidat est placé après son nom. Autrement dit, les initiales NPD suivront le nom d'un candidat NPD et le même procédé s'applique aux Libéraux, Conservateurs progressistes ou aux candidats indépendants.

M. Macquarrie: Tout cela provient du directeur général des élections?

Colonel Dewis: C'est exact.

M. Macquarrie: Je conserve ces renseignements pour un autre jour, monsieur le président.

Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Certaines sont complémentaires à celles que M. Macquarrie a posées. Au sujet des bureaux de scrutin à l'intention des Forces armées, je présume qu'il y a un sous-directeur du scrutin et un greffier du scrutin, comme on en trouve dans un bureau ordinaire?

Colonel Dewis: Oui, il y a un sous-directeur du scrutin, c'est le seul qui soit officiellement nommé. Il n'y a pas de dispositions expresses pour les adjoints et il a, bien sûr, des préposés aux écritures. Pour ce qui est des procédures de vote, il doit signer la déclaration que le votant fait, et c'est seulement le sous-directeur du scrutin qui la signe. La difficulté de distinguer entre un bureau militaire et un bureau civil réside dans le fait qu'il n'y a pas de cahier de scrutin. Le sous-directeur du scrutin a une liste pour l'unité préparée par le commandant où figurent tous les officiers militaires, avec l'adresse donnée comme lieu de domicile et dont copie est consignée dans les dossiers. Ces listes sont remplies à l'unité et envoyées aux quartiers généraux, puis au directeur de l'élection qui vérifie l'adresse et l'affecte à un arrondissement électoral; la liste revient à l'unité. Au moment de l'élection, le sous-directeur du scrutin, non seule-the declarant has stated in his statement and he puts a stamp on it indicating what electoral district it is in, and that form of course goes back to the unit. So, when an election comes along the deputy returning officer not only has available the name of the address that he has designated but also the chief electoral officer's official designation that that place lies within such and such an electoral district.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to come back to this matter of the address in a moment. I do not understand why, except for some of the paper work, a polling station for armed forces personnel cannot be staffed and operated the same as a civilian poll. Is there not a provision for the DRO to appoint a poll clerk? Why not? What is the reason for not having one?

Colonel Dewis: I do not think, sir, that we have ever found it necessary because the deputy returning officer has any number of clerks in the unit available to him and the CO just says, "If you need a couple or clerks, here they are".

Mr. Benjamin: Does that DRO get paid the same as a DRO at a civilian poll?

Colonel Dewis: No, he does not get paid at all.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not?

Colonel Dewis: This is part of his duties. If he is officially designated by the commanding officer for that day or those days, this is his military duty. He does not do anything else.

Mr. Benjamin: Does the commanding officer hold any electoral position? Is he a returning officer?

Colonel Dewis: No, none at all, except that under the voting rules the responsibility is placed on him to ensure that adequate voting facilities are provided and that he gets the proper election material and turns it over to the deputy returning officer.

Mr. Benjamin: The reason I am asking is that last time I voted when I was in the services was in 1946 and there was one person manning the poll and we were lined up for over three hours. The poor guy just could not cope with it. In any event, this can be discussed later. I fail to see why an armed forces voting station cannot be set up with the same election officials as a civilian poll.

On the point of credentials for a candidate's agent, or scrutineer, are they the same as the credentials that would have to be used in a civilian poll, or is it a different form?

[Interpretation]

ment a à sa disposition le nom et l'adresse désignés, mais aussi la désignation du président d'élection que cet endroit se trouve dans ledit district électoral.

M. Benjamin: Je reviendrai tantôt à cette question d'adresse. Mais je ne comprends pas pourquoi un bureau de scrutin militaire ne peut pas être administré de la même façon qu'un bureau civil, exception faite de certaines formules. N'y a-t-il pas une disposition qui prévoit la nomination d'un greffier du scrutin par le sous-directeur du scrutin?

M. Dewis: Nous ne l'avons jamais jugé nécessaire, car le sous-directeur du scrutin peut compter sur un certain nombre de secrétaires, et le commandant peut lui en fournir d'autres.

M. Benjamin: Ce sous-directeur du scrutin reçoit-il la même rémunération que celui d'un bureau civil?

M. Dewis: Non, il ne reçoit rien.

M. Benjamin: Pourquoi?

M. Dewis: C'est une partie de ses fonctions. S'il est désigné officiellement par l'officier commandant pour ce jour, il est alors de service. Il n'a rien d'autre à faire.

M. Benjamin: Quel poste électoral a l'officier commandant?

M. Dewis: Aucun, sauf celui qui lui échoit en vertu du règlement électoral et qui lui adjoint de s'assurer que les installations de scrutin sont fournies, que les accessoires d'élection sont fournis et remis au sous-directeur du scrutin.

M. Benjamin: Je demande cela parce que, la dernière fois que j'ai voté, c'était en 1946 et il n'y avait qu'une personne au bureau de scrutin. Nous avons dû attendre en ligne pendant trois heures. De toute façon, nous pourrions en discuter plus tard. Je ne vois pas pourquoi le suffrage militaire ne peut être établi de la même façon qu'un bureau de votation civil.

Pour ce qui est de l'identité des votants, y a-t-il une formule spéciale?

[Texte]

Colonel Dewis: It is a special form which the candidate signs and it says that so-and-so is my appointed representative and pursuant to rule so-and-so he wants to scrutineer.

Mr. Benjamin: As the commanding officer is not an election official, why would the credential have to be handed to him rather than to the deputy returning officer?

Colonel Dewis: It is.

Mr. Benjamin: This implies that the commanding officer could prevent a candidate's agent from going to the poll.

• 1235

Colonel Dewis: The duty and responsibility for ensuring that a poll is set up there is placed on the commanding officer. He is the person who is responsible for designating a deputy returning officer. So, technically and legally, if anything goes wrong in the polling booth it is not only the responsibility of the deputy returning officer, it is the commanding officer as well, and therefore it is the commanding officer who will originally get the form, but he will have to turn it over to the deputy returning officer so that the deputy returning officer will know who the scrutineer is. What happens is that if the poll is already going the scrutineer will just hand it to the deputy returning officer, but normally if there is going to be a scrutineer the service voting place would not be set up. This would probably be done a few days before the poll actually opened, so at that time the DRO is not really in business.

Mr. Benjamin: It still escapes me why the commanding officer should be the person who oversees the matter of an agent's credentials. Certainly right up to the time or within 15 or 30 minutes before a poll opens any candidate has the right to send anyone he chooses there as an agent. To me this implies that the commanding officer has the right to refuse someone if he wishes.

Colonel Dewis: Under the rules...

Mr. Benjamin: The deputy returning officer surely should be the election official who is responsible for and in charge of that poll.

Colonel Dewis: If the commanding officer is presented with one of these certificates there is no provision for him to turn it down. If on the face of it it is valid, and so on, he has no discretion. He must let the scrutineer in. He cannot say, "I think we are too busy; I do not think we need you there". He has no alternative, he must let the scrutineer in.

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Oui. Le candidat la signe disant que celui-ci est mon représentant et que conformément aux règles, il veut vérifier.

M. Benjamin: Vu que l'officier commandant n'est pas fonctionnaire de l'élection, pourquoi devrait-il plutôt que le sous-directeur du scrutin examiner le document?

M. Dewis: C'est ainsi.

M. Benjamin: Cela laisse sous-entendre que l'officier commandant peut empêcher le votant de se présenter au scrutin.

M. Dewis: C'est à l'officier commandant qu'il revient de s'assurer qu'il y a là un bureau de scrutin. C'est lui qui nomme le sous-directeur du scrutin. Donc, au point de vue technique et juridique, s'il y a quelques anicroches au bureau de votation, ce n'est pas seulement au sous-directeur du scrutin qu'il faut s'en prendre, mais aussi à l'officier commandant. A son tour, il devra en faire part au sous-directeur du scrutin qui seul a été chargé d'examiner les suffrages. Si le scrutin est déjà en marche, l'examineur va simplement les remettre au sous-directeur du scrutin. Mais normalement, s'il y a un scrutateur, il n'y aura pas de bureau de scrutin militaire. Il ne sera installé que quelques jours avant le scrutin lui-même, de sorte que, à ce moment, le sous-directeur du scrutin n'est pas réellement en fonction.

M. Benjamin: Je ne sais pas encore pourquoi l'officier commandant doit être celui qui vérifie la preuve d'identité. Il me semble que, jusqu'à 15 ou 30 minutes avant l'ouverture des bureaux de scrutin, l'officier commandant a le privilège de choisir qui il veut comme agent, et qu'il peut refuser qui il veut.

M. Dewis: En vertu du règlement...

M. Benjamin: Mais le sous-directeur du scrutin a charge du bureau de scrutin et en est responsable.

M. Dewis: Il n'y a qu'une disposition visant le refus d'une telle demande, si on présente à l'officier commandant un tel certificat, il n'a pas le pouvoir de le rejeter. S'il semble valide, il doit accepter.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: I have been told of instances where—and I have no documentary evidence to support this—a candidate appointed a service man in that area to be his agent and the man was refused relief of duty in order to represent that candidate.

Colonel Dewis: On that point, the rules expressly state that anybody except a member of the Canadian forces can act as a scrutineer, so under the election statute a serviceman cannot act as a scrutineer.

Mr. Benjamin: This is ridiculous. No wonder service people are angry about their voting privileges. With respect to the matter of enumeration, I gather that this is done by way of an annual declaration by armed forces personnel as to their...

Colonel Dewis: It is taken from the form that he completed when he enrolled and then in January or February he has the right to change it. If he does not change it, his original statement could carry on for 15 or 30 years, or until he does change it.

Mr. Benjamin: Are there any provisions, in terms of the election law, that limit a person with respect to where he may show as his place of residence?

Colonel Dewis: Yes. These people have three choices. One, where they were ordinarily residing at the time of enrolment; two, where they are living as a result of their service, and the only time this can be done is in January or February; three, they can change it to the address of a relative. However, this change can only be made in January or February of any year, and if it is done and if his address is a place where there is a by-election, then that change is not valid for that by-election. He would have to vote in his former constituency.

Mr. Benjamin: Do the forces have any criteria with respect to what a permanent residence is in terms of a man's service, where he is working? I am referring to a person who is on the permanent staff at a base versus one who is only there for training purposes. What is to prevent...

Colonel Dewis: All it says is where he ordinarily resides as a result of his service. It does not say permanent address. It expressly says where he ordinarily resides as a result of his service.

Mr. Benjamin: The provisions that apply with respect to the civilian qualifications of an electorate do not apply here?

[Interpretation]

M. Benjamin: On m'a cité des cas—je n'ai aucune preuve ici—où un candidat a nommé un militaire dans une région donnée et on lui a refusé un congé à cette fin.

M. Dewis: Le règlement est clair à ce sujet: n'importe qui peut être scrutateur, sauf un militaire.

M. Benjamin: C'est ridicule. Les militaires s'indignent à juste titre quant à leur droit de vote. Si je comprends bien, il s'agit d'une déclaration annuelle du personnel des forces armées...

M. Dewis: C'est tiré de la formule remplie par le militaire lorsqu'il s'enrôle et, en janvier et en février, il a le droit de la modifier. S'il ne le fait pas, la formule vaut jusqu'à temps qu'il le fasse.

M. Benjamin: La loi renferme-t-elle des dispositions quant au lieu de résidence du votant?

M. Dewis: Oui. Il y a trois choix. Premièrement, leur lieu de résidence au moment de l'enrôlement, deuxièmement, celui où les appellent les exigences du service et, troisièmement, ils peuvent en janvier ou février donner l'adresse d'un parent. S'il s'agit d'une élection complémentaire, ce changement n'est pas valable. Il lui faudrait voter dans son ancienne circonscription.

M. Benjamin: Quel est le critère de l'armée quant à la permanence de la résidence d'un militaire; je parle d'un militaire affecté en permanence à une base, par opposition à un autre qui n'y serait que pour fins de formation? Qu'est-ce qui empêche...

M. Dewis: Il n'est fait mention que du lieu où il demeure, à cause des exigences du service. Il n'est pas question d'adresse permanente.

M. Benjamin: Les dispositions qui s'appliquent aux civils ne s'appliquent pas ici?

[Texte]

Colonel Dewis: No. There is no rule that you have to be there, as you are suggesting, six months. If you were posted from Halifax to Vancouver in December and although your previous statement might have shown your residence as Halifax, in January or February you could change it to Vancouver even though you had only been there a month provided that you were ordinarily residing there. If he were out there on a month's temporary duty, then I would have no hesitation in saying that he is not ordinarily residing there and if it came to my attention I would say that this form was not valid.

● 1140

Mr. Benjamin: If he were sent out for an 8 or 12-week course surely he could not change his...

Colonel Dewis: No.

Mr. Benjamin: But have there not been instances where they in fact have shown it?

Colonel Dewis: I certainly would not say there have not been because all of these cases do not come to my attention. I would find it rather unusual if a fellow went out there—and this would have to be January or February—for only a couple of months on a course and was then going back to his old place, or he knew he was going to be posted some other place. I would find it difficult to understand why he would want to change it, but it could happen.

Mr. Benjamin: Would it really be very difficult for either the forces or the Chief Electoral Officer to police this in the way it is set up now? You would have to go through it name by name and check back and it would be very difficult, would it not?

Colonel Dewis: Every form which is completed comes into headquarters and then they go over to the Chief Electoral Officer for review of the electoral district. There have been a number of cases where he picked up something that looked rather funny. It was completed in August, for example, but you look at the form and his rank and you get the idea; well he is not just a new enrollee, he is 45 years of age. What is he doing completing this statement in August? The only way he could complete it in August would be if he was just then enrolling. So on a number of occasions the Chief Electoral Officer has called me and given me the names. We have checked them out and sometimes found that the form was all right. In fact, in the particu-

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Non, il n'y a pas de règles portant que vous devez avoir été là, comme vous le suggérez, pendant six mois. Si vous êtes affecté d'Halifax à Vancouver, en décembre, et même si votre ancienne formule donne Halifax comme adresse, vous pouvez, en janvier, la changer et mettre Vancouver, même si vous n'y avez résidé qu'un mois. Si le votant a été là durant un mois de service provisoire, je n'hésiterais pas à dire que ce n'est pas son lieu de résidence ordinaire, et si on me demandait mon avis, je dirais que cette formule n'est pas valable.

M. Benjamin: S'il participait à un cours de 8 ou 12 semaines, sûrement, il ne pourrait pas changer son...

M. Dewis: Non.

M. Benjamin: Mais ne s'est-il pas produit des cas où, effectivement, on l'a montré?

M. Dewis: Je ne dirais pas que cela ne s'est jamais fait, car tous ces cas ne me sont pas signalés. Je trouve inusité qu'un type s'en aille là—ce devrait être en janvier ou février—pour suivre un cours de deux mois et revenir ensuite à son ancien domicile ou qu'il sache qu'il va être affecté ailleurs—je comprendrais difficilement pourquoi il voudrait changer, mais cela pourrait se faire.

M. Benjamin: Il serait très difficile pour les forces ou le directeur général des élections d'exercer un contrôle sur cela, compte tenu des conditions à l'heure actuelle. Il vous faudrait vérifier nom par nom et ce serait difficile n'est-ce pas?

Colonel Dewis: Lorsque la formule arrive à l'administration centrale, elle est envoyée au directeur général des élections pour faire l'examen du district électoral. Il y a un certain nombre de cas où il a découvert certaines choses qui semblaient assez étranges. Par exemple la formule avait été remplie en août et on peut voir que ce n'est pas une recrue, que c'est une personne de 45 ans. Pourquoi l'a-t-il remplie en août? Cela pourrait se faire uniquement s'il s'agissait d'une recrue. C'est là où le directeur général des élections m'appelle et me donne le nom à vérifier; on s'aperçoit alors que la formule peut être exacte. De fait, dans ce cas précis il s'agissait d'une personne qui s'inscrivait de nouveau après une absence de dix ou quinze ans. Il y a bien des lar case I mentioned it turned out this was a matter of re-enrolment. He had been in for 10 or 15 years before and went out and then re-enrolled again a couple of years later. So there are things like that. When you get used to the form they come to your attention but this does not mean there is 100 per cent accuracy.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: We have had cases drawn to our attention where armed service personnel have shown themselves resident in a riding they have never in their lives been anywhere near.

Colonel Dewis: If they have a relative there under the rules this is all right. If they have never served there and they have never lived there then, of course, that is wrong.

Mr. Benjamin: If they have never served there and never lived there but had a relative there they could vote?

Colonel Dewis: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: How close a relative?

Colonel Dewis: Blood relative, marriage.

The Chairman: The law, Section 25 of the Act states:

(i) the city, town, village or other place in Canada, with street address, if any, in which is situated the residence of a person who is the spouse, dependant, relative or next of kin of such member,

Which is quite wide.

Mr. Benjamin: What section was that again?

The Chairman: Section 25, subsection (3) paragraph (a)(i).

Mr. Benjamin: Further on this enumeration, I am calling it that, it is not the term you people use, if an election happens in October and the last list is January or February there is not a large number of the armed forces members, who in that intervening period have been transferred?

Colonel Dewis: Yes, that is true.

Mr. Benjamin: Your list has a high percentage of inaccuracy?

Colonel Dewis: No. Once you complete the statement of ordinary residence you are deemed to reside there until some time in the future, in January or February you change cas comme ceci qui vous sont signalés. Les formules ne sont pas exactes à 100 p. 100.

[Interpretation]

M. Benjamin: Il y a des cas qui nous sont signalés, où il peut arriver qu'un membre des forces armées soit inscrit dans une circonscription où il n'a jamais habité.

M. Dewis: Si ces personnes ont un parent à cet endroit, en vertu du règlement, c'est juste si elles n'ont jamais vécu là, alors ce n'est pas juste.

M. Benjamin: Si elles n'ont jamais vécu là mais qu'elles ont un parent à cet endroit, elles pourraient voter?

M. Dewis: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Quel genre de parent?

M. Dewis: Un parent naturel ou par mariage.

Le président: L'article 25 de la Loi est libellé comme suit:

(i) la cité, la ville, le village ou autre endroit du Canada, avec la rue et le numéro, s'il en est, où est située la résidence d'une personne qui est le conjoint, une personne à charge, un parent ou une personne désignée comme plus proche parent de ce membre;

Ce qui est très vaste.

M. Benjamin: De quel article s'agit-il?

Le président: L'article 25, paragraphe (3) alinéa (a), sous-alinéa (i).

M. Benjamin: Si une élection se produit en octobre, mettons et que la dernière liste remonte à janvier ou février n'y a-t-il pas un grand nombre de militaires qui dans l'intervalle ont été mutés?

M. Dewis: Oui, c'est vrai.

M. Benjamin: Votre liste n'a-t-elle pas un grand nombre d'imprécisions?

M. Dewis: Une fois que vous avez rempli la formule indiquant la résidence ordinaire, on juge que vous résiderez là jusqu'à un certain temps dans l'avenir mais si en janvier ou this so it does not matter. This chap say in Halifax completed the form there and is posted to Vancouver. An election comes along a year or two later and he has made no change in his form. When he votes he must attribute his ballot to the electoral district of Halifax in which is located the place he designated in his statement. Once you complete a statement that is it for all time; it is good until you complete a new one.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: Let us take the case of this person you say is in Halifax. He is shown as residing in Halifax. On March 1 he gets posted to Vancouver on permanent staff and he is obviously going to be there for an indefinite period of time. He moves March 1, there is an election in October and he would have to vote for a candidate in Halifax.

Colonel Dewis: That is right if that was his statement. When he was in Halifax his statement might have been Borden. He might have changed it in Borden and then he was posted to Halifax and he did not bother changing it there and then he is posted to Europe or he is posted anywhere. Until he completes a new statement, and that can only be done in January or February, then the rules deem him to continue to reside in the place he designated in his statement.

• 1145

Mr. Benjamin: I know even better why armed forces people are so unhappy with the way voting runs for them and a lot of other people. I just want to comment, Mr. Chairman, I fail to understand, except maybe for some of the people working in some other detail, why armed forces polls cannot be run the same and the law apply equally to both, the election law, not armed forces regulations or anything else. It just escapes me. We had an instance last year where a person who was on the armed forces roll then ended up in a hospital for the chronically ill, where a polling place was because of it being that kind of a hospital, and he voted twice.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Benjamin. Mr. Forest.

Mr. Forest: The members of the armed forces vote by inscribing the name of the candidate on a ballot. Is this rendered necessary by the question of timing so they could not vote on a regular ballot where all the names of the candidates would appear?

Colonel Dewis: That is the main reason. Nominations, as you know, do not close until 14 days before our civilian polling day. Service voting starts seven days before our civil-février il y a changement de résidence cela ne change rien. Supposons une personne qui a rempli une formule à ce moment-là, alors qu'il est à Halifax et qu'il soit envoyé par la suite à Vancouver, si l'élection est convoquée un ou deux ans après, et qu'il n'a pas modifié sa formule il doit voter à Halifax. Une fois que la formule est remplie, elle est valable jusqu'à ce qu'une nouvelle formule soit remplie.

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Vous dites que si la formule fait voir qu'un militaire est à Halifax, mettons, et qu'en mars il est envoyé à Vancouver, il pourrait y être pour un temps indéfini, n'est-ce pas? Il déménage le 1^{er} mars, il a une élection en octobre, il doit voter pour le candidat à Halifax, n'est-ce pas?

M. Dewis: Oui, si c'est ce qui paraît dans sa déclaration. Lorsqu'il était à Halifax, il se peut que sur sa formule Borden ait été inscrit. Il peut être affecté en Europe ou ailleurs, mais rien ne change à moins qu'il n'ait rempli une nouvelle déclaration en janvier ou en février. C'est le règlement; il est censé résider à l'endroit désigné dans la formule.

M. Benjamin: Maintenant, je comprends pourquoi les militaires sont si peu satisfaits des règles électorales. Une seule observation, monsieur le président, je ne comprends pas, sauf pour quelques cas, pourquoi les bureaux militaires ne peuvent être administrés de la même façon que les bureaux civils de scrutin. Par exemple, un militaire qui s'était inscrit sur la liste des forces armées et qui se retrouve dans un hôpital pour les malades chroniques a eu l'occasion de voter deux fois.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Benjamin. Monsieur Forest.

M. Forest: Lors du scrutin le militaire inscrit le nom du candidat sur le bulletin de vote. Cela est-il nécessaire? Ne pourrait-il pas se servir d'un bulletin ordinaire où tous les noms des candidats figureraient?

M. Dewis: Oui, c'est la raison principale car les présentations ne se font pas quatorze jours avant le jour de l'élection pour les civils. Les militaires votent sept jours avant les civils, ian polling day so it means that the Chief Electoral Officer has only one week to get ballots and lists of candidates to every service voting place no matter where it might be. We find quite often that if we get them by Friday in some places before we start voting on Monday, this is pretty good. To get all individual ballots printed as they are done in an ordinary civilian constituency in Canada would just take too long. I think probably, Mr. Hamel, you are better able to speak on that than I.

[Text]

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): You must remember that the ballot papers used in civilian polls are printed locally within the electoral district so it would mean getting these ballots to Ottawa and then shipping them all over the world. Even if nomination day were advanced by a week, we just could not do it.

Mr. Forest: How do they know who the candidate in such a riding is? Is there a list mailed to everybody or given by the Commanding Officer or how does it proceed?

Mr. Hamel: Under Section 16 of the rules I have to publish right after nomination a complete list of all candidates officially nominated with the political affiliation. We print a few hundred, I should say a few thousand copies of this, and it is sent and is available in each military poll. So when a serviceman comes in to vote, after having filled out his statement and so on, he can check that list once he knows what electoral district his vote is to be applied to, he can check who are the candidates there, and not only the names of the candidates but also the political affiliation.

Mr. Forest: Can he inscribe the name of the candidate in any way? Does it have to be in block letters?

Colonel Dewis: No the rules say it can be written. It does not have to be pencil, it does not have to be ink, as long as it is legible you just write it in. Even if he mis-spells the name a little bit, if it is obvious this is the candidate for whom he is voting, the rules provide that our scrutineers will accept that.

Mr. Forest: If he put Liberal or Conservative at the end would that invalidate the vote?

Colonel Dewis: I do not think that would make any difference because that is already provided on the official list which each person has. Political affiliations are not put in civilian polls.

Mr. Forest: One observation made by candidates at recounts when they were looking at par conséquent, le directeur général des élections n'a qu'une semaine pour envoyer les bulletins de vote quel que soit le poste où est affecté le militaire. Nous constatons bien souvent que si cela est un vendredi et que l'élection commence un lundi c'est très serré. Pour imprimer tous les bulletins de vote, comme dans les circonscriptions civiles, l'impression prendrait trop de temps.

[Interpretation]

M. Jean-Marc Hamel (Directeur général des élections): Il faut se rappeler que les bulletins de vote utilisés dans les bureaux civils de votation sont imprimés localement dans le district, ce qui veut dire les envoyer à Ottawa et les expédier partout dans le monde. Même si on avance le jour des présentations d'une semaine, cela est impossible.

M. Forest: Comment savent-ils qui sont les candidats? Envoie-t-on une liste à tout le monde, ou est-elle fournie par l'officier commandant?

M. Hamel: Selon l'article 16, je dois publier, après le jour des présentations, une liste complète de tous les candidats officiellement présentés, avec leur affiliation politique. Nous en imprimons, je dirais, quelques centaines et des milliers même, qui sont mis à la disposition de tous les bureaux de scrutin militaire. Et lorsqu'un militaire vient voter, après avoir rempli sa déclaration, etc., il peut vérifier cette liste, une fois qu'il sait dans quel district électoral il doit voter, il peut vérifier non seulement leur nom, mais aussi leur affiliation politique.

M. Forest: Peut-il inscrire le nom du candidat de quelque façon? En capitales d'imprimerie?

M. Dewis: Non, selon le règlement, on peut se servir du crayon ou de la plume aussi longtemps que le nom est lisible. Même s'il fait une erreur d'orthographe, s'il est évident que c'est le candidat pour lequel il veut voter, l'examineur acceptera son bulletin de vote.

M. Forest: Et s'il met libéral ou conservateur au bout du nom, cela rend-il le vote non valide?

M. Dewis: Peu importe. Cela est déjà stipulé dans la liste officielle qu'il a en sa possession. Dans un bureau civil, on ne met pas l'affiliation politique.

M. Forest: Une observation qu'on a faite, lors des recomptages, était que les bulletins the military votes was that they all looked the same. I suppose this is because they print in block letters and they all look the same. Would that be the reason?

(Texte]

Colonel Dewis: I do not really know. I had not heard that; it could be. They could be printed, they could be written. I do not know. I really could comment on that. I would be surprised if I saw too many of them.

• 1150

Mr. Forest: I have heard this remark by candidates at recounts when they were looking at military votes, saying that they all look the same. If they write in square block letters maybe they would look the same.

Colonel Dewis: Well, there is no requirement. You can print it, write it, or scribble it, as long as it is legible.

Mr. Forest: The military vote lasts for a week, does it not?

Colonel Dewis: Yes, sir. From Monday to Saturday. We always try to complete it before Saturday, or early in the week, if possible, because these other envelopes must get to the appropriate voting headquarters, either London, England, or Halifax or Ottawa or Edmonton. And if someone is voting say, in the Middle East, that envelope has to get to the office in London, England, by 0900 hours on Tuesday following the civilian polling day. So it is obvious that if it is left too late, transportation might delay it and it might not get there in time for 0900 hours Tuesday, and if it does not it is not counted. So they do try to complete it as early in the week as possible.

Mr. Forest: The Armed Forces are spread out all over the world. That is why the delay is so long.

Colonel Dewis: That is right.

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre, have you any supplementary questions? I have Mr. Paproski on the list.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes. When a serviceman overseas wishes to vote and shows up at the polling place, is his name already on the Returning Officer's list?

Colonel Dewis: Normally, it is. As I indicated, the Commanding Officer must prepare a list of everybody in his unit and he must show what the place of ordinary residence is according to records. So you could say that most people who come into a service voting place have their names on that DRO's list. But a man could be on leave or he could be de vote militaire ont l'air tous pareils. Y a-t-il une raison pour cela?

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Je ne le sais pas. Je n'en ai jamais entendu parler, mais il se peut que si tous les bulletins sont imprimés qu'ils aient la même apparence, mais je ne peux vraiment pas faire d'observation à ce sujet.

M. Forest: J'ai entendu cette remarque de la part de candidats lors d'un comptage du scrutin militaire parce qu'on se servait de lettres moulées et qu'elles se ressemblaient.

M. Dewis: Il n'y a pas d'exigences à cet égard aussi longtemps que l'écriture est lisible.

M. Forest: Le vote militaire dure une semaine, n'est-ce pas?

M. Dewis: C'est-à-dire du lundi au samedi. Nous essayons de tout terminer le plus tôt possible car les enveloppes doivent être envoyées aux quartiers généraux appropriés soit à Londres, à Halifax, à Ottawa ou à Edmonton. Si quelqu'un vote au Moyen-Orient, l'enveloppe doit arriver à Londres avant le mardi suivant le jour du vote à 9 heures du matin. Si on envoie la lettre trop tard, des délais de transport peuvent empêcher la lettre d'arriver à temps et elle ne serait pas comptée. C'est pourquoi nous essayons de terminer le plus tôt possible.

M. Forest: Les Forces armées étant réparties dans le monde entier, c'est ce qui fait que les retards soient si longs.

M. Dewis: C'est exact.

Le président: S'agit-il d'une question supplémentaire, monsieur Lefebvre? J'ai M. Paproski sur ma liste.

M. Lefebvre: Oui, lorsqu'un militaire outre-mer veut voter, il se présente au bureau de scrutin; est-ce que son nom figure sur la liste du directeur du scrutin.

M. Dewis: Normalement oui. L'officier commandant doit normalement rédiger une liste pour son unité où figure le lieu de résidence ordinaire selon les dossiers. On peut dire que tous les militaires se trouvent sur la liste du sous-directeur du scrutin. Si un homme est en congé ou en voyage commandé, il peut voter à n'importe quel bureau militaire. S'il n'est pas travelling on duty and away from his own unit, and the rules provide that he can vote at any service place. If he is not a member of that unit, he has to produce identification, his leave chit, or his ID card, or his travel orders or something of that nature. He must identify himself before that DRO, but his name will not be on that DRO's list.

[Text]

Mr. Lefebvre: In order that he may know the names of the candidates in his own particular riding, he is provided with a list at that time, or he asks for the list and looks up the name of his riding and sees the names of the three, four or five candidates, whatever it may be, in his particular riding.

Colonel Dewis: Yes, sir. In every service voting place there is a copy, or maybe two or three, of the list of candidates Mr. Hamel mentioned.

Mr. Lefebvre: There is no other attempt made to provide the serviceman with campaign literature on behalf of the parties, if not the candidates? This is all he gets in the matter of electoral information, you might say, only the candidates name and the name of the party he represents?

Colonel Dewis: That is right. His name and the party he represents; that is all he gets at the service voting place. But, of course, in Canada it is not uncommon for a candidate to obtain a list of the names of the persons in a unit, and he is entitled to mail them his own campaign material or whatever he wishes to mail, either to their private houses or to the service address.

Mr. Lefebvre: But no campaign is allowed on an Armed Forces base in Canada.

Colonel Dewis: That is right.

Mr. Lefebvre: None whatsoever.

Colonel Dewis: Or outside Canada either, as far as that goes.

Mr. Lefebvre: Well, maybe there would be many other citizens who would not mind it either if we would not bother them during an election.

Quite frequently during an election or after an election some persons claim that the Armed Forces vote is not secret enough. I have heard this every election, I think. I see here on page 3 of the English copy of the Canadian Forces Voting Rules that Mr. Hamel has gone to quite a bit of trouble to explain why he feels that the Armed Forces vote is indeed very secret. I understand that the membre de l'unité, il doit s'identifier avec sa carte d'identité ou son ordonnance de déplacement, etc.... devant le sous-directeur du scrutin.

[Interpretation]

M. Lefebvre: Afin qu'il connaisse les noms des candidats dans sa circonscription, on lui fournit une liste ou il la demande. De cette façon il connaît les 3, 4 ou 5 noms des candidats dans sa circonscription.

M. Dewis: Oui, dans chaque bureau, il y a deux ou trois listes de tous les candidats.

M. Lefebvre: Il n'y a pas d'autres tentatives pour fournir de la documentation électorale aux militaires, c'est tout ce qu'il a, en matière de renseignements électoraux? Le nom du candidat et le nom du parti qu'il représente?

M. Dewis: Oui, le nom du candidat et le parti qu'il représente. C'est tout ce qu'il a au bureau de scrutin. Bien sûr, au Canada, il n'est pas rare qu'un candidat ait une liste des noms d'une unité et bien sûr il peut faire parvenir sa documentation électorale par la poste, s'il le désire.

M. Lefebvre: Mais au Canada on ne permet pas de publicité électorale sur les bases militaires, n'est-ce pas?

M. Dewis: C'est exact.

M. Lefebvre: Aucune?

M. Dewis: Ni en dehors du Canada.

M. Lefebvre: Il y a bien des citoyens qui nous sauraient gré de ne pas les déranger avec cela au cours d'une élection.

Bien souvent après une élection, les gens prétendent que le vote militaire n'est pas suffisamment secret. J'ai entendu cela souvent. Je vois à la page 3 de la version anglaise du règlement électoral que M. Hamel a pris beaucoup de peine à nous expliquer pourquoi le vote militaire est très secret. Le bulletin est marqué, vous le mettez dans une enveloppe scellée et dans une autre enveloppe aussi scelballot paper is marked, it goes into one envelope which is sealed, and then into another envelope which is sealed, and this is mailed by the voter to the Returning Officer.

[Texte]

•1155

Mr. Hamel or Mr. Nash, on these complaints about lack of secrecy in Canadian Forces voting, what is the major complaint? The procedure seems to be covered here quite thoroughly, but apparently there are still people who are concerned that it is not secret enough. What complaints do you get about the lack of secrecy, if any?

Colonel Dewis: Could I say something on that? As I have indicated, I have been in this business for the Forces since about 1944 and I quite agree that this is always the complaint I get every time I go into the Mess, particularly around election time. I am always castigated for this terrible system, this lack of secrecy of the ballot. You write your name on the outside of the envelope and it goes into the mail.

Mr. Lefebvre: Is it on the inner envelope that you write your name?

Colonel Dewis: No, no, on the outer envelope. Then I explain just what Mr. Hamel has gone through here. I point out that this inner envelope is sealed. The elector himself puts the ballot in the small envelope and it is sealed, and then the small envelope is put in the big one, and it goes in the mail. The scrutineers and the special Returning Officer at headquarters get it.

There are two opposing political groups acting as scrutineers who deal with each individual outer envelope which is still sealed. It remains sealed until 0900 hours on the Tuesday following the civilian polling day. The two scrutineers check the envelopes again as to electoral districts and so on. Then both of them together open the outer envelope and take the small sealed envelope out, which has nothing on it except the notation, "This is an inner ballot envelope". There are no markings and, of course, there is no identification on the ballot itself. That small unopened envelope is dropped into a locked ballot box. Then when they have done all that...

Mr. Lefebvre: In other words, when the outer envelope is opened and the inner envelope which is also sealed is removed then no identification is left whatsoever.

Colonel Dewis: Right. It is immediately dropped into a locked ballot box, and they keep doing that until they have done it for the entire electoral district. When there are lée qui est postée par le votant au directeur du scrutin.

[Interprétation]

M. Hamel, M. Nash, à l'égard de ces plaintes concernant le manque de discrétion du vote militaire, quelles sont les principales plaintes? On semble tenir compte de tout, mais il y a encore des gens qui prétendent que le vote n'est pas assez secret. Quelles sont les plaintes que vous recevez à cet égard?

M. Dewis: Puis-je dire un mot à ce propos? Comme je l'ai dit tantôt, je m'occupe du vote militaire depuis 1944, je suis tout à fait d'accord qu'il y a toujours des plaintes, chaque fois que je me rends au «mess» surtout en temps d'élection, on me parle du manque de secret parce qu'il faut écrire son nom sur l'enveloppe et la poster.

M. Lefebvre: C'est sur l'enveloppe intérieure que vous inscrivez votre nom?

M. Dewis: Non, sur l'enveloppe extérieure. Je tiens à signaler que l'enveloppe intérieure est scellée. Le directeur lui-même met le bulletin de vote dans la petite enveloppe il la scelle et la met dans la grande qui est aussi scellée et mise à la poste.

Le scrutateur ou le directeur du scrutin spécial la reçoit.

Il y a deux scrutateurs, un de chaque parti politique, qui reçoivent ces enveloppes scellées. L'enveloppe reste scellée jusqu'à 9 heures du matin, le mardi suivant le jour de l'élection. Les deux scrutateurs vérifient les enveloppes et ensemble enlèvent le sceau de l'enveloppe extérieure. Ils en sortent l'enveloppe intérieure qui contient le bulletin de vote mais qui ne porte aucune identification. Cette enveloppe cachetée est déposée dans l'urne scellée. Alors...

M. Lefebvre: Autrement dit, quand vous ouvrez l'enveloppe extérieure pour y prendre l'enveloppe intérieure, il n'y a aucune identification quelconque qui paraît.

M. Dewis: Non. On les verse immédiatement dans l'urne scellée et cela se fait pour tout district électoral. Lorsqu'il n'y a plus d'enveloppes pour, disons, Algoma-Est, les no more envelopes for say, Algoma East, the two scrutineers then open the locked ballot box. They open the small inner envelopes and take the ballots out. There is a pile of small envelopes which are all sealed, but there is no way in the world of telling out of which outer envelope a particular small envelope came.

[Text]

Everybody says, "But I write my name on the back and I put my envelope in". Well, I keep telling them, and I go through the procedure again. After I have done so, that person is convinced. But then the next day there will be somebody else.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I ask it with all the respect in the world. The issue is not the possibility of identification of the individual who has marked the ballot. The issue follows a week or 10 days later when we sit in the comfort of our armchairs and say, "Ah, the Navy voted so and so, or the Army voted so and so, following true to pattern".

Are you suggesting, Mr. Hamel—I am sorry I was late but the External Affairs Committee also met at eleven o'clock. I have heard from Mr. Macquarrie what your remarks have dealt with, and this is my question. Do I understand that there is no way we can change this? Is this essentially what you are suggesting?

The issue is the general identification of the patterns of voting in the Canadian Armed Forces. They have been so marked in the past. For example, in the riding that I represent it was quite possible, as I have suggested here before, to stand at the gate and you know that for every five who come out, you know exactly how they voted. The odds would be—they are so public and so well-known to everybody that, in fact, the secrecy of the franchise has been lost to them.

Mr. Lefebvre: In total, you mean, but not individually.

Mr. Forrestall: Not individually. And as I have suggested, while this is a criticism, I think it is a psychological thing. The safeguards are there and anybody who wants to look closely at it will recognize that the secrecy is preserved. But let me just ask this question again. Is there no conceivable way within the present machinery to ensure anonymity to the members of our Canadian Armed Forces?

• 1200

Mr. Hamel: I do not think Colonel Dewis suggested, and I do not think I ever suggested, deux scrutateurs enlèvent les scellés de la boîte de scrutin. Ils ouvrent les enveloppes extérieures, puis sortent les enveloppes intérieures qu'ils déchachètent pour en tirer les bulletins de vote. Il n'y a aucun moyen de dire d'où vient telle ou telle enveloppe.

[Interpretation]

Bien sûr, les votants se plaignent parce qu'ils écrivent leurs noms au verso de l'enveloppe et je leur dis à chaque fois ce que je viens de vous dire. Le lendemain, c'est une autre plainte.

M. Forrestall: J'aurais une question supplémentaire.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Je pose ma question avec le plus grand respect. La question n'est pas de savoir s'il est possible d'identifier un votant quelconque, mais la question se pose 8 ou 10 jours plus tard lorsque le résultat du vote militaire est publié. Nous disons alors: «Ah, la marine a voté pour celui-ci et l'armée pour celui-là».

Je suis désolé d'avoir été en retard, mais le Comité des Affaires extérieures se réunissait aussi à 11 heures. M. Macquarrie m'a mis au courant de vos remarques et voici ma question. N'y a-t-il aucun moyen de changer le système? Est-ce cela que vous proposez? Le problème c'est qu'il est possible de connaître les diverses tendances du scrutin dans les Forces armées. Par exemple dans la circonscription il est très facile de se tenir à la barrière et de savoir comment chacun a voté. Les gens qui viennent voter sont tellement bien connus qu'en fait, leur vote est aussi connu et l'aspect secret du vote ne tient plus pour eux.

M. Lefebvre: Vous voulez dire collectivement et non individuellement.

M. Forrestall: Collectivement, oui, mais je crois qu'il s'agit d'un phénomène psychologique. Quiconque regarde la chose de près s'aperçoit que le secret du vote est sauf mais permettez-moi de vous reposer cette question. N'y a-t-il aucun moyen concevable de changer le rouage actuel pour conserver l'anonymat du vote militaire?

M. Hamel: Ni le colonel Dewis ni moi avons suggéré qu'il n'y a aucun moyen de remédier that there was no way of correcting this. What I may have...

[Texte]

[Interprétation]

à cette situation.

Mr. Forrestall: Well, Mr. Hamel, with all respect, if there is a possible way then I think it becomes part of our responsibility to find out what that way is and move with it.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct. What I was going to add is that if, as under the present procedure, we count the military vote a week later or before the civilian poll, the identification as a group will still be there, and if you announce the result of the armed forces vote on polling night or a week later it will still be identified as such. So under the present procedure I cannot see how it could be done.

In 1963 the committee considered two alternatives—I do not know if you recall this—one being to allow members of the forces in Canada to vote as civilians and only those abroad would vote under the Canadian Forces voting rules. Under this procedure you would still identify as a group the vote of this much smaller group, maybe about 10 per cent of the total force. The other alternative which was considered by the committee then but which would not solve your problem—at that time the Committee was much more concerned about another problem, such as the one which we had at Comox-Alberni at the last election—was that the Forces would vote strictly under the rules. That though would definitely not solve your problem, it would even be worse, because at the moment a certain percentage of the Forces vote as civilians because they can vote as civilians if they happen to be at election time in the electoral district where they have their normal residence.

Of course, there are other ways. If Parliament decided to have a permanent list—I believe Mr. Castonguay went into this in much more detail—then the members of the forces would vote absentee, as any other Canadian.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask a supplementary?

Mr. Forrestall: Just a moment please. We do have a permanent list in connection with the armed forces.

Mr. Hamel: That is true. This is a permanent list on absentee voting.

M. Forrestall: Ceci dit en toute déférence, monsieur Hamel, s'il y a une possibilité, j'estime qu'il est de notre devoir de la découvrir et d'agir en conséquence.

M. Hamel: C'est juste. Voici ce que j'allais ajouter. Si, comme cela se fait à l'heure actuelle, on compte les votes des militaires une semaine après ou avant les votes des civils, ce groupe fera toujours l'objet d'une distinction; et si l'on annonce les résultats des votes des Forces armées le soir des élections ou une semaine plus tard, là encore ce groupe sera cité séparément. Donc, selon la méthode actuelle, je ne vois pas comment la chose serait possible.

En 1963, le Comité a envisagé deux solutions possibles—je ne sais pas si vous vous en souvenez. La première était d'autoriser les membres des Forces armées en garnison au Canada à voter en tant que civils; seuls alors les militaires en garnison à l'étranger voteraient selon les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes. Selon cette méthode, on pourrait toujours distinguer les votes d'un certain groupe, mais il s'agirait alors d'un groupe beaucoup moins nombreux, 10 p. 100 peut-être de l'ensemble des Forces armées. L'autre solution envisagée alors par le Comité, mais qui ne résoudrait pas votre problème—à l'époque, le Comité se préoccupait bien davantage d'autres difficultés, de l'ordre de celles que nous avons eues à Comox-Alberni lors des dernières élections—était de faire voter les membres des Forces armées strictement en conformité des règles. Toutefois, cela ne résoudrait assurément pas votre problème, et ne ferait même que l'aggraver, puisqu'à l'heure actuelle, un certain pourcentage des membres des Forces armées votent en tant que civils, comme ils en ont le droit s'ils se trouvent être, au moment des élections, dans la circonscription électorale dans laquelle est situé leur domicile habituel.

Évidemment, il y a d'autres solutions. Si le Parlement décidait d'établir une liste permanente—je crois que M. Castonguay a exposé cela de façon beaucoup plus détaillée—les membres des Forces armées voteraient simplement en tant qu'absents comme les autres Canadiens.

M. Benjamin: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire?

M. Forrestall: Un instant, s'il vous plaît. Il existe une liste permanente en ce qui concerne les Forces armées.

M. Hamel: C'est exact. Il s'agit d'une liste permanente pour le vote des absents.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: Let me ask you this one question. I think this has to be talked out. We have to explore the methods. I do not know for sure what the answer is. Would you concede, Mr. Hamel, that there is a possibility of overcoming this under the absentee voting system?

Mr. Hamel: Yes. If you adopted a system of absentee voting with a much broader base than it has at the moment and included other groups, because at the moment the only absentee voting system we have is restricted to the members of the forces and their wives if they are abroad, then the votes of the forces would be diluted in this.

Mr. Forrestall: With minor modifications, the Canadian Forces voting rules could be re-entitled "Voting Rules for all Canadians Outside Canada" with the adoption of an absentee voting system. The basic thing I am trying to get at is that people abroad are identifiable and there is a permanent ongoing changing list, as changes are made, that is available to you as the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada.

Mr. Hamel: Are you referring to specific groups of people abroad such as civil servants, or any Canadians?

Mr. Forrestall: I am not trying to confuse the issue; I am just saying that the procedural course charted in this Canadian forces voting rules, where it deals with voters outside Canada, could with minor modifications be applicable to every Canadian outside the country or every voter outside the country who remains a Canadian citizen, whether he is outside for his company, outside for the Canadian armed forces, on extended vacations, or has retired in the South. I do not want to confuse the issue. The point I am getting at is that we have not only in theory but in practice a permanent list of members of our Canadian armed forces outside Canada and one that satisfies the one major requirement in any procedure that involves absentee voting from a point of view of safeguard and protection against abuse of the franchise.

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

[Interpretation]

M. Forestall: Permettez-moi de vous poser la question que voici. Je crois qu'il nous faut tirer cela au clair. Il nous faut examiner en profondeur les diverses méthodes. Je ne suis pas certain de la réponse. Estimez-vous, monsieur Hamel, qu'il serait possible de surmonter cette difficulté grâce au régime du vote des absents?

M. Hamel: Oui. Si vous adoptez un régime de vote des absents qui soit fondé sur des critères beaucoup plus larges qu'à l'heure actuelle et inclut d'autre groupes, car pour l'instant, il est restreint aux membres des Forces armées en garnison à l'étranger et à leurs épouses, les votes des Forces armées y seront assimilés.

M. Forrestall: Avec de légères modifications, on pourrait désormais intituler les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes «Règles électorales concernant tous les Canadiens à l'étranger» en adoptant un régime de vote des absents. Ce à quoi je veux en venir, avant tout, c'est qu'il est possible d'identifier les Canadiens résidant à l'étranger, et qu'il existe une liste permanente continuellement remise à jour que vous, directeur général des élections du Canada, avez à votre disposition.

M. Hamel: Voulez-vous parler de groupes particuliers de gens à l'étranger, comme les fonctionnaires, ou de n'importe quels Canadiens?

M. Forrestall: Je n'essaie pas d'embrouiller les choses. Je dis simplement que la partie de cette méthode établie dans les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes relatives aux électeurs qui se trouvent en dehors du Canada pourraient, avec de légères modifications, s'appliquer à tout Canadien ou à tout électeur qui se trouve en dehors du pays tout en restant citoyen canadien, qu'il soit à l'étranger parce qu'il y a été envoyé par son entreprise ou par les Forces armées du Canada, ou qu'il s'y trouve pour des vacances prolongées, ou encore qu'il ait pris sa retraite dans le Sud. Je ne veux pas embrouiller les choses. Ce à quoi je veux en venir, c'est que nous avons, non seulement en théorie, mais aussi en pratique, une liste permanente des membres des Forces armées du Canada qui se trouvent en dehors du pays, et que cette liste est conforme à la seule exigence véritable de toute méthode ayant trait au vote des absents, à savoir, la question des sauvegardes et de la protection contre un abus du droit de vote.

M. Hamel: En effet.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Is there, in your opinion, a possibility, if we do certain things as a Committee or make certain recommendations which Parliament of course would have to deal with, of ensuring in fact the anonymity of the Canadian force voters?

Mr. Hamel: Well, it is certainly possible but if you want some reasonable safeguards you will have to design some system whereby you will have a list of these people, and to me this is the real stumbling block.

Mr. Forrestall: You are, sir, our valued and respected architect. Thank you.

Mr. Benjamin: On this point, Mr. Chairman, of group identification, I have a feeling that the armed forces are overly sensitive about this and that we overly worry about it. Is this not also the case in many hundreds of civilian polls? For example, in my constituency they are all farmers and their wives; they are all basically of the same ethnic group; one party in that poll got no votes at all, another party got 10, and another got 81. Everybody knows how they all did not vote and everybody also knows how most of them voted. This same thing occurs in areas of certain ethnic or occupational groups poll after poll. This general identification of how people voted is as much or more true in civilian polls than is the case in the armed forces.

Mr. Hamel: Well, this is a very real problem with chronic hospitals or homes for the aged, or such kinds of institutions. Every time we establish a poll in these institutions this is a reality we have to face and we always make it clear to the management or the administration of the institution that the vote of the group per se will be identified—they will vote in favour of this or in favour of that. So this is a reality not only in the forces but in every one of those institutions or religious orders, for instance. At times we can group together two or three polling divisions so as to dilute the polls of the members of that institution, but it is not always possible.

Mr. Benjamin: There is just really no way that you could completely or even nearly

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: Pensez-vous qu'il soit possible, si, en tant que Comité, nous prenons certaines mesures ou nous faisons certaines recommandations, qui, bien entendu, devront être soumises à l'approbation du Parlement, d'assurer en pratique l'anonymat des électeurs des Forces armées du Canada?

M. Hamel: Évidemment, la chose est possible; mais si vous voulez un degré raisonnable de protection, il vous faudra mettre au point une méthode qui vous permette d'avoir une liste de ces personnes, et, à mon avis, c'est là la véritable pierre d'achoppement.

M. Forrestall: Vous êtes, monsieur, notre précieux et honoré architecte. Merci.

M. Benjamin: Relativement à cette question des distinctions de groupes, monsieur le président, j'ai l'impression que les Forces armées sont trop susceptibles à cet égard, et que nous nous en préoccupons trop. N'est-ce pas aussi le cas des votes de centaines de civils? Par exemple, dans ma circonscription, il n'y a que des agriculteurs et leurs femmes; ils appartiennent tous, fondamentalement, au même groupe ethnique; à cette élection, un parti n'a obtenu aucune voix, un autre en a obtenu 10, et un troisième en a obtenu 81. Tous les électeurs savent pour qui aucun d'entre eux n'a voté, et tous savent aussi pour qui la plupart d'entre eux ont voté. La même chose se produit, élection après élection, dans les zones où sont concentrés certains groupes ethniques ou certains groupes professionnels. Cette identification générale de la façon dont ont voté les gens est tout aussi vraie, sinon plus, dans le cas des civils que dans celui des Forces armées.

M. Hamel: C'est un problème indéniable dans les hôpitaux pour malades chroniques, dans les asiles de vieillards, ou dans les autres établissements du même ordre. Chaque fois que nous installons un bureau de vote dans l'un de ces établissements, c'est une réalité à laquelle il faut faire face, et nous prévenons toujours la direction de l'établissement que les votes du groupe en tant que tel vont être identifiés: le groupe aura voté en faveur de tel candidat ou de tel autre. La même chose est donc vraie non seulement des Forces armées, mais aussi de chacun de ces établissements ou ordres religieux, par exemple. Parfois, nous pouvons regrouper deux ou trois bureaux de vote afin d'assimiler aux autres les votes des occupants de l'établissement en question, mais ce n'est pas toujours possible.

M. Benjamin: Il n'y a absolument aucun moyen de résoudre ce problème entièrement, completely solve that problem for any kind of poll, armed forces or civilian. It is just a fact of the democratic system of casting ballots, is it not?

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Benjamin's remarks were hardly germane to the other argument.

The Chairman: I think that Mr. Dewis has a comment to make.

Colonel Dewis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In my opening remarks I wanted to say how much we appreciated the vote but I also indicated that there were certain aspects of the service voting that we do not like very much at all. Of course, this very point which has been brought up about merging is I suppose one of the main complaints. Not only do members of the forces complain about it but also our civilian officials, our Minister, and our Chiefs of Staffs. We have been working on this for years. One would think that to merge the military vote all you have to do is have everybody in the forces vote as civilians. Now in the provincial elections we do just that, except in Ontario where there is a little different procedure.

I can recollect that at the second last Nova Scotian election about 5,000 RCAF and dependants at Greenwood, voted as civilians. But there is practically nothing around Greenwood other than the station and, of course, they had a couple of civilian polls there. They voted as ordinary civilians but what comes out in the paper is that the Air Force voted 60-70 per cent Liberal or P.C. or whatever it is, because who else votes in those two voting places except members of the forces. The same thing applies to Petawawa or Borden and a large number of other places across Canada. So if you really wanted to know how the forces voted at any election, even if we all voted as civilians, you just get the count from those. Now you would not be able to come up and say that 64.250 per cent voted Liberal or P.C. You would only be able to say about 55 per cent. Well, what is the difference between 55 or 65 per cent—the vote as a class is disclosed. This is why we do not like it.

[Interpretation]

ni même presque entièrement, pour n'importe quel genre de bureau de vote, qu'il soit destiné aux Forces armées ou aux civils. C'est l'une des conséquences inévitables du régime démocratique de suffrage, n'est-ce pas?

M. Forrestall: Monsieur le président, les observations de M. Benjamin se rapportaient bien peu à l'autre sujet du débat.

Le président: Je crois que M. Dewis a une observation à faire.

M. Dewis: Merci, monsieur le président. Au cours de ma déclaration préliminaire, je voulais faire remarquer combien nous apprécions de pouvoir voter, mais j'ai aussi dit qu'il y avait certains aspects du vote des Forces armées qui ne nous plaisaient pas du tout. Bien entendu, cette observation même que l'on a faite relativement au fusionnement est, je le suppose, l'un des principaux sujets de mécontentement. Non seulement les membres des Forces armées, mais aussi nos hauts fonctionnaires civils, notre ministre, et nos chefs d'état-major, s'en plaignent. Il y a des années que nous étudions cette question. On pourrait s'imaginer que pour fusionner les votes des militaires avec ceux des autres, il suffit de permettre à tous les membres des Forces armées de voter en tant que civils. C'est exactement ce que nous faisons pour les élections provinciales, sauf en Ontario, où l'on procède d'une façon un peu différente.

Je me rappelle qu'aux avant-dernières élections en Nouvelle-Écosse, environ 5,000 membres de l'Aviation royale du Canada à Greenwood et leur famille ont voté en tant que civils. Mais il n'y a pour ainsi dire rien d'autre que la base dans les parages de Greenwood, et, évidemment, il n'y avait là qu'un ou deux bureaux de vote pour les civils. Les membres de l'ARC ont voté en tant que civils, mais on a dit dans les journaux qu'entre 60 et 70 p. 100 des membres de l'Aviation royale avaient voté pour les libéraux ou pour les conservateurs, disons, car nul, sinon les membres des Forces armées, ne votait dans ces deux bureaux de vote. Il en est de même de Petawawa ou de Borden, et de bien d'autres endroits au Canada. Donc, si l'on voulait vraiment savoir pour qui les membres des Forces armées ont voté lors d'une élection donnée, même si nous votions tous en tant que civils, il suffirait de regarder les résultats de ces endroits-là. Il ne serait pas possible de dire que 64.25 p. 100, mettons, des électeurs avaient voté pour les libéraux ou pour les conservateurs, mais l'on pourrait dire qu'il y en avait eu environ 55 p. 100. Qu'il s'agisse de 55 ou de 65 p. 100, cela ne change rien au fait que le vote d'un groupe est dévoilé. C'est là ce qui ne nous plaît pas.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: I have seen where it was 5 to 1.

Colonel Dewis: I have been working with the Chief Electoral Officer since 1944 and even if we vote as civilians there is still a problem.

Mr. Lefebvre: What we have found out here, before all these supplementaries, is that although the individual's voting secrecy is protected, none of us is protected as to the group we happen to belong to, whether it is a small village or an industrial city or a place such as Westmount. Each one of us is identified through our polling subdivision. It could be a papermill town where everybody is a papermill worker and where you could say that papermill workers vote as such or, as Mr. Benjamin pointed out, a group of farmers all voting in the same poll.

Mr. Macquarrie: In a sense, if I may observe, without being pedantic, the servicemen really have more anonymity than their civilian fellows because we know that there are so many in the constituency but we do not know what polls they come from.

Colonel Dewis: That is right. They might be serving in Indochina although the result comes out of the Edmonton office. So you do not know where the fellow was.

The Chairman: Mr. Paproski.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, most of my questions were answered by the supplementaries in the last 15 or 20 minutes but one thing I would like to clarify. There are three voting areas for the military in Canada—Edmonton, Ottawa and Halifax. The ballots are gathered in these areas for the different parts of Canada. Are they counted there or are they shipped to Ottawa for counting?

Colonel Dewis: They are counted each in the electoral district. I did not mention it but for instance, Edmonton not only looks after all of Western Canada, but the Chief Electoral Officer has authority, in the case of a number of voters who are not in any voting territory established under the rules, to authorize a special returning officer to take votes outside his territory. For example, Edmonton actually handles all the service voting which takes place generally in the western or central United States. The eastern United States is handled by the returning officer in Ottawa.

[Interprétation]

M. Forrestall: J'ai vu des cas où la proportion était de 5 à 1.

M. Dewis: Je travaille avec le directeur général des élections depuis 1944, et même si nous votons en tant que civils, le problème se pose toujours.

M. Lefebvre: Monsieur le président, avant toutes ces questions supplémentaires, nous venons de trouver que, bien que le secret du scrutin soit protégé pour les individus, personne d'entre nous n'est protégé sous le rapport du groupe auquel il appartient, que ce soit un petit village, une ville industrielle ou un endroit comme Westmount. Chacun d'entre nous est identifié d'après notre subdivision électorale. Il peut s'agir d'une ville où l'on fabrique du papier, où tout le monde travaille à la papeterie et où on pourrait donc dire que les employés de la papeterie ont voté en tant que tels ou, comme l'a dit M. Benjamin, un groupe de cultivateurs qui votent tous à la même urne.

M. Macquarrie: Dans un sens, si je puis faire une remarque sans être pédant, les militaires jouissent de plus d'anonymat que les civils parce que nous savons qu'il y en a un tel nombre dans une circonscription, mais nous ignorons de quelle urne ils viennent.

M. Dewis: C'est exact. Les soldats peuvent servir en Indochine et le résultat arrive d'Edmonton, par conséquent, on ne peut les identifier.

Le président: Monsieur Paproski.

M. Paproski: Monsieur le président, on a répondu à presque toutes mes questions lorsqu'on a posé les questions supplémentaires depuis 15 ou 20 minutes, mais il y a une chose que je voudrais tirer au clair. Pour les militaires, il y a trois régions de votation au Canada, soit Ottawa, Edmonton et Halifax. Les bulletins sont réunis dans ces trois régions pour les diverses parties du Canada. Ces bulletins sont-ils comptés dans ces trois régions, ou sont-ils envoyés à Ottawa?

M. Dewis: Les bulletins sont comptés dans chaque district électoral. Je ne l'ai pas dit, mais, par exemple, Edmonton non seulement s'occupe de tout l'Ouest, mais le Directeur général des élections peut, lorsqu'il y a des électeurs qui n'appartiennent à aucun district approuvé par les règlements, autoriser un directeur du scrutin spécial à prendre les votes hors de son territoire. Par exemple, Edmonton s'occupe de tout le vote pour l'Ouest ou le centre des États-Unis. Ottawa s'occupe de l'Est des États-Unis. Le directeur du scrutin de Londres, en Angleterre, s'oc-

[Text]

The returning officer in London, England, might look after taking votes of persons in Viet Nam or even Tokyo. Or it might be more convenient for the Ottawa office to handle them by mail from Tokyo. They are all counted in these four individual headquarters. That is where the envelope goes and then each one of those four special returning officers reports his totals for each of the 263 electoral districts to the Chief Electoral Officer, who then gets all these figures together for each electoral district. Then he announces to the civilian returning officer of each electoral district how many service votes there are.

Incidentally, when I say the service vote, that includes veterans who may be in DVA hospitals. There is a little special system for taking their votes but those ballots are also handled by these four—well, three—there are veterans in hospitals in Europe. But those votes are melded in with the service votes, so actually there may be 3,000 or 4,000 veteran's votes amongst ours as well as dependants', as well as wives', outside Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Are we able to receive names of potential armed services voters who live in our constituencies before the election?

Colonel Dewis: All officially nominated candidates have a right to see the list that the commanding officer prepares in his unit and this is done, I guess, in the first two weeks after the election is called. The commanding officer has to prepare a list showing all electors in his unit and the candidate is authorized to go in and to make extracts of these lists if he wishes. As a matter of fact, we have been in the habit of giving out a copy of this list if the candidate really wants it.

• 1215

Mr. Paproski: If it is in a western part, let us say an Edmonton constituency, where does he obtain his information—from the commanding officer of Western Command?

Colonel Dewis: No, he would have to do it from whatever units are in Edmonton. This is a responsibility of a unit. In other words, Mobile Command in Montreal has a number of units across Canada which come under it. You would not get from the general of Mobile Command in Montreal the list of those voting in Edmonton.

Mr. Paproski: Just tell me where I could. If I want to do this, who do I go to and where do I get the list?

[Interpretation]

cupe du scrutin des soldats au Vietnam ou même à Tokyo.

Ou encore, il serait peut-être plus pratique que le bureau d'Ottawa s'en occupe par la poste. Tous ces scrutins sont comptés dans ces quatre centres. C'est là que l'enveloppe va et chacun de ces quatre officiers rapporteurs spéciaux fait son rapport pour chacun des 263 districts électoraux au Directeur général des élections, qui, alors, rassemble tous ces chiffres pour chaque district électoral. Il annonce alors, au directeur du scrutin civil de chaque district le nombre de votes militaires.

A propos, quand je dis votes militaires, cela comprend les anciens combattants qui sont dans les hôpitaux du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Il y a un système spécial pour recueillir leurs votes, mais ces bulletins sont aussi la responsabilité de ces quatre personnes, trois plutôt, il y a des anciens combattants hospitalisés en Europe. Ces scrutins sont mêlés au vote des Forces armées, et il y a donc 3,000 ou 4,000 votes d'anciens combattants parmi les nôtres, et ceux de leurs épouses et leurs familles, à l'étranger.

M. Paproski: Pouvons-nous recevoir avant les élections les noms des soldats de notre circonscription qui pourraient voter?

M. Dewis: Tous les candidats présentés officiellement ont le droit de voir la liste préparée par le Commandant dans chaque unité et cela se fait, je crois, dans les deux premières semaines après l'annonce des élections. Le Commandant doit préparer une liste de tous les électeurs dans son unité et le candidat a le droit de faire des extraits de ces listes s'il le désire. De fait, nous avons suivi l'habitude de transmettre un exemplaire de cette liste au candidat s'il le désire.

M. Paproski: S'il s'agit d'une région de l'Ouest, disons pour Edmonton, où prend-il ses renseignements, du Commandant du Commandement de l'Ouest?

M. Dewis: Non, Il doit s'adresser aux unités d'Edmonton qui peuvent exister. C'est une responsabilité d'une unité. En d'autres termes, le Commandement de la Force mobile à Montréal a un certain nombre d'unités dans tout le Canada qui en relèvent. Vous ne pouvez obtenir la liste des votants à Edmonton en vous adressant au général du Commandement de la Force mobile à Montréal.

M. Paproski: Dites-moi simplement où je puis me procurer cette liste. Si je voulais le faire, à qui dois-je m'adresser et où puis-je me la procurer?

[Texte]

Colonel Dewis: You go to the commanding officer of whatever unit you are interested in.

The Chairman: Are you speaking as a candidate?

Mr. Paproski: I am speaking now as a candidate and I want to know how many military people are on the list that belong to my constituency. Where do I go to get the complete list?

Colonel Dewis: You cannot get a complete list of everyone who is entitled to vote in your constituency unless you also go over to brigades in Europe and ask for the CO's list there. Now, if you got all those lists, you would have a complete list.

Mr. Paproski: This is what I want to know—if you can get a complete list. Somebody here mentioned that there is a possibility of getting a complete list of the names of constituents and others in the service in other parts of the world. There is no such thing as a complete list. All we can get is what there is in Canada unless we apply to all the different services and the different brigades and the different commanding officers of different regiments.

Colonel Dewis: Yes.

Mr. Paproski: That is fine. Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Is it not correct that a candidate is not entitled to a complete list?

Colonel Dewis: I might put it the other way around. There is not any complete list other than certain machine records and information we give to the Chief Electoral Officer. There is no provision for a complete list for any candidate other than his applying to the commanding officer of each unit. And if your constituency is, say, Edmonton, there is nothing to prevent you from going to a unit in Halifax and asking for the Halifax unit's list because on it there will probably be a half a dozen whose electoral district is Edmonton because they were serving in Edmonton or they came from there and never changed their statement to Halifax.

Mr. Benjamin: Then if Mr. Paproski or I as candidates want a list of the armed forces people who are eligible to vote in our constituencies, we are not entitled to it in the sense that you just cannot possibly give us one.

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Du Commandant de l'unité qui vous intéresse.

Le président: Parlez-vous en tant que candidat?

M. Paproski: Je parle maintenant à titre de candidat et je veux savoir combien de militaires de ma circonscription figurent sur la liste. Où puis-je obtenir la liste complète?

M. Dewis: Vous ne pouvez obtenir la liste complète de toutes les personnes qui ont droit de voter dans votre circonscription à moins d'aller aux brigades en Europe et de demander la liste au Commandant. Vous auriez une liste complète si vous pouviez vous procurer toutes ces listes.

M. Paproski: C'est ce que je veux savoir si on peut obtenir une liste complète. Quelqu'un a dit ici qu'il est possible d'obtenir une liste complète des commettants et de ceux qui sont dans les Forces armées dans d'autres parties du monde. Une liste complète n'existe tout simplement pas. Tout ce que nous pouvons obtenir, c'est ce qui existe au Canada, à moins de s'adresser aux services divers, aux brigades, et officiers commandants des différents régiments.

M. Dewis: Oui.

M. Paproski: C'est bon. Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: N'est-il pas juste de dire qu'un candidat n'a pas le droit d'obtenir une liste complète?

M. Dewis: Présentons les choses différemment. Il n'existe aucune liste complète autre que certains dossiers et certains renseignements que nous communiquons au Directeur général des élections. La seule façon de se procurer une liste complète pour un candidat est de s'adresser au Commandant de chaque unité.

Et si votre circonscription est, disons, Edmonton, personne ne vous empêche de vous adresser à une unité à Halifax et de demander la liste parce qu'il y aura sans doute une demi-douzaine de personnes dont le district électoral est Edmonton, parce qu'ils servaient à Edmonton ou qu'ils venaient de cette ville et qu'ils n'ont jamais demandé à être inscrits à Halifax.

M. Benjamin: Par conséquent, si M. Paproski ou moi-même, en tant que candidats, désirions une liste des militaires qui ont droit au vote dans nos circonscriptions, nous n'y avons pas droit étant donné qu'il vous est impossible de nous en donner une.

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: There is no provision for it in the rules. The only provision in the rules for a candidate to get a list is this unit list. There is no provision for your obtaining what you obviously want, which is one complete list of everybody on the globe who is entitled to vote in your constituency. There is no provision for such a list.

The Chairman: If I may interject, I believe this might be done if after February commanding officers sent to the Chief Electoral Officer the lists of those who have been registered with their residence. The lists could be distributed then in the event of an election.

Mr. Benjamin: As changes are made in January or February, could the commanding officer not be required at the end of February to list those names by constituencies, send them to the Chief Electoral Officer, who in turn, could do it relatively simply if he did nothing more than take the scissors to one copy of that list? Would this not be a practical way of making available to candidates through the Chief Electoral Officer, and in turn his returning officer, a list of the armed forces people? The list could be available each year for that matter, but certainly at election time.

Colonel Dewis: All I could say to that is that practically anything is physically possible. As regards lists, there is a security element involved and I think that the Department has indicated on a number of occasions that they were not by any means overjoyed with the present availability of unit lists, when you bear in mind that any one candidate, if he wants to organize it, can get somebody to go to every unit in Canada and in Europe and pick up all these lists. There is certainly security...

Mr. Benjamin: No, I did not mean that. I meant when the end of February comes, let us say it is the end of February 1972, and everybody knows the odds are there will likely be an election in that year, or within a year after that, cannot that list be done by that commanding officer's offices listing all the names by constituency, starting with Algoma East right through, and be sent to the Chief Electoral Officer in Ottawa so he in turn can reprint lists by ridings...

Colonel Dewis: There again, it is possible to do anything, but under the rules the only time he makes this list is when the election is called and he has to have it ready in about

[Interpretation]

M. Dewis: Rien de tel n'est prévu dans les règlements. La seule disposition au règlement prévoyant qu'un candidat puisse obtenir une liste, est la liste de l'unité. Il n'y a aucune disposition vous permettant d'obtenir ce que vous voulez, à savoir la liste complète de tous les gens, partout au monde, qui ont le droit de voter dans votre circonscription. Cette liste n'est prévue par aucune disposition.

Le président: Si vous me permettez une remarque, je pense que cela pourrait se faire si, après le mois de février, les Commandants envoyaient au Directeur général des élections les listes de ceux qui ont été enregistrés, ainsi que leur lieu de résidence. Les listes pourraient alors être distribuées advenant des élections.

M. Benjamin: Comme on fait les changements en janvier ou février, ne pourrait-on pas tenir le Commandant, à la fin de février de dresser la liste de ces noms par circonscriptions, de l'envoyer au Directeur général des élections qui à son tour pourrait s'en occuper de façon relativement simple, ne serait-ce que découper un exemplaire de ces listes? Ne serait-ce pas une manière pratique de fournir aux candidats, par l'entremise du Directeur général des élections, puis de son officier rapporteur, une liste des militaires? Cette liste pourrait être disponible tous les ans, mais certainement au temps des élections.

M. Dewis: Tout ce que je pourrais dire, c'est que presque tout est pratiquement réalisable. En ce qui concerne les listes, il y a un élément de sécurité qui entre en jeu et je crois que le ministère a déclaré à plusieurs reprises qu'il n'était pas particulièrement ravi de la disponibilité de ces listes, surtout si l'on considère que tout candidat s'il veut, peut envoyer quelqu'un dans chaque unité au Canada et en Europe pour recueillir toutes ces listes. Il y a certainement un élément de sécurité.

M. Benjamin: Non, ce n'est pas ce que je voulais dire. Je voulais dire que, lorsque vient la fin de février, disons que nous sommes à la fin de février 1972, tout le monde sait qu'il y aura une élection avant la fin de l'année, ou dans l'année qui vient, le Commandant ne pourrait-il pas faire préparer cette liste, en inscrivant tous les noms par circonscriptions, d'Algoma Est jusqu'à la fin, et l'envoyer au directeur général des élections à Ottawa qui, à son tour, pourrait faire réimprimer ces listes par circonscriptions?

Colonel Dewis: Oui, tout cela est possible mais d'après les règlements, le seul moment où l'on prépare ces listes est lorsqu'une élection a été annoncée et ces listes doivent alors two week's time. There is no point in him trying to retain sort of an up to date list because I must frankly say even this list which he prepares just two weeks after an election is called, by voting day is going to be out of date. People have been posted out in the meantime; people posted in. So the only place that any kind of up to date list could be done would have to be Canadian Forces Headquarters. There is no provision at the moment for such a list, but physically anything is possible.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: I am wondering if there should not be a provision in new rules that as the list can only be changed in January and February in any case, what is wrong with compiling it by consistency during the first two weeks in March and sending it to the Chief Electoral Officer, and then he has it. It has to be compiled in any case.

Colonel Dewis: This might be done, but there would be no point in doing it on an annual basis.

Mr. Benjamin: I quite agree.

Colonel Dewis: This is something which could be done before an election and then it would have some...

Mr. Benjamin: I quite agree. It could be left to the judgment of the Chief Electoral Officer. The odds are that he knows there is going to be a by election in Selkirk; for example, he knew that six months ago. He could have six months ago sent a letter under different rules to the commanding officer of the Units, "Please provide me with a list of names of all the people in your unit who are eligible to vote in the constituency of Selkirk."

Mr. Hamel: As Colonel Dewis said, we do not even have to go through unit commanders. It could be done from Headquarters.

Mind you, referring to Rule 29 now, there were in the past some reservations expressed as to possible security problems because as Colonel Dewis, said, technically any candidate may obtain a complete list of every commanding officer of every armed forces unit throughout the world so you may end up with a complete list of the whole forces, under Rule 29. Yet you are only interested in 300, 400 or 500 who happen to be eligible to vote in your electoral district.

Mr. Benjamin: As a candidate I think I should not be entitled to any more. If I personally ask I should not be entitled to anything more than the names of the people who être disponibles dans les deux semaines qui suivent. Il est inutile pour le commandant d'essayer de conserver une liste quelconque parce-que même la liste qui est préparée deux semaines après l'audience des élections est déjà désuète, le jour du vote. Des gens sont mutés un peu partout; en fait, il n'y a qu'au quartier général des Forces canadiennes qu'on pourrait garder une telle liste à jour. Il n'y a rien de prévu dans les règlements à cet effet, mais physiquement, tout est possible.

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Je me demande si l'on ne pourrait mettre une nouvelle clause au Règlement. Puisque la liste ne peut être modifiée qu'en janvier ou en février, de toutes façons qu'est-ce qui empêcherait de préparer une telle liste par circonscription au début de mars et de l'envoyer au directeur général des élections? Cette liste doit être préparée de toutes façons.

Colonel Dewis: Oui, on peut le faire, mais inutile de le faire chaque année.

M. Benjamin: Je suis d'accord.

Colonel Dewis: C'est une chose qu'on peut faire en vue d'une élection et, alors il y aurait quelques...

M. Benjamin: D'accord. On peut laisser cela à la discrétion du directeur général des élections.

Il sait qu'il doit y avoir une élection complémentaire dans Selkirk, il le sait depuis six mois, par exemple. Il aurait pu, il y a six mois, envoyer une lettre aux divers commandants de formations en leur demandant une liste des militaires qui ont le droit de voter dans la circonscription de Selkirk.

M. Hamel: Comme le colonel Dewis vient de le dire, on n'est pas obligé de passer par le commandant de la formation. On pourrait le faire du quartier général. Par contre, si je me reporte au règlement 29, on a exprimé par le passé certaines craintes au point de vue problèmes de sécurité. En effet, techniquement, les candidats peuvent obtenir une liste complète de n'importe quel commandant de n'importe quelle formation du monde entier. De cette façon, en vertu du règlement 29, on peut compiler une liste complète de tous les militaires. Les seuls qui vous intéressent pourtant, sont les 300 ou 400 qui ont le droit de vote dans votre circonscription.

M. Benjamin: En tant que candidat, je ne crois pas que je devrais avoir droit à plus que cela. Je ne devrais pas avoir droit à plus que d'obtenir le nom des militaires qui ont droit are eligible to vote in my riding. I think that would be a perfectly legitimate limitation.

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: Yet under Rule 29 you are entitled to much more than that.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: You are entitled to any Commanding Officer's list throughout the world.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a couple more on another point if you want to pursue this one further.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would like to go a little further on this list. What happens to the documentation where a military service elector changes his place of residence. If that is not sent to the Chief Electoral Officer, what is the point in his doing it?

Mr. Hamel: The so-called statement of ordinary residence, be it on initial enrolment or be it for a change of residence, is filled out at the moment in duplicate, is it not?

Colonel Dewis: In triplicate.

Mr. Hamel: We are recommending anyway that it be done in triplicate, and two copies come to me for stamping as to electoral district, then it is sent back to National Defence, a copy stays at Headquarters and a copy goes down to the unit for the member's own file. I do not have any documentation in the office, but I see each piece of paper for stamping purposes, I mean to allocate the appropriate electoral district.

Mr. Macquarrie: If you do not have that, you do not have anything like a permanent list in reference to what Mr. Forrestall was asking a while ago.

Colonel Dewis: I think, Mr. Chairman, really Canadian Forces Headquarters has the original of all the statements. After they have been stamped by the Chief Electoral Officer the original and duplicate come back to Canadian Forces Headquarters and we keep the original with the electoral district stamped on it; we send the duplicate back to the unit with the electoral district stamped on it. They throw away the triplicate, and keep the duplicate which has the official designation of electoral districts. So at CFHQ we have the original of every statement of ordinary residence, whether it is on enrolment, or whether it is a change completed by a member of the Forces.

[Interpretation]

de vote dans ma circonscription. Cette restriction serait parfaitement justifiable, à mon avis.

M. Hamel: Pourtant, d'après la règle 29 vous avez droit à bien davantage.

M. Benjamin: Oui.

M. Hamel: Vous avez le droit de demander la liste à n'importe quel commandant partout au monde.

M. Benjamin: J'aurais quelques autres questions, sur une autre point; sauf si vous voulez continuer là-dessus.

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais poursuivre encore un peu sur le sujet. Qu'est-ce qui arrive aux déclarations de changement de résidence? Si on ne les expédie pas au directeur général des élections, quelle est leur utilité?

M. Hamel: La déclaration de résidence ordinaire, qu'elle se fasse lors de l'enrôlement du militaire ou à cause d'un changement d'adresse, se remplit en double exemplaire, n'est-ce pas?

M. Dewis: En triple exemplaire.

M. Hamel: Nous recommandons en tout cas qu'elle se fasse en triple exemplaire: deux copies me sont envoyées pour fins d'identification quant au district électoral et ensuite sont retournées au ministère de la Défense nationale. Une copie reste aux quartiers généraux et l'autre copie s'en va à la formation dans les dossiers du militaire. Je ne garde aucune déclaration dans mon bureau, mais je les vois toutes afin d'y apposer le timbre d'identification du district électoral.

M. Macquarrie: Si vous ne les gardez pas à votre bureau, vous n'avez alors rien de comparable à cette liste permanente dont parlait M. Forrestall.

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, ce sont les quartiers généraux qui ont l'original estampillé par le directeur général des élections. L'original et la copie reviennent aux quartiers généraux des Forces canadiennes; nous gardons l'original estampillé et une copie s'en va dans les dossiers du militaire. Nous jetons la seconde copie et gardons les deux exemplaires officiels portant le nom de la circonscription électorale. C'est ainsi que nous avons aux quartiers généraux des Forces armées, toutes les déclarations de résidence ordinaires, qu'elles aient été faites au moment de l'enrôlement ou lors d'un changement d'adresse du militaire.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: It is another illustration, I think, of the need to civilianize this procedure a good deal more than is the case, but this will come up later.

Mr. Benjamin: Rather than 264 candidates for any party asking for a total list, which they are entitled to do, could a national headquarters of a party ask for a total list and it would be their responsibility to break it down by constituency?

Mr. Hamel: We have at the moment a complete list by electoral district, but because of some information, so far it has been considered as privileged or secret information, but it is already available in Headquarters and DND has it.

Mr. Forrestall: And readily available to yourself Mr. Hamel, in the event anything of an urgent nature came up?

Mr. Hamel: Oh yes. Well, in fact, we always had a copy of it.

Mr. Macquarrie: On the question of privileged information, on that, I take it, would be the man's name and the constituency, right? How in the name of God that would be military...

Colonel Dewis: Of course it is no good to you unless you have a postal address; or the name of the unit and the unit name is no good to you, unless you know where the unit is. This is where we get into service security area.

Mr. Macquarrie: It does help the Chief Electoral Officer to know the size of this potential electorate.

Mr. Hamel: It is kept by electoral district. For instance, at election time, many candidates call me and say, "What is the potential military vote in my district?" We just look at the list and say, "350". It cannot be accurate because we do not know who is posted abroad and therefore his wife would be voting in exactly the same manner as he will, but within a certain percentage, it is fairly accurate.

The Chairman: Do you have their names?

Mr. Hamel: Oh yes, we have the names and postal addresses. No, no, I am sorry, just the name and electoral district.

Mr. Nash: I understand there is some security there.

The Chairman: And do you know where they are at the time of the election?

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Voilà un autre exemple du besoin que nous avons de rendre cette procédure plus conforme à la procédure civile, mais ceci viendra plus tard.

M. Benjamin: Plutôt que d'avoir 264 candidats d'un parti qui demandent tous une liste complète, le bureau central d'un parti ne pourrait-il pas demander lui-même une liste complète des militaires et la diviser selon les circonscriptions?

M. Hamel: Nous avons dans le moment une liste complète divisée par district électoral; certains renseignements ont été jusqu'à présent considérés comme confidentiels, mais la liste est déjà prête au quartier-général.

M. Forrestall: La liste est prête au cas où vous auriez affaire à une situation urgente?

M. Hamel: Oui, en fait, nous en avons toujours conservé un exemplaire.

M. Macquarrie: Au sujet de ces documents confidentiels, faites-vous allusion au nom du militaire et de sa circonscription? Comment, au nom du ciel, ces renseignements peuvent-ils être considérés comme confidentiels?

M. Dewis: Tous ces renseignements vous sont inutiles à moins que vous n'ayez une adresse postale quelconque; il vous est inutile d'avoir le nom de la formation, si vous ne savez pas où elle est située. C'est là que les problèmes de sécurité se posent.

M. Macquarrie: Mais, il serait utile au directeur général des élections de connaître le nombre d'électeurs possibles.

M. Hamel: C'est divisé par district électoral. En temps d'élections, par exemple, plusieurs candidats m'appellent et me demandent: «Quelle est le nombre d'électeurs militaires dans ma circonscription?» Nous regardons la liste et répondons: «350». Cette réponse ne peut-être exacte parce que nous ne savons pas qui se trouve à l'étranger, ni si sa femme voterait de la même manière que lui, mais, avec une certaine marge d'erreur, notre réponse est assez exacte.

Le président: Avez-vous les noms?

M. Hamel: Oui, nous avons les noms et les adresses postales. Non, pardon, les noms et les districts électoraux seulement.

M. Nash: J'imagine qu'il y a une question de sécurité, là-dedans.

Le président: Est-ce que vous savez où les hommes se trouvent au moment des élections?

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: Not by that list. No.

Mr. Benjamin: You do not have any central postal operation for different areas of the world? Supposing I wanted to write a letter, a personal letter by First Class mail to every eligible voter in the armed forces for my constituency, let us say there are 600 of them, if you are worried about security and you do not want me or anybody else to know where any unit is and how many men there might be in it and so forth, could I address all these letters to Headquarters in Ottawa and they, in turn, would forward them to the proper...

Colonel Dewis: Take for example the Brigade which is at Soest, Germany and the Air Division which is Lahr, and Four Wing which is at Baden-Solingen; as overseas units they all have a Canadian Forces Post Office number, CFPO 5050 or CFPO 5000.

Mr. Paproski: You are just giving away security secrets there now.

Colonel Dewis: No, this is public knowledge; there is nothing secure about that. So all you do is address it to John Buggs with his official number and CFPO 5050, then it gets over to the brigade and it would be distributed to whatever his unit happened to be.

Mr. Benjamin: Unless there are some other questions on this list, I have one on another matter.

Mr. Forrestall: Just for clarification, it would be possible to secure this zip code number as well so would that be a difficult thing to include in the...

Colonel Dewis: Unless you had the name of the individual and knew he was in your electoral district and the postal number—I mean, without both together it would not be any use, but this can be done.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would just like to be clear on one answer I received from the CEO. Do you have a list of electors geared to their constituencies which you could make available when an election is called?

Mr. Hamel: Not at the moment.

The Chairman: He does not know where they are.

Mr. Macquarrie: No, I mean in the constituency. I am not now asking whether they are

[Interpretation]

M. Dewis: Non, pas à l'aide de cette liste. Non.

M. Benjamin: Vous n'avez pas de système postal pour les diverses formations à travers le monde?

Disons que je veux envoyer 600 lettres personnelles par courrier de première class à des électeurs des Forces canadiennes qui ont le droit de vote dans ma circonscription. Si vous vous inquiétez au point de vue sécurité et que vous ne voulez pas que quiconque sache où telle formation se trouve, ou encore les effectifs de telle ou telle formation, me serait-il possible d'adresser toutes ces lettres au quartier général à Ottawa pour qu'elles puissent être expédiées de là aux destinataires?

M. Dewis: Prenez par exemple la brigade qui se trouve à Soest, en Allemagne, la base aérienne qui est située à Lahn ou cette autre formation qui est à Baden-Solingen; il y a un numéro postal pour chaque formation d'outremer, BPFC 5050, ou encore BPFC 5000.

M. Paproski: Vous divulguez des renseignements secrets.

M. Dewis: Non, ces renseignements sont connus du public. Il n'y a rien de secret à leur sujet. Tout ce que vous avez à faire, c'est d'adresser la lettre au militaire, John Buggs, par exemple, avec son numéro du service ainsi que le numéro postal BPFC 5050. La brigade va recevoir la lettre et ensuite la faire parvenir au destinataire.

M. Benjamin: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions là-dessus, j'aimerais poser une autre question sur un autre sujet.

M. Forrestall: J'aimerais avoir un éclaircissement. Serait-il possible d'obtenir ce numéro postal aussi, serait-ce compliqué de l'inclure dans...

M. Dewis: Pas à moins d'avoir le nom de la personne, de savoir qu'elle est de votre district électoral et de connaître son numéro postal; sans avoir ces deux renseignements, ce serait inutile, mais ce peut être fait.

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais clarifier une réponse que j'ai reçue du directeur général des élections; avez-vous une liste d'électeurs avec le nom de la circonscription que vous pourriez mettre à notre disposition lorsqu'on annonce une élection?

M. Hamel: Non, pas dans le moment.

Le président: Il ne sait pas où ils sont.

M. Macquarrie: Non, je veux dire, par circonscription. Je ne demande pas s'ils sont en in Germany or in Laos or where, but do you have one to indicate where the constituency people are?

[Texte]

Mr. Hamel: Yes, we do, but we cannot make it available.

The Chairman: Why not?

Mr. Hamel: Because it is secret information.

An hon. Member: That is right, you are not entitled to it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yet on that list there is no military address; it is a constituency address.

Colonel Dewis: Yes; on that list I believe, there is the unit. It does not contain the address of the unit, but it has the address of the member of the forces, as shown on the statement of ordinary residence; and they are by electoral districts.

Mr. Macquarrie: Who is preventing you from releasing it?

The Chairman: It is considered secret; but I would like to know why it is considered secret.

Mr. Macquarrie: But who says it? It is a military decision that says it is a secret?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Macquarrie: And yet on that document there is a constituency address?

Colonel Dewis: Yes. Well, it is a constituency address. It is made up according to electoral districts. In other words, this is the kind of list that you are referring to. It is prepared, say, for Algoma East, and it shows all the members of the forces who are in Algoma East; and it will show the address they gave on their original statement of ordinary residence.

An hon. Member: Certainly.

Colonel Dewis: But all Algoma East will be together, or Ottawa West, or whatever it might be. And this is used by the Chief Electoral Officer and his staff in scrutinizing and checking these balloting envelopes that come into the territory headquarters. But this list is not provided for in the rules, and the Department has always been very reticent about providing any types of lists in electoral matters which are not provided for in the rules.

[Interprétation]

Allemagne ou au Laos, ou ailleurs. Mais, est-ce que vous avez une liste indiquant où sont les gens d'une circonscription donnée?

M. Hamel: Oui, nous avons cette liste, mais nous ne pouvons pas vous la donner.

Le président: Pourquoi pas?

M. Hamel: Parce que c'est de l'information secrète.

Une voix: Vous n'y avez pas droit.

M. Macquarrie: Pourtant, il n'y a pas d'adresse militaire sur cette liste. C'est l'adresse postale de la personne, dans sa circonscription.

M. Dewis: Oui, sur cette liste, je crois, il y a le nom de l'unité. Il n'y a pas l'adresse de l'unité, mais l'adresse du militaire comme l'indique la déclaration concernant le lieu de sa résidence habituelle, et la liste est faite d'après les circonscriptions électorales.

M. Macquarrie: Qui vous empêche de publier cette liste?

Le président: On la considère comme un document secret, mais j'aimerais savoir pourquoi cela est secret.

M. Macquarrie: Qui a dit cela? Est-ce qu'il y a une décision militaire à ce sujet?

M. Hamel: C'est exact.

M. Macquarrie: Cependant, ce document contient-il l'adresse de la circonscription?

M. Dewis: Oui, bien ce n'est pas l'adresse de la circonscription. Elle est établie d'après les circonscriptions électorales.

En d'autres mots, vous parlez de ce genre de liste. Elle est faite pour la circonscription d'Algoma Est et elle indique le nombre de tous les militaires qui font partie de cette circonscription, et elle comprendra l'adresse qu'ils ont donnée dans leur première déclaration concernant le lieu de leur résidence habituelle.

Une voix: Certainement.

M. Dewis: Cependant tous les résidents d'Algoma Est ou d'Ottawa Ouest, ou d'ailleurs, sont ensemble. Cette liste sert au Directeur général des élections et à son personnel pour vérifier les enveloppes qui contiennent les bulletins de vote et qui parviennent au quartier général du territoire. Toutefois cette liste n'est pas prévue par les règlements, et le ministère a toujours été très réticent lorsqu'il s'agissait de fournir des listes concernant les élections, qui ne sont pas prévues par les règlements.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: So this list is regarded as a privileged document, without a military address on it?

Colonel Dewis: Yes. They have all the ranks...

Mr. Macquarrie: That is fine.

Colonel Dewis: ...and the names; and if he gets all those lists prepared in a nice form he will not have to go around to every unit. You have the whole thing right there. It might be possible to produce a list that leaves out some of the non-essentials—the postal address, possibly, and the unit by electoral district—which might not be subject to security.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am still on the same subject. What is on the lists that the scrutineers at the three centres are checking?

Colonel Dewis: These are the lists we are talking about.

Mr. Macquarrie: They get it, then?

Mr. Hamel: That is that list.

Mr. Macquarrie: They get it?

Colonel Dewis: And they get the commanding officers' unit lists, as well.

Mr. Forrestall: And that is available to any nominated candidate...

Colonel Dewis: And those unit lists are available to any candidate.

Mr. Paproski: These members of the forces must think their elected member is a really busy individual, because they have not heard from him for the last year and a half since he was elected. There has to be some way that we can communicate with these people, directly or indirectly, however it may affect security, or anything like that, where they are stationed. It really does not matter.

The fact is that we are their elected representatives, and if they have any problems they should be able to communicate with us, one way or the other. And we should be able to notify them who their member is. This is all I am saying. Are they aware of this, or is there some way that they can be aware of this? Since the election, how many of these people who voted are aware of who is their elected representative in their constituency?

Colonel Dewis: It is rather difficult to give an answer. I do not even know the answer. I do not know, for example, out at Uplands, how many of the serving personnel there know what electoral district they are in, or

[Interpretation]

M. Macquarrie: Cette liste est considérée comme un document privilégié et ne contient pas l'adresse des militaires?

M. Dewis: Oui. Elle comporte tous les grades...

M. Macquarrie: C'est bien.

M. Dewis: ...et tous les noms, et si ces listes sont bien établies, on n'aura pas besoin de consulter chaque unité. On pourrait établir une liste qui ne contiendrait pas les renseignements non importants, l'adresse postale probablement et l'unité d'après la circonscription électorale qui ne seraient pas soumis à des mesures de sécurité.

M. Macquarrie: A ce même propos, qu'est-ce qui figure sur les listes que les scrutateurs dans les trois centres vérifient?

M. Dewis: Ce sont les listes dont on parle.

M. Macquarrie: On l'a reçue alors?

M. Hamel: Il s'agit de cette liste.

M. Macquarrie: On l'a reçue?

M. Dewis: On a reçu aussi les listes de l'officier commandant.

M. Forrestall: Tout candidat peut obtenir ces listes...

M. Dewis: Tout candidat peut obtenir ces listes.

M. Paproski: Ces membres des forces armées doivent croire que leur représentant élu est très occupé parce qu'ils n'en ont pas entendu parler depuis au moins un an et demi. Il doit y avoir un moyen de communiquer avec ces gens, d'une manière directe ou indirecte, même si cela peut influencer sur la sécurité des lieux où ils sont stationnés. Cela n'a pas d'importance.

Le fait est que nous sommes leurs représentants élus, et s'ils ont des problèmes, ils devraient pouvoir communiquer avec nous d'une façon ou d'une autre. Nous devrions être en mesure de leur apprendre qui est leur représentant. C'est tout ce que je veux dire. Est-ce qu'ils le connaissent? Y a-t-il un moyen de leur faire connaître? Depuis les élections, combien parmi ces militaires qui ont voté savent qui est leur représentant dans leur circonscription?

M. Dewis: C'est assez difficile de vous répondre. Je ne sais même pas la réponse moi-même. Je ne sais pas, par exemple, à Uplands, combien de membres du personnel savent de quelle circonscription électorale ils who the member might be. I think it depends on the individual. There are many civilians who do not have a clue about what electoral district they are in, and who do not know who their member is until somebody brings something around to the door.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: All of us, I suspect—certainly I have—have written to constituents giving them my address and telephone number as such-and-such in Ottawa and such-and-such in Regina, and telling them that if at any time they have a problem, or an opinion they wish to present to me, would they please write; that no postage is required, and this sort of thing. I can communicate with all my constituents except the several hundred who are in the armed forces. Surely this is improper.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am just not clear. I will only take a minute on that last answer. The list that is used by the scrutineers at these three centres is not a list that comes from the commanding officers but is, in effect, your master list which, up until then, is a privileged document?

• 1235

Colonel Dewis: That comes from Canadian Forces Headquarters. As Mr. Hamel says, he does not keep any of these statements of ordinary residence.

Mr. Macquarrie: But the scrutineers get it?

Colonel Dewis: They get this list, and after the election is over they are bundled up and sent back to Mr. Hamel. He keeps them secret and under lock and key for a year, in accordance with the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, and then we send our security people over in a van to pick them up.

Mr. Macquarrie: It is too bad James Bond is dead! He would make a good scrutineer.

Mr. Forrestall: May I just ask then, why Section 29 states that these ...shall be open to inspection by any officially nominated candidate or his accredited representative

Mr. Hamel: It is not the same list. Section 29 refers to the commanding Officer's list, which is the list of the personnel under his command in that unit. There is no reference to the other list in The Canadian Forces Voting Rules. It is a list by electoral district, and there is some additional information such font partie, ou qui est leur représentant. Cela dépend des gens. Il y a bien des civils qui ne savent pas dans quelle circonscription électorale ils se trouvent et qui ne savent même pas qui est leur député avant qu'ils reçoivent des renseignements chez eux par le courrier.

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Tous, je suppose, du moins moi j'ai écrit aux résidents de ma circonscription pour leur donner mon adresse et mon numéro de téléphone et je leur ai dit que chaque fois, qu'ils avaient un problème ou une opinion qu'ils voulaient me communiquer, de m'écrire, port payé. Je peux communiquer avec tous mes électeurs, sauf les quelques centaines de militaires. Il me semble que cela n'est pas correct.

M. Macquarrie: Ce n'est pas très clair. Je ne vais prendre qu'un instant pour cette dernière réponse. La liste, dont se servent les scrutateurs dans ces trois centres, ne vient pas des officiers commandants mais elle est, en fait, un document privilégié.

Colonel Dewis: Elle vient du quartier-général des Forces armées canadiennes. Comme le mentionne M. Hamel, il ne conserve pas ces déclarations concernant les résidences habituelles.

M. Macquarrie: Toutefois, les scrutateurs la reçoivent?

Colonel Dewis: Ils la reçoivent, et une fois l'élection terminée, on les renvoie à M. Hamel, qui les garde secrètes et sous clef pendant un an en vertu de la Loi sur les élections fédérales contestées, et nous les envoyons chercher, en camion, par notre personnel de sécurité.

M. Macquarrie: C'est dommage que James Bond soit mort! Il aurait fait un bon scrutateur.

M. Forrestall: Puis-je demander alors pourquoi on dit à l'article 29 que ces listes

...doivent être disponibles pour examiner par tout candidat officiellement mis en présentation ou par son représentant accrédité.

M. Hamel: Ce n'est pas la même liste. L'article 29 se répète à la liste de l'officier commandant, qui est celle du personnel sous son commandement dans cette unité. On ne mentionne pas l'autre liste dans les Règlements électoraux des Forces canadiennes. C'est une liste faite d'après les circonscriptions électoraas rank, unit number, and so on. In my own opinion, the other list, with slight modifications, would probably be far less prone to be considered as dangerous than the list under Section 29.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: Then why does Section 28 (1) say, "Every commanding officer"? I would construe that to mean every officer in command of a group of Canadian soldiers. It would not matter whether they were in Canada or in Istanbul.

Colonel Dewis: That is right; every commanding officer, whether in Istanbul or Germany, does the list for his unit.

Mr. Forrestall: But it changes the meaning of Section 29.

Mr. Hamel: No; that list is mainly used for the taking of the votes of the people on the base and for the counting, when the scrutineers have to allocate. These ballots come from a fairly wide area and may be applicable to 264 districts and they have to allocate the proper envelope to the appropriate electoral district. They check the outer envelope to make sure that the member of the forces voting in Halifax, or Dartmouth-Halifax East, has actually indicated the right electoral district on his outer envelope, and that he is entitled to vote there.

Mr. Forrestall: Then there are two lists?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct; but one of them is not mentioned in the rules. The rules make reference only to the commanding officer's list.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt, but it is close to twenty minutes to one. We will not get through with this today.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman...

The Chairman: Yes?

Mr. Benjamin: I have to apologize; I may be prevented from being here this afternoon. I have one question on another matter...

The Chairman: We may not have a meeting this afternoon. Perhaps we should ask Colonel Dewis if he would be available next Tuesday?

Colonel Dewis: Certainly.

[Interpretation]

les, et il y a des renseignements supplémentaires, notamment le grade, le numéro. A mon avis, l'autre liste avec des changements mineurs serait probablement considérée comme beaucoup moins dangereuse que celle en vertu de l'article 29.

M. Macquarrie: Oui.

M. Forrestall: Alors pourquoi dit-on au paragraphe (1) de l'article 28: «Tout officier commandant»? Il s'agit, n'est-ce pas, de tout officier qui commande un groupe de militaires canadiens. Cela n'a pas d'importance s'ils sont au Canada ou à Istanbul.

M. Dewis: C'est exact; chaque officier commandant, qu'il soit à Istanbul ou en Allemagne, fait la liste concernant son unité.

M. Forrestall: Cela change le sens de l'article 29.

M. Hamel: Non. On se sert de cette liste surtout pour les votes des gens de la base et pour le dépouillement du scrutin lorsque les scrutateurs doivent les répartir. Ces votes viennent d'une très vaste région et peuvent s'appliquer à 264 circonscriptions, et ils doivent attribuer la bonne enveloppe à la bonne circonscription électorale. Ils vérifient l'enveloppe extérieure pour s'assurer que le membre des forces armées qui vote à Halifax ou à Dartmouth, Halifax-Est, a indiqué la bonne circonscription électorale sur son enveloppe extérieure, et qu'il a le droit de voter dans cette circonscription.

M. Forrestall: Il y a donc deux listes?

M. Hamel: C'est exact, mais une des deux n'est pas mentionnée dans les règles. Ces dernières ne font mention que de la liste de l'officier commandant.

Le président: Je suis désolé de vous interrompre, mais je crois qu'il est près d'une heure moins 20. Nous ne pourrions pas terminer cette question aujourd'hui.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président...

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Je m'excuse. Je ne pourrai peut-être pas me présenter cet après-midi. J'aurais une question à poser sur un autre sujet...

Le président: Nous n'aurons peut-être pas de réunion cet après-midi. Nous pourrions peut-être demander à M. Dewis s'il serait disponible mardi prochain?

M. Dewis: Certainement.

[Texte]

The Chairman: And you, too, Mr. Hamel? Perhaps we could sleep on these matters that have been discussed and then start again on Tuesday.

Perhaps we could ask you, Colonel Dewis, to prepare a document on the complaints you have received. You may want us to sit in camera, because you have stated that some regulations were really complicated and that you have received a lot of complaints. Perhaps you could tell us more about the complaints you received, so that we might be in a position to modify the Act as to prevent these complaints from arising again. Would that be too much to ask of you?

Colonel Dewis: No, sir; I would be pleased to do it.

The Chairman: I also want to inform members that, as we received authority at the last meeting to do so, I will table in the House this afternoon a report requesting the House to authorize the Committee to travel to Toronto. We discussed at the last meeting whether or not this might be necessary, and our Clerk, Mr. Virr, has been in touch with Mr. Dunlop in Toronto. They will not find it possible to come here, and they would like us to meet with them in Toronto. This could not be done before, as a tentative date, January 15. But, as requested, I will table in the House a report requesting authority to travel to Toronto to meet with the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario on the Elections Act. Is that agreed?

• 1240

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: We will adjourn this discussion until next Tuesday, with the same witnesses.

Mr. Forrestall: Will the meeting next Tuesday be in camera, then?

The Chairman: If it is requested by Colonel Dewis it will be in camera.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps we should ask the Colonel if it would be more useful to him to meet in camera. Would he feel freer to...?

Colonel Dewis: No; I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Forrestall: That is fine.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Et vous aussi, monsieur Hamel?

Nous pourrions penser aux questions que nous avons discutées, et reprendre mardi prochain.

On pourrait vous demander, monsieur Dewis, de préparer un document concernant les plaintes que vous avez reçues. Vous voudriez peut-être siéger à huis clos, car vous avez dit que certains règlements étaient assez complexes et que vous avez reçu beaucoup de plaintes. Vous pourriez nous en dire davantage au sujet de ces plaintes que vous avez reçues pour que nous soyons en mesure de modifier la Loi afin de mettre fin à ces plaintes. Serait-ce trop vous demander?

M. Dewis: Non, monsieur, je serais heureux de le faire.

Le président: Je veux également aviser les membres que, puisque nous avons eu, lors de la dernière réunion, l'autorisation de le faire, je pourrai déposer à la Chambre, cet après-midi, un rapport demandant à la Chambre d'autoriser le Comité à voyager à Toronto. Nous avons étudié lors de la dernière réunion si cela serait nécessaire ou non, et notre greffier, M. Virr, a communiqué avec M. Dunlop à Toronto. Ils ne pourront pas venir ici, et ils aimeraient qu'on les rencontre à Toronto. Cela ne pourra pas se faire, pour l'instant du moins, avant le 15 janvier. Toutefois, comme on me l'a demandé, je vais déposer à la Chambre un rapport demandant l'autorisation de nous déplacer à Toronto pour rencontrer le Comité spécial sur la Loi électorale de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario. Êtes-vous d'accord?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Nous allons ajourner jusqu'à mardi prochain et les mêmes témoins comparaitront.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que la réunion de mardi prochain sera à huis clos alors?

Le président: Si M. Dewis en fait la demande, ce sera à huis clos.

M. Forrestall: On pourrait peut-être demander à M. Dewis si une réunion à huis clos serait plus utile. Se sentirait-il plus libre de...?

M. Dewis: Non, je ne crois pas, monsieur le président.

M. Forrestall: C'est bien.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

COMITÉ PERMANENT

ON

DES

PRIVILEGES
AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES
ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 3

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1969

LE MARDI 2 DÉCEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir Procès-verbal)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman
and Messrs.

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Président
Vice-président
et MM.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
Code,
Côté (Richelieu),
Duquet,

Forest,
Forrestall,
Fortin,
Francis,
Howard (Skeena),
Howe,

Jerome,
Lefebvre,
Macquarrie,
Marceau,
Murphy,
Trudel—20.

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, December 2, 1969.
(4)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 9:40 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau—(10).

Witnesses: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer, Colonel J. P. Dewis, Assistant Judge Advocate General.

The Committee continued its study of the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Hamel made a brief statement regarding the request to provide lists of Canadian Forces electors, by constituencies, to Candidates' representatives.

The members resumed their questioning of the witnesses in respect to the Canadian Forces Voting Rules.

At 11:00 a.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the chair.

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le MARDI 2 décembre 1969
(4)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit ce matin à 9 h. 40. Le président, M. Laflamme, occupe le fauteuil.

Présents: MM. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Marceau—(10).

Témoins: M. J. M. Hamel, directeur général des élections, et le colonel J. P. Dewis, juge-avocat général adjoint.

Le Comité continue à étudier la Loi électorale du Canada.

M. Hamel fait une brève déclaration relative à la demande qui a été faite que l'on fournisse aux représentants des candidats une liste, par circonscription, des électeurs des Forces armées du Canada.

Les membres du Comité recommencent à interroger les témoins sur les Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes.

A 11 h. du matin, le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'à nouvelle convocation du président.

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by electronic apparatus)

Tuesday, December 2, 1969

● 0942

The Chairman: Order, please. I believe we can continue with the evidence of Colonel Dewis. Would you like to come forward, Colonel Dewis?

At the adjournment of the last meeting, Colonel Dewis was asked if there was any possibility of having a list of the members of the Armed Forces distributed by constituencies with their addresses. Before we put questions to Colonel Dewis, I believe that the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Hamel, would like to make some comments. We will distribute copies of the lists of candidates provided to all members of the Armed Forces, plus a sample of the ballot.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you have security clearance?

The Chairman: It is copies of the candidates.

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): And we put "sample" on it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Following last Thursday's meeting, Colonel Dewis and I looked into this question of making available by electoral district the list of members of the forces with their postal addresses. I pointed out to you that we already have this list for purely administrative reasons but because of some information it contains, it has to be considered Restricted. We are now satisfied that with some modifications and with new programming on the machine it could be made available. I understand, after talking with Colonel Dewis, because the Department of National Defence would be mainly involved, that the Department could provide me with copies of each of those 264 lists, roughly within three weeks following the issue of the writ. Then I would send to each of my returning officers one or two copies of the list for his own electoral district. Then that list could be open to inspection to officially nominated candidates or their accredited agents. Even extracts could be made from that list.

If this were adopted, perhaps the Committee might wish to tighten the security with

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 2 décembre 1969

Le président: A l'ordre s'il-vous-plaît. Messieurs, nous allons continuer le témoignage de M. Dewis. Voulez-vous vous asseoir ici en avant, monsieur Dewis?

La semaine dernière, au moment de l'ajournement, on a demandé à M. Dewis s'il était possible qu'il nous donne une liste des membres des Forces armées ainsi que leur adresse et leur circonscription.

Avant que nous interrogeons M. Dewis, je crois que le Directeur général des élections, M. Hamel, voudrait faire quelques commentaires. Nous allons distribuer aux députés des listes des candidats, listes qui sont distribuées à tous les membres des Forces armées avant le scrutin en plus d'un exemplaire du bulletin de vote.

M. Forrestall: Exigez-vous le certificat de sécurité?

Le président: C'est une liste des candidats.

M. Jean-Marc Hamel (Directeur général des élections): Merci, monsieur le président. À la suite de la réunion de jeudi dernier, le Colonel Dewis et moi avons voulu vous distribuer les listes des membres des Forces armées par districts électoraux ainsi que leurs adresses. Nous préparons cette liste pour des motifs administratifs uniquement, mais en raison de certaines informations qu'elle contient, c'est une liste qu'on doit considérer comme confidentielle.

Il nous a été possible de la photocopier pour la distribuer. Après m'être entretenu avec M. Dewis, j'ai cru comprendre que le ministère de la Défense nationale pourrait fournir des exemplaires de ces 264 listes, disons, dans trois semaines après l'émission du bref d'élection. Ensuite, je pourrais envoyer à chacun de mes officiers rapporteurs un ou deux exemplaires de la liste qui a trait à son propre district électoral. Ensuite, les candidats mis en candidature eux-mêmes pourraient vérifier la liste. On pourrait même en tirer des extraits.

Par conséquent, si nous procédions de cette façon le Comité voudrait peut-être apporter respect to the so-called commanding officers lists. You will recall that last week I expressed some concern as to the commanding officers lists, each list prepared by the commanding officer being available, being open to inspection to any officially nominated candidate. So perhaps if the other solution were adopted, the Committee might consider deleting the requirement that the commanding officers lists be made available as well. Maybe the necessity would not be the same then.

[Text]

• 0945

Mr. Macquarrie: Under this arrangement, then, there would be to each returning officer a list of the military service voters from that constituency.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Macquarrie: So that a candidate or his representative would in fact be contacting the returning officer rather than charging into several military bases.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

Mr. Macquarrie: It strikes me as a much better way of getting those names.

Mr. Hamel: I do not think there would be any objection, not only to making it open to inspection but to letting officially nominated candidates and their agents make extracts therefrom. We could probably make available to each returning officer two copies, perhaps even three copies, if necessary. We are restricted by the number of copies the machine will turn out within the time allowed. Furthermore, we have made some inquiries with photocopying equipment companies, and the size or format of the sheets turned out by the machine does not fit standard photocopying machines, so we had a problem there. This means that it would not be feasible, and I do not think it would be possible, to make available a copy to each candidate because where there are more than three candidates, we would not have copies for the extra candidates beyond three. However, we would certainly have no objection to making it available to the returning officer and in more than one copy—maybe two or three. Perhaps it could even be borrowed by a candidate for a few days.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. My one concern would be to be sure that they came out in time. You mentioned three weeks.

Mr. Hamel: Colonel Dewis informs me that they are equipped to turn out those lists certaines réserves pour ce qui est de la liste des commandants. La semaine dernière, j'ai exprimé certaines réserves concernant la liste présentée par les commandants et qui pouvait être révisée ou examinée par n'importe quel candidat officiel. Dans ce cas, si l'on adoptait l'autre solution le Comité pourrait ordonner que l'on exige plus que cette liste soit également disponible.

[Interpretation]

M. Macquarrie: Grâce à cet arrangement, chaque officier rapporteur disposerait d'une liste des votants des Forces armées qui se présentent dans sa circonscription.

M. Hamel: C'est exact.

M. Macquarrie: Un candidat ou son représentant entreraient en communication avec son officier rapporteur au lieu de s'adresser directement aux diverses bases militaires.

M. Hamel: C'est exact.

M. Macquarrie: Ce me semble être une bien meilleure formule pour obtenir la liste des noms.

M. Hamel: Comme je le répète, je ne crois pas que personne s'opposerait à ce que les candidats officiels en fassent l'examen et même en tirent des extraits. Nous pourrions peut-être distribuer deux ou trois exemplaires à tous les officiers rapporteurs.

Nous sommes limités par le nombre d'exemplaires que nous pouvons imprimer dans le temps dont nous disposons. En outre, notre équipement ou notre outillage ne donne pas le format qui conviendrait à la machine. C'est donc question d'ordre pratique. Il ne serait donc pas possible d'envoyer un exemplaire à chaque candidat. Nous n'en n'aurions pas pour les candidats lorsque leur nombre dépasse trois. Nous n'aurions toutefois aucune objection à faire parvenir plus d'un exemplaire à l'officier rapporteur à qui le candidat pourrait l'emprunter pour quelques jours.

M. Macquarrie: Ce qui me préoccupe, c'est le temps qu'on aurait. La limite de trois semaines m'inquiète un peu.

M. Hamel: M. Dewis me dit qu'on a probablement l'outillage nécessaire pour imprimer within three weeks—between 15 and 21 days. For me to dispatch copies of those lists to each of my 264 returning officers is a matter of two or three days, and four days at the most for the really isolated places such as the extreme West, North or East. By and large it would mean that these lists would be available roughly between four and four and a half weeks before polling day. Normally it is two to two and a half weeks before nomination day in most electoral districts.

[Texte]

Now perhaps I should mention that the postal address on these lists will be the postal address available in the file at the time the list is prepared. Am I correct on this? As you know, there is quite a movement in the forces, so it may very well mean that by the time the list reaches the electoral district, some of those members on the list may have moved to a new camp. The statement of ordinary residence would still be the same. In other words, the member would still be eligible to vote in your electoral district. But instead of being in Halifax, he may very well be in Esquimalt or Comox. There may be the odd case where a letter may take some time to reach your constituent but by and large I would not think that this would be a serious problem. There may be the odd problem, but not on a broad scale.

Mr. Forrestall: It would account for probably all but 5 or 10 per cent who might in that period move from one base to another.

• 0950

Colonel J. P. Dewis (Deputy Judge Advocate General, Department of National Defence): Yes, and I might say it would not mean that anything mailed to him would not reach him, because it would be redirected from the unit. Of course, even our present commanding officers list from each unit is prepared not later than two weeks after the election is called, and that list, after two weeks of preparation, is by no means accurate. People may have been posted into the unit 24 hours after the list has been prepared or may have been posted out. Any kind of list that we give you is only going to be accurate within a certain percentage. It is physically impossible to do any better because all the information, to get into the machines, has to come from the various units. Some of the instructions and postings originate from Ottawa but many of them are done locally, and to get them into the machine there is a time factor of maybe 30 or even 45 days.

[Interprétation]

ces listes dans trois semaines. Disons entre quinze et vingt et un jours. Pour adresser des exemplaires de ces listes à mes 264 officiers rapporteurs, cela pourrait prendre deux, trois ou quatre jours tout au plus, pour les endroits les plus éloignés situés aux extrémités du pays. Dans l'ensemble, ces listes seraient accessibles, disons, entre quatre et quatre semaines et demie avant le jour du scrutin, soit deux semaines ou deux semaines et demie avant le jour des présentations dans la plupart des districts électoraux.

Je pourrais peut-être mentionner un autre point. Les adresses postales seraient celles que nous avons dans les dossiers au moment où la liste est préparée. C'est exact, n'est-ce pas? Vous savez qu'il y a beaucoup de mutations dans les Forces armées et au moment où la liste parvient au district électoral, il peut y avoir des gens qui figurent sur la liste qui ont été mutés ailleurs, tout en pouvant tout de même voter dans le même district électoral puisque sa déclaration concernant sa résidence ordinaire resterait la même. Au lieu d'avoir leur adresse à tel ou tel endroit, ils pourraient se trouver, par exemple, à Comox ou à Esquimalt ou ailleurs. Ces cas peuvent se présenter. Dans l'ensemble, j'imagine que cela ne serait pas un très grave problème. Il pourra se présenter ici et là.

M. Forrestall: Disons un jeu de 5 p. 100 ou 10 p. 100 pour ceux qui sont mutés à un autre poste.

Le Colonel J. P. Dewis (Juge avocat général adjoint, ministère de la Défense nationale): Évidemment on tiendra compte de la nouvelle adresse mais le commandant de chaque unité prépare la liste au moins deux semaines après que l'élection a été annoncée et il y a des gens qui arrivent dans cette unité 24 heures après que la liste a été préparée. Cette liste est loin d'être à jour. On veut bien dresser cette liste le plus exactement possible, mais il nous est matériellement impossible de faire mieux, puisqu'il faut que les renseignements nous parviennent des diverses unités. Beaucoup de ces listes nous viennent d'Ottawa ou sont dressées localement, et le temps écoulé peut être de 30 à 45 jours.

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: First of all, on that list you would have, in alphabetical order, the surname, the initials, the rank and the postal address, plus some additional information such as the social insurance number which may not be of interest to you but which I understand is necessary for the machine to actually reproduce other information. However, you would have the essentials: name, initials, rank, and postal address.

Mr. Forrestall: Would this also include the wife of an elector who, under the Forces voting rules outside Canada, qualifies as a Forces voter?

Colonel Dewis: No, this list would not include them. We have no provision at all for putting that in the machine. The total of the ones outside Canada might not be more than a couple of thousand. We have quite a number, particularly in the land environment, the army, of single people outside Canada. Quite a number of the air force are older technicians and are married. So in respect of this list there would be an over-all shortage probably of three or four thousand, but of course it is relatively small for each electoral district.

Mr. Chairman, might I say a word about the lists which are now provided by the commanding officer under Rule 29. There has been a security problem in that, our security people have not liked it, but we have always realized that candidates must have some sort of list available. I think you are aware, of course, that although the CO's unit list will show all the people in his unit maybe only 30 per cent of them are eligible to vote in an electoral district where the candidate is. So this is not too helpful to the candidate. But if we were to introduce this additional list I think our security people would feel obliged to insist on not making the CO unit lists available to candidates as well. Do not forget that any officially nominated candidate or an agent could go to every unit in and outside Canada and get those CO's unit lists. Well, if you match them up with the electoral district lists it does bring on a security problem. We would hope that if we introduce this new postal machine list that we are talking about, the Committee would agree to revising Rule 29 to provide that the CO unit lists will be available only to the special returning officer

[Interpretation]

M. Hamel: Tout d'abord, vous auriez sur cette liste, par ordre alphabétique, le nom de famille des électeurs, leurs initiales, leur rang et leur adresse postale, ainsi que certains renseignements supplémentaires comme leur numéro de Sécurité sociale, qui ne vous est peut-être pas utile, mais qui, je crois, est nécessaire pour permettre à la machine de reproduire les autres renseignements. En tout cas, vous auriez les éléments essentiels: nom, initiales, rang et adresse postale.

M. Forrestall: Est-ce que les épouses des électeurs, qui, en vertu des Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes à l'étranger, ont le droit de voter au même titre que les membres des Forces armées, figureraient aussi sur cette liste?

M. Dewis: Non, elles ne figureraient pas sur cette liste. Rien n'est prévu pour que l'on enregistre aussi ces renseignements-là dans la machine. Il n'y aurait peut-être que 2,000 personnes au total à l'extérieur du Canada. Il y a un assez grand nombre de célibataires à l'extérieur du Canada, surtout dans l'armée de terre. Bon nombre des membres de l'aviation sont des techniciens plus âgés et sont mariés. Il manquerait donc sans doute sur cette liste trois ou quatre mille personnes en tout, mais, bien entendu, cela ne représente qu'un nombre assez faible pour chaque circonscription électorale.

Monsieur le président, permettez-moi de dire un mot des listes que fournit actuellement le commandant en vertu de la Règle 29. Il se pose là un problème de sécurité, et nos spécialistes de la question s'opposent à cette méthode, mais nous nous sommes toujours rendu compte qu'il fallait bien que les candidats eussent à leur disposition une liste quelconque. Vous savez certainement que, bien que tous les membres de l'unité figurent sur la liste d'unité du commandant, seuls 30 p. 100 d'entre eux peut-être ont le droit de voter dans la circonscription électorale où se présente un candidat donné. Ce genre de liste n'est donc pas d'un grand secours au candidat. Mais si nous introduisions cette liste supplémentaire, je crois que nos spécialistes de la sécurité se verraient dans l'obligation d'insister pour que l'on ne mette plus à la disposition des candidats les listes d'unité des commandants. N'oubliez pas que n'importe quel candidat officiel ou n'importe quel agent pourraient se rendre dans toutes les unités au Canada et à l'étranger et obtenir ces listes d'unité des commandants. Si l'on combine ces listes avec les listes des circonscriptions élecin the four voting headquarters, as is now done.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Well, that is eminently fair. There would not be any point in going to the commanding officer of a base in a riding and asking to look at his list because his list includes only the names of those—and I gather this is what you are saying—who are on that particular base.

Colonel Dewis: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: Am I correct that in their statement of residence you might find that better than half of them might have their voting franchise in some other riding.

Colonel Dewis: There might be only one-third who are actually eligible to vote in the electoral district where the unit is located.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering about security. I did not understand where the security angle would come in.

Colonel Dewis: Well, the security people say that if you get the entire list of the Canadian Forces, or practically an entire list, with rank, numbers, trades, and units, you can build up practically an order of battle. You can decide where what type of unit is located, how many people are there, what their jobs are, what the objective of the unit is and so on. Now, true enough, I suppose any agent could ferret this out, but it is just more difficult if you take certain precautions. If you have a list available and want to find out what a particular unit does in Halifax, there is no question about it—an agent could probably go there and find out. But it is just too simple if he has all these lists—he does not have to go to every unit in Canada or overseas, he can just take these sheets of paper and look at the trades and the ranks, the name of the unit and where it is, and just sit in his office and sort of build up the picture.

[Interprétation]

torales, il se pose un problème de sécurité. Nous espérons que si nous introduisions la nouvelle liste pour machine postale dont nous parlons, le Comité accepterait de réviser la Règle 29 de sorte que les listes d'unité des commandants ne soient mises à la disposition que des présidents d'élection spéciaux des quatre centres électoraux, comme cela se fait à l'heure actuelle.

M. Forrestall: C'est parfaitement normal. Cela ne servirait à rien d'aller trouver le commandant d'une base dans une circonscription et de demander à regarder sa liste, car cette liste ne comporte que les noms—et je suppose que c'est là ce que vous voulez dire—de ceux qui se trouvent sur cette base en particulier.

M. Dewis: En effet.

M. Forrestall: Ai-je raison de penser que dans leur déclaration de domicile, on trouverait peut-être que plus de la moitié de ces gens-là sont inscrits comme électeurs dans une autre circonscription.

M. Dewis: Il n'y en aurait peut-être qu'un tiers qui aient le droit de voter dans la circonscription électorale où se trouve l'unité.

M. Howe: Monsieur le président, je me pose des questions sur la sécurité. Je ne vois pas ce que la sécurité a à voir là-dedans.

M. Dewis: Les spécialistes de la sécurité disent que si l'on obtient une liste entière, ou presque, des membres des Forces armées du Canada, sur laquelle figurent leur rang, leur numéro, leur spécialité et leur unité, on peut pour ainsi dire mettre au point un plan de bataille. On peut déterminer où se trouve quel type d'unité, combien de gens l'unité comporte, quel est le travail de ces gens-là, quel est l'objectif de l'unité, et ainsi de suite. Évidemment, je suppose que n'importe quel agent pourrait découvrir tous ces renseignements, mais disons que c'est plus difficile si l'on prend certaines précautions. S'il y a une liste de disponible, et que l'on veuille découvrir ce que fait une unité donnée à Halifax, il est indéniable qu'un agent peut se rendre là-bas et obtenir les renseignements dont il a besoin. Mais la chose est vraiment trop simple s'il a toutes les listes. Il n'a pas besoin de se rendre dans chaque unité au Canada ou outre-mer; il lui suffit de prendre ces feuilles de papier, de regarder quels sont la spécialité et le rang des membres de l'unité, ainsi que le nom de l'unité et son emplacement, et de se faire une idée de la situation en restant simplement assis dans son bureau.

[Text]

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the witness would agree that the electoral law and the priorities of maximizing the democratic process should have some precedence to pretty well anything else. The candidates would not really be interested in having rank, trade and that kind of technical information related to a persons's service. All a candidate is interested in are the names of all those who are eligible to vote in his constituency and their addresses—just as long as there is some degree of certainty that communications would get to him from candidates and anyone else who wanted to write to him.

Could the Services not devise some method of centralizing their post office or some such method to handle this so that there is access to the names, addresses and the constituencies in which these people vote?

Colonel Dewis: Well, this is what this list that Mr. Hamel is speaking about would do. It would have his SIN number, his name and his initials and, the way the lists are now, it would have his rank, but there would not be any trade. Then it would have his unit and his postal address. I understand from the security people that there is no particular security involved in that. But if we retained the present CO's list and continued to make them available as well, reading the two of them together is not so good because, as far as the CO's lists are concerned, they are used not only by the civilian special returning officers in the four voting territories but are used by the deputy returning officer in the Service voting place within his unit and, for identification, he wants the rank on it and so on. But there would be no security problem with these lists that Mr. Hamel is speaking about, it would have the postal address and it would be by electoral district, and if I wanted to check on the rank it may be that the security people would sooner give a SIN number and the name and the initials, the unit, and the postal address which really, as you suggest, is all a candidate requires. The only thing is that the machines are programmed to come out with the rank, but if it does not come out with the trade and rank it is my understanding that there is no problem. If there is a security problem in putting in the rank then I think the machines can drop

[Interpretation]

Le président: Oui, monsieur Benjamin?

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, le témoin admettrait, j'en suis certain, que la loi électorale et la nécessité de la rendre aussi démocratique que possible doivent passer avant tout le reste. Cela n'intéresserait pas vraiment les candidats d'avoir le rang, la spécialité, et autres renseignements techniques du même genre qui ont trait au service d'une personne. Tout ce qui intéresse le candidat, c'est d'avoir le nom de tous ceux qui ont le droit de voter dans sa circonscription, ainsi que leur adresse—à supposer, bien sûr, qu'il puisse être à peu près certain que ces personnes recevraient les communications des candidats ou de quiconque voudrait leur écrire.

Est-ce que les Forces armées ne pourraient pas trouver un moyen de centraliser leur service postal, ou quelque autre méthode, de sorte que l'on puisse obtenir les noms, les adresses, et les circonscriptions électorales dans lesquelles ces gens votent?

M. Dewis: C'est précisément ce que permettrait de faire la liste dont parle M. Hamel. Cette liste donnerait le numéro d'immatriculation à la Sécurité sociale de chaque personne, son nom de famille et ses initiales, et aussi, selon la façon dont sont faites les listes à l'heure actuelle, son rang, mais pas sa spécialité. La liste indiquerait aussi l'unité et l'adresse postale de chaque personne. Les spécialistes de la sécurité ne pensent pas que cela puisse poser de problème. Mais si nous conservions les listes actuelles des commandants et que nous continuions à les mettre aussi à la disposition des candidats, ce serait plus ennuyeux, car on pourrait consulter les deux listes en même temps: pour ce qui est des listes des commandants, elles servent non seulement aux présidents d'élection spéciaux des quatre territoires électoraux, qui sont des civils, mais aussi au président d'élection adjoint du bureau de vote des Forces armées situé dans son unité, qui, à des fins d'identification, voudrait que le rang, et ainsi de suite, figurent sur la liste. Mais les listes dont parle M. Hamel ne poseraient aucun problème de sécurité: elles comporteraient l'adresse postale et seraient établies par circonscription électorale, et si l'on voulait vérifier le rang, il se pourrait fort bien que les spécialistes de la sécurité préfèrent donner le numéro d'immatriculation à la Sécurité sociale, le nom de famille et les initiales, l'unité et l'adresse postale, qui sont en fait, comme vous le dites, les that, but the candidate would get what he would want: the name and the postal address.

[Texte]

The Chairman: I have a supplementary question. Instead of having the rank of the members on the list which could be available through the deputy returning officers, would it be possible to have their metrical number without rank?

Colonel Dewis: Well, they would have their service insurance number. We have dropped our official individual military numbers. Everybody has as his official number their service insurance number. It could be that they could drop the rank although, as I say, all the correspondence, the machines and everything in the Forces always had a rank. I want to check out that one point about the ranks with our security people and if they recommend we can drop it, I guess we can do that. Although having the rank makes it a little easier, it is not essential.

• 1000

The Chairman: If I understand the point raised by Mr. Benjamin I think it is a very valid one. The members of the Committee are interested in getting in touch with everyone available and if the giving of rank poses a security problem, then we do not want that—as long as we can get in touch with them.

Colonel Dewis: I think if the Committee could leave that with me, I could clear with our security people whether it would be a wise procedure to put in the rank or whether the security people would rather drop the rank and just give the number, the name, the initials, the unit and the postal address.

The Chairman: Your time is just about up. Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I find it difficult enough in addressing the Admiral as General, I do not know how I could get around the calling him mister.

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, in explaining this I am just trying to make it as easy as possible, I do not buy this security angle. I seuls renseignements dont le candidat ait besoin. Le seul ennui, c'est que les machines sont prévues pour indiquer aussi le rang, mais tant qu'elles ne donnent pas la spécialité et le rang, je ne pense pas qu'il y ait de problème. Si l'indication du rang pose un problème de sécurité, je pense que l'on pourrait faire en sorte que les machines ne le donnent plus, mais le candidat obtiendrait toujours ce qu'il lui faut: le nom et l'adresse postale.

[Interprétation]

Le président: J'ai une question supplémentaire à poser. Plutôt que d'indiquer le rang des membres des Forces armées sur la liste que le candidat pourrait obtenir du président d'élection adjoint, serait-il possible de n'indiquer que le numéro d'immatriculation sans le rang?

M. Dewis: Il y aurait le numéro d'assurance des Forces armées. Nous n'avons plus officiellement de numéro individuel d'immatriculation à l'Armée. Chacun a pour numéro officiel son numéro d'assurance des Forces armées. Peut-être pourrait-on cesser d'indiquer le rang, encore que, je le répète, toute la correspondance, toutes les machines, et ainsi de suite, de l'Armée eussent toujours comporté l'indication du rang. Il faut que je m'assure de cette question du rang auprès de nos spécialistes de la sécurité, et s'ils disent que nous pouvons cesser de l'indiquer, je suppose que nous pourrions le faire. L'indication du rang facilite un peu les choses, mais elle n'est pas indispensable.

Le président: Si j'ai bien compris ce qu'a dit M. Benjamin, je crois que c'était un argument très valable. Ce qui intéresse les membres du Comité, c'est que l'on puisse mettre en rapport avec tous les gens disponibles, et si l'indication du rang pose un problème de sécurité, nous y renoncerons, à condition qu'il reste possible de se mettre en rapport avec les gens.

M. Dewis: Je pense que si le Comité s'en remettait à moi, je pourrais m'informer auprès de nos spécialistes de la sécurité pour savoir s'il serait prudent d'indiquer le rang, ou s'ils préféreraient qu'on laisse le rang de côté et qu'on indique seulement le numéro, le nom, les initiales, l'unité et l'adresse postale.

Le président: Votre temps de parole est presque écoulé, monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: J'ai déjà assez de mal à appeler l'amiral «général»; je ne vois pas comment je pourrais l'appeler «monsieur».

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, j'essaie d'exprimer la chose en termes aussi simples que possible. Je ne suis pas d'accord avec suspect that there are half a dozen countries now that know how many men we have, where they are and what they are doing. If they want to know, they already have the information, but you people have to have something to worry about, so this will make it easier for you.

[Text]

The Chairman: Before we adjourned our meetings last week, Colonel Dewis, you stated that the regulations which apply to the armed forces now were complicated and you had received complaints. I just would like to know if you could give us a résumé of the complaints you have received as well as an indication of what amendments could be made to avoid these complaints from recurring.

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of administrative amendments which should be made to the rules to facilitate their operation, but the Chief Electoral Officer has a substantial list of those. They are not really matters of complaint, it is just that over the years we have found certain administrative procedures that should be changed. They are not matters of substance, so I would leave those points to the Chief Electoral Officer.

In my opening remarks at the last meeting I did say how much the forces appreciated having this voting system as it ensured that all members of the forces received ample opportunity to cast their ballots. However, there were one, two or three objections or complaints which were received, not only from members of the forces, but from departmental officials, National Defence, members of Parliament and the public. You no doubt have read editorials after every election or just before it complaining about the segregation of the vote of the forces by class and the late reporting which means that one or two seats may be in doubt by reason of the service vote not being reported until four or five days later.

There have been suggested over the years a fairly substantial number of alternate methods for taking the service vote, together with variations of the alternates and variations of the variations, in order to try to merge the forces vote with the civilian vote and also to get the counting done and announced at the same time as the civilian polls. I think if you read the previous Minutes of Proceedings of this Committee you will find that a large cette question de sécurité. Il doit y avoir à l'heure actuelle une demi-douzaine de pays qui savent combien nous avons d'hommes, où ils se trouvent, et ce qu'ils font. S'ils veulent savoir quelque chose, ils ont déjà les renseignements nécessaires. Mais il vous faut toujours un sujet d'inquiétude; cela vous facilitera les choses.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Avant que nous ne levions la séance la semaine dernière, monsieur Dewis, vous avez déclaré que les règles actuelles concernant les Forces armées étaient compliquées, et que vous aviez reçu des plaintes. J'aimerais simplement savoir si vous pourriez nous donner un résumé des plaintes que vous avez reçues, ainsi qu'une indication des modifications qui pourraient être apportées afin d'éviter que ces plaintes ne se renouvellent.

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, il y a un certain nombre de modifications administratives qu'il faudrait apporter aux règles pour en faciliter l'application, mais le directeur général des élections en a une liste assez considérable. Ce ne sont pas réellement des aspects qui fassent l'objet de mécontentement; mais, au cours des années, nous avons découvert que certaines méthodes administratives devraient être modifiées. Il ne s'agit pas de la substance des règlements, et je préfère donc laisser ces questions au directeur général des élections.

Au cours de ma déclaration préliminaire, lors de la dernière séance, j'ai dit combien les membres des Forces armées étaient heureux de ce régime de scrutin, qui leur donnait à tous l'occasion de voter. Toutefois, nous avons reçu deux ou trois objections ou plaintes, non seulement des membres des Forces armées, mais aussi des hauts fonctionnaires du Ministère, de la Défense nationale, de députés, et du grand public. Vous avez certainement lu des éditoriaux, après les élections ou juste avant, dans lesquels on se plaignait de ce que les votes des Forces armées étaient mis à part et de ce que les résultats étaient donnés avec du retard, de sorte qu'un ou deux sièges pouvaient rester en suspens du fait que les votes des Forces armées n'étaient transmis que quatre ou cinq jours plus tard.

On a proposé, au cours des années, un nombre assez considérable de méthodes possibles pour le scrutin des Forces armées, ainsi que des variations de ces méthodes et des variations des variations elles-mêmes, afin d'essayer de fusionner les votes des Forces armées avec ceux des civils et, aussi, de permettre que le dépouillement soit fait et les résultats annoncés en même temps que pour les votes des civils. Je crois que si vous lisez number of these suggestions were considered, but were not adopted.

[Texte]

I do not know whether this is the time to suggest the alternates and variations or whether that should be...

The Chairman: If there is any time, I think this is the time.

Mr. Forrestall: There is no better time than now.

Colonel Dewis: I would just leave those two for the moment, then, and come back to them. I did mention at the last meeting that a number of service people complained about the possibility of their individual ballots not being secret. I think it was well demonstrated at the last meeting that there is no validity to that and the secrecy of the individual ballot is amply protected. The Chief Electoral Officer put a statement in the front of the voting rules which indicates the mechanical procedures to be followed by his officials in the four voting territories. I personally have no doubt at all about the secrecy and when people in the forces complain to me about it, after I explain this procedure to them, they are convinced, but, as I said at the last meeting, I do not get an opportunity to speak to everybody. However, I think there is no validity about the individual ballot not being secret.

• 1005

The other point is that every serviceman—not every, but a large number of the servicemen—complain bitterly when they find they are unable to vote in the ordinary local civilian poll in the area where they have owned their house for three, four or five years and on which they have paid municipal taxes and so forth. When they find they have to vote through the service procedure and cannot vote in the local civilian poll, they are very aggrieved.

There may be some validity to that complaint, but we must remember that in January or February of every year a member of the forces can change his place of ordinary residence to the place where he is living as a result of his service by completing a statement. So if he is posted to a unit, say, in September, October, December or even January or February, when he gets there he is in a position to make a statement changing his place of ordinary residence to that place and when a general election is called, he can vote at a civilian poll in that electoral district.

[Interprétation]

les comptes rendus des délibérations précédentes du Comité, vous constaterez que bon nombre de ces propositions ont été envisagées et n'ont pas été adoptées.

Je ne sais pas si le moment est opportun pour proposer les diverses solutions et variations possibles, ou s'il faudrait...

Le président: Je ne pense pas qu'il pourrait y avoir de moment plus opportun.

M. Forrestall: C'est le moment ou jamais.

M. Dewis: Dans ce cas, je vais laisser ces deux aspects de côté pour le moment, puis y revenir plus tard. J'ai dit au cours de la dernière séance qu'un certain nombre des membres des Forces armées s'étaient plaints de ce que leur vote individuel risquait de ne pas être secret. Je crois que l'on a bien prouvé, lors de la dernière séance, que ces plaintes étaient sans fondement, et que le caractère secret des votes individuels était bien protégé. Le directeur général des élections fait une déclaration en préface aux Règles électorales dans laquelle il indique la marche à suivre à ses représentants dans les quatre territoires électoraux. Pour ma part, je ne doute absolument pas que le secret soit protégé, et, lorsque les membres des Forces armées viennent se plaindre à ce sujet, il me suffit, pour les convaincre, de leur expliquer cette façon de procéder; mais, comme je l'ai dit lors de la dernière séance, je n'ai pas l'occasion de parler à tout le monde. Toutefois, je pense qu'il n'y a aucune raison de dire que les votes individuels ne sont pas secrets.

Toutefois, tous les militaires—pas tous, mais bon nombre d'entre eux—se plaignent amèrement de ne pouvoir voter aux bureaux de vote ordinaires pour civils de la localité dans laquelle, depuis trois, quatre ou cinq ans, ils sont propriétaires d'une maison sur laquelle ils paient des taxes municipales, et ainsi de suite. Lorsqu'ils se trouvent dans l'obligation de voter selon la méthode spéciale des Forces armées et qu'ils ne peuvent voter au bureau de vote local pour civils, ils sont fort mécontents. Leurs plaintes ne sont peut-être pas sans fondement, mais il ne faut pas oublier qu'en janvier ou février de chaque année, tout membre des Forces armées peut, en remplissant une déclaration, faire remplacer son lieu de domicile habituel par l'endroit où il vit par suite de son service. Donc, s'il est affecté à une unité en septembre, octobre, décembre, ou même janvier ou février, disons, il peut, dès qu'il arrive à l'endroit en question, remplir une déclaration pour faire modifier le lieu de sa résidence habituelle, et, lorsque des élections générales ont lieu, il peut voter à un

[Text]

Therefore, if that type of individual complains that he cannot vote in the ordinary civilian poll where he is serving, it is really his own fault because he had a chance in January or February to change it. So this is not really a very serious problem. However, if he is posted in February, March or April and then a general election is called, say, for June, he will not be in a position to vote in that electoral district and this does happen in some cases, but, all in all, I do not attach too much importance to that type of complaint.

As I said, the only complaints that I can think of offhand that are really serious are the two points I mentioned, the segregation of the service vote by class and the late reporting.

As far as the segregation is concerned, the complete merging of the service vote with the civilian vote could only be done if service people were to vote entirely as civilians. If they vote in Canada you still would be faced with the problem of the concentration of military personnel, say, at Greenwood, Petawawa, Gagetown or Borden and while there would be civilian polls there, it would be quite obvious, if you looked at those polls, how that segment of the service voted and as it is quite a representative group, you could still come to the conclusion that the service voted generally one way or the other. In provincial elections, in fact, service personnel do vote as ordinary civilians.

I think I mentioned at the last meeting about one Nova Scotian election where it came out in the headlines that the service, the RCAF, voted Liberal or Conservative—I forget which now—because they had two civilian polls at Greenwood, but it happened that the only people at Greenwood where these polls were located were the service people and their dependants. So if it comes out 90 per cent for one candidate or another, you have a pretty good idea how the service voted.

[Interpretation]

bureau de vote pour civils dans la circonscription électorale où il se trouve. Donc, si une personne se plaint de ne pouvoir voter au bureau de vote ordinaire pour civils de la localité dans laquelle il est en service, c'est en fait sa faute, puisqu'il a eu l'occasion, en janvier ou en février, de faire modifier son domicile. Ce n'est donc pas là un problème très grave. Toutefois, si un membre des Forces armées est affecté à une unité en février, mars ou avril, et que des élections générales aient lieu en juin, disons, il ne pourra voter dans la circonscription électorale où il se trouve. Cela se produit dans certains cas, mais, dans l'ensemble, je n'attache pas trop d'importance à ce genre de plaintes.

Je le répète, les seuls sujets de mécontentement auxquels je puisse penser à brûle-pour-point, et qui soient réellement graves, sont les deux questions que j'ai déjà mentionnées: le fait que les votes des Forces armées soient mis dans une classe à part, et le fait que l'on en transmette les résultats avec du retard.

Pour ce qui est des distinctions, un fusionnement complet des votes des Forces armées et de ceux des civils ne serait possible que si tous les membres des Forces armées votaient en tant que civils. S'ils votent au Canada, il se pose toujours le problème de la concentration du personnel militaire à Greenwood, Petawawa, Gagetown ou Borden, disons; même s'il y avait à ces endroits-là des bureaux de vote civils, la façon dont aurait voté cette section des Forces armées serait assez évidente si l'on regardait les résultats de ces bureaux de vote, et, étant donné que ce serait un groupe assez représentatif, il serait toujours possible d'en déduire que les forces armées dans l'ensemble avaient voté pour tel ou tel parti. Aux élections provinciales, en fait, les membres des Forces armées votent en tant que civils.

Je crois que je vous ai cité, lors de la dernière séance, le cas d'une élection en Nouvelle-Écosse à la suite de laquelle on avait déclaré dans les journaux que les Forces armées, l'Aviation royale du Canada, avaient voté pour les libéraux ou pour les conservateurs, je ne sais plus, car il y avait deux bureaux de vote civils à Greenwood, mais en fait, les seules personnes se trouvant à Greenwood, là où ces bureaux de vote étaient installés, étaient les membres des Forces armées et leur famille. Donc, si les résultats montrent que 90 p. 100 des électeurs de cet endroit ont voté pour tel ou tel candidat, on peut se faire une assez bonne idée de la façon dont ont voté les Forces armées en général.

[Texte]

Even if all service people in Canada voted as civilians, you would not have a true merger, you would not be able to talk about 65.4 per cent for one party or another. All you could say would be maybe 50 to 60 per cent. I do not know that that is much different, as there still would be is a disclosure as a class.

Another way, of course, in which it could be merged as much as possible would be if we had a permanent voting list. In other words, if ordinary civilians outside Canada were on the permanent voting list and the service people outside Canada or absent from their units were on that same list, then there would be a merging of the civilian and the military absentee voting. Again, however, you only would have to make an estimate of how many civilians were absent from Canada and how many service people were, so, I suppose, you might come up with the figures there, as well, because there are more Canadian service people outside Canada than there are ordinary Canadian citizens, in which case there only might be a partial merging.

• 1010

Another suggestion, of course, to obviate the late reporting of the service vote—and I think I covered this briefly at the last meeting—is for the service people to vote a week earlier than they do now. At the moment they vote during the week commencing Monday prior to civilian polling day, in other words one week before polling day. Well, if they voted two weeks before polling day the counting could be done in the week before polling day and then the result would be ready to be announced on election night along with civilian count. But in order to do that nomination day would have to be moved up to 21 days because when nominations close it takes the Chief Electoral Officer a good week to get the list of candidates distributed to every one of these 600 to 700 service voting places all over the world. That scheme has been considered in the past by the Parliamentary Committee—and it does make a three week campaign instead of a two week one. The big objection, as I mentioned at the last meeting, of course was on the secrecy of the service vote.

In 1963, when it was last considered, the then Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Castonguay, said he could not in any way guarantee that there would not be leakage as to the results of the service vote prior to the closing of Même si tous les membres des Forces armées au Canada votaient en tant que civils, il n'y aurait pas de fusionnement véritable. On ne pourrait dire que 65.4 p. 100, disons, avaient voté pour tel ou tel parti, mais l'on pourrait dire qu'il y en avait eu peut-être 50 ou 60 p. 100. Il ne me semble pas que cela fasse beaucoup de différence, puisqu'il y aurait toujours une distinction de classe.

[Interprétation]

Un autre moyen, bien sûr, d'obtenir un fusionnement aussi complet que possible serait d'avoir une liste électorale permanente. Autrement dit, si les civils qui se trouvent à l'extérieur du Canada étaient inscrits sur la liste électorale permanente, et que les membres des Forces armées à l'extérieur du Canada ou absents de leur unité fussent inscrits sur la même liste, il y aurait un fusionnement de tous les votes des absents, qu'ils fussent civils ou militaires. Remarquez, là aussi, il suffirait de calculer combien de civils et combien de membres des Forces armées étaient absents du Canada, si bien que l'on pourrait, je suppose, faire encore une fois des distinctions, car il y a plus de membres des Forces armées que de citoyens canadiens ordinaires à l'extérieur du Canada, de sorte que le fusionnement ne serait que partiel.

Une autre proposition qu'on a faite évidemment pour obvier au dénombrement tardif du vote militaire et je crois que j'en ai parlé au cours de la dernière séance, c'est de demander aux militaires de voter une semaine plus tôt. A l'heure actuelle, ils votent au cours de la semaine qui commence le lundi qui précède le jour du scrutin civil, c'est-à-dire une semaine avant le jour du scrutin. Et, s'ils votaient deux semaines d'avance, le dénombrement pourrait se faire la semaine qui précède le jour du scrutin et les résultats pourraient être annoncés en même temps que ceux du vote civil. Mais pour cela il faudrait avancer la présentation de 21 jours car lorsque la présentation est faite, il faut que le directeur général des élections dispose d'au moins une semaine pour faire préparer des listes et les distribuer à chacun des 600 ou 700 bureaux militaires de scrutin à travers le monde. Le Comité parlementaire a déjà étudié la question et il s'est avéré que la campagne devrait durer trois semaines au lieu de deux. La grande difficulté comme je l'ai déjà mentionnée, c'est la question du caractère secret du vote militaire.

En 1963, la dernière fois qu'on a étudié la question, le directeur général des élections, M. Castonguay, a dit qu'il ne pouvait pas garantir qu'il n'y aurait pas de fuite quant au résultat du vote militaire avant la fermeture civilian polls. A number of members of the committee agreed with him and said that if these votes were counted and the results were available, even under secrecy, two or three days before the civilian polls closed they would have a pretty good listing as to how the service had voted. Whether that is a good thing or a bad thing is a matter for this Committee to decide. As far as the service is concerned, it would improve our position even if there were some leaks. Our view is that if the service vote is announced the night the civilian polls close it gets sort of merged with the civilian vote. On the other hand there were members of the committee as well as other people who said that everybody has their ear glued to the radio and their eyeballs to the T.V. on election night and you get more publicity on how the service voted. That is sort of the general thinking on those.

[Text]

There has also been the suggestion to leave nomination day the way it is, to leave service voting the same period as it is, and that if these envelopes were mailed directly to the Returning Officer of the individual electoral districts then it would get melded into the civilian vote there. But the difficulty there is, of course, that the Returning Officer does not conduct a poll, he has in his electoral district maybe 100 to 300 subdivisions and these envelopes would have to get to one or other of these subdivision polls. If they did not and if they are counted separately then there is going to be a separate announcement of the service vote.

Mr. Forrestall: Could they not be counted at the advance poll?

• 1015

Colonel Dewis: I was just going to mention that. Another suggestion is that they be sent to the Returning Officer and counted with the advance poll. If that is done and the ballots are checked against the poll books, I cannot see—and the Chief Electoral Officer can probably back me up—how you could just announce one total of 150 votes without saying which were civilian and which were military because the civilians would have to balance with the poll book. Of course the practical difficulty is in getting these to all of the 264 electoral districts when we have people scattered all over Europe and even in the Far East. So even if they all voted on Monday, to mail a ballot individually from some place in Saigon or the Middle East or even Europe and hope that it would get to the Northwest Territories or Vancouver and into des bureaux civils de scrutin. Un bon nombre de membres du Comité étaient d'accord avec lui et ont dit que si ces votes étaient dépouillés et si les résultats étaient connus, même secrètement deux ou trois jours avant la fermeture des bureaux civils de scrutin, ils auraient une assez bonne idée du vote militaire. Que ce soit une bonne chose ou une mauvaise chose, c'est au Comité d'en décider. Pour ce qui est des Forces armées, notre position serait renforcée même s'il y aurait quelques fuites. Nous estimons, si le vote militaire pourrait être annoncé le soir même des élections, s'il était fusionné avec le vote civil, ce serait une bonne chose. Voilà ce qu'on en pense. D'autre part, certains membres du Comité et bien d'autres gens sont d'avis que tout le monde écoute la radio ou sont collés à la télévision le soir de l'élection, et écoutent toutes sortes de commentaires sur le vote militaire.

[Interpretation]

On a aussi proposé que le jour de la présentation ne soit pas modifié, que la durée du scrutin militaire ne soit pas changée et que toutes ces enveloppes soient postées directement à l'officier rapporteur des districts électoraux et qu'elles soient mélangées avec celles des votants civils. Mais le problème est que l'officier rapporteur n'est pas responsable du scrutin, il a dans son district électoral 100 ou 300 subdivisions et ces enveloppes devraient être expédiées à l'un de ces bureaux de scrutin. Si ces enveloppes n'étaient pas expédiées et si elles étaient dépouillées séparément, l'annonce du résultat du scrutin militaire devrait se faire séparément.

M. Forrestall: Ne pourrait-on pas dépouiller le scrutin aux bureaux provisoires?

M. Dewis: J'allais justement le dire. Une autre proposition consiste à les expédier à l'officier rapporteur et à les compter en même temps que ceux des bureaux provisoires. Si l'on fait cela et si l'on vérifie les bulletins de vote, je ne vois pas comment vous pouvez annoncer un total de 150 votes sans séparer les militaires des civils, étant donné que les bulletins de vote civil doivent correspondre au cahier du scrutin. Il s'agit évidemment de les faire parvenir aux 264 districts électoraux, alors que nous avons des gens disséminés à travers l'Europe et même au Moyen-Orient. Par conséquent, même si tous votaient le lundi, le problème c'est d'envoyer le bulletin de vote individuellement de quelque part dans Saigon au Moyen-Orient ou même en Europe et espérer qu'il arrivera à temps à Vancouver ou aux Territoires du Nord-Ouest, the hands of the Returning Officer—in time to be counted, mind you—is quite a problem.

[Texte]

The other problem, of course, is that every Returning Officer would have to have a complete list of all service electors in order to check and scrutinize and ensure that this is a valid balloting envelope. This is now done of course in each of the four voting territories by the special Returning Officer. But it does not seem to me, and the Chief Electoral Officer in 1963 agreed, to be practical to consider providing every Returning Officer with sufficient information and staff to ensure proper scrutiny of these ballots which are mailed in.

The Chairman: I believe that Mr. Hamel had something to add.

Mr. Hamel: I just wanted to point out to the Committee that in 1955 the Committee had agreed to advancing nomination day by one week and making it 21 or 28, but then this was rejected when the amendment reached the House in Committee of the Whole and it was brought back to 14 days, as it is now.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, in one sense the Armed Forces ballots are counted now something like an advanced poll—they are counted other than on election day. Whether it be in Hong Kong or elsewhere, why cannot the ballots be counted at each polling place and the results of that vote be cabled or telephoned to the Chief Electoral Officer? I know there is some additional cost in that connection. Or since the Chief Electoral Officer already has a list of Armed Forces people alphabetically by constituencies, surely it would not be too much of a problem to provide each Returning Officer with a list of the Armed Forces people eligible to vote for his riding on the day of the official count, which is 10 days after election day. Why could not those ballots be counted then in each constituency?

Mr. Hamel: That really could be done but the official count is done seven days after and I do not think it would solve the problem because it would still have to be reported separate from the rest. At the moment, if there are four or five advance polls in an electoral district each advance poll is reported individually, and I believe most candidates dans les mains de l'officier rapporteur pour le dépouillement.

[Interprétation]

Un autre problème, évidemment, c'est que chaque officier rapporteur devra disposer d'une liste complète de tous les électeurs militaires pour qu'il puisse vérifier et s'assurer de la validité de l'enveloppe contenant le bulletin de vote. Il est vrai qu'à l'heure actuelle, l'officier rapporteur spécial fait ce travail dans chacun de ces quatre districts. Mais je ne crois pas que ce soit pratique, et en 1963, le directeur général des élections était d'accord là-dessus, d'essayer de fournir à chaque officier rapporteur tous les renseignements et du personnel pour bien vérifier les bulletins de vote qui lui sont postés.

Le président: Je pense que M. Hamel a quelque chose à ajouter.

M. Hamel: Je voulais simplement faire remarquer au Comité qu'en 1965, le Comité avait convenu d'avancer d'une semaine la date de la présentation, et que cette période soit de 21 ou de 28 jours, mais ceci a été rejeté quand l'amendement est arrivé à la Chambre en comité plénier, et a été ramené à 14 jours, comme c'est le cas aujourd'hui.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, dans un certain sens, les bulletins de vote des Forces armées sont, à présent, dépouillés comme s'il s'agissait d'un bureau provisoire de votation, ils ne sont pas dépouillés le jour de l'élection. Que ce soit à Hong-Kong ou ailleurs, pourquoi ne peut-on pas dépouiller le scrutin dans chaque bureau de scrutin, et pourquoi ne peut-on pas transmettre au directeur général des élections les résultats par télégramme ou par téléphone? Je sais que cela coûte un peu plus. Et puisque le directeur général des élections dispose déjà d'une liste des militaires par ordre alphabétique et par circonscription, ce ne devrait pas être si difficile d'envoyer à chaque officier rapporteur une liste des militaires ayant droit de vote dans la circonscription le jour du dépouillement officiel, qui se fait 10 jours avant le jour de l'élection. Pourquoi donc ne peut-on pas dépouiller ces bulletins de vote dans chaque circonscription?

M. Hamel: Ceci pourrait être fait, mais le dépouillement officiel se fait sept jours après et je ne pense pas que cela résoudrait le problème parce que le dépouillement militaire doit se faire séparément des autres. A l'heure actuelle, s'il y a quatre ou cinq bureaux provisoires de votation dans chaque district électoral, les résultats de chaque bureau est will insist that it be done that way. By the same token, whether the service vote be counted by the Returning Officer or the way it is at the moment, it will have to be reported the same way.

[Text]

One problem that Col. Dewis touched upon is the fact that at the moment we have three statutory voting territories and one additional which we established to cut the distance the ballots have to travel, otherwise I believe that you are bound to have a larger number of ballots that will be rejected because they will not be received on time to be counted. And I believe that normally these ballots should not be received later than polling day or, as at the moment, nine o'clock the following day—in other words the first mail following polling day. So if you increase the distance the ballots have to travel and reduce the facilities for transmission you are bound to increase the number of rejected ballots. This, of course, is a decision for the Committee to take.

• 1020

Mr. Benjamin: As I recall the four elections in Saskatchewan in which we had absentee balloting, and there would be 15,000 to 25,000 absentee ballots cast in the whole province, in each constituency they were just shown as a total lump sum of absentee ballots. Now what would be wrong with lumping together advance polls and Armed Forces, if you are worrying about the identification problem, on one line of the election return I do not know that it is all that important that each advance poll be tallied separately. Those people are from all over the constituency, it does not do a candidate any good to assess the vote by poll, he cannot figure it out by polls, so why could not advance poll and Armed Forces votes be altogether on one line on any election return?

Mr. Hamel: Do you mean in the official report in the Blue Book?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, and when they are reported on election night or whenever they are reported.

Mr. Hamel: That could certainly be done in the Blue Book but from a purely physical or mechanical point of view, particularly when you have a large advance poll, I do not think it would be feasible to count the whole thing together. First of all, in one advance poll the votes are taken by units and I believe that transmis séparément, et je crois que la plupart des candidats insisteront à ce que ça se fasse ainsi. Par cette même occasion, que le dépouillement du scrutin militaire soit fait par l'officier rapporteur ou comme ça se fait actuellement, les résultats doivent être annoncés de la même façon.

[Interpretation]

Une chose dont le capitaine Dewis nous rappelle, c'est qu'en ce moment, on a trois territoires statutaires de scrutin, et un quatrième afin de réduire la distance que les bulletins de vote doivent parcourir, autrement je crois qu'un certain nombre de bulletins devront être rejetés car ils n'arriveront pas à temps pour le dépouillement. Je pense que ces votes ne devront pas être reçus plus tard que la date à laquelle ils devraient être comptés ou comme ça se fait présentement à 9 heures le lendemain matin, autrement dit la première distribution de courrier qui suit le jour de l'élection. Ainsi, si vous augmentez les distances à parcourir et si vous réduisez les installations de transmission, vous augmenterez nécessairement le nombre de ballots qui vont être rejetés. C'est au Comité de prendre une décision.

M. Benjamin: Quand je me rappelle des quatre élections qui ont eu lieu en Saskatchewan, et où il y avait 15,000 à 25,000 votes par procuration dans toute la province, dans chaque circonscription, on les indiquait en un seul chiffre global représentant les bulletins de vote par procuration. Quel mal y a-t-il à grouper les bureaux provisoires de scrutin et ceux des Forces armées, si vous vous souciez des problèmes d'identification, sur une même ligne? Je ne vois pas l'importance à ce que chaque bureau provisoire fasse l'objet d'un dépouillement séparé. Ces gens viennent de toutes les circonscriptions. Le candidat n'a aucun intérêt à ce que l'évaluation du vote se fasse par bureau de votation, il ne peut s'en faire une idée; par conséquent pourquoi ne peut-on pas dépouiller le scrutin militaire et le scrutin civil en même temps?

M. Hamel: Vous voulez dire dans le rapport officiel, le Livre bleu?

M. Benjamin: Oui, et ça m'est égal si les résultats sont connus le soir de l'élection, ou quand ils sont censés l'être.

M. Hamel: Cela pourrait certainement s'inscrire au Livre bleu, mais du point de vue purement matériel, surtout lorsque vous avez un grand bureau provisoire de votation, je ne pense pas que ce soit possible de dépouiller le tout en même temps. Tout d'abord, dans un bureau provisoire, le scrutin est dépouillé par there are some safeguards in that connection in that the people involved in the taking of the votes will be the same ones as will be involved in the counting. Now they would be added up together afterwards. I do not believe that it would make that much difference. But for the counting I think that the people involved in the actual taking of the votes should also be the ones involved in the counting because, otherwise, if something goes wrong it will not be possible to pinpoint the responsibility.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, on the two big items, the segregation and the late reporting, I am convinced we will never solve this until we get a full-fledged absentee voting system. I wonder whether the Chief Electoral Officer would have any greater difficulty really in maintaining the secrecy if he had nomination a week earlier than he has, in fact, in connection with the advanced poll? Is this a bigger security problem?

Mr. Hamel: I am sorry. You mean advancing...?

Mr. Macquarrie: I am going back to what your predecessor said in 1963 and since that the advance poll has been greatly enlarged.

Mr. Hamel: With a view to taking the military vote earlier and counting it before polling day?

Mr. Macquarrie: As I understand it, Mr. Castonguay was concerned about maintaining the secrecy of that. I am asking now if that problem would in fact be any more difficult than maintaining the advance poll which in the interval has been much enlarged because more people use it.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, that is true. I believe one point raised—if I recall it was at our meeting in Quebec—was that as one of the basic principles you should have as little time as possible between the time the vote is taken and the time that it is counted because if you extend that period you increase the possibility of leaks. Now, if as I recall the suggestion of my predecessor to advance nomination day was purely to make sure that the list of candidates would be distributed on time for the taking of the service vote and that we would do a better job than we do at the moment because the way we print this list now—it is done in fact overnight, there are bound to be some mistakes, some slight spelling errors and that kind of thing. So by advancing nomination day, I do not believe the intention at that time as to advance the advance poll. It was unité, et à cet égard, je pense qu'il existe certaines mesures préventives étant donné la personne qui reçoit le bulletin de vote est aussi celui qui effectue le dépouillement. Ils sont ajoutés les uns aux autres par la suite. Ça ne fait pas une grande différence.

[Interprétation]

Mais pour ce qui est du dépouillement je pense que les personnes qui recueillent les bulletins doivent être celles qui font le dépouillement, car autrement en cas d'irrégularité la responsabilité.

Mr. Macquarrie: M. le président sur les deux points principaux, c'est-à-dire la séparation et le comptage tardif du vote je suis convaincu que ces questions ne pourront être résolues avant que nous ne disposions d'un système ayant fait ses preuves par le vote des absents. Je voudrais savoir si le directeur général des élections aurait de grandes difficultés à maintenir le secret s'il recevait les votes une semaine plus tôt qu'il ne les a actuellement dans le cas du bureau provisoire de votation? Y a-t-il là un problème plus grave?

Mr. Hamel: Je ne comprends pas très bien, monsieur . . .

Mr. Macquarrie: Je reviens à ce que votre prédécesseur a dit en 1963, et depuis lors le bureau provisoire de votation a été agrandi.

Mr. Hamel: Vous voulez dire en rapport avec le tenue du scrutin plus tôt et de dépouillement avant le jour de l'élection?

Mr. Macquarrie: Si je comprends bien, M. Castonguay a été intéressé à garder ceci secret. Je me demande maintenant si en fait le problème ne serait pas encore plus difficile que de maintenir le bureau provisoire de votation qui entre temps se sera beaucoup agrandi car plus de personnes l'utiliseront.

Mr. Hamel: Oui, c'est vrai. Un point qui a été soulevé, si je me souviens bien, c'était lors de notre réunion à Québec, c'est qu'un des principes fondamentaux est qu'il faut qu'il y ait le moins de temps possible qui s'écoule entre le moment du vote et le dénombrement du vote. Car si vous allongez cette période, les possibilités de fuites sont d'autant plus grandes. Donc comme je le rappelle, la proposition de mon prédécesseur d'avancer le jour de la présentation avait motif uniquement de s'assurer que la liste des candidats serait distribuée à temps pour que puisse être procédé au vote des militaires et que nous accomplirions un meilleur travail que nous ne le faisons en ce moment car actuellement la façon dont nous imprimons cette liste est celle de la rédiger en une soirée et il y a forcément des erreurs, des fautes d'orthographe et ainsi de suite qui s'y primarily to allow more time for the documents to travel to the hundreds of service polls all over the world. In fact, it was brought back to 14 days, provided we are willing to live with a few typographical errors in the list of candidates, we have been able to manage.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: Well, I do not know what other people think but I cannot see the three weeks being a burden at all because 99 per cent of the candidates are in fact nominated by their party weeks ahead of the official nomination and are interested in service voters and in other voters, too.

I am interested in this firm injunction here on the envelope that if it is not received by the Special Returning officer by 0900 hours on the following day, it will not be counted and on the top it says it is despatched by ordinary mail. A man in Toronto the other day wrote a letter to himself first class which he did not get back for ten days. The mail has become slower since these documents were drawn up and I am just wondering if this may not be considered. Do you, in fact, have many of these which come in too late to be counted?

• 1025

Mr. Hamel: I have the figures here for the last election. Of course, this was before the recently introduced changes in the postal service. I will have to make a suggestion to the Committee later on because we may have to change the sequence of some functions within the period of the election because most post offices will be closed on Saturdays. At the last general election in the Maritime voting territories, for instance, nine envelopes were received too late but there is another factor also which I must point out. In 1968, polling day was on a Tuesday so we had one extra day for receiving the ballots although we had one day less for counting the ballots so we added only staff. In the western voting territory 201 were received too late but I believe there was some problem beyond post office control there; a bag got astray somewhere. In the overseas voting territories, in London there were 13 that came in too late to be counted and finally in Ottawa here there were only 11 out of 24,000 received too late.

[Interpretation]

glissent. En avançant la date du jour de la présentation je ne crois pas qu'on ait voulu à ce moment-là avancer également le scrutin avancé. C'était principalement pour que les documents parviennent à tous les bureaux de scrutin militaires partout dans le monde. De fait on a ramené cette période à 14 jours pourvu que nous puissions tolérer certaines erreurs typographiques dans les noms des candidats, sur la liste, mais nous sommes débrouillés comme cela.

M. Macquarrie: Eh bien, je ne sais pas ce qu'en pensent les autres, mais je ne crois pas que trois semaines soient un obstacle insurmontable, puisque 99 p. 100 de tous les candidats sont en fait nommer par leurs partis des semaines avant la présentation officielle des votes et s'intéressent aux votes des militaires et aux autres aussi. Ce qui m'intéresse ici c'est l'indication expresse sur l'enveloppe que si cela n'a pas été reçu à 9h00 par l'officier rapporteur spécial il n'y aura pas de dépouillement et en plus que cela sera expédié par le courrier ordinaire. On a démontré, hier, qu'une personne de Toronto s'est écrit une lettre à elle-même par courrier de 1^{re} classe et qu'elle ne l'a pas reçue avant dix jours. Vu que depuis que ces documents ont été rédigés le courrier s'est ralenti je me demande si on ne pourrait examiner cette question. Est-ce qu'il y a en fait beaucoup de ces documents qui arrivent trop tard pour être dépouillés?

M. Hamel: J'ai les chiffres des dernières élections. Évidemment, c'était avant les changements introduits récemment dans le service postal. Il faudra que je fasse une proposition au comité plus tard, peut-être qu'il nous faudra apporter certaines modifications à l'ordre des opérations pendant la période électorale car la plupart des bureaux de postes seront fermés le samedi. Aux dernières élections, pour les Maritimes, par exemple, neuf enveloppes ont été reçues trop tard, mais il y a aussi un autre facteur que j'aimerais mentionner. En 1968, le jour du scrutin était un mardi, par conséquent, nous avions un jour de plus pour recevoir les bulletins de vote mais un jour de moins pour les dépouiller aussi nous n'avons augmenté que notre personnel. Dans les Territoires de scrutin de l'ouest, 201 votes ont été reçus trop tard, mais je crois qu'il y a eu des problèmes qui ne relevaient pas du bureau de poste. Un sac s'est perdu quelque part. Dans les territoires de scrutin outre-mer, à Londres, 13 enveloppes étaient en retard, et enfin, à Ottawa ici, 11 seulement sur 24,000 ont été reçues en retard.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: So the West was really the slow area.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, but as I say, it was through no fault of the Post Office Department. This was an error that happened, I believe, on a ship.

Mr. Macquarrie: Well I enter this now for future consideration. Really, it is a hell of a thing, in effect, to disfranchise a man because someone else is not moving his ballot fast enough. I think this is something we should consider.

There is another small matter, and most of my questions are of a technical nature. When you refer to the secrecy of the ballot, and this has always puzzled me about these rules, why, in number 37, we go out of our way to say: Mark it with a pencil, with ink, or with a pencil of any colour. Surely it is not too difficult to provide a pencil in one of these polling booths, in all of them, I should say. It just strikes me that in civilian voting, some poor devil who pulls his ballpoint pen out of his vest pocket is disfranchised, yet we actually almost invite temptation in this rule. Is there any rationale behind it that escapes me?

Colonel Dewis: As far as National Defence is concerned I guess I would have to say we are pleased to have a more lax system of marking the ballots because as you say, if somebody automatically pulls his ballpoint pen out and writes in at the civilian poll his ballot is rejected, I understand; whereas, a serviceman's is not. Possibly the civilian procedure should be changed. I certainly could not recommend that the forces procedure be changed.

Mr. Macquarrie: You could not recommend that it be changed?

Colonel Dewis: I could not recommend that the provision whereby a serviceman can use any type of pencil should be changed because I quite agree; I do not see these ballots and the Chief Electoral Officer would probably have a better idea but I presume there are various colours of pencils, possibly black, some grey, or maybe even red that are used. Those ballots are counted, however, under our rules.

Mr. Macquarrie: Right. Of course, the whole theory was that everybody used a black pencil so that Mr. "X" could never say "I did mine with a purple ballpoint so you can be sure I did the right thing". Perhaps we

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Ainsi l'Ouest était vraiment la zone en retard.

M. Hamel: Oui mais cela n'était pas la faute du ministère des postes comme je l'ai dit. Il s'agit d'une erreur qui s'est produite, je pense, sur un bateau.

M. Macquarrie: Eh bien, pour parler ici pour l'avenir, c'est vraiment très grave d'enlever à un homme son droit de vote simplement parce qu'une enveloppe est arrivée trop tard. C'est une question de première importance à étudier. Une autre petite question à étudier aussi que je vais exposer bien que la plupart de mes questions soient d'ordre technique. Quand vous parlez du secret du scrutin et ceci m'a toujours intrigué quand je lis les Règlements: pourquoi, au numéro 37, nous disons, que le vote peut être inscrit avec un crayon avec de l'encre, avec un crayon de n'importe quelle couleur? Il ne serait pas difficile me semble-t-il de fournir des crayons dans toutes les cabines de votes. Ce qui me frappe c'est qu'un civil qui se servirait par inadvertance de son crayon à bille se verrait par là même disqualifié et pourtant nous poussons presque les gens à commettre cette faute. Y a-t-il une raison logique là qui m'échappe?

M. Dewis: Pour ce qui est de la Défense nationale, nous avons, nous sommes heureux que les prescriptions soient moins rigoureuses que pour le vote civil. Dans les votes civils quelqu'un qui utiliserait un crayon à bille verrait son bulletin rejeté, je crois comprendre. Mais dans le vote militaire il n'est pas de même. Peut-être faudrait-il modifier la procédure du vote civil. Je ne voudrais certainement pas préconiser un changement au scrutin militaire.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que vous pourriez recommander ce changement?

M. Dewis: Je ne pourrais recommander que la disposition permettant à un militaire d'utiliser toute espèce de crayon soit modifiée car je suis d'accord avec celle-ci; je ne vois pas ces votes et peut-être que le directeur général des élections serait mieux en mesure de vous renseigner là-dessus. Mais je pense que l'on utilise diverses couleurs de crayons, noirs peut-être, gris ou même rouges. Les votes sont dépouillés cependant conformément à nos Règlements.

M. Macquarrie: Bien. Dans les bureaux civils, en principe tout le monde devrait utiliser un crayon noir de façon à ce que M. «X» ne puisse dire «j'ai fait mon vote avec un crayon à bille pourpre aussi vous pouvez être will have to examine what is good for one and bad for the other so we might rationalize this matter.

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: I might remark, of course, that when a chap is voting in a unit, say in the Middle East, his ballot is not opened until it gets to London and he does not know what pair of scrutineers are going to be looking at it. I find it hard to imagine that somebody in the Middle East would want to let a scrutineer in the London office know how he voted. Or he may be up in Aklavik or down in Washington and the vote is counted in Ottawa or Edmonton, so why would he want to do that? At a civilian poll where it is all counted locally right where he votes there might be such a problem, I do not know.

• 1030

Mr. Macquarrie: I will leave that. I have one further small item and then I am through. I am wondering why the Royal Commission on the Status of Women has not come into this? It strikes me as strange that a military elector, if he has a forty-second cousin in Algoma, can elect that he will be a resident thereof and his wife must go along with him. How difficult would it be to recognize the wife as having the right to choose where she will be a political person?

Colonel Dewis: Of course, the wife, if she is in Canada, votes as an ordinary civilian.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Colonel Dewis: Overseas the theory behind it is that she is living with her husband over there, and if she were back in Canada she would be living with her husband. Well, in Canada she would have to vote where her husband is. That is true enough. He might have a statement relating to somewhere else. But I think the theory is that normally they live together and that she would vote where her husband is.

Mr. Macquarrie: You have never had a complaint about this?

Colonel Dewis: No, I cannot recollect any complaint. Mind you, if it happens to be a service husband and a service wife she has her right to make her own statement. But if she is not a member of the force, then she takes her husband's place of residence.

I cannot honestly recollect ever hearing any complaints. I think I have heard it remarked on in a jocular way, but we have had no complaints about that.

[Interpretation]

certain que j'ai bien voté». Peut-être pourrions-nous examiner ce qui est bien pour l'un et mauvais pour l'autre afin de rendre cette affaire logique.

M. Dewis: Si vous votez au Moyen-Orient, par exemple, le bulletin n'est pas ouvert avant qu'il arrive à Londres. Et vous ne savez pas quels vérificateurs les examineront. Il m'est difficile d'imaginer que quelqu'un au Moyen-Orient aime que le vérificateur dans le bureau de Londres connaisse la façon dont il a voté ou que quelqu'un à Aklavik ou à Washington ait son vote examiné à Ottawa, Edmonton, pourquoi aimerait-il qu'il en soit ainsi? Pour le vote des civils où le dépouillement se fait sur place, il peut se poser des problèmes aussi, je n'en sais rien.

M. Macquarrie: Laissons cela. J'ai ici encore une petite question à examiner, et j'aurai fini. Je me demande si la Commission royale d'enquête sur le statut de la femme, n'a pas étudié ce point. Il me paraît étrange que l'électeur militaire qui a un cousin très éloigné dans Algoma peut choisir de voter dans Algoma et que sa femme doive faire de même. Serait-il si difficile de reconnaître à la femme le droit de choisir où elle exercera ses droits électoraux?

M. Dewis: Évidemment, la femme, si elle est au Canada, vote comme un civil ordinaire.

M. Macquarrie: Oui.

M. Dewis: Outre-mer, le principe est qu'elle vit avec son mari et de retour au Canada, elle vivra avec son mari; eh bien! au Canada elle devra voter où se trouve son mari. Cela n'est que trop vrai. Le mari peut faire une déclaration pour élire un autre endroit, mais je pense qu'en théorie ils vivent naturellement ensemble et qu'elle vote où se trouve son mari.

M. Macquarrie: Vous n'avez jamais reçu de plaintes de ce côté?

M. Dewis: Non, je ne me souviens d'aucune plainte. Mais attention, si l'homme et la femme sont tous deux membres des forces armées, la femme peut choisir aussi bien que l'homme la circonscription dans laquelle elle veut voter. Mais si elle n'est pas elle-même militaire, alors elle doit voter au lieu de résidence de son mari. Je ne peux honnêtement me souvenir avoir reçu des plaintes à ce sujet.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: They must have their women well trained.

The Chairman: Mr. Forest?

Mr. Forest: Mr. Hamel, what objections do you have, or did the Committee as a whole have in 1963, I think, to the recommendation of the Committee to advance nomination day to 21 days so that the military vote could be counted on the same night?

Mr. Hamel: It was in 1965. The Committee as a whole thought that it was unduly reducing the period allowed to political organizations to select their candidates. I recall this was suggested by...

Mr. Forest: As Mr. Macquarrie pointed out, most of the main parties have chosen their candidates within three weeks. I do not think it would be much of an objection now.

Mr. Hamel: Although at that time, I must point out, it was not geared to counting the vote earlier. It was only to allow more time to the Chief Electoral Officer to despatch the necessary material and supplies to the various service polls. The intention was not to advance the counting of the service vote.

As I say, it was unanimously agreed in this Committee, but rejected in the House after a relatively short discussion, primarily because they felt it provided insufficient time for the political parties to select their candidates.

Mr. Forest: But you would have no objection to advancing it to 21 days?

Mr. Hamel: None at all.

Mr. Forest: And would that ensure that the service vote would be counted on the night of the election?

Mr. Hamel: It could be done that way, although there are two problems that I see. One is that it does not solve part of the present problem, which is the announcing of the service vote separately. The second is that I cannot guarantee that there will be no leaks during the count. I can vouch for my own staff, but during the election I have a large number of extra staff.

Furthermore, as you know, the counting of the ballots of the servicemen is done by scrutineers appointed by political parties representing different political interests. Therefore, it would be very, very simple for a party to find out how the vote went.

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: C'est que les femmes sont bien dressées.

Le président: M. Forest?

M. Forest: M. Hamel, quelles sont vos objections ou celles que le comité plénier a présentées, je crois en 1963, contre la proposition d'avancement de la date de présentation de 21 jours, de façon à ce que les votes militaires puissent être comptés le même soir?

M. Hamel: C'était en 1965. Le comité plénier a pensé qu'il y avait là réduction induite de la période allouée aux partis politiques pour choisir leurs candidats. Je me rappelle que ceci a été proposé par...

M. Forest: Comme l'a dit M. Macquarrie, la plupart des partis ont choisi leurs candidats dans les trois semaines. Il ne s'agirait plus là d'une objection valable à l'heure actuelle.

M. Hamel: A ce moment-là, je dois le faire remarquer, ce n'était pas pour permettre de dépouiller le vote plus vite mais pour fournir au directeur général des élections plus de temps pour adresser tous les documents et fournitures aux bureaux de scrutin militaires. L'idée, comme je l'ai dit n'était pas d'avancer la date de dépouillement du scrutin militaire. Comme je l'ai dit, cela a été adopté à l'unanimité ici au comité mais rejeté à la Chambre après une discussion relativement courte, surtout parce qu'on a cru que cela accordait moins de temps que n'en veulent les partis politiques, pour choisir leurs candidats.

M. Forest: Auriez-vous des objections à ce que cela soit avancé à 21 jours?

M. Hamel: Pas du tout.

M. Forest: Est-ce que cela permettrait de dépouiller le scrutin des militaires le soir des élections?

M. Hamel: C'est possible. Cependant, il y a deux problèmes que j'entrevois. D'abord, cela ne résoudrait pas une partie du problème actuel qui est d'annoncer le vote militaire séparément du vote civil. Le deuxième problème est que je ne peux pas garantir qu'il n'y aura pas de fuite pendant le dépouillement. Je peux garantir la discrétion de mon propre personnel, mais pendant l'élection j'ai un important personnel supplémentaire. D'autre part, comme vous le savez, le dénombrement des bulletins des militaires se fait par des scrutateurs désignés par les partis politiques représentant divers intérêts politiques. Par conséquent, il serait fort simple pour un parti de trouver quelle a été la tendance du vote.

[Text]

At the moment, as you know, we have a great many problems with the advance poll. In fact, we had nine premature counts at the last general election. In spite of the fact that these people knew they would forfeit their pay, still, human beings being what they are, they had a "peek" at the ballots and made a count. Therefore if you count before polling day I do not see how you can avoid some pretty serious leaks.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin. I am sorry, Mr. Forest, are you through?

• 1035

Mr. Forest: I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. Are the instructions in the envelope sent in both official languages all around the world where the service vote takes place?

Colonel Dewis: Yes.

Mr. Forest: Everywhere?

Colonel Dewis: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: Everything we have is available either in English, or French, or bilingual. For purely administrative reasons, to simplify our task and to make things more expeditious, we are trying to bilingualize most, if not all of our forms. Even that envelope, I hope, will be bilingual. At the moment, we have to guess how many French and how many English will be sent to each place. By making it bilingual, we do not have to make any count and we do not have to keep separate stocks.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to follow up a little farther a question I asked earlier, in the context of as far as possible treating the armed service voting the same as the civilian voting, so that there will not be so much difference between how their voting is carried out and handled.

I would still like to know why we cannot have the armed forces votes counted on election night—as is any other poll. There is a week from then until the official count; there is a week there for votes from each of those polling places in the armed forces, no matter where they are in the world, to be counted and the results cabled to the Chief Electoral Officer who, in turn, informs the 264 returning officers of what the total armed forces vote all over the world came to. It can be then interspersed on the day of the official count.

[Interpretation]

Nous rencontrons actuellement de nombreux problèmes en ce qui concerne les bureaux provisoires de votation. Il y a eu neuf dépouillements différents et provisoires aux dernières élections générales. Et même si ces gens savaient qu'ils perdraient leur salaire, les humains étant ce qu'ils sont, ils ont jeté un coup d'œil sur les bulletins et ont fait un comptage. Par conséquent s'il y a un comptage avant le jour du scrutin, comment peut-on éviter certaines fuites sérieuses?

Le président: M. Benjamin. Je m'excuse M. Forest, avez-vous terminé?

M. Forest: Encore une question, monsieur le président. Est-ce que les instructions dans les enveloppes sont écrites dans les deux langues pour être expédiées dans le monde entier où les militaires se trouvent au moment du scrutin?

M. Dewis: Oui.

M. Forest: Partout?

M. Dewis: Oui.

M. Hamel: Tout est disponible en français ou en anglais ou dans les deux langues. Pour des raisons administratives, afin de simplifier notre tâche nous avons essayé de rédiger dans les deux langues la plupart sinon toutes nos formules. Même la présente enveloppe est, je le pense, bilingue. Actuellement, nous devons essayer de deviner combien d'enveloppes doivent être envoyées soit en français soit en anglais. Mais en les rédigeant dans les deux langues, nous n'aurons pas à évaluer ces nombres, ni à conserver des stocks distincts.

Le président: M. Benjamin?

M. Benjamin: M. le président, je voudrais continuer à examiner une question que j'ai posée antérieurement soit sur la manière de traiter les votes des militaires, de la même façon, autant que possible, que les votes civils. Est-ce qu'il existe tellement de différence à la manière dont ils votent et à la manière dont on traite ces votes? Pourquoi ne pourrait-on pas dénombrer les votes militaires le soir même de l'élection de la même façon que les autres scrutins. Il s'écoule toute une semaine depuis le moment de la votation jusqu'au dépouillement du scrutin. Une semaine s'écoulera pour le dépouillement quel que soit le lieu de votation des militaires et aussi pour que les résultats soient télégraphiés au directeur général des élections qui, à son tour, doit informer les 264 officiers rapporteurs sur ce que sera le scrutin total des militaires dans le monde entier. Celui-ci pourra alors être inclus le jour du dépouillement officiel.

[Texte]

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a comment. I will leave the mechanics to the Chief Electoral Officer, but one of the things National Defence has always been very particular about is not to involve any of our people in the exercise of what might be called judicial functions in relation to an election. I know that none of the responsible authorities in the forces would agree with the proposal that these ballots be retained in the unit and counted by service people. I think I could speak for the DM on that, too.

This sort of question has occasionally been raised before. We have always tried to keep the forces out of active politics and also anything which involves the counting of ballots, and that sort of thing, which is done in civilian polls. I am certain that our Deputy Minister—and I think probably the Minister—would not like to see the forces involved to that extent in the mechanics of it.

Mr. Hamel: There is one further matter. Even if the Committee went along with what I believe was your suggestion last week, that each deputy returning officer in a service poll be assisted by a poll clerk, as in an ordinary civilian poll, it would mean that these two people would be counting the ballots, but there would not be any party representatives.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not?

Mr. Hamel: Well, how feasible is it? This, of course, is not my problem, but you have between 600 and 700 polls all over the world. At the last election I believe we had one or two polls on our aircraft carrier which was on manoeuvres on which it might have been engaged for two or three weeks. How feasible is it for political organizations to send agents there to witness the counting? The taking of the votes is far less complicated. I believe, with all these precautions—the signatures and the statements, and so on; but in the actual counting, once you pull the inner envelope out of the outer envelope it completely loses its identity with the election.

Mr. Benjamin: That is right.

Mr. Hamel: Another rather serious problem, which may not be insurmountable, is that in each of those 600 or 700 pools, where you may have 200 voters, you may have 200

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais ajouter un commentaire. Je laisserai la question du fonctionnement du scrutin au directeur général des élections mais le ministère de la Défense nationale a toujours veillé à ce que son personnel ne se mêle pas de ce qu'on pourrait appeler des fonctions judiciaires le jour des élections. Et je sais qu'aucune des autorités responsables dans les Forces militaires n'accepterait la proposition que les votes restent dans les unités et dépouillés par les militaires et je pense pouvoir aussi parler au nom du sous-ministre aussi. Cette question a été soulevée à l'occasion antérieurement.

Nous avons toujours essayé de garder les militaires en dehors de la politique et essayé de ne pas les mêler au dénombrement des scrutins et de ces choses qui sont faites dans les bureaux de votation civils. Et je suis certain que notre sous-ministre et je le pense, le ministre n'aimeraient pas voir les Forces armées mêlées à ces activités politiques.

M. Hamel: Il existe encore un point qu'il faudrait mentionner, que même si le comité était d'accord pour suivre cette suggestion qui a été la vôtre je le pense la semaine dernière, qui voulait que chaque sous-officier rapporteur, dans les élections militaires, soit aidé par un greffier du scrutin, comme dans un scrutin civil ordinaire. Ceci voudrait dire que ces deux personnes devraient dépouiller les scrutins mais il n'y aurait pas de représentant des partis.

M. Benjamin: Pourquoi pas?

M. Hamel: Eh bien! est-il faisable. Ce n'est pas là mon problème. Mais si vous avez 600 à 700 bureaux électoraux dans le monde entier; à la dernière élection je pense que nous avions un ou deux bureaux électoraux sur notre porte-avions lors de manœuvres durant deux ou trois semaines. Est-ce que c'est faisable pour les organisations politiques d'envoyer leurs agents pour être témoin que le dépouillement se fait d'une manière légale? Le fait de récolter les votes est de loin moins compliqué je pense qu'avec toutes ces précautions prises, les signatures, les déclarations; mais quant au dépouillement lui-même, il va de soi qu'aussitôt que vous enlevez l'enveloppe qui se trouve à l'intérieur de l'enveloppe extérieure, celle-ci n'a plus rien qui puisse l'identifier à l'élection.

M. Benjamin: C'est juste.

M. Hamel: Une autre chose peut-être qui est un problème assez sérieux, qui n'est peut-être pas difficile à arranger, c'est que dans chacun des 600 à 700 bureaux de votation si electoral districts involved; they may vote in 200 different electoral districts. Therefore, the despatching of the results to my office would be pretty difficult. And for us to keep track of the various polls all over the world, in the jungles of Indo China or Viet Nam or Korea, and so on would be an almost impossible task. As I say, it would mean receiving the results from each of these service polls, probably by wire, and in many cases there would be only one vote or two votes; but almost every one of the 264 electoral districts would be reporting in each poll.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: And it seems to me that you are increasing the possibility of errors tremendously.

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, at the time of the 1968 election, HMCS Saskatchewan and HMCS Qu'Appelle were in Tokyo, the submarine Grilse was at sea out of Esquimalt, and three destroyers were in Chatham, England. There were three ships cruising in the Great Lakes, Bonaventure and three other ships were in the Puerto Rico area, and four minesweepers had left Halifax. Then in Norway we had a NATO exercise group involving about 738 other ranks.

This is only the ship situation quite apart from the land forces that might have been on manoeuvres somewhere in Canada. We sent a special officer to Norway who is well briefed in the voting rules. We had very little difficulty, although maybe that is an understatement because the people came from two electoral districts and they had their voting papers and everything, but that was all sorted out. So I do not see how, in those circumstances, and there are others, you could possibly run it on the ordinary civilian basis. If you start making exceptions and say, well if it is a land poll we will run it as civilian, but if it is a ship or an isolated unit we will run it as we do for forces people, I think that would be very confusing.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: The list, as you suggested, Mr. Hamel, is virtually a permanent one and certainly would be a welcome addition. It seems that what we have been talking about or what we have been doing for the last hour and a half is reviewing the ways that will not work.

[Interpretation]

vous avez peut-être 200 votants, il se peut qu'il y ait 200 districts électoraux différents qui sont inclus là-dedans. Il peut y avoir élection dans 200 différents districts électoraux. Par conséquent l'envoi de ces résultats à mon bureau serait très difficile et surtout pour nous, essayer d'y suivre les divers scrutins à travers tout le monde, que ce soit dans la jungle d'Indochine, que ce soit au Vietnam, que ce soit en Corée, etc., ceci serait impossible. Comme on dit, ça voudrait dire de recevoir de chacun de ces bureaux électoraux militaires les résultats peut-être par télégramme, et dans beaucoup de cas, un ou deux votes seulement mais chacun de ces 264 districts électoraux presque ferait rapport pour chaque bureau.

M. Benjamin: Oui.

M. Hamel: Il me semble que votre suggestion augmenterait énormément les possibilités d'erreurs qui pourraient se présenter.

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, au moment de l'élection de 1968, le HMCS Saskatchewan et le HMCS Qu'Appelle se trouvaient à Tokyo, le sous-marin Grilse se trouvait en mer au large d'Esquimalt et nous avions trois destroyers à Chatham en Angleterre, trois navires qui se trouvaient sur les Grand Lacs, le Bonaventure et trois autres navires se trouvaient dans la région de Porto Rico, 4 détecteurs de mines venaient de quitter Halifax. En Norvège, nous avions des manœuvres maritimes qui comprenaient plus de 738 autres hommes.

Cette situation ne concerne que la marine mais les forces terrestres pouvaient être en manœuvre au Canada. En Norvège, nous avons envoyé un officier qui est versé dans les règlements de votation. Il n'y a pas eu de difficultés bien que les votants étaient de deux circonscriptions différentes. Je ne peux vraiment pas voir comment vous pourriez effectuer ce vote suivant le mode civil de votation. Si vous essayez de conduire les votes sur terre à la façon du vote civil et les votes en mer ou en poste isolé à la manière des Forces armées, cela deviendra très embrouillé.

Le président: Monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: La liste que vous nous avez proposée semble être permanente, et serait fort utile. Il me semble que depuis une heure et demie nous discutons des moyens qui ne seraient pas efficaces.

[Texte]

We had got to a point last week where I think the only question really unanswered was whether or not there is a system that will work. I think that, as Mr. Macquarrie said last week, it involves the civilization of these armed services votes. Could I ask if indeed this list that you talk about, particularly as it applies to the voters outside of Canada, is for use as a permanent list? Could not the forces electors stationed here at home bases, which happen to coincide with their places of ordinary residence, be treated as ordinary civilians, as indeed they are if they opt for that? Could not the others on a particular base here at home be placed under a concept of absentee voting procedures? And finally, could not all those outside the country be put under a straight concept of absentee voting?

If it is possible for the Department of National Defence to provide such a list, then this would not be incompatible with procedures at your headquarters. Could not this same or a similar type of list be prepared for embassy staffs and indeed perhaps on a voluntary basis for other Canadians who happen to be abroad? Could you not treat them all under some concept of absentee voting? The question we are really getting at, I suppose, is whether there is a possibility that there is something workable in the concept of the absentee voting procedure.

• 1045

Mr. Hamel: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it would be relatively easy to extend the provisions of the present Canadian Forces voting rules to embassy staffs or what we call public servants abroad. In fact in 1963 the committee passed a resolution asking my predecessor to prepare an amendment to the Canada Elections Act to allow public servants and their dependants abroad to vote wherever we provide the facilities for the Armed Forces, and I felt compelled to work on this.

So we have a project which we have prepared in conjunction with the departments involved. It takes care, though, of only public servants and their wives, mainly for two reasons. First, this was the mandate of the committee in 1963, and we looked also into the possibility of extending this to all Canadians abroad. At that stage it becomes much more complicated if you want the same safeguards as you have with the service personnel and public servants, because it is a matter of asking service personnel and public servants to complete a statement of residence before they are posted abroad, and this becomes a part of their personnel files. We would not have access to the personnel files of other people. So it is not impossible but if you want

[Interprétation]

Nous sommes arrivés à un point, la semaine dernière, où la question était: est-ce qu'il existe un système qui puisse fonctionner? Je crois que comme l'a suggéré M. Macquarrie, il faudrait effectuer le vote militaire de la même façon que le vote civil. Est-ce que la liste dont vous parliez hier à propos de votants en dehors du Canada, est une liste permanente? Est-ce que les votants militaires stationnés ici au pays et dont la base coïncide avec leur lieu de résidence, ne peuvent pas être considérés comme des votants civils? Est-ce que les autres militaires stationnés au pays ne peuvent pas être considérés comme des votants absents? Est-ce que tous ceux qui sont hors du pays ne pourraient pas être considérés comme des votants absents?

Si le ministère de la Défense nationale pouvait fournir cette liste cela n'irait pas à l'encontre des procédures de votre quartier général. Est-ce qu'une liste semblable ne pourrait pas être préparée à l'intention des personnels d'ambassades et des autres Canadiens se trouvant à l'étranger s'ils le désirent. Est-ce qu'il n'y aurait pas moyen de leur faire suivre la procédure des votants absents? Y aurait-il moyen de formuler une procédure d'après celle des votants absents?

M. Hamel: Je crois, monsieur le président, qu'il serait facile d'étendre les dispositions des règlements actuels des votes militaires au personnel d'ambassades, c'est-à-dire aux fonctionnaires se trouvant à l'étranger. En fait, en 1963, le Comité a passé une résolution demandant un amendement à la loi électorale au Canada permettant aux fonctionnaires se trouvant à l'étranger ainsi qu'aux personnes à leur charge de voter là où nous avons une installation pour les Forces armées.

Nous avons élaboré un projet avec les deux ministères en cause, qui pour deux raisons principales ne concerne que les fonctionnaires et leur épouse. En premier lieu, cela constituait l'attribution du Comité en 1963 et de plus nous avons pensé à la possibilité d'étendre ce privilège à tous les Canadiens qui sont à l'étranger.

A ce moment-là ça devient beaucoup plus compliqué si vous voulez avoir les mêmes garanties pour les militaires que pour les fonctionnaires, car alors il faut leur demander de remplir une déclaration de résidence avant leur affectation outremer. Cette formule est consignée dans leur dossier. Nous n'aurions pas accès aux dossiers d'autres personnels. Si vous désirez obtenir une liste qui contienne to have a list that would provide reasonable safeguards, I do not believe at this stage it could be possible unless you go into the whole system of the permanent list which would provide absentee voting.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: But the list that we do have is a permanent one. What you are suggesting is that it works only in respect to people who are controllable in the sense that they are public servants or something of that nature. You are saying that it is just not possible to include Canadians working for firms abroad or who have retired and are abroad six or eight months of the year.

I would question very seriously your earlier statement that the Armed Forces are the largest single identifiable group of Canadian citizens living outside Canada. It is my understanding that there are several thousand Canadians in Florida who spend six to ten months of the year there, but who are still Canadian citizens and who take a very keen interest in the conduct of political affairs here at home. You are saying that it is not possible to include these people, short of having a permanent list.

Mr. Hamel: As I said, that is true, because this is a completely new concept. By extending the provisions of the Armed Forces voting rules to public servants, we are working on the same basis. That is, these are employees to whose personnel files we have access, or somebody has access. To extend this to Canadians working for companies abroad, we would have to have the same access, if, of course, you want the same safeguards. Otherwise we would have to introduce a completely different concept, which is the concept of the permanent list that was explained in Mr. Castonguay's report as a result of his study.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would like to ask for clarification. Is it not really only a portion of those public servants abroad? You would have to have some propinquity to a military forces establishment. I doubt if you would have many in South America, for instance. Is it not only a part of the public service abroad that you were thinking of?

Mr. Hamel: No, I am sorry, Mr. Macquarrie. The mandate of the committee at that time was to provide voting facilities only where the facilities were already available to armed services personnel, and at that time military attachés, I believe, were not covered, that is, around 1963. But since then the Armed Forces cover the whole group of servicemen abroad. And after discussion with the departments involved, namely External Affairs; Industry, Trade and Commerce; Manpower toutes les mesures de sécurité la chose n'est pas possible à moins d'obtenir la liste permanente qui vous permettrait le vote des absents.

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: La liste que nous avons est permanente. Ce que vous suggérez c'est que cette liste soit valable pour les personnes sur lesquelles nous pouvons exercer un certain contrôle, c'est-à-dire les fonctionnaires ou autre personnel. Vous prétendez qu'il est impossible d'inclure dans cette liste les Canadiens qui travaillent à l'étranger pour des entreprises privées ou des personnes à leur retraite qui sont à l'étranger six ou huit mois par année. Je doute fort que le plus grand nombre de Canadiens qu'il soit possible d'identifier à l'étranger, soient des militaires. Je crois savoir qu'il y a des milliers de Canadiens qui pendant six ou dix mois chaque année habitent la Floride et qui sont toujours des citoyens canadiens qui s'intéressent aux événements politiques au Canada. Vous dites qu'il n'est pas possible de les inclure à moins d'avoir une liste permanente.

M. Hamel: C'est exact, parce que c'est un concept entièrement nouveau. En étendant les dispositions des Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes, aux fonctionnaires fédéraux nous appliquons les mêmes principes, c'est-à-dire que nous avons accès aux dossiers de ces employés. Si nous voulons étendre cela aux employés de Compagnies à l'étranger, il nous faudrait aussi avoir accès à leurs dossiers si nous voulons les mêmes garanties. Autrement il nous faudra recourir à un autre concept celui de la liste permanente, c'est ce qu'avait recommandé M. Castonguay à la suite d'une étude.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que ce n'est pas qu'une partie de ces fonctionnaires fédéraux à l'étranger qui peuvent être assimilés aux militaires? Je doute qu'il y en ait beaucoup en Amérique du Sud, par exemple. Est-ce que ce n'est pas seulement à une partie des fonctionnaires fédéraux que vous pensiez.

M. Hamel: Non, M. Macquarrie, le mandat du Comité était d'assurer des moyens de voter uniquement là où ces services existaient déjà pour les Forces armées, mais en 1963, je dois dire que les attachés militaires n'étaient pas couverts, mais depuis, les Forces armées couvrent le groupe entier des militaires à l'étranger. Après en avoir discuté avec les ministères intéressés, les Affaires extérieures, l'Industrie et le Commerce, la Main-d'œuvre et l'Immigration, etc., nous avons and Immigration, and so on, we feel that it would be feasible to cover all public servants and their dependants abroad.

[Texte]

• 1050

Mr. Macquarrie: You mean that it would not be an actual voter doing his own voting at a booth?

Mr. Hamel: Oh yes, exactly in the same manner as members of the forces, and in fact in many places we would have joint polls where the servicemen and employees of External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, and Immigration would vote.

Mr. Macquarrie: So you would have a great many more polling booths than you have now.

Mr. Hamel: We would probably add, just abroad, I would guess between 4,000 and 6,000 potential electors.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am thinking of the actual booths that you have to set up.

The Chairman: Therefore, if we want to avoid the late reporting complaint we will be adding 4,000 or 6,000 more, and then there would be late reporting, if we do not change the rules. This may mean, in the case of certain candidates, a change in the last result, which means that five to ten candidates could be elected on election day and defeated a week later.

Mr. Hamel: At the last election we had over 60,000 servicemen who voted under the Canadian Forces Voting Rules. So if you add—this is a guess, but let us say 5,000—the percentage is still relatively small.

Mr. Forrestall: Can you, very briefly in a minute or two, refresh my memory on the gist of Mr. Castonguay's special report relative to the establishment of permanent lists?

Mr. Hamel: Mr. Castonguay made a study, as he was requested to do under the Representation Commissioner Act of 1963, of various systems of continuous electoral roles and absentee voting and permanent lists, as used in Canadian provinces and abroad. I believe he mainly studied the United Kingdom, the French, the Australian and the British Columbia systems, and also looked at a few American jurisdictions, particularly Allegheny County, around Pittsburgh, and at Los Angeles County.

He came to the conclusion that the system that would probably be most adaptable to Canada would be the Australian system, be-conclu qu'il serait possible de couvrir tous les militaires et les personnes à leur charge à l'étranger.

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Vous voulez dire un électeur qui vote en réalité dans son propre bureau de scrutin?

M. Hamel: Oui et dans certains cas, nous aurions des bureaux de scrutin conjoints pour le personnel des différents ministères et pour celui des Forces armées.

M. Macquarrie: Est-ce que cela représente beaucoup plus de bureaux de scrutin qu'à l'heure actuelle?

M. Hamel: Ce serait à peu près entre 4,000 à 6,000 électeurs possibles.

M. Macquarrie: Je pense aux bureaux de scrutin qu'il faut installer.

Le président: Si nous voulons éviter que les votes soient comptés trop tard, il nous faudra ajouter de 4,000 à 6,000 votes de plus et le résultat n'en sera retardé que davantage, et cela pourra modifier le résultat définitif de certains candidats qui peuvent être élus le soir des élections et être défaits par la suite.

M. Hamel: Aux dernières élections, nous avions plus de 60,000 militaires qui ont voté aux termes des règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes. Si vous ajoutez à cela environ 5,000 votes, le pourcentage sera relativement peu élevé.

M. Forrestall: Monsieur Hamel, pourriez-vous me rafraîchir la mémoire sur ce que comporte le mémoire spécial de M. Castonguay, relativement à l'établissement d'une liste permanente.

M. Hamel: M. Castonguay, sur une demande aux termes de la Loi sur le commissaire à la représentation, a fait une étude des différents systèmes de listes électorales permanentes et de votes des absents dans les provinces canadiennes et à l'étranger. Il a étudié surtout le système britannique, français, australien et celui de la Colombie-Britannique, et aussi de celui de certains États américains, par exemple, le comté d'Alleghany autour de Pittsburgh et celui de Los Angeles. Il en est venu à la conclusion que le régime qui serait le plus adaptable au Canada serait le régime australien, du point de vue géographique, à cause de la concentration de cause from a geographic point of view and from a concentration of population—or non-concentration in some parts of the country—point of view, Australia is quite comparable to Canada.

[Text]

• 1055

He also came to the conclusion that the only accepted on acceptable safeguard for absentee voting was to have it geared to a system of permanent lists, because then you had for each elector a card on which appeared a signature, and whenever an elector applied for an absentee ballot his signature could always be compared with a signature on the card on file in the office of the returning officer. I do not want to put words in his mouth, but I believe he said on one occasion here that there could be other safeguards, but at the moment this seemed to be the only accepted or acceptable one in the various jurisdictions.

One feature of the Australian system is compulsory registration, which automatically means that there has to be some built-in policing device. In their case, this is a yearly enumeration, or check—more or less a door-to-door canvass—to bring out those who may have moved, those who may have come of voting age, or those who may have changed their names by marriage, or otherwise, and who have failed to advise the office of the Registrar, as they are obligated to do under the law. It means penalties. It means, in some cases, prosecuting these people.

I believe he made certain comments on some systems, such as those in some American jurisdictions, where you have permanent lists, but on a voluntary basis. This is cheaper for the state in that you shift the cost problem on to groups such as chambers of commerce, or even political organizations. I believe he mentioned in his report that this was a major complaint of American political organizations, that they had to spend enormous sums of money to convince people that they should register, so that in fact they would be able to vote eventually.

Therefore, on the one hand there is this voluntary registration system, as in British Columbia, or in some American jurisdictions, and, on the other, the compulsory system as they have it in Australia.

When we speak of permanent lists we have to realize that the United Kingdom one is purely a permanent list, in the sense that it is closed as of a date and beyond that date you cannot make any changes until the next time it is open. This means that if there is an election shortly after it is closed you have a la population, ou de la non-concentration dans certaines régions du pays l'Australie est tout à fait comparable au Canada. Il en est venu aussi à la conclusion que la seule sauvegarde acceptée et acceptable pour le vote des absents, c'est lorsque cela est adapté à une liste permanente. Alors, vous avez, pour chaque électeur, une carte où figure sa signature. Lorsqu'un électeur demande à voter dans un bureau provisoire, on compare sa signature à celle qui figure sur sa carte d'identité au bureau de l'officier rapporteur. Je ne voudrais pas lui attribuer des paroles qu'il n'a pas dites, mais je crois qu'il a déclaré qu'il pourrait y avoir d'autres précautions, mais que, pour le moment, c'est la seule précaution acceptée ou acceptable.

[Interpretation]

Une caractéristique du régime australien, c'est que l'inscription est obligatoire. Dans ce contexte, cela veut dire qu'il faut des garanties, il faut d'abord une énumération et, ensuite, une vérification de porte en porte; pour ceux qui ont atteint l'âge du scrutin, qui ont changé de nom à la suite d'un mariage et qui ne se sont pas rendus au bureau du registraire pour faire modifier la liste, comme l'exige la Loi. Il faut avoir recours à des sanctions; il faut parfois des poursuites en justice.

Je crois que M. Castonguay a fait certains commentaires sur des régimes de certains États américains qui ont des listes permanentes, mais sur une base facultative. Il y a aussi le problème du coût de ces listes; on peut avoir recours aux chambres de commerce ou même à des organismes politiques. C'est là le grief principal des organisations politiques américaines qui doivent dépenser des sommes énormes pour convaincre ou amener les gens à s'inscrire, afin qu'ils puissent voter le moment venu. D'une part, vous avez l'enregistrement facultatif en Colombie-Britannique ou dans certains États américains et le régime obligatoire qu'il y a en Australie.

Lorsqu'on parle des listes permanentes, il faut distinguer entre celles du Royaume-Uni, qui est une simple liste permanente en ce sens qu'elle est close à un certain jour et qu'après ce jour-là, on ne peut plus y apporter de changements jusqu'à ce qu'elle soit réouverte à nouveau. S'il y a une élection peu de temps après que la liste est close, la liste est assez à jour, mais si l'élection a lieu avant qu'elle soit ouverte pour des rectifications, vous avez une liste qui date de 10 ou 11 mois. Sous le régime australien, vous avez une liste fairly up-to-date list, but if the election happens to be called just before it is open for adjustment, or change, you have a list that may be 10 or 11 months old.

[Texte]

Under the Australian system there is what we call continuous electoral rolls. Amendments to the lists are made continuously and a number of sources are used to keep the record up to date, including death and marriage, and so on, which are communicated to the office of the Registrar so that the amendments will be made.

One of our biggest problems, and in this we are quite different from any European country, is that our population is much more mobile than that of most European countries. For this reason a system such as the Australian one, if adopted in Canada, would be fairly expensive.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question to the one that Mr. Forrestall asked in relation to people who are on holiday in the winter time.

We had an election, I think, in February, in 1957, or early March...

The Chairman: That was in 1958.

Mr. Howe: In 1958, yes; and we have had elections in August. Is there any factor there that would increase the amount of absentee voting? Let us consider an election in February as against one in August, or in June rather than in September or October. Is there any pattern there that would cause more absentee voters, because people are on holiday and do not get a chance to vote?

Mr. Hamel: Do you mean in Canada?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: We do not have any system of absentee voting, so...

Mr. Howe: But is there a pattern that shows that in certain areas a greater percentage of people did not vote?

Mr. Hamel: I believe our voter-participation in recent elections has been pretty constant. It varies from one province to another. Prince Edward Island, for example, is consistently above the national average. Other provinces are consistently below average. Amazing as it sounds, one of the areas where voter-participation is highest is in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories; it is very high. But otherwise it has been fairly constant on a national basis at between 72 per cent and 75 or 76 per cent.

[Interprétation]

permanente et continue. On se sert de plusieurs sources pour mettre ces dossiers à jour; les décès, les mariages, ainsi de suite, tout cela est inscrit sur la liste au bureau du registraire. Un de nos principaux problèmes est assez différent de celui des pays européens. Notre population est beaucoup plus mobile que celle de la plupart des pays européens. C'est la raison pour laquelle un régime comme celui de l'Australie, s'il était adopté au Canada, coûterait passablement cher.

M. Howe: J'aurais une question supplémentaire à poser, à la suite de celle de M. Forrestall au sujet de ceux qui sont en vacances durant l'hiver. Nous avons eu une élection en février ou mars 1957...

Le président: En 1958.

M. Howe: En 1958, vous avez raison. Des élections ont eu lieu au mois d'août. Est-ce que le nombre de votes des absents augmenterait? Prenons à titre d'exemple une élection qui aurait lieu au mois de février plutôt qu'au mois d'août ou au mois de juin par opposition aux élections qui peuvent avoir lieu en septembre ou en octobre? Est-ce qu'il y aurait plus de votes dans les bureaux provisoires, parce que les élections tombent pendant les vacances?

M. Hamel: Vous voulez dire au Canada?

M. Howe: Oui.

M. Hamel: Nous n'avons pas de système de vote des absents...

M. Howe: Y a-t-il quelque indice que dans certaines régions, il y a plus de gens qui n'ont pas voté?

M. Hamel: Je crois que la participation des électeurs au cours des dernières élections a été passablement constante. Elle varie d'une province à une autre. Dans l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, par exemple, elle est presque toujours au-dessus de la moyenne; dans d'autres, au-dessous. Aussi étrange que cela paraisse, c'est dans le Yukon et les Territoires du Nord-Ouest que la participation des électeurs est la plus élevée. Ailleurs, c'est assez constant sur le plan national, entre 72, 75, 76 p. 100.

[Text]

Mr. Howe: I have one further question in relation to the word "leaks" that you have used periodically. You said that there were probably seven or eight relative to the service vote in the last election.

The Chairman: Advance polls.

M. Howe: Advance polls; yes.

• 1100

Mr. Hamel: One of our greatest problems of premature announcing of results is in the advance poll. It is much better than it was when the facilities of advance polls were extended. In the first election following the amendment to the Act in 1960, there were 23 or 24 premature counts, and then they dropped down to six, I believe, in 1965. They got up to nine last time. This is one of our major problems.

The Chairman: We must vacate this room at 11.00 a.m. to make way for another committee, but as a final question may I ask Colonel Dewis, while we have him here, what was the percentage of the Armed Forces that voted at the last election?

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Hamel might have a better idea on that.

Mr. Hamel: It is very difficult to give an absolute percentage because the potential number of servicemen entitled to vote was in the vicinity of 105,000, if I recollect. Some of them may have voted as civilians if they happened to be in the electoral district where they had their permanent residence. So we do not know how many actually availed themselves of this option. As I said, we had 63,000 to 64,000 who actually voted under the Canadian Forces voting rules, but we do not know what the potential was, so we cannot establish a very accurate figure on that.

The Chairman: Before we adjourn, I believe we will have a meeting on Thursday, the Clerk will notify you of the exact hour and room, at which time I think it would be appropriate for us to continue with Colonel Dewis and Mr. Hamel on the armed forces system, plus the other items that we discussed earlier. This meeting is adjourned until Thursday.

[Interpretation]

M. Howe: Mon autre question porte sur les «fuites» dont vous avez parlé. Vous avez parlé de 7 ou 8 pour les votes militaires aux dernières élections?

Le président: Bureaux provisoires.

M. Howe: Oui, bureaux provisoires.

M. Hamel: Un de nos principaux problèmes avec l'annonce prématurée des résultats se situe dans les bureaux provisoires. C'est beaucoup mieux qu'avant que ces bureaux se soient multipliés. Avant 1960, il y en avait eu 23 ou 24 et cela a baissé à 6 en 1965 et a monté à 9 la dernière fois. C'est là un de nos principaux problèmes.

Le président: Nous devons céder la salle à 11 heures; puis-je demander une dernière question à M. Dewis: quel a été le pourcentage des militaires qui ont voté aux dernières élections?

M. Dewis: M. Hamel pourrait mieux vous répondre.

M. Hamel: Il serait difficile de donner un pourcentage précis, parce que le nombre possible était d'environ 105 mille, si j'ai bonne mémoire. Certains d'entre eux peuvent avoir voté comme civils, s'ils se trouvaient dans le district électoral où se trouve leur domicile permanent. Nous ne savons pas combien ont profité de cet avantage. Je le répète, 64,000 ont voté aux termes des règles électorales concernant les Forces armées canadiennes mais pour le nombre possible nous ne le savons pas. Nous ne pouvons donc pas établir de pourcentage précis.

Le président: Avant d'ajourner nous avons une réunion, je pense, jeudi. Je ne sais pas à quelle heure exactement ni dans quel endroit. Il serait approprié que nous continuions d'interroger M. Dewis et M. Hamel sur le régime du scrutin des forces armées, en plus des autres articles que nous avons étudiés plutôt. La séance est levée jusqu'à jeudi.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Second Session

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Deuxième session de la

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

COMITÉ PERMANENT

DES

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 4

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1969

LE JEUDI 4 DÉCEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir les procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman

and Messrs.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Cafik,
Code,
Côté (Richelieu),
Duquet,

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Forest,
Forrestall,
Fortin,
Francis,
Howard (Skeena),
Howe,

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. VIRR,
Clerk of the Committee.

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Président
Vice-président

et MM.

Jerome,
Lefebvre,
Macquarrie,
Marceau,
Murphy,
Trudel—20.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, December 4, 1969.

(5)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 9:35 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Howe, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Marceau, Trudel—(9).

Witnesses: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Walter Nash, Assistant Chief Electoral Officer, Colonel J. P. Dewis, Assistant Judge Advocate General.

The members resumed their questioning of the witnesses regarding the Canadian Forces Voting Rules.

The Chairman read, from a file, editorial excerpts pertaining to the delayed results of the Serviceman's vote during Federal Elections.

The Committee agreed to print these editorial comments as an Appendix to this day's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (See Appendix 2).

There being no further questions, the Chairman thanked Colonel Dewis for his assistance.

At 11:10 a.m. the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. Tuesday, December 9.

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le JEUDI 4 décembre 1969.

(5)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit, ce matin, à 9 h. 35. Le président, M. Laflamme, occupe le fauteuil.

Députés présents: MM. Benjamin, Duquet, Forest, Forrestall, Howe, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Marceau, Trudel—(9).

Témoins: M. J. M. Hamel, directeur général des élections, M. Walter Nash, adjoint au directeur général des élections, et le colonel J. P. Dewis, juge-avocat général adjoint.

Les membres du Comité poursuivent leur questionnaire des témoins relative-ment aux règles électorales concernant les forces canadiennes.

Le président donne lecture de certains extraits d'éditoriaux relatifs à la publication tardive des résultats du vote militaire lors des élections fédérales.

Le Comité accepte que les commentaires en question soient imprimés en appendice aux procès-verbal et témoignages de la séance de ce jour (Voir Appendice 2).

Les membres du Comité n'ayant plus de questions à lui poser, le président remercie le colonel Dewis de sa collaboration.

A 11 h. 10, le Comité ajourne ses travaux jusqu'à 11 h., le matin du mardi 9 décembre.

Le greffier du Comité,

R. V. Virr,

Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, December 4, 1969.

• 0937

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see we have a quorum to hear evidence. There was a discussion at the last meeting regarding the possibility of answering one of the complaints made by the Armed Forces. This concerned the lateness in the system of reporting the votes registered by them that we have had in the past. Mr. Hamel has prepared a schedule for us and I believe it would be helpful if he could submit it to us. Then we will continue with the questioning of Colonel Dewis.

Mr. Hamel.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If you wish to ensure servicemen the same period in which to vote as they have at present, in other words, if you do not want to disfranchise too many of them, I believe that the first requirement would be to advance nomination day by one week and the practically every operation would be in the same sequence. So it means that nomination day would be on the twenty-first day before polling day, instead of on the fourteenth day as it is at present. Then members of the forces would vote during the second week preceding polling day, that is, from the fourteenth day prior to polling day up to and including the ninth day which is the Saturday, the first day of the advance poll. Ballots would travel between the time they are cast up to 9.00 a.m. on the Wednesday preceding polling day. At present they are received until 9.00 a.m. on the day following polling day, because they are counted afterwards.

Incidentally, there is a principle here which, of course, we would not observe. Generally speaking there is a basic principle in elections that no ballot should be counted before all are cast. In this case we would have to disregard this basic principle because these ballots would be counted before the bulk of the ballots.

These ballots would be received up to 9.00 a.m. on Wednesday preceding polling day. We would allow the same time as we allow at present for counting the ballots in the four

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 4 décembre 1969.

Le président: Messieurs, je vois que nous sommes en nombre suffisant pour entendre les témoignages. Il y a eu une discussion à la dernière réunion concernant la possibilité de répondre efficacement aux plaintes formulées par certains des membres des Forces armées soit les délais concernant les rapports de vote. M. Hamel a préparé un calendrier qu'il pourrait nous présenter et ensuite nous pourrions poursuivre l'interrogatoire des témoins.

Monsieur Hamel.

M. J. M. Hamel (directeur général des élections): Merci monsieur le président. Si vous voulez donner aux militaires, la même période de temps de vote qu'ils ont actuellement, et si vous ne voulez pas les priver de leur droit de vote il faudrait avancer le jour de la présentation d'une semaine et ensuite tout concordera. De sorte que la journée de la mise en candidature serait la 14^e journée avant le jour du vote plutôt que la 12^e comme en ce moment. Alors, les militaires pourraient voter au cours de la deuxième semaine qui précède le jour du vote, c'est-à-dire, à partir du 14^e jour à venir jusqu'au 9^e jour inclusivement qui tombe le samedi, la première journée du scrutin avancé. Les bulletins de vote, à partir du moment où ils seraient remplis jusqu'à 9 h. du matin le mercredi précédant le jour d'élection. Actuellement, ils sont reçus jusqu'à 9 heures du matin le jour suivant les élections car ils sont comptés après l'élection.

Le principe fondamental dans les élections, c'est qu'aucun vote ne doit être compté avant que la période de votation soit terminée. Dans ce cas il nous faudra déroger à ce principe car les bulletins devront être comptés avant le gros du scrutin.

Ces votes seront reçus jusqu'à 9 heures du matin le mercredi précédant le jour du scrutin. Il faudrait accorder autant de temps pour dénombrer les bulletins de vote que nous en headquarters of the special returning officers, that is, Edmonton, Ottawa, Halifax, and London for the overseas voting territories. Last year we had only two and a half days, but that was because the election was on a Tuesday. Generally speaking, however, I believe we should allow about the same time we have at present. Then the results would have to be communicated by the special returning officers to my office before late afternoon on Saturday. The collating of the results from the four voting territories could be done in my office Saturday evening and Sunday morning.

[Text]

• 0940

Then the results could be released from my office on Monday, that is, polling day. Perhaps we could establish a sequence whereby the telegrams to the returning officers could be sent according to the time zones. In other words, the first telegram could go out to Newfoundland around 5:30 Ottawa time, which would be 7:00 o'clock Newfoundland time, and then 6:00 o'clock for Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and moving west in that way.

I said that collating in my office would be done Saturday and Sunday morning. One basic principle I was trying to observe here was to allow as little time as possible between the counting of the ballots and the official announcement of the ballot because the longer the period the more likely it is that some of the results will be known. On the other hand, I had to try to arrive at some compromise there because of purely physical possibilities.

As you can imagine, I am sure, Sunday afternoon and particularly Monday, which is polling day, it is quite hectic in my place. My experienced staff is very small, that means there are very few people I could put in charge of this operation. It is quite true that some of the work can be done by clerks, even extra clerks, but it still has to be supervised and checked because it has to be accurate. It has to be checked by experienced people, and it boils down to two or three people and these are the people I need the most at that time because of the problems, because of the last minute rearrangements we have to make in connection with taking the votes of the 11 million other electors. So this is what I was trying to arrive at a compromise, how to treat these potential maximum of 100,000 votes vis-à-vis the service we have to make sure is available to the other 11 million electors.

I can see no other way than doing the counting on Saturday evening and Sunday morning so that the whole thing could be accordons actuellement aux officiers rapporteurs spéciaux des quartiers généraux à Edmonton, Ottawa, Halifax, ainsi qu'à Londres pour les territoires d'outre-mer. L'an dernier, nous n'avons eu que deux jours et demi parce que l'élection a eu lieu un mardi, mais en général, il nous faudrait allouer la même période de temps que nous avons en ce moment. Ensuite le résultat des votes serait communiqué à mon bureau par les officiers rapporteurs spéciaux avant la fin de l'après-midi du samedi. Le dénombrement du vote pourrait se faire à mon bureau, le samedi soir et le dimanche matin.

[Interpretation]

Alors les résultats pourraient être communiqués de mon bureau, le lundi, c'est-à-dire la journée même du vote. On pourrait alors établir un calendrier selon laquelle les officiers rapporteurs pourraient faire rapport par zone horaire, c'est-à-dire, envoyer le premier télégramme à Terre-Neuve à 5 h. et demie d'Ottawa ce qui serait 7 h. à Terre-Neuve et 6 h. dans l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick et ainsi de suite jusque dans l'Ouest.

La compilation à mon bureau se ferait, comme je l'ai dit, le samedi soir et le dimanche matin. L'un des principes que j'essaie d'observer de cette façon, c'est d'allouer le moins de temps possible entre le dénombrement des votes et le communiqué officiel des résultats, car plus la période est longue, plus il y a des chances que les résultats soient connus. Par contre, j'ai essayé de composer un peu, compte tenu des conditions matérielles.

Comme vous pouvez l'imaginer, le dimanche après-midi et le lundi, qui est le jour du scrutin, sont à mon bureau des journées très fébriles. Mon personnel expérimenté est très limité, car il y a peu de gens que je peux affecter à cette tâche. C'est vrai que des commis peuvent exécuter ces travaux en partie, mais il faut toujours de la surveillance, de la vérification par des gens expérimentés, car il faut que ce soit exact. Ce qui veut dire deux ou trois personnes et ce sont les gens dont j'ai le plus besoin à ce moment-là, à cause des problèmes qui surgissent au dernier moment, des dispositions qu'il faut prendre pour assurer le vote des 11 autres millions d'électeurs. C'est pourquoi il me faut composer, comment traiter un maximum de 100,000 votes possibles qui correspond au vote militaire tout en tenant compte des besoins des 11 autres millions d'électeurs.

Alors, je ne vois pas d'autre moyen que de faire le dénombrement le samedi soir et le dimanche matin pour que tout soit prêt, au finished at the latest on Sunday noon. I agree that then these results would lie in a safe place in the safe in my office from Sunday noon until Monday evening and many hands, in fact, would be involved. Of course, as a result the results of the service vote are likely to be known by some people. I am not too concerned about the press or the news media generally because they are quite aware of the penalties in the Act if results are officially announced before the time set in the Act, but I do not think you can prevent mouth to mouth information.

[Texte]

I wish to remind you, as I mentioned the other day, that the counting in the special returning officers' offices is done by pairs of scrutineers who are nominated by political organizations and there are so many of them and the way the counting is done, if the results were known ahead of time, it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to pinpoint the responsibility.

Even a statutory provision in the Act or in the rules making it an offence to divulge the results prematurely would not in my opinion be sufficient. It may act as a deterrent, but I do not think it would serve the whole purpose because, as I said, so many people are involved in various locations that it would be almost impossible to pinpoint the responsibility and eventually get a conviction. So any statutory provision in my opinion would act only as a deterrent. Is it something we should put in the Act when we know that a certain penalty provision cannot be enforced? This is another principle which I would like to leave with you. So by and large this is how it could be done.

• 0945

If I may just finish this, there is the other problem I touched upon the other day, the fact that advancing nomination day by one week you would reduce the time political organizations have at the moment to organize conventions to select candidates, et cetera, et cetera. This was the main argument in 1955 when this, having been decided in committee here, was rejected on the floor of the House in committee of the whole.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Hamel.

Mr. Forrestall: Just for verification, when you were preparing that schedule, Mr. Hamel, did you satisfy yourself, or are you satisfied, or perhaps Colonel Dewis could comment on this, on the necessity of six full days for the taking of the vote at the various bases? The Act stipulates that on at least three days of those six the pools shall be open for at least three continuous hours. Is there any way you plus tard, le dimanche midi. Alors, les résultats seraient mis dans un endroit sûr dans mon bureau jusqu'à lundi soir. Bien des gens y seraient mêlés et par la suite les résultats du vote militaire pourraient être connus de certaines gens. Je ne me soucie pas trop de la presse ou des organes d'information en général, car ils connaissent les sanctions imposées par la Loi si on annonce les résultats prématurément. Mais je ne peux pas empêcher la rumeur de se répandre.

[Interprétation]

Mais comme je l'ai mentionné l'autre jour, le dénombrement dans les bureaux des directeurs du scrutin spéciaux se font par des scrutateurs qui sont nommés par des organismes politiques. Il y en a tellement et la façon dont le dénombrement se fait est tel que si les résultats étaient connus à l'avance, il serait difficile sinon impossible de préciser qui en est responsable.

Même une disposition de la Loi ou des règlements, déclarant illégale toute divulgation prématurée du scrutin ne serait pas suffisante. Cela pourrait avoir un certain effet de dissuasion mais n'atteindrait certainement pas son but car il y a tant de gens en cause et dans tellement d'endroits, qu'il serait quasi impossible de préciser la responsabilité et d'accuser qui que ce soit. Donc, à mon avis les dispositions de loi ne sont qu'un moyen de dissuasion. La Loi devrait comporter des dispositions concernant des sanctions ne pouvant être mises en vigueur, c'est un principe que j'aimerais étudier avec vous, mais en général, voilà ce qui pourrait se faire.

En conclusion, il y a l'autre problème dont j'ai parlé l'autre jour, c'est que l'avancement du jour des présentations d'une semaine, réduirait le temps nécessaire aux organismes politiques pour organiser des congrès pour choisir des candidats, etc. Voilà l'argument principal qu'on a invoqué en 1955 lorsqu'on a décidé de la chose en Comité et que la question a été rejetée à la Chambre en comité plénier.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Hamel.

M. Forrestall: Un point à vérifier. Lorsque vous avez préparé le calendrier, vous êtes-vous assuré de la nécessité de disposer de six jours entiers pour recueillir le vote dans les nombreuses bases? La loi stipule que sur trois de ces six jours, le bureau de votation doit être ouvert au moins pendant trois heures consécutives. Pouvez-vous disposer de trois ou quatre jours pendant la semaine où vous êtes could save three or four days, or three days out of that week, that period when you are extremely busy with last minute details which might transfer the date of actual collating and preparing for distribution the final totals?

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: At the moment, as I said, this was arranged on Saturday and Sunday morning and I do not think it would help if the collating were done on Friday or Thursday because it is probably as bad. Perhaps the best time may be Sunday morning, because Sunday morning officially we are closed. It does not mean that we do not get the odd call, but officially we are closed. This is a task to which I would guess those assigned would have to devote their full time.

Now, whether the forces absolutely need six days to cast their votes—perhaps Colonel Dewis is more qualified than I am to comment. But this was discussed, I remember a meeting we had with the people in National Defence, including the Minister, a few years ago. We went into this and I believe we came to the conclusion that the period—I am sorry—somebody suggested at that time that it be cut down to one or two days, and it was quite agreed that this was absolutely impossible.

The problem is that you cannot shave enough days to leave nomination day on the fourteenth day before polling day. We could perhaps have nomination day not necessarily on the Monday, it could be on the nineteenth or eighteenth day before polling day, but it would not be on a Monday as prescribed in the law. Under the present provisions of the Act nomination day has to be on a Monday, as is polling day, so I worked on that basis. Of course, if the Committee were to consider that nomination day could be on another day, on a day other than Monday, it would change the picture. It could be shifted to Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? Yes, Mr. Dewis.

Colonel J. P. Dewis (Deputy Judge Advocate General, Department of National Defence): It is not so much a matter of time in actually taking the vote, most static units can do it all in one day. The big problem is getting the vote from there to the voting headquarters. More than half of the vote could probably be taken in one day and even get to returning, voting, headquarters in two or three days, but it is that time factor.

[Interpretation]

très occupé avec les détails de dernière minute pour que vous puissiez faire la compilation des résultats?

M. Hamel: Pour le moment, comme je l'ai dit, cela est prévu pour le samedi soir et le dimanche matin, mais je ne crois pas que ce serait mieux si la compilation se faisait le vendredi ou le jeudi. Le meilleur temps serait peut-être le dimanche matin, alors qu'officiellement nous sommes fermés. Nous pouvons recevoir quelques appels téléphoniques mais c'est tout. Il s'agit d'une tâche à laquelle ceux qui y sont affectés doivent consacrer tout leur temps.

Quant à savoir si nous avons absolument besoin de six jours pour le vote militaire, peut-être que mon collègue, le Col. Dewis, pourrait vous répondre d'une façon plus compétente. Cela nous en avons discuté il y a quelques années avec les gens du ministère de la Défense nationale, y compris le ministre. Nous avons approfondi la question pour venir à la conclusion que selon la proposition de certains, il faudrait réduire la période à un ou deux jours, ce qui était quasi impossible.

La difficulté c'est qu'on ne dispose pas d'assez de jours pour laisser la journée des présentations quatorze jours avant le jour du scrutin. Il n'est peut-être pas nécessaire que ce soit le lundi, ce pourrait être le 18 ou 19^e jour avant l'élection mais alors ce ne serait pas un lundi ainsi qu'il est prescrit dans la Loi. Selon les dispositions actuelles, la mise en candidature doit se faire un lundi comme le jour du scrutin, donc je dois en tenir compte. Si le comité pense que cela pourrait se faire une autre journée que le lundi, cela changerait tout. On pourrait le remettre au mardi ou au mercredi ou au jeudi n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Monsieur Dewis?

M. J. P. Dewis (Juge avocat général adjoint du ministère de la Défense Nationale): Ce n'est pas tellement le temps qu'il faut pour voter, la plupart des unités peuvent le faire en une seule journée. Mais le problème, c'est de prendre les bulletins et de les transporter aux quartiers généraux. Plus de la moitié des votes pourraient se faire dans une journée et être transmis aux quartiers généraux en un ou deux jours, mais il y a toujours le facteur temps.

[Texte]

● 0950

Then there are a very substantial number of votes—the last election I believe we had about 12 ships under way and we are enjoined, of course, not to move troops and ships et cetera, you know, during the voting period. However, these exercises are arranged sometimes months in advance and it is most difficult and undesirable to bring them to a halt.

We have manoeuvres. I remember one election when about two or three thousand troops out West were being concentrated at Wainwright and they actually did their voting en route. They were in a convoy and they stopped for two or three hours and actually did the voting on the roadway. The ballots then had to get to the headquarters of the appropriate returning officer. So it is really the time factor in getting these ballots to the special returning officer which eats up the time. It is not so much the voting, because in a ship they can do all the voting in a couple of hours, but then they have to get the ballots back.

Mr. Hamel: I am glad Col. Dewis brought this up because Mr. Nash made some inquiries yesterday, not exactly as to postal facilities, but about the approximate time it takes for documents to travel from various places where the Armed Forces have units at present, and we were told, not later than yesterday, that from some isolated places it takes between eight and 12 days for some documents to travel to a more central location. This is one of the basic problems, and this is the reason why I posed as a premise to my statement earlier that if we wish to give the Armed Forces approximately the same advantages they have at present, in other words, if we do not want to disfranchise too many of them—because these people could be disfranchised in two ways: by not giving them enough time to cast their ballots, and also by not allowing enough time for their ballots to travel to the office of the special returning officer. If they get there too late to be counted, the servicemen are disfranchised.

The Chairman: Mr. Howe.

Mr. Howe: Probably this has been discussed before, but I was rather interested in the item on page 26 of the Canadian Forces Voting Rules that has to do with bedridden veteran electors. This is something that we have been trying to get organized in civilian life, and apparently it has been carried forward in military hospitals. I do not know when it was initiated. How long has that been going on?

[Interprétation]

Il y a toujours un nombre important de votes, à la dernière élection, il y avait 12 navires en cours de route. On nous enjoint de ne pas déplacer de troupes ou de navires en temps d'élections. Ces manœuvres sont prévues des mois à l'avance et il est très difficile et peu souhaitable de les interrompre.

Il y a les manœuvres. Je me rappelle une fois où des troupes de l'Ouest étaient concentrées à Wainwright. Les soldats ont voté en route. Il a fallu faire arrêter le convoi pendant quelques heures pour les faire voter. Les bulletins de vote ont été transmis au directeur du scrutin compétent. Donc il y a toujours cette question de temps pour permettre le transfert des votes au directeur du scrutin spécial. Sur un navire, le vote peut se faire en quelques heures mais ensuite c'est la transmission des bulletins qui prend du temps.

M. Hamel: Je suis heureux que M. Dewis en ait parlé car M. Nash est allé aux renseignements hier, pas tellement au sujet du service postal mais sur le temps approximatif qu'il faut pour transmettre ces documents à partir des unités où se trouvent les militaires. On nous a dit pas plus tard qu'hier qu'en ce moment, il faut entre huit et douze jours pour le transfert des documents de certains postes isolés à un endroit plus central. Voilà donc l'un des problèmes fondamentaux. C'est pourquoi dans ma déclaration, j'ai établi le principe que si nous voulons donner aux militaires à peu près les mêmes avantages qu'en ce moment, si nous ne voulons pas enlever le suffrage à trop de militaires, cela pourrait se faire de deux façons: en ne leur donnant pas assez de temps pour voter et en n'accordant pas assez de temps pour que leur vote soit transmis au directeur du scrutin spécial; le militaire perd alors son droit de vote.

Le président: Monsieur Howe.

M. Howe: Peut-être cela a-t-il déjà fait l'objet d'une discussion, mais j'ai été très intéressé par la page 26 des Règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes, qui a trait aux anciens combattants cloués au lit. Nous avons essayé de régler la situation dans le secteur civil, et il semble que les hôpitaux militaires ont fait de même. Depuis combien de temps cela se fait-il?

[Text]

Col. Dewis: This came in about 1940, I believe. I would point out that these are veterans; these are not members of the Forces and these hospitals are DVA hospitals. In a military hospital it is part of the unit and the voting is done there by going from room to room if necessary.

Mr. Howe: It is done in the military hospitals, too?

Col. Dewis: Oh, yes.

Mr. Howe: That brings up a problem, Mr. Hamel. Many civilians are disfranchised because they are in hospitals. If it has worked out satisfactorily in military hospitals and veterans' hospitals, why can it not be done in civilian hospitals?

Mr. Hamel: I do not believe the situation is the same. I think we have to make a distinction between an acute or general hospital and a chronic hospital. At the moment in chronic hospitals we treat the patients more or less in the same way as we treat the veterans, with perhaps this main difference of residence. A veteran in a hospital under the Department of Veterans Affairs, or a veteran in a hospital in which there are 25 patients whose expenses are paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs, can vote only for the candidate in the electoral district where he had his residence before being admitted to hospital. This is the difference from ordinary chronic hospitals where the patients vote for the candidate in the electoral district in which the hospital is located.

• 0955

When you deal with a general hospital, the problem is quite different, because most of these hospitals are in metropolitan areas. They may be servicing five, 10, 15, 20, or 25 electoral districts. These people are in the hospital for a relatively short period of time. It used to be about 10 days, but as you know, provincial governments are trying to shorten as much as possible the length of stay of patients in a general hospital. My information is that at present the average stay of a patient in a hospital is between six and seven days.

In order to vote, a person has to be enumerated; he has to be on the list. If he is in the hospital at the time of the enumeration, the chances are that he will have long ago left the hospital by the time polling day comes around, and vice versa. If he is there on polling day, it means that he is probably on the list in some other electoral district. This is the crux of the problem, and without a permanent list—in fact, some provinces have

[Interpretation]

M. Dewis: Depuis 1940, je crois. Il s'agit d'anciens combattants. Il s'agit d'hôpitaux des anciens combattants et non de militaires. Le vote se fait à l'hôpital militaire même.

M. Howe: Cela se fait aussi dans les hôpitaux militaires?

M. Dewis: En effet.

M. Howe: Ce qui crée un problème, monsieur Hamel. De nombreux civils perdent leur droit de vote parce qu'ils sont à l'hôpital. Si ces dispositions sont satisfaisantes pour les hôpitaux militaires, pourquoi n'en serait-il pas de même dans les hôpitaux civils?

M. Hamel: Je ne crois pas que la situation soit la même. Il faut faire la différence entre l'hôpital général et un hôpital pour le traitement des maladies chroniques. Dans ce dernier, nous traitons les patients à peu près de la même façon que les anciens combattants dans un hôpital administré par le ministère, où il y a au moins 25 anciens combattants dont les dépenses sont payées par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Dans ces deux cas ils ne peuvent voter que pour le candidat de la circonscription électorale où ils résidaient avant d'être admis à l'hôpital.

Voilà ce qui les distingue des autres hôpitaux pour malades chroniques où les patients votent pour le candidat de la circonscription électorale où se trouve l'hôpital.

Dans le cas d'un hôpital général, c'est tout à fait différent car la plupart se trouvent dans les régions métropolitaines; il peuvent desservir de cinq à vingt-cinq districts électoraux. Les patients n'y sont que pour très peu de temps, une dizaine de jours autrefois. Comme vous le savez les gouvernements provinciaux essaient de raccourcir la période de séjour des malades dans les hôpitaux généraux. Je crois comprendre qu'à l'heure actuelle, la durée moyenne de séjour est de six à sept jours.

Donc pour voter, la personne doit figurer sur la liste électorale si elle est hospitalisée à ce moment-là. Il est possible qu'il aura quitté l'hôpital avant le jour du scrutin ou vice versa. S'il y est le jour de l'énumération, il peut figurer sur une autre liste électorale. Voilà le problème et sans la liste permanente—de fait, certaines provinces ont pris d'autres dispositions. En Nouvelle-Écosse on se sert du vote par procuration.

[Texte]

treated this in some other way. Nova Scotia, for example, as Mr. Forrestall certainly knows, has treated this under proxy voting.

Mr. Howe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: Coming back to your schedule of possible arrangements, what other disruptions would be caused, in terms of the general Act, by advancing the date of nomination? Perhaps at the same time you could enlarge a little on the difficulties or disruptions or amendments that would have to be made to the Act in general if the official nomination day, that is to say the Monday, was changed. I am assuming that it has some relationship to the flow of your work. Certain things have to be done on a certain day. Would the extra load cause disruptions in other parts of your administrative procedures?

Mr. Hamel: Offhand I would say, no. I think I pointed out earlier that there are two major problems. One is, I was going to say, of no concern to me. It is purely a problem for the body politique; it shortens the period they need to organize conventions, and so on. The other argument that was given in that respect was that it would tend to increase by one week the electoral campaign in some areas. But this, of course, is not a problem for me.

My major problem would be purely a staff problem, in the sense that I would impose on my key people additional responsibility at a time when they are almost exhausted by the work pressure, and so on. But otherwise I do not believe that it would disrupt anything because it would allow us exactly the same time for the other operations.

Mr. Forrestall: There would not be any major disruption by the advancement of the day as far as your workload is concerned.

Mr. Hamel: No, in fact it would allow our returning officers more time for the printing of the ballot. At the moment they have only about two days. In that case they would have almost a week if nomination day were still on a Monday, that is, the twenty-twenty-first day, and even if nomination day were advanced to Tuesday or Wednesday, that would not create any major problem.

Mr. Forrestall: How large is your permanent experienced staff?

Mr. Hamel: Altogether there are twenty-one, but that includes my staff in the warehouse, my junior clerks, my messengers and

[Interprétation]

M. Howe: Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Forrestall?

M. Forrestall: Pour en revenir à la liste des arrangements possibles, qu'arriverait-il si l'on avançait la journée de la mise en candidature? Pourriez-vous nous dire en même temps quelles seront les difficultés qui en découleraient au titre de la loi si la date de mise en candidature officielle, mettons le lundi, était modifiée? Je suppose que cela présente quelque rapport avec vos travaux, l'horaire de vos travaux. Y aurait-il un surcroît de travail pour votre personnel?

M. Hamel: Au départ, je dirais non. Je crois avoir signalé plus tôt qu'il y a deux problèmes principaux: l'un qui intéresse le corps politique, c'est-à-dire le raccourcissement de la période nécessaire pour l'organisation des conventions, etc. L'autre argument invoqué à cet égard accroîtrait d'une semaine la campagne électorale dans certaines régions. Cela n'est pas un problème qui m'intéresse.

Ma principale préoccupation a trait au personnel. Cela imposerait à mon personnel clé des responsabilités supplémentaires au moment même où il sont sous une grande pression. Autrement, il n'y aurait pas de difficultés, je crois. Cela nous donnerait à peu près le même temps pour les autres opérations.

M. Forrestall: Autrement dit, il n'y aura pas de changements significatifs dans l'horaire de vos travaux, vi l'on avançait le jour des présentations?

M. Hamel: Non, cela accorderait plus de temps aux directeurs du scrutin pour l'impression des bulletins de vote. Aujourd'hui, ils n'ont que deux jours. A ce moment-là, ils auraient près d'une semaine si la mise en candidature se faisait une autre journée que le lundi, un mardi ou un mercredi, par exemple, il n'y aurait pas de problème important.

M. Forrestall: Quelle est le nombre de votre personnel permanent d'expérience?

M. Hamel: Vingt-et-une personnes, mais en fait cela comprend mon personnel d'entrepôt, mes commis, mes messagers. Mais pour ce qui so on. But my key staff are the assistant, my executive assistant, and my senior administrator, and that is it.

[Text]

Mr. Forrestall: If another body of the House considers at a later date the question of public financing or public support of elections in some way, and I am assuming that you have looked at this and given a great deal of thought to it privately, would this necessitate an increase in your staff? What I am getting at is really whether or not, as the country grows and problems arise therefrom, you are getting pressed. Are you short of staff? Should your staff be enlarged?

• 1000

Mr. Hamel: Not at this time. With our present responsibilities, I believe we can cope with the present workload. Even adding the normal growth in the number of electors, and assuming that in 1972 or 1973 the voting age is reduced, I am still quite convinced that we can manage with the present senior staff. We may have to add the odd junior staff person.

To answer your first question, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to answer in absolute terms because there are many ways of controlling this election expenses business. I will give you an example. Let us suppose that the Barbeau Report were implemented as is; in other words, that all the recommendations of the Barbeau Report were enacted. The recommendation is that this be assigned to an officer that will be completely independent of my office. That officer would certainly need quite a large staff, particularly at election time but even on a continuous basis.

On the other hand, if Parliament were rather interested in a system such as the Nova Scotia system which came into force last October, this could probably be taken care of in my own office with a relatively small, specialized staff. In other words, we would have to create a specialized unit alongside our present operations.

Mr. Forrestall: Then another way of saying the proposition in your rescheduling is that it would not cost any more money, it would not entail any substantive changes in your procedural flow in handling the great bulk of Canadian electors. Would that be a correct assumption?

Mr. Hamel: You mean to rearrange the sequence of events so that the results of the service vote could be announced on polling est du personnel clé, il y a mon assistant, mon adjoint exécutif, mon administrateur senior, et c'est tout.

[Interpretation]

M. Forrestall: Si un autre organisme de la Chambre envisage ultérieurement d'étudier la question du financement public d'une élection, je suppose que vous y avez songé sérieusement. Vous faudrait-il accroître votre personnel? Je pense aux problèmes qui pourraient se poser si vous manquiez de personnel. Est-ce que vous devez prévoir une augmentation de personnel?

M. Hamel: Non, pas en ce moment. Avec nos responsabilités actuelles, je crois que nous pouvons faire face aux travaux à accomplir. Même en tenant compte de l'augmentation du nombre d'électeurs, et en supposant par exemple, qu'en 1972 ou en 1973 l'âge légal de Svote sera baissé, je suis convaincu que malgré tout nous pourrions nous tirer d'affaires avec le personnel expérimenté dont nous disposons. Cependant il faudrait peut-être accroître le personnel auxiliaire.

Pour répondre à votre première question, il est très difficile, sinon impossible, d'y répondre de façon absolue, car il y a de nombreuses façons de contrôler les dépenses d'élections. A titre d'exemple, supposons que le rapport Barbeau soit mis en œuvre tel quel, c'est-à-dire, que toutes les recommandations qui y figurent soient suivies. La recommandation veut que cela soit affecté à un agent tout à fait indépendant de mon bureau. Cet agent aurait certainement besoin d'un nombreux personnel surtout en période d'élections, mais même de façon permanente.

D'autre part, si le Parlement s'intéressait à un système comme celui de la Nouvelle-Écosse qui a été introduit en octobre dernier, il est probable qu'on pourrait s'occuper de la chose au sein de mon propre bureau, avec l'aide d'un personnel spécialisé relativement peu nombreux. Il faudrait donc créer une unité spécialisée, dans le domaine de nos travaux actuels.

M. Forrestall: Autrement dit, il n'en coûterait pas plus cher, cela n'entraînerait pas de changements énormes pour ce qui est de desservir la grande majorité des électeurs canadiens. Serait-il juste de faire cette supposition?

M. Hamel: Vous voulez dire modifier le déroulement des événements, pour que l'on puisse annoncer le résultat du vote des mili-night? No; it would not add anything substantial, anyway; perhaps the odd clerk but it would be rather insignificant.

[Texte]

Mr. Forrestall: Then in the absence of a permanent list this probably is about the only functional way that it could be done; that is to say, the secrecy of the franchise.

Mr. Hamel: True, although I am sure you realize that the only thing that would be achieved is that the service vote would be known at the same time as the other. It would still be identified as a group and then, of course, on that basis there are as many people who feel one way as there are those who feel another way. Some people would feel that the impact of announcing the service vote on polling night would be greater than announcing it a week later. Last time we estimated that 11 million viewers were actually watching the election results and the first result that would come out and the only official result at that time—because the unofficial counts made by the returning officers at that time are purely unofficial—would be the service vote; this would be the first one to come on the air.

The Chairman: The only thing you have to do is to send the telegrams two hours after they have started counting the ballots in the constituencies; this is quite simple.

Mr. Forrestall: Could not that done?

Mr. Hamel: Oh yes.

Mr. Forrestall: The point was I do not think that I fully agree with you. I know you have a tremendously large audience for that two and one-half or three-hour period. Some of us are crazy enough to sit up all night in the hopes there will be another dribble or two come in. But the time goes by and then every newspaper in Canada carries the results and usually they are carried in a prominent place, and I understand the readership of the Canadian newspapers is something in the order of 13 million or 14 million a day.

• 1005

Mr. Hamel: I am sorry; I did not say that this was necessarily my opinion. I said that some people believe the impact would be greater but others believe it is greater the way it is done now because it is announced all by itself a week later.

Colonel Dewis: Might I say a word, Mr. Chairman?

[Interprétation]

taires le jour des élections? Non. Cela ne ferait pas une grande différence, peut-être un greffier ici et là, mais rien de très important.

M. Forrestall: Donc en l'absence d'une liste permanente, c'est probablement la seule façon pratique de procéder, à savoir le caractère secret de l'électorat.

M. Hamel: Exactement, même si je suis sûr que vous vous rendez compte que la seule chose que l'on obtiendrait, serait que le vote des militaires serait connu en même temps que l'autre. Il serait toujours identifié en tant que groupe et par conséquent, suivant ce principe, il y a autant de gens qui pensent d'une façon que de gens qui pensent différemment. D'aucuns penseraient que le choc de l'annonce du vote des militaires le soir du vote serait plus important que si on l'annonçait une semaine plus tard. La dernière fois, nous avons estimé que 11 millions de télé-spectateurs suivaient les résultats des élections et les premiers résultats reçus et les seuls résultats officiels à ce moment, parce que les décomptes officiels effectués par les directeurs du scrutin à ce moment sont purement officiels, seraient ceux du vote des militaires; ils seraient les premiers à être annoncés.

Le président: Il n'a qu'à envoyer les télégrammes deux heures après le début du comptage des votes dans les circonscriptions; c'est fort simple.

M. Forrestall: Ne peut-on pas le faire?

M. Hamel: Oh, si.

M. Forrestall: Je ne suis pas tout à fait d'accord avec vous. Je sais que vous avez un auditoire énorme pendant cette période de deux heures et demie ou trois heures. Il y en a qui sont assez fous pour rester debout toute la nuit dans l'espoir d'apprendre un ou deux résultats de plus. Mais le temps passe, et chaque journal canadien donne les résultats, généralement en évidence, et je crois savoir qu'il y a chaque jour 13 ou 14 millions de lecteurs au Canada.

M. Hamel: Je m'excuse, mais je n'ai pas dit que c'était forcément mon avis. J'ai dit que certains estimaient que l'impact était plus fort, mais d'autres croient qu'il est plus important si l'on procède comme maintenant, parce que les résultats sont publiés séparément une semaine après.

M. Dewis: Puis-je dire un mot, monsieur le président?

[Text]

The Chairman: Yes, Colonel Dewis.

Colonel Dewis: I quite agree that it is a matter of opinion whether you get more publicity or not and even so far as the Forces and National Defence are concerned, everybody is not in agreement. While it is true enough that the service vote might be the first one announced on the radio or TV, during the next hour or two or three they are waiting for the civilian vote, and by that time I suggest they have pretty well forgotten what the service vote has done.

The big thing about announcing it on the following Saturday is that there is a week of speculation. I have given to the Chairman a cross-sampling of newspaper clippings which I have kept in my office. I have three folders about that big going right back to 1960, the main ones 1962 and 1965, and in the main they are all speculation about seats being close; they say how much and how the service voted the last time.

The pot is really boiling and everybody is waiting until Saturday. It keeps the pot going for that entire week and then, when the results come out, there is another big flurry. I think if everything is announced on the same night there is a kind of recapitulation, of course, the next day or two in the press but then it is a rather dead issue, but now the thing is kept alive right up until practically the Saturday following the service voting.

As I say, even in the Forces we are not all in agreement but I think, however, in giving my personal view probably I am giving the majority view.

Mr. Benjamin: You prefer election day?

Colonel Dewis: Yes; to have it announced on election day.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I might comment on that because I am one of the people that have been elected with very small majorities on occasion. I well remember my first when I had a majority of 78 and that week of waiting was very difficult. Of course, the thing that helped matters in our area is that we did not have too many people in the Canadian Forces who were going to be voting. Had there been a lot, I would have been very much disturbed; it is a rather funny thing that most of the returns that come in favour the Liberal Party when it comes to the service voting.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Oui, monsieur Dewis.

M. Dewis: Je suis bien d'accord pour dire que s'il y a davantage de publicité ou non est une affaire d'opinion, et même chez les militaires et à la Défense nationale, tout le monde n'est pas d'accord. Même s'il est vrai que le vote des militaires est annoncé en premier sur les ondes, pendant les deux ou trois premières heures, les gens attendent le vote des civils et à ce moment, je crois qu'ils ont déjà oublié les résultats du vote des militaires.

Ce qui importe, lorsqu'on annonce les résultats le samedi suivant, c'est qu'il y a une semaine de spéculation. J'ai donné au président un échantillonnage de coupures de journaux que j'ai conservées dans mon bureau. J'ai trois chemises sur le sujet, qui remontent à 1960, les principales de 1962 et 1965 et, en général, il y a toutes sortes de spéculations concernant des sièges très contestés. Elles indiquent la quantité et l'orientation du vote militaire la dernière fois.

Tout le monde attend au samedi. Pendant toute la semaine, les choses sont en suspens, puis quand les résultats sont publiés, il y a une autre ruée. Je pense que si l'on annonce tout le même soir, il y a naturellement une recapitulation dans la presse le lendemain ou le surlendemain, mais c'est une question un peu «réchauffée», tandis que maintenant, les choses restent en suspens jusqu'au samedi qui suit le vote des Forces canadiennes.

Comme je l'ai dit, même dans les Forces armées, il n'y a pas unanimité, mais je crois toutefois qu'en vous donnant mon opinion personnelle, je vous donne celle de la majorité.

M. Benjamin: Vous préférez le jour des élections?

M. Dewis: Oui, je préfère qu'on l'annonce le jour des élections.

M. Howe: Monsieur le président, je pourrais faire des observations car je suis un des candidats qui a été élu avec une très faible majorité à l'occasion. Je me souviens bien que lors de ma première élection j'ai eu 78 voix de majorité et cette semaine d'attente a été très pénible. Évidemment, ce qui a facilité les choses dans notre région, c'est qu'il n'y avait pas tellement de personnes dans les Forces armées et qui allaient voter. S'il y en avait eu beaucoup, j'aurais été vraiment très ennuyé car il est plutôt curieux que la plupart des résultats sont favorables au parti libéral lorsqu'il s'agit du vote des militaires.

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre.

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre.

[Texte]

Mr. Lefebvre: In how many electoral districts has the military vote changed the original count on election night on the average, or in the last election, for instance?

Mr. Hamel: There are always one or two. In the last election there was Sherbrooke; I am not too sure about Comox-Alberni. These are only two, if Comox-Alberni is involved, but I am sure of Sherbrooke. In 1965 there were two, I believe; one near Halifax and the other was Shefford. In fact, in Shefford...

Mr. Forrestall: There was never any near Halifax.

Mr. Hamel: I thought Mr. Stewart had been elected.

Mr. Forrestall: That was in 1963, I believe.

Mr. Hamel: Perhaps it was in 1963, but anyway in every election we have at least one or two. I am sorry; I thought I had the figures here but I do not think I do.

Mr. Duquet: That is accurate enough.

Colonel Dewis: From my recollection I would put it closer than an average of two. There have been occasions when there were three, and there have been anywhere from five to six or seven, where it might well have changed it. This is what kept the speculation during that week alive, but certainly an average of two is not excessive.

Mr. Hamel: And, of course, the unpleasant thing about this is that the general opinion is that these people were either elected or defeated by the military vote, which is only partly true. In fact, the military vote is part of the whole process but since it comes late the general belief is that so and so was defeated, or so and so was elected, by the military vote.

• 1010

Mr. Lefebvre: Perhaps for that reason alone it might be a good suggestion that they be published on the same date.

Mr. Duquet: Même si cela oblige à avancer la mise en nomination d'une semaine?

Mr. Lefebvre: Oui parce que, d'après les paroles de M. Hamel, cela ne changera pas le coût des élections, du moins je ne crois pas.

Mr. Hamel: Non. Comme je l'ai dit tout à l'heure, le coût de l'élection n'en serait certainement pas affecté de façon substantielle; ce serait une question de quelques dollars.

[Interprétation]

M. Lefebvre: Dans combien de districts électoraux le vote des Forces armées a-t-il modifié les premiers résultats des élections, en moyenne, au cours des dernières élections, par exemple?

M. Hamel: Il y en a toujours un ou deux. Lors des dernières élections, il y a eu Sherbrooke. Je ne sais pas au juste en ce qui concerne Comox-Alberni. Ce sont les deux seuls, si l'on compte Comox-Alberni, mais je suis sûr pour Sherbrooke. En 1965, je crois qu'il y a eu deux cas: un près de Halifax, et l'autre a été Shefford. De fait, à Shefford...

M. Forrestall: Il n'y en a pas eu près de Halifax.

M. Hamel: Je croyais que M. Stewart avait été élu.

M. Forrestall: C'était en 1963, je crois.

M. Hamel: C'était peut-être en 1963, mais de toute façon, au cours de chaque élection, il y a toujours au moins un ou deux cas. Je m'excuse, je croyais avoir les chiffres ici, mais il semble bien que je ne les ai pas.

M. Duquet: C'est suffisamment précis.

M. Dewis: Je pense, si je me souviens bien, qu'on pourrait plutôt dire une moyenne de deux. Parfois, il y en a eu trois, et même jusqu'à cinq, six ou sept, où la situation aurait pu être changée. C'est ce qui a donné lieu aux hypothèses pendant une semaine, mais une moyenne de deux n'est certainement pas excessive.

M. Hamel: Et naturellement, ce qui est malheureux dans tout ça, c'est que tout le monde croit que ces gens ont été élus ou défaits par le vote des militaires, ce qui n'est que partiellement vrai. En fait, le vote des Forces armées fait partie de tout le processus, mais comme il vient en retard, les gens disent que tel ou tel candidat a été défait ou élu par le vote des Forces armées.

M. Lefebvre: Rien que pour cette raison, je crois qu'il serait peut-être bon qu'on publie les résultats le même jour.

Mr. Duquet: Even if that obliges the nomination day to be advanced by one week?

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, because according to Mr. Hamel's words this will not change the cost of the elections, at least I do not think so.

Mr. Hamel: No. As I said a while ago, the cost of the election would not be affected in a substantial manner. It might be a matter of a few dollars.

[Text]

Le seul problème serait celui du personnel, c'est-à-dire que le dépouillement du vote militaire se ferait à un moment où le personnel est déjà surchargé, à la suite d'une période de six semaines de travail intense, et par conséquent les possibilités d'erreurs seraient nécessairement plus grandes qu'elles ne le sont actuellement.

En d'autres termes, je craindrais que le travail soit moins efficace que présentement.

M. Lefebvre: Parce qu'ils sont déjà surchargés de travail, à ce moment-là?

M. Hamel: Surchargés de travail à ce moment précis et vidés par une période assez longue pendant laquelle la pression a été excessivement dure.

M. Lefebvre: Mais si vous aviez deux ans pour entraîner votre personnel à cette tâche, pourriez-vous contourner ce problème?

M. Hamel: Non, car cela voudrait dire engager du personnel supplémentaire qui ne ferait rien entre les élections; ces gens ne travailleraient qu'une journée ou à peu près. En fait, pour assembler le vote des quatre officiers reporters spéciaux, il faut de 8 à 12 heures au maximum. Nous l'avons fait en 7 heures en 1968 mais nous n'avions rencontré aucun problème. En général, ce travail peut se faire...

M. Lefebvre: A ce moment, les votes des civils étaient déjà comptés?

M. Hamel: Oui. La différence avec le présent système, c'est que maintenant, lorsque la journée de la votation est passée, nous avons deux jours ou trois jours de répit, pendant que le vote militaire est compté dans les bureaux des officiers reporters spéciaux. A ce moment, mon personnel clé, surtout l'agent exécutif, peuvent prendre un certain répit, respirer un petit peu. Ensuite, il s'agit pour eux simplement de donner un autre coup de collier le vendredi ou le samedi suivant. Avec le nouveau système, c'est à la fin d'une période excessivement active et juste avant les deux journées les plus occupées de toute la campagne électorale, alors, que les gens seraient déjà presque vidés, qu'on les surchargerait encore davantage.

Alors c'est là le problème majeur à mon point de vue, et pas du tout celui du coût, parce que, encore une fois, cela n'ajouterait rien au coût.

The Chairman: If I may interject and just read some titles of newspaper articles that were kept by Colonel Dewis, in the newspaper, The Gazette, on Monday, November 15,

[Interpretation]

The only problem was that of the personnel, i.e. the service vote would have to be counted when staff is already overworked following a six-week period of intense work, and consequently there the possibilities of mistakes would necessarily be greater than now.

In other words, I am afraid that the work might be less efficient than the way it is done at present.

Mr. Lefebvre: Because they are already over-worked at that time?

Mr. Hamel: They are overworked at that particular time and also worn out by also a fairly long period during which the pressure was extremely tough.

Mr. Lefebvre: If you had two years to train your staff for that particular task, do you think you could avoid that problem?

Mr. Hamel: No, because this means I would have to hire additional staff and this additional staff would have nothing to do between elections. They might be working only a day or two. In fact, in order to collect the votes of the four special Returning Officers, it takes a maximum of eight to twelve hours. In 1968 we did that in seven hours, but we had not encountered any problems. In general, that work can be done...

Mr. Lefebvre: Was the civilian vote already counted then?

Mr. Hamel: Yes. The difference with the present system is that when the polling day is past, we have two or three days of waiting, while the Service vote is counted in the offices of the special Returning Officers. This gives my principal staff, especially the executive agent, time to take a breather. Then, all they have to do is to put their shoulder to the wheel again on the next Friday or Saturday. With the new system, it is at the end of an extremely busy period and just before the two busiest days in the campaign, when people are already close to being worn out, that they would be given an additional load.

So, in my opinion, that is the major problem. It is not a matter of cost, because this would not add anything to the cost.

Le président: Puis-je lire certains titres d'articles de journaux, que le Colonel Dewis a conservés. Dans The Gazette du 15 novembre 1965, il y avait un article intitulé, «Service

[Texte]

1965, there was an article entitled: "Service Vote Adds Two To Liberals." Then there is an article in the same paper on the same day with the heading: "That Service Vote Delay":

It may be hoped that this has been the last election in which the vote of the armed services will be reported nearly a week after election day. This practice is bad, in every way. It should be possible to conduct the service vote in such a way that it could be merged with the civilian vote and reported on the same day.

• 1015

There are some other articles. I will read one in 1962 from the Ottawa Citizen. It is headed: "Results Stress Need For Change." The author is writing about the secrecy of the services vote. He is writing about the fact that the service results get too much publicity and in the same vein, which I believe, substantiates the main complaints of members of the armed forces that they want to have the result of their ballots on the same day.

Mr. Forrestall: Are those too lengthy to be included in our records?

The Chairman: I think it would be nice if we had these comments of the papers; maybe not all of them but the editorial pages. I do not think Mr. Dewis would have any objection.

Colonel Dewis: No.

The Chairman: Could I have a motion to this effect?

Mr. Forrestall: I move that the Committee agree to print these editorial comments as an appendix to this day's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, while we are in this particular area, Mr. Hamel mentioned that Mr. Nash had dug out some interesting figures on time and travel required for the movement of documentation and what not. I wonder if they are in a prepared form perhaps we could have them shown as part of our record.

The Chairman: Mr. Nash would you comment on that, please?

Mr. Walter Nash (Assistant Chief Electoral Officer): It was not I who dug out this information; it was Lieutenant Colonel Coles, who 21156—2

[Interprétation]

Vote Adds Two to Liberals» (Le vote militaire ajoute deux députés aux Libéraux). Un autre article du même journal, le même jour, est intitulé «That Service Vote Delay» (Le vote militaire retarde les résultats. En voici un extrait:

... On espère que ça sera la dernière élection où l'on donnera les résultats du vote des forces armées une semaine après le jour des élections. Cette coutume est mauvaise à tous les points de vue. Il devrait être possible de procéder de sorte que l'on puisse faire rapport du vote militaire et du vote civil le même jour.

Ensuite, voici un article écrit en 1962, tiré du Ottawa Citizen, intitulé, «Results Stress Need For Change». (Les résultats du vote soulignent le besoin d'un changement). L'auteur parle du caractère secret du vote militaire. Selon lui le vote militaire reçoit trop de publicité et il rappelle que les militaires aimeraient que leurs résultats soient publiés le même jour que les résultats de vote civil.

M. Forrestall: Ces articles sont-ils trop longs pour être compris dans notre compte rendu?

Le président: Je crois que ce serait une bonne chose si l'on pouvait conserver ces articles de journaux, les éditoriaux surtout. Je pense que M. Dewis ne s'y opposerait pas.

M. Dewis: Non.

Le président: Puis-je avoir une motion à ce sujet?

M. Forrestall: Je propose que le Comité approuve que ces éditoriaux soient imprimés en appendice au compte rendu.

La motion est adoptée.

M. Benjamin: M. Hamel a dit que M. Nash avait des chiffres intéressants concernant le temps qu'il fallait pour transporter les documents. Peut-être que l'on pourrait l'entendre à ce sujet?

Le président: Monsieur Nash, pourriez-vous faire des commentaires à ce sujet, s'il vous plaît?

M. Walter Nash (directeur général adjoint des élections): Ce n'est pas moi qui ai rassemblé ces renseignements, c'est le lieutenant-is the Director of the Canadian Forces Postal Services. It lists in effect on the one hand those bases in Canada which are in remote areas and are of limited access and also places around the world and an estimate of the travelling time. It is in the form of a memorandum which I am prepared to table.

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, I might make a remark on that. There is some security aspect involved in this memorandum because it lists all of our outposts in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, et cetera, and some overseas. I do not think it is really necessary that the Committee have the exact names of all these units. I think Mr. Nash might say that there are 15 or 20 located in the Northern Territories and 4 or 5 in some other places and that the time is such and such rather than table this. I know some of this material does come out of a restricted manual. True enough, it is available to government departments but when it goes into your Minutes then it becomes available to everybody.

The Chairman: Colonel Dewis would you then tell us what information we can get from this document? Could you stress the main...

M. Trudel: Monsieur le président, je crois que tout ce que nous devons savoir, c'est le nombre des bases au Canada et outre-mer, sans nécessairement qu'on les nomme individuellement. Je pense que ce renseignement répondrait aux besoins du Comité sans mettre en danger notre sécurité.

The Chairman: I rather believe this information, which could be available in a general sense, is important for the members, provided we are not in agreement with the witnesses when they say that they require so many days for casting the ballots in such circumstances. Would you think, if Colonel Dewis says that at the election they do not need six days, maybe four days would be sufficient, that he is in a position to express his view, which is quite valuable because of his experience?

• 1020

Mr. Forrestall: Without again trespassing on Mr. Benjamin's time it would be very useful and helpful to me and I am sure to other members of the Committee, if the document could show not specifically the names and locations of the sites, but for example, whether or not in northern Canada there colonel Coles, qui est Directeur des Services postaux des Forces canadiennes. C'est une liste où figure, d'une part, les bases au Canada qui se trouvent dans des régions éloignées et d'accès limité et une liste aussi des endroits de par le monde ainsi qu'une évaluation du temps de voyage nécessaire. C'est sous forme d'un mémoire, que je suis prêt à déposer.

[Interpretation]

M. Dewis: Monsieur le président, si je puis faire un commentaire à ce sujet. Il y a des aspects sécurité dans ce mémoire car c'est la liste de toutes les bases dans les territoires du Nord-ouest, du Yukon, etc., et certaines bases outre-mer. Je ne pense pas que le Comité ait besoin d'avoir les noms exacts de ces bases. On peut dire qu'il y en a 15 ou 20 situées dans les territoires du Nord et 4 ou 5 dans d'autres endroits et que le temps est tel et tel plutôt que de déposer ce rapport tel quel. Cette liste provient d'un manuel qui renferme des renseignements qui sont de nature confidentielle. Bien sûr, il est à la disposition des ministères, mais s'il est versé au compte rendu il devient à la portée de tout le monde.

Le président: Colonel Dewis, pouvez-vous nous donner les renseignements les plus importants que l'on peut tirer de ce document? Pouvez-vous en souligner les principaux...

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, I believe that all we want to know is the number of bases in Canada and overseas, without necessarily naming them individually. I think that this information would take care of the Committee's wishes without endangering our security.

Le président: Je pense que ces renseignements qui pourraient être disponibles d'une façon générale, sont importants pour les membres du comité pourvu que l'on ne soit pas d'accord avec les témoins quand ils disent qu'il faut tant de jours pour émettre leur vote dans de telles circonstances. Pensez-vous que si M. Dewis disait qu'aux élections on n'a pas besoin de six jours mais que quatre jours suffisent, pensez-vous qu'il soit en mesure d'exprimer son point de vue, qui est très valable compte tenu de son expérience?

M. Forrestall: Pourrait-on indiquer dans le document et cela nous serait très utile à moi-même et aux autres membres du Comité, pas nécessairement les noms et emplacements exacts, mais par exemple si dans le Nord du Canada il y avait 200 électeurs militaires, dont les votes et documents ne pourraient were 200 forces electors whose votes or documents could not be transferred say under 10 or 12 days.

[Texte]

If it was four or five electors who were in the same place, my attitude towards correcting the greater evil—because I suppose the principle of lesser evil comes into play here a little—would be different, so it would not be sufficient for you to say to me that there are a number of bases in the north which would require 10 days or a number of bases in Europe which would require 4 days or a number of bases in Asia which would require 15 days. That would not be quite enough for my purposes. And if I am getting into areas of security, then perhaps as far as I am concerned we might just as well—Perhaps the Colonel could summarize that and give us a clearer indication by simply reading it as opposed to having the document tabled and included as part of our record. As a matter of fact, it was numbers more than locations that I was concerned about.

Mr. Nash: Mr. Chairman, if I might, just before Colonel Dewis gives you the excerpts, the purpose for which this paper was prepared was not so much to establish a time period but more to establish whether these people have daily service or whether there is only one train a week, for instance, or two trains a week and these on specific days so that when you are trying to establish a travelling time period, if I may use the phrase, your days of the week would be extremely important because the train may only travel on Mondays and if the ballots missed that Monday train they would have to wait until the following Monday. It is not a question of its taking that length of time to get there.

It is just that within that given period there are only certain days on which stuff can be moved. Therefore the period has to be sufficiently long, shall we say, so that it will pick up these one-day-a-week operations or two-day-a-week operations. Because of the nature of some of these Canadian forces bases, they are obviously out in the bush, if you wish, and obviously they have very limited communications as far as bulk movement is concerned. They have wireless, of course, but supplies or the receiving or dispatching of mail and such things are on a very restricted basis just because we do not have the railroads or the plane service or whatever.

An airplane might only go up to a certain place twice a week and if you miss it on that day you have to wait until the following week, and it was on that basis that this memo was prepared.

[Interprétation]

être transférés en dedans de 10 ou 12 jours.

S'il n'y avait que cinq ou six électeurs dans le même endroit, ce serait différent. Il ne serait pas suffisant de me dire qu'il y a un certain nombre de bases dans le Nord qui requièrent 10 jours ou un nombre de bases en Europe qui demandent quatre jours et, en Asie, quinze jours. Ce n'est pas assez en ce qui me concerne. Si je touche à des domaines de sécurité... peut-être le colonel pourrait-il résumer en le lisant plutôt qu'en déposant le document et en l'incluant au dossier. En fait, ce sont les chiffres qui m'intéressent plus que les emplacements.

M. Nash: Monsieur le Président, avant que le colonel Dewis lise les extraits, je voudrais dire que le but de ce mémoire, ce n'est pas pour établir une période de temps donnée, c'est pour établir si ces gens ont un service quotidien ou s'il n'y a qu'un train par semaine, par exemple, ou deux trains par semaine, et sur des jours précis, afin que, lorsqu'on essaie d'établir une période de déplacement, les jours de la semaine seraient extrêmement importants parce que, si le train ne passe que le lundi et qu'on manque ce train, il faudrait attendre le lundi suivant.

C'est simplement pour dire que, dans une période donnée, il y a seulement certains jours durant lesquels ces documents peuvent être transportés. C'est pour ça que nous devons avoir une période assez longue qui puisse comprendre ces opérations d'un ou deux jours. Il est évident que certaines régions éloignées ont des moyens de communication très limités. Il y a toujours évidemment la radio, mais la réception et l'expédition du courrier, et ainsi de suite, sont soumises à des conditions limitées parce qu'il n'y a pas de chemin de fer ni d'avion.

Un avion se rend peut-être seulement deux fois par semaine à un endroit donné et, si vous l'avez manqué un jour, il faut attendre la semaine suivante. C'est pour ça qu'on a préparé ce mémoire.

[Text]

Colonel Dewis: Mr. Chairman, if I understand Mr. Forrestall's question correctly, I think I can answer it more fully even than what is here but I want to make sure I understand it. I believe your question is: how long on the average does it take these ballots to get from the voting place to the voting territory headquarters, and if we set a period of say two or three days, how many would not get there? In other words, if there are going to be only about 50 disfranchised, possibly there is not much to worry about.

Mr. Forrestall: More or less.

Colonel Dewis: In 1963 when this matter was considered by the parliamentary committee, there was a variation of Mr. Hamel's proposal, and rather than to change the nomination day, one-day voting was suggested. So we had to go into these questions.

If we vote on one day, how long is it going to take the ballots to get to the service counting place? And even with regard to units in Canada, where I guess would be most of the voting, you must allow at least two or three days from the time the service voting is completed even if it is only one-day voting. So even in Canada if we had service voting you would have to allow at least two or three days to ensure that the bulk of the vote in Canada would get to any one of these places.

• 1025

I cannot give you the exact figures up north as I do not really know, but there are certainly several hundred and in future there may be many more. Then we have all of Europe, of course, and we have people in the Middle East, we have people in Viet Nam and people all over the United States and all those ballots have to get back. In the last overseas election, if I said there were about 25,000 with wives, this would be about it, and in the United States there are several thousand. It obviously requires much more than two or three days for the ballots to get to the voting headquarters. On occasion some of the ballots do not get there because of a strike or because of an administrative oversight, so if you make it less than the present week, it is really cutting it very fine. You are going to lose several thousand votes. Does that answer your question?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, that answers my question.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, this particular document of security has to do with locations and numbers of people? We had better

[Interpretation]

M. Dewis: Si je comprends bien la question de M. Forrestall, je peux y répondre encore plus complètement, mais je voudrais bien être sûr d'avoir compris. Est-ce que votre question est de savoir combien de temps il faut en moyenne pour que ces bulletins de vote arrivent de l'endroit du scrutin au quartier général du territoire et, si on établit une période de deux ou trois jours, combien n'y seraient pas arrivés? S'il s'agit seulement d'une cinquantaine, il n'y a pas à s'inquiéter.

M. Forrestall: Plus ou moins.

M. Dewis: En 1963, lorsqu'on a étudié cette question au sein du comité parlementaire, il y avait une variation dans la proposition de M. Hamel: plutôt que de changer le jour des présentations, il y aurait un vote d'un jour.

Si on vote un seul jour, combien de temps faudra-t-il pour que les bulletins atteignent l'endroit où doit se faire le dépouillement.

Même en ce qui concerne les unités au Canada, il faut compter au moins deux ou trois jours pour compléter ces votes des forces armées, même si le vote n'est que d'un jour. Il faut compter au moins deux jours ou trois pour être sûr que la majorité puisse être comptée.

Je ne puis vous donner les chiffres exacts parce que je ne les connais pas. Il y en a, pour l'instant, plusieurs centaines et il y en aura peut-être plus dans quelques années. Puis, il y a toute l'Europe, le Moyen-Orient, le Vietnam et les États-Unis. Je crois que pour la dernière élection, on pourrait dire 25,000 en comptant les femmes. Ça demande certainement plus de deux ou trois jours pour que les bulletins de vote arrivent au quartier général. Parfois, il peut y avoir une grève ou une lacune administrative et les votes n'arrivent pas à temps. Nous allons certainement perdre plusieurs milliers de votes si l'on raccourcit cette période. Ceci répond-il à votre question?

M. Forrestall: Oui, ça répond à ma question.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: Je crois que la question de sécurité dans ce document a trait aux emplacements et au nombre de gens, n'est-ce pas? Il be careful that nobody comes in and looks at that.

[Texte]

Colonel Dewis: To be exact Mr. Forrestall, in the Northwest Territories on August 1, there were 265 servicemen at two bases.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, does this security really involve numbers and locations or are there other details besides that? I mean generally on the whole matter of security.

Colonel Dewis: I am not an expert in it but the security people certainly do not like to see published lists of all units in a particular area with their location.

Mr. Benjamin: If you did not have the number of units, would the number of men and their location be of importance on the security end?

Colonel Dewis: Yes, because one of the security objections to our present CO's list is that everybody can get it and it shows the location of the unit and the number of people in that unit. The security people have said there is a security objection and they do not like it but since a list has to be provided to candidates—and, of course, some type of list has to be—they reluctantly agreed that they could look at the Commanding Officer's list. However, they would prefer this other type of list, by electoral district that Mr. Hamel was discussing the other day so that you do not get a complete list of the units and the numbers in each unit.

Mr. Benjamin: One more point on this security bit. As of August 1, we had 77 bases in Canada, plus ships at sea, 85,888 men exactly; broken down, the smallest station had 38 men and the largest was Rockcliffe with 6,033. Then there is the civilian staff besides that which you can also get in detail in every province in Canada and in the Territories. In addition there is a list of the number of men in every country in the world from a low of 2 in places such as Israel and Italy to a high of 11,199 in Germany. I am very certain there are even more detailed breakdowns of this in public documents. This one was in the Armed Forces Review magazine when attempts were being made to save the reduction in forces.

I really cannot get excited about this security bit and I repeat what I said the other day that there would be at least 6 countries—and probably 26—that know exactly what we have, where they are and what their unit numbers are and what they are doing. I think faudrait s'assurer que personne n'entre et voit ce document.

[Interprétation]

M. Dewis: Le 1^{er} août, il y avait 265 militaires dans deux bases des Territoires du Nord-Ouest.

M. Benjamin: Cette question de sécurité traite-t-elle des emplacements et des nombres de personnes, ou est-ce qu'il y a d'autres détails?

M. Dewis: Je ne suis pas un expert mais les agents de sécurité n'aiment pas que l'on publie des listes de toute les unités d'une région avec leur emplacement.

M. Benjamin: Si vous n'aviez pas le nombre d'unités, est-ce que le nombre d'hommes et leur emplacement seraient importants au point de vue sécurité?

M. Dewis: Oui. C'est là une des objections concernant la sécurité contre la liste des officiers commandants parce que ces listes montrent l'emplacement des endroits et le nombre de personnes à tel emplacement et n'importe qui peut l'obtenir. Les agents de la sécurité ont des objections et n'aiment pas ça mais, comme il faut donner la liste aux candidats, ils ont consenti à contrecœur à permettre qu'on regarde la liste de l'officier commandant. Ils auraient préféré l'autre sorte de liste par district électoral dont parlait M. Hamel l'autre jour pour qu'il n'y ait pas de liste complète des unités et du nombre de personnes par unité.

M. Benjamin: Encore une question sur la sécurité. Le 1^{er} août, nous avions 77 bases, plus des navires en mer, 85,888 hommes en tout. La plus petite base avait 38 hommes et la plus grande, Rockcliffe, en comptait 6,033. Il y a aussi d'autres chiffres sur le personnel civil que je pourrais vous donner pour toutes les provinces du Canada et les Territoires. Il y a aussi une liste du nombre d'hommes dans chaque pays du monde: 2 en Israël et en Italie jusqu'à 11,199 en Allemagne. Je suis très certain qu'on pourrait trouver plus de détails dans les documents publics. J'ai trouvé cela dans la Revue des forces armées.

Je ne peux vraiment pas m'enthousiasmer au sujet de cet aspect de la sécurité et, comme on l'a dit l'autre jour, il y a au moins 6 pays, et probablement 26, qui savent exactement quel nombre d'unités nous avons, où elles sont, quels sont leurs numéros d'unité et ce qu'elles font. Au cours du processus électoral, cela nuit au déroulement normal du proper carrying out of the democratic process for people in the armed forces and their dependants. Would it help any, in terms of reducing the time required for the counting and receiving of these armed forces ballots to have more than four stations? Why not have eight so that there would be shorter distances for these documents to travel and there would be a smaller number to count at each place. Why not have two places right in Germany where there is a large number of personnel where ballots could be received and counted?

[Text]

The Chairman: You mean in terms of reducing the period at one base?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, this would involve extra cost for an additional returning officer and the parties would have to name additional scrutineers.

Mr. Hamel: I fail to see the extent to which it would help because even if we set up, let us say, additional voting territory, you used the example of Germany, I do not believe the problems are those of communication between Germany and London, England. The problems are with the outlying areas, Viet Nam, maybe a small group of people in Cyprus, in Korea et cetera. So, I do not believe you could set up a voting territory at a centrally located place to service these small pockets, unless you wanted to go all out and have no more than a few hundred voters in a voting territory. During the Korean War, I believe, we had a voting territory in Japan or, at least, we had one extra voting territory in the Far East because the number of people justified it. However, at the moment, as I said, the three Canadian voting territories are pretty centrally located, Edmonton, Ottawa and Halifax, and the problems, as I believe Colonel Dewis pointed out, are with the outlying areas, the far North and the small groups located in some places.

Mr. Benjamin: But in the interest of shortening the time—and I will go back to where I was the other day—why could the counting not be done at these polling stations making use of telephone, telegraph, wireless or radio services to transmit the same as all civilian polls on election night, unofficial returns. As you know, thousands and thousands of deputy returning officers telephone in their results to the returning officer and some in a few places still send a telegram. Why would this not be practical?

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Benjamin, that this question has already been answered in the sense that there might be 20 people in Viet Nam whose ballots might have to be régime démocratique pour les membres des Forces armées et les personnes à leur charge. Si l'on disposait de plus de 4 et même 8 stations pour le dénombrement du vote militaire pourrait-il gagner du temps? On pourrait raccourcir les distances nécessaires au transport des documents et il y aurait moins de votes à compter à chaque endroit. Pourquoi ne pas avoir deux stations en Allemagne au lieu d'une? Le personnel élevé de ces stations pourrait recevoir et compter les bulletins de vote.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Vous voulez parler d'une réduction de temps dans une station?

M. Benjamin: Oui, cela entraînerait des frais supplémentaires pour l'addition d'un nouveau directeur du scrutin. Les partis en cause nommeraient d'autres scrutateurs.

M. Hamel: Je ne vois pas dans quelle mesure cela pourrait aider, car même si l'on établit un territoire électoral additionnel, comme en Allemagne, le problème de communications n'existe pas entre l'Allemagne et Londres, par exemple. Il s'agit des autres régions comme le Vietnam, de faibles unités à Chypre, en Corée, etc. Je ne crois pas qu'on puisse établir de territoire électoral qui soit centralisé pour desservir une petite région isolée, à moins d'y aller tout court, et ne vouloir qu'une centaine de votants dans chaque territoire. Je crois qu'il y a eu un territoire électoral au Japon, dans le temps de la guerre de Corée, ou du moins il y avait un territoire supplémentaire à l'extrême Orient à cause du nombre suffisant de militaires. Les trois territoires électoraux sont en ce moment très bien centralisés: Edmonton, Ottawa et Halifax. Comme M. Davis l'a signalé, le problème se situe dans les régions septentrionales et dans d'autres régions isolées.

M. Benjamin: Alors, revenons-en à l'autre jour pour le dénombrement des votes au bureau de scrutin. Ne pourrait-on pas se servir des services de radio, téléphone, télégramme et télégraphie sans fil, pour transmettre les votes non officiels, comme pour le bureau de vote civil. Des centaines d'officiers rapporteurs téléphonent les résultats et dans certains cas, on envoie des télégrammes. Cela ne serait-il pas pratique?

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin, cette question a déjà fait l'objet d'une discussion; il peut y avoir, en effet, une vingtaine de gens au Vietnam qui pourrait venir de 20 circonscounted in 20 different constituencies. Those ballots have to be checked at some place. Also, what about the secrecy of the ballot?

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, but surely that telephone call or cable would go to that central point where they would all be meshed together by constituencies. You would have your election officials there who also are sworn to secrecy and even though there might be only one ballot cast in some place in Viet Nam, there would be a certain number of people who would know how that one person voted, in any case, no matter how you did it.

Mr. Hamel: I am still convinced, though, that you could not save time because chasing all over the world to get the results of these small polling stations, and not only the ballots that are sent by the voters themselves, may actually take more time than it does at the moment. The Chairman mentioned the question of secrecy of the ballot and while it would not be known to everybody, it would be known to a small number of people. This is, perhaps, the principle which the Committee might wish to decide upon, but if you had 20 or 25 people voting at one given place and if they happened to vote in 25 different electoral districts and it was known who was in which electoral district, immediately it would be known for whom each of these 25 electors voted.

• 1035

Mr. Benjamin: I was attempting to find some way of shortening the time in addition to the possibility of advancing nomination day.

The Chairman: Excuse me, if I may interrupt, we were told by Mr. Hamel that some men in the armed forces register their vote by writing in the party for which they want to vote and the ballot is good. Therefore, Mr. Hamel, would it then be possible without advancing nomination day for those people who could not get the names of the candidates to register their vote by entering the party for which they want to vote.

Mr. Hamel: Perhaps I should be more specific. I believe I said that...

The Chairman: From my own experience, I believe I have never received more than four or five or at the most ten votes from the armed forces because in many instances the people have been in Europe for years and do not even know the names of the candidates. What is the difference between the name and the party?

[Interprétation]

criptions différentes. Donc, il faut en faire les vérifications et il y a aussi le secret du vote, n'est-ce pas?

M. Benjamin: Le message ira à certains endroits où se trouve un réseau de tous les votes par circonscription. Il ne faut pas oublier qu'en ces lieux les officiers rapporteurs sont obligés au secret. Il pourrait y avoir un seul vote au Vietnam, alors un certain nombre de gens sauront pour qui le militaire a voté, de toute façon.

M. Hamel: Je doute que l'on pourrait épargner du temps, car se lancer à la poursuite de ces votes à travers le monde demanderait plus de temps qu'il n'en faut actuellement. Le président a mentionné la question du secret du vote. Celui-ci ne sera pas connu d'un grand nombre de personnes, mais de quelques-uns et c'est peut-être là le principe sur lequel un comité pourrait statuer. Si vous avez 20 ou 25 personnes qui votent à un endroit particulier et qui votent pour une vingtaine de circonscriptions, alors, vous savez pour qui ces militaires votent dans chaque cas. Il y aura toujours un certain nombre de gens qui le sauront.

M. Benjamin: A part la possibilité d'avancer la journée des présentations, j'essayais de trouver un moyen de gagner du temps.

Le président: Permettez-moi de vous interrompre. M. Hamel a déclaré que certains militaires inscrivent leur vote en faisant figurer le nom du parti et leur vote est bon. Alors serait-il possible, ai-je demandé à M. Hamel, si l'on avance la journée de mise en candidature de 7 jours, que sans avoir les noms des candidats, ces gens puissent voter par parti?

M. Hamel: Je dois préciser... Je crois avoir dit...

Le président: Pour ma part, il n'y a pas plus de 5 ou 10 militaires qui m'ont donné leur vote parce que dans bien des cas ils sont en Europe depuis des années, et ne savent même pas qui est le candidat de leur parti. Quelle différence y a-t-il entre le nom du candidat et le parti?

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: If I may say, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe a ballot on which only the name of the party were shown would be counted. The vote has to be cast for a candidate, but if the voter puts in brackets, even if it were not in brackets, the name or identifies the party—the list is prepared with the name of the candidate followed by the name of the party—yes, the ballot would be valid.

The Chairman: On the legal aspect, yes, but if it were put in the Act that the armed forces vote could be registered by putting in the name of the party, that would solve this problem of rejected ballots.

Mr. Benjamin: In many instances where they did not get the names of candidates, they would always have the name of the party.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Would there not be an exception if you had a constituency where all four parties, say, ran a candidate and in addition to which there were two independents. It would then be necessary to designate independent No. 1 or independent No. 2. I like your idea, Mr. Chairman, but this would be an exception, I would think, and it would only occur probably in a handful of ridings at the most in the whole country.

Mr. Hamel: But, in fact, he would not even know whether there were independents or not...

Mr. Benjamin: That is true, until nomination day.

Mr. Hamel: ...and they would be aware only of the national parties...

Mr. Benjamin: Right.

Mr. Hamel: ...the four or five major parties.

The Chairman: Mr. Duquet?

M. Duquet: Je vais être très bref, monsieur le président, car M. Dewis a répondu tout à l'heure à une partie des questions que je voulais poser. Je voudrais demander à M. Hamel si on a envisagé toutes les possibilités, en ce qui concerne le vote des Forces armées, de ce qui pourrait empêcher que la mise en candidature soit reportée à 21 jours au lieu de 14. Voilà ma première question.

Deuxièmement, je voudrais savoir si, à sa connaissance, au cours des cinq ou six dernières années, ou à l'occasion des deux ou trois dernières élections fédérales, il est arrivé que des candidats soient choisis à une période aussi tardive que 15 jours, ou 17 jours ou 18 jours ou avant la fin de cette période de 21 jours.

[Interpretation]

M. Hamel: Il me semble, monsieur le président, que je ne crois pas qu'un vote où seul le nom du parti figurerait serait valable. Il faut préciser le nom du candidat. Mais si le votant met entre parenthèses le nom du parti, et même s'il ne le met pas entre parenthèses, car la liste est préparée avec le nom des candidats suivi du nom des partis, alors le vote serait valable.

Le président: S'il était inscrit dans la loi que le vote pourrait inclure le nom du parti, alors le problème de rejeter ce bulletin serait résolu.

M. Benjamin: Quand ils ne recevraient pas les noms des candidats, ils auraient toujours le nom du parti.

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: Ne pourrait-on pas faire exception dans un comté où les quatre partis seraient représentés et qu'il y aurait, par exemple, deux indépendants, faudrait-il dire indépendant n° 1, indépendant n° 2? J'aime bien votre idée, monsieur le président, mais alors il s'agirait d'un cas exceptionnel car la situation ne se présenterait que dans quelques comtés.

M. Hamel: On ne saurait pas s'ils sont indépendants ou non.

M. Benjamin: En effet, nous ne le saurions pas jusqu'au jour de la présentation.

M. Hamel: On ne connaîtrait que les partis nationaux.

M. Benjamin: C'est exact.

M. Hamel: Les quatre ou cinq grands partis.

Le président: Monsieur Duquet?...

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief, because part of the questions that I wanted to ask were answered by Mr. Dewis a moment ago. I would like to ask Mr. Hamel, if all the avenues have been explored, as far as the Service vote is concerned, with regard to what could prevent having nomination day advanced by 21 days instead of 14?

Secondly, I would like to know, if to his knowledge, during the last five or six years, or during the last two or three federal elections, it so happened that candidates were selected at such a late date as the 15th or 17th or 18th day before this period of 21 days?

[Texte]

M. Hamel: Pour répondre à votre première question, monsieur Duquet, à peu près toutes les formules ont été étudiées et je pense que le capitaine Dewis a dit tout à l'heure qu'en 1963, le Comité avait étudié la possibilité de laisser la mise en candidature à 14 jours. Et à ce moment-là, on n'accordait qu'une seule journée aux membres des Forces armées pour voter, et on réduisait, par le fait même, le temps, présentement accordé pour l'acheminement des bulletins de vote, au bureau des directeurs de scrutin spéciaux.

• 1040

Alors, les conséquences de ceci c'est que premièrement, en n'allouant qu'une seule journée, vous ne donnez pas la chance à tout le monde de voter; deuxièmement, en réduisant la période accordée pour l'acheminement des bulletins de vote au bureau du président d'élection spécial vous privez de leur droit de vote un très grand nombre d'électeurs qui ont voté, parce que leur bulletin ne sera pas reçu en temps pour être compté. Et je pense que cela affecterait plusieurs milliers de membres des Forces armées qui ne pourraient pas voter parce que la période serait trop courte.

Quant à votre deuxième question, je pourrais, très facilement, pour la prochaine réunion du Comité, faire un dénombrement des candidats qui ont été présentés, disons dans les derniers...

M. Duquet: A la dernière minute.

M. Hamel: ...15, 16 ou 17 jours. Je sais pertinemment qu'il y en a eu plusieurs. Je pense même qu'il y a plusieurs candidats officiels des grands partis dont la mise en candidature a eu lieu le dimanche.

M. Duquet: La vieille de...

The Chairman: It is simply a question of putting the official document in the hands of the Deputy Returning Officer. For many of them these statistics do not answer the question.

M. Lefebvre: Mais ils peuvent avoir la date des congrès qui ont eu lieu dans les comtés parce que, souvent ils se tiennent deux, trois semaines avant la date des mises en candidature.

M. Hamel: Je n'aurais pas les renseignements...

M. Lefebvre: Ah non!

M. Hamel: ...au sujet des congrès, mais seulement au sujet du dépôt du bulletin de présentation par le candidat.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Hamel: To answer your first question, Mr. Duquet, just about all the formulas have been studied, and I think that Captain Dewis said a while ago that, in 1963, the Committee had studied the possibility of leaving the nomination date at 14 days. And at that time, only one day was granted to the Armed Forces people to vote, and this reduced, ipso facto, the time granted at present for the transmission of the votes to the special Returning Officer's office.

So consequently by granting only one day you do not give the possibility to everyone to vote; secondly, by reducing the period granted for the voting ballots to be transmitted to the office of the special Returning Officer, you disenfranchise a great number of people who voted, because their votes will not be received at the appropriate time to be counted. And I think this would affect several thousands of Armed Forces people who could not vote because the time period could be too short.

As far as your second question is concerned, by the next Committee meeting I could very easily count the number of people who have been nominated, let us say...

Mr. Duquet: At the last minute.

Mr. Hamel: ...during the last 15, 16 or 17 days. I know definitely that there have been several. I think that there were even several official candidates of the major parties whose nomination occurred on a Sunday.

Mr. Duquet: The day before...

Le président: Il s'agit simplement de remettre le document officiel au sous-directeur du scrutin. Dans bien des cas, ces données statistiques ne sont pas une réponse à la question.

Mr. Lefebvre: But they may have the date of the conventions that have been held in rural ridings, because they are often held two or three weeks before the nomination date.

Mr. Hamel: I do not have the information...

Mr. Lefebvre: You don't?

Mr. Hamel: ...about the conventions. I have the information only as far as nomination procedures of the candidates are concerned.

[Text]

M. Lefebvre: Exactement.

M. Duquet: Une autre question, monsieur Hamel. Si je comprends bien, lors d'une prochaine élection, les bulletins préparés pour les Forces armées canadiennes seront identiques au spécimen que nous avons ici. Bon. Tout d'abord devez-vous attendre la journée de la mise en candidature pour expédier ces bulletins?

M. Hamel: Non. Tous ces documents-là sont expédiés bien à l'avance. La seule chose qu'il faut attendre à la mise en candidature, c'est la liste des candidats. Et on ne peut la préparer qu'une heure après la fermeture de la mise en candidature dans le Yukon, où il est 6 heures...

Le président: Je m'excuse, monsieur Hamel, n'est-ce pas afin que les membres des Forces armées reçoivent la liste des candidats en temps pour voter qu'il est nécessaire d'avancer la date de la présentation des candidats?

M. Duquet: C'est cela.

M. Hamel: Oui. C'est le seul document qu'il faut attendre à la dernière minute...

M. Duquet: Je comprends.

M. Hamel: ...les autres peuvent être envoyés bien à l'avance.

M. Duquet: Alors, c'est ce qui explique la période de temps dont vous avez besoin, un minimum de 15 jours, afin de leur donner le temps de voter et de recevoir le retour et, à votre avis, il est impossible que cela se fasse dans les 15 jours précédant le jour du scrutin...

M. Hamel: Bien...

M. Duquet: ...de façon à donner le résultat le même jour que celui du scrutin général.

M. Hamel: Mais, c'est-à-dire, j'ai posé une prémisses tout à l'heure. Ce n'est pas impossible, mais si vous le faites, vous privez de leur droit de vote un très grand nombre de personnes.

M. Duquet: Merci monsieur Hamel.

Le président: Monsieur Forest.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Hamel, could it be arranged without difficulty—and what do you think of the suggestion—for all military personnel across Canada to vote on the regular voting day, either at civilian polls or polls that could be organized on bases where military personnel are concentrated, and that only military personnel on shifts or in foreign countries, together with foreign service

[Interpretation]

Mr. Lefebvre: Right.

Mr. Duquet: I have another question, Mr. Hamel. If I understand correctly, the ballots will be as those we have here, for the next elections, for the Armed Forces. First of all, must you await the nomination day to send these ballots?

Mr. Hamel: No, these documents are sent well in advance. The only thing we have to await for the nomination, is the list of candidates. This cannot be prepared one hour after the closing of the nomination date in the Yukon, when it is six o'clock...

The Chairman: Excuse me, Mr. Hamel, is it not so that the Armed Forces people can have the list of candidates in time to vote that it is necessary to set the nomination date earlier?

Mr. Duquet: That's right.

Mr. Hamel: Yes, this is the only document that has to be awaited at the last minute...

Mr. Duquet: I see.

Mr. Hamel: ...the others can be sent well in advance.

Mr. Duquet: I guess this explains the period of time that you require, i.e. a minimum of 15 days, to give them the time to vote and to receive the documents back, and in your opinion, there is no possibility that this can be done within the 15 days preceding the voting day...

Mr. Hamel: Well...

Mr. Duquet: ...so that results could be given on the voting day.

Mr. Hamel: That is to say, I set a premiss a while ago. It is not impossible but if you do that, you disenfranchise a very great number of people.

Mr. Duquet: Thank you, Mr. Hamel.

The Chairman: Mr. Forest.

M. Forest: Monsieur Hamel, serait-il possible, sans créer trop de difficultés—et que pensez-vous de cette idée—de faire en sorte que tout le personnel militaire au Canada vote le jour normal des élections, soit dans des bureaux de vote civils soit dans des bureaux de vote que l'on pourrait installer sur les bases où est concentré le personnel militaire, et que seul le personnel militaire qui travaille employees and all the civil service outside of Canada, would vote according to the rules? That would mean that perhaps for only 10,000 or 15,000 people would the vote be delayed and counted afterwards. What do you think of that idea?

[Texte]

Mr. Hamel: So far as I am concerned, I do not see any problem in the sense that we would probably not have any repetition of what we have known every now and then, such as we had in Comox-Alberni last time or in Digby-Annapolis-Kings a few years ago and St. John's West in Newfoundland. All servicemen would vote as civilians; in other words, they would be put on the list of electors and would vote there, and then the Canadian Forces Voting Rules would apply only to people abroad, or on shifts and manoeuvres and so on.

● 1045

This is perhaps the only problem we may have to look into with respect to navy personnel, for instance. What would be their permanent residence when on shore and when at sea? This is one of the problems that we would have to look into, but so far as the conduct of the election is concerned I cannot foresee any problem whatsoever. In fact, if Parliament ever adopted a system of permanent lists, this would be exactly the way it would be done, because then we would scrap the Canadian Forces Voting Rules and the members of the Forces would vote as civilians.

It means that whenever stationed in Canada they would vote at the nearest poll and when stationed abroad they would vote absentee in the same manner as any employee of any Canadian company or any employee of the government.

Mr. Forest: You would not need a permanent list.

Mr. Hamel: To achieve what you suggested?

Mr. Forest: Yes.

Mr. Hamel: No, we would still need the Canadian Forces Voting Rules if you still wanted to allow members of the Forces abroad to vote, but for Canada we would not.

[Interprétation]

par quarts ou qui se trouve à l'étranger, ainsi que les employés du service extérieur et tous les fonctionnaires en dehors du Canada, votent selon les règles? Ainsi, il n'y aurait plus que les votes de 10,000 ou 15,000 personnes, peut-être, qui auraient lieu et seraient déposés avec du retard. Que pensez-vous de cette idée?

M. Hamel: Pour ma part, je ne pense pas que cela poserait de problème, car nous pourrions ainsi éviter que ne se répète le genre de situation qui s'est produite de temps à autres, par exemple, à Comox-Alberni aux dernières élections, ou à Digby-Annapolis-King il y a quelques années, et à St. John's West à Terre-Neuve.

Tous les membres des Forces armées voteraient en tant que civils; autrement dit, ils figureraient sur la liste des électeurs et voteraient à l'endroit où ils se trouvent, et les règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes ne s'appliqueraient qu'aux gens qui seraient à l'étranger ou en manœuvre, ou qui travaillent par quarts, et ainsi de suite.

On n'aurait peut-être à examiner que le problème suivant, en ce qui concerne le personnel de la Marine, par exemple. Quel serait le domicile permanent de ces gens-là lorsqu'ils seraient à terre, et lorsqu'ils seraient en mer? C'est là l'un des problèmes qu'il nous faudrait examiner, mais pour ce qui est de la conduite de l'élection, je ne peux envisager aucune difficulté. A vrai dire, si le Parlement adoptait jamais un régime de listes permanentes, c'est exactement la façon dont nous procéderions, car nous supprimerions alors les règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes, et les membres des Forces armées voteraient en tant que civils.

Autrement dit, tous les membres des Forces armées qui se trouvent au Canada voteraient au bureau de vote le plus proche, et ceux qui se trouvent à l'étranger voteraient en tant qu'absents, de la même manière que tout employés d'une entreprise canadienne ou que tout fonctionnaire.

M. Forest: On n'aurait pas besoin d'une liste permanente.

M. Hamel: Pour faire ce que vous avez proposé?

M. Forest: Oui.

M. Hamel: Non, en effet. Il faudrait maintenir les règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes pour permettre aux membres des Forces armées à l'étranger de voter, mais au

[Text]

On the other hand, they would not have any vote if they happened to be away from their residence on polling day or an advance poll, the same as any civilian voters, unless you make specific provisions.

Mr. Forest: Do you have any idea of the number of civil employees that are employed overseas for Trade and Commerce and External Affairs?

Mr. Hamel: I believe I have the figure here that was established earlier this year or last year. I believe it is about 4,000 but that does not include wives and dependents. This is something we had to look into when we prepared the necessary amendments to the Canadian Forces Voting Rules to extend their provisions to civil servants abroad.

I am sorry, my estimate was much too high. In 1968—I do not have the exact date, but I believe it was at the end of the year—there were 2,878 civil servants. I must qualify what civil servant means. It means employees coming under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and, with only very few exceptions, participating in the general pension plan available to civil servants. That includes Agriculture, Defence Research Board, Finance, Labour, External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, and so on.

Mr. Lefebvre: I have one supplementary. Could an attempt be made to ensure that Canadians working in other countries for Canadian corporations, not necessarily employees of the government, also are given an opportunity of voting also?

Mr. Hamel: If you want the normal safeguards—that is a list; in that case we would have to have a permanent list for those people—I must admit I do not see how it can be done. In the case of civil servants it is quite easy because before being posted abroad, part of the documentation to be done would be only a matter of filling out a card that is kept on file, and when an election comes along we just establish a list on that basis and we have to have access to their personal files.

In the case of Canadian corporations, in the case of missionaries, for instance, we do not have any file. I do not think we would have

[Interpretation]

Canada nous n'en aurions plus besoin. D'autre part, tout comme les électeurs civils, ces gens-là ne pourraient pas voter s'ils ne se trouvaient pas aux lieux de leur domicile le jour des élections ou s'ils ne pouvaient aller à un bureau provisoire de vote, à moins que l'on ne prévoie des dispositions spéciales.

M. Forest: Avez-vous une idée du nombre de fonctionnaires qui travaillent outre-mer pour le ministère du Commerce et pour le ministère des Affaires extérieures?

M. Hamel: Je crois que j'ai ici les chiffres que l'on a établis au début de l'année ou l'an dernier. Il y en a environ 4,000, mais cela n'inclut pas les familles de ces fonctionnaires. C'est une question qu'il nous a fallu examiner lorsque nous avons préparé les modifications nécessaires à apporter aux règles électorales concernant les Forces canadiennes de sorte à en étendre les dispositions aux fonctionnaires à l'étranger.

Pardon; je vous ai donné un chiffre beaucoup trop élevé. En 1968—je n'ai pas la date exacte, mais je pense que c'était à la fin de l'année—il y avait 2,878 fonctionnaires à l'étranger. Je dois vous préciser ce que l'on entend par «fonctionnaires». Ce terme désigne les employés qui relèvent de la loi des relations de travail dans la Fonction publique et, à de très rares exceptions près, qui adhèrent au régime de pension général des fonctionnaires. Cela inclut les employés du ministère de l'Agriculture, du Conseil de recherches pour la défense, des ministères des Finances, du Travail, des Affaires extérieures, du Commerce, et ainsi de suite.

M. Lefebvre: J'ai une question supplémentaire à poser. Pourrait-on essayer de faire en sorte que tous les Canadiens qui travaillent à l'étranger pour des entreprises canadiennes, et pas seulement les fonctionnaires, aient aussi l'occasion de voter?

M. Hamel: Si l'on veut conserver les mesures de protection normales—soit une liste, car dans ce cas, il nous faudrait avoir une liste permanente de ces gens-là—je dois dire que je ne vois pas comment ce serait possible. Dans le cas des fonctionnaires, c'est assez facile, car il suffirait qu'avant d'être affectés à l'étranger, ils remplissent, entre autres documents, une carte qui serait conservée dans les dossiers; et au moment des élections, nous n'aurions qu'à dresser une liste à partir de ces cadres, et il nous faudrait, bien sûr, pouvoir consulter les dossiers personnels.

Dans le cas des entreprises canadiennes, ou dans le cas des missionnaires, par exemple, nous n'avons pas de dossier. Je ne pense pas access to the personal files of these employees at the headquarters of their companies. This, to me, is the crux of the problem.

[Texte]

Mr. Lefebvre: I was wondering whether there is some way of letting them know that if they applied at the nearest Canadian Embassy and registered it would be one way that they could be allowed to vote on their own.

• 1050

Mr. Hamel: How are you going to ascertain the electoral districts they come from?

Mr. Lefebvre: How would you do it with the civil servants?

Mr. Hamel: It is quite easy because they would fill out a statement of ordinary residence the same as members of the forces do before being posted abroad.

Mr. Lefebvre: These people could do the same thing.

The Chairman: You have to know when they leave.

Mr. Hamel: Then you need an office or some sort of registrar's office to take care of this. You have to set up some machinery.

Mr. Lefebvre: I was thinking of a form available at the Canadian embassies overseas where any Canadian citizen, whether he is a civil servant or not, would be allowed to go in and fill it out voluntarily if he wishes to vote.

An hon. Member: If he wishes to vote.

Mr. Lefebvre: Yes, on a voluntary basis, so that every citizen would have an opportunity of voting, not only necessarily civil servants.

Mr. Hamel: I still do not see how...

Mr. Lefebvre: You mentioned missionaries, but there are all kinds of Canadians overseas studying at universities, all over the world there may be persons working for different corporations, newspapers and so on, all these persons would be given an opportunity, if they wished to avail themselves of it, to go into an embassy, fill out a form and then be allowed to vote.

Mr. Hamel: I still maintain that you have to establish some sort of list. I presume that as a candidate you would wish to know the potential number of voters who may avail themselves of those facilities. In the case of a very que nous pourrions consulter les dossiers personnels de ces employés au siège social des entreprises pour lesquelles ils travaillent. A mon avis, c'est là le cœur du problème.

[Interprétation]

M. Lefebvre: Je me demande s'il serait possible de signaler à ces personnes qu'en faisant une demande et en s'inscrivant à l'Ambassade du Canada la plus proche, elles pourraient voter personnellement.

M. Hamel: Mais comment savoir de quelle circonscription électorale viennent ces personnes?

M. Lefebvre: Comment procéderiez-vous pour les fonctionnaires?

M. Hamel: C'est assez facile parce qu'ils auraient à remplir une formule de résidence ordinaire, la même que remplissent les membres des Forces armées avant d'être postés à l'étranger.

M. Lefebvre: Ils pourraient procéder de la même façon.

Le président: Il vous faut savoir quand ils partent.

M. Hamel: Ensuite, il faut un bureau ou un genre de secrétariat pour s'en occuper. Il faut organiser un genre de système.

M. Lefebvre: Je pensais à une formule que l'on peut se procurer aux ambassades canadiennes outre-mer. Tout citoyen canadien, qu'il soit fonctionnaire ou non pourrait s'y rendre et remplir la formule s'il désire voter.

Une voix: S'il veut voter.

M. Lefebvre: Oui, s'il le veut, afin que chaque citoyen ait l'occasion de voter et non seulement les fonctionnaires.

M. Hamel: Je ne vois pas encore comment...

M. Lefebvre: Vous avez mentionné les missionnaires, mais beaucoup de Canadiens étudient dans des universités à l'étranger partout au monde. Il y a peut-être des personnes qui travaillent pour diverses sociétés, des journaux et ainsi de suite. Toutes ces personnes devraient avoir l'occasion, si elles le veulent, d'aller remplir la formule à l'ambassade et d'être ainsi autorisées à voter.

M. Hamel: Je soutiens encore qu'il vous faut établir un genre de liste. Je présume qu'à titre de candidat, vous voulez savoir le nombre de votants qui profiteraient de l'occasion. Lorsque la marge est serrée, vous voulez tight vote, you would want to ascertain that every vote cast on that basis is a bona fide vote. Whoever administers this will need some list to make sure that the person who is applying for a vote is the person she or he claims to be.

[Text]

Mr. Duquet: Also whether he is entitled to vote.

Mr. Lefebvre: Could you find out, Mr. Hmel, what is done in other countries on this basis?

Mr. Hamel: Every other country has permanent lists so there are no problems. With a permanent list every elector has a card with all kinds of information, including his signature. When he casts an absentee ballot overseas normally it is by mail, so when he applies for a mail ballot, his signature is compared to the signature on the card and then he is sent a ballot. When the ballot comes back with the statement, his signature appears again and so this is compared again. If a voter votes absentee from Canada he fills out a form and his signature appears and before the vote is actually counted that signature is compared to the signature on the card. American jurisdiction even goes to the extent of putting in each poll. Instead of a list, as we use, they have some sort of an index book in which each card of the individuals entitled to vote in that poll is listed. The first thing the elector is asked to do is to sign his name on a piece of paper. He is not asked any other questions. This is compared to his signature on the card and he is allowed to vote.

Mr. Lefebvre: At the present time, because we do not have a permanent list, you feel this would be quite difficult to put into operation.

Mr. Hamel: You would have to establish a form of permanent list for these people.

The Chairman: Mr. Benjamin?

Mr. Benjamin: On this point then, Mr. Chairman, in the instances in Canada where one or more provinces have had absentee balloting, certainly it is the case in Saskatchewan, the onus was on the elector. When you walked into a poll anywhere in the province, 500 miles away from where you lived for example, the onus was on the elector to sign a declaration and take an oath. Then in order to maximize the opportunity to vote, you worried less about ascertaining the eligibility at that point. You placed the onus on him by having him sign an oath as to his place of être certain que chacun des votes est un vote de bonne foi. Quiconque s'occupera de l'administration devrait s'assurer que la personne qui demande de voter est bien celle qu'elle prétend être.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Duquet: Il faut savoir aussi si elle a le droit de voter.

Mr. Lefebvre: Pourriez-vous trouver, monsieur Hamel, ce qui se fait dans les autres pays à cette occasion?

Mr. Hamel: Tous les autres pays ont des listes permanentes, donc il n'y a pas de problème. Lorsqu'il y a une liste permanente chaque électeur a une carte, portant tous les renseignements et sa signature. Lorsqu'il vote à l'étranger, il le fait ordinairement par courrier, donc lorsqu'il demande un bulletin de vote sa signature est comparée à la signature sur la carte, puis on lui envoie un bulletin. Lorsque le bulletin revient avec la déclaration, la signature apposée est de nouveau comparée. Si le votant est absent du Canada, il remplit une formule et il y appose sa signature. Avant le compte des votes, la signature est comparée à la signature sur la carte. La juridiction américaine va même jusqu'à le mettre dans chaque bureau de votation. Au lieu de la liste dont nous nous servons, ils ont un genre de livre où est inscrit le nom de chaque particulier qui a le droit de voter à ce bureau de votation. La première chose que l'on demande à l'électeur est de signer son nom sur un bout de papier. On ne lui pose pas d'autres questions. On compare ensuite cette signature avec celle qui figure sur la carte et on lui permet de voter.

Mr. Lefebvre: Comme nous n'avons pas de liste permanente à l'heure actuelle, pensez-vous qu'il serait assez difficile d'adopter ce système?

Mr. Hamel: Il vous faudrait établir un genre de liste permanente pour ces personnes.

Le président: Monsieur Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Monsieur le président, dans les cas au Canada où dans une ou plusieurs provinces des absents du Canada ont voté, certainement dans le cas de la Saskatchewan, l'obligation relevait de l'électeur. Lorsqu'un électeur entre dans un bureau de votation à 500 milles d'où il habite par exemple, il incombe alors à l'électeur de signer une déclaration et de prêter serment. Afin de favoriser les occasions de voter, vous vous préoccupez moins de vérifier le droit de vote. Vous lui donnez la responsabilité en lui faisant signer un serment donnant le lieu de résidence, son residence, age and so forth and that he was fully qualified to vote in the electoral district he named.

[Texte]

• 1055

Surely after the election is over or from the time those forms are signed—it might be some time before an election day but certainly after the election is over—the onus then would be on the election officials and the political parties, and it would only occur in constituencies where the election was very close, to scrutinize those names from those forms and do their own checking. It could be just a straight oath that is taken when they sign the form in an embassy or a consular office anywhere in the world.

Mr. Lefebvre: I think what we have to remember and what we should strive to do is make it as easy as possible for every Canadian citizen to vote. If he wants to walk into an embassy and declare on a form and even take an oath if we wish, then he should be allowed to vote.

Mr. Benjamin: Sir, we should assume that 99.9 per cent of them are honest and the others are not going to be, no matter what kind of rules you have, nor how stringent they are at the beginning of the electoral process or at the end.

Mr. Hamel: Your only safeguard would be the oath taken by the elector?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: If a man walks into an embassy with his Canadian passport, I think it should be enough to show that he is really the man he claims to be.

Mr. Hamel: Would he have the choice to apply his vote to any electoral district? How would you establish his electoral district?

The Chairman: The last domicile he had.

Mr. Lefebvre: The last domicile he had in Canada. What other way you could do it, I do not know.

Mr. Hamel: This would be on the form, because this is not on the passport as far as I know.

Mr. Lefebvre: No, it could be on the form.

[Interprétation]

âge et ainsi de suite et qu'il a pleinement droit de voter dans le district électoral qu'il a nommé.

Certainement, après l'élection ou à partir du moment où les formules sont signées, il peut s'écouler un certain temps avant l'élection mais certainement une fois l'élection passée, la responsabilité incomberait au personnel de l'élection et aux partis politiques—la chose ne se produirait que dans les circonscriptions où l'élection a été très serrée—de vérifier les noms sur les formules et de faire leur propre vérification. Il pourrait s'agir d'un simple serment prêté lorsqu'ils signent la formule dans une ambassade ou dans un consulat n'importe où au monde.

Mr. Lefebvre: Je pense que nous devons nous souvenir qu'il faut qu'il soit aussi facile que possible de voter pour tous les citoyens canadiens. C'est le but que nous devons nous fixer. S'il veut se rendre à l'ambassade, faire une déclaration sur une formule et même prêter serment, il devrait ensuite avoir le droit de voter.

Mr. Benjamin: Monsieur, nous présumerions que 99.9 p. 100 d'entre eux sont honnêtes parce que les autres ne le sont pas, peu importe le règlement, peu importe si ce règlement est très rigoureux au début ou à la fin du processus électoral.

Mr. Hamel: Votre seule mesure de sécurité serait le serment prêté par l'électeur?

Mr. Benjamin: Oui.

Mr. Lefebvre: Si un homme se rend à l'ambassade en possession de son passeport canadien, je pense qu'il y aurait là une preuve suffisante que l'homme est celui qu'il prétend être.

Mr. Hamel: Aurait-il la possibilité d'appliquer son vote à n'importe quel district électoral? Comment établiriez-vous son district électoral?

Le président: D'après son dernier domicile.

Mr. Lefebvre: Son dernier domicile au Canada. Je ne sais pas de quelle autre façon vous pourriez procéder.

Mr. Hamel: Cela figurerait sur la formule parce que ce n'est pas sur le passeport, que je sache.

Mr. Lefebvre: Non, cela pourrait figurer sur la formule.

[Text]

Mr. Hamel: It boils down to what I said earlier, that your only safeguard would be the oath taken by the elector.

Mr. Lefebvre: What other safeguard can you have? It is good enough in a court of law.

Mr. Duquet: It may be a vote for the party but only if we are short of votes.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course a proportional representation system would solve a lot of that problem, would it not? Mr. Chairman, may I pose one question to the Committee?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Benjamin: Regarding this business of advancing the date of nomination, a previous Committee has gone through this, the House did not like it and turned it down. Maybe it would be helpful if the Committee made an effort to obtain from all of the political parties whatever record they could supply of when their candidates were nominated to see if we could get some kind of picture of how legitimate the problem of that extra week is. How many were nominated in there?

The Chairman: Or, Mr. Benjamin, ask the different parties if they would object to putting the party name instead of the name of the candidate which solve the problem...

Mr. Benjamin: All right.

The Chairman: ... and does not force advancing the...

Mr. Lefebvre: I believe we will be having witnesses from the various political parties.

The Chairman: We will have Miss Flora MacDonald next Tuesday and Mr. Cairns will not be available before December 16. These are the only two witnesses we will hear before Christmas. As to Mr. Norman Ward of the University of Saskatchewan, our Clerk will circulate to the members of the Committee his earlier papers giving his views on the elections, how they should be held and so on. He does not feel he should appear before the Committee because he says that he has nothing to add to what is already written in these papers. So these papers will be available to us before we hear Miss Flora MacDonald and Mr. Cairns and we could ask questions of these two witnesses.

[Interpretation]

M. Hamel: Nous revenons donc à ce que j'ai dit plus tôt, c'est-à-dire que la seule mesure de sécurité serait le serment prêté par l'électeur.

M. Lefebvre: Quelle autre mesure de sécurité pouvez-vous avoir? Elle suffit en cour.

M. Duquet: Il pourrait s'agir d'un vote pour le parti mais seulement si nous manquons de votes.

M. Benjamin: Naturellement, un système de représentation proportionnelle résoudrait presque tout le problème n'est-ce pas? Monsieur le président, puis-je poser une question au comité.

Le président: Oui, monsieur Benjamin.

M. Benjamin: En ce qui a trait à cette question de devancer la date de nomination, un comité antérieur a traité ce sujet. La Chambre n'était pas en faveur et elle l'a rejeté. Il serait peut-être utile que le Comité tente d'obtenir de tous les partis politiques tous les dossiers qu'ils pourraient fournir au moment de la nomination de leurs candidats afin de voir si nous pourrions déterminer le caractère de légitimité de cette semaine supplémentaire. Combien de candidats ont été nommés?

Le président: Ou encore, monsieur Benjamin, nous pourrions demander aux divers partis s'ils auraient objection à ce que nous mettions le nom du parti au lieu du nom du candidat, ce qui résoudrait le problème.

M. Benjamin: Très bien.

Le président: Ce qui n'oblige pas de devancer le...

M. Lefebvre: Je crois que nous aurons des témoins des divers partis politiques.

Le président: Nous aurons M^{lle} Flora MacDonald mardi prochain et M. Cairns ne pourra être à notre disposition avant le 16 décembre. Ce sont les deux seuls témoins que nous aurons avant Noël. En ce qui concerne M. Norman Ward, de l'Université de la Saskatchewan, notre greffier fera circuler chez les membres du Comité les documents antérieurs dans lesquels il donne ses opinions sur l'élection, la façon dont elle devrait être tenue et ainsi de suite. Il n'est pas d'avis qu'il devrait comparaître devant le Comité parce qu'il dit qu'il n'a rien à ajouter à ce qui est écrit dans ces documents. Nous aurons donc accès aux documents avant d'entendre M^{lle} Laura MacDonald et M. Cairns et nous pourrions poser les questions à ces deux témoins.

[Texte]

Mr. Benjamin: These people will not be here as representatives of parties?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Benjamin: They will be here as individuals.

Mr. Lefebvre: Maybe we should ask...

Mr. Benjamin: I think there are some areas in which it is unfair to ask for information from Mr. Hamel or other witnesses or officials from his office, information that the political parties may have. I am not sure that my own has any but I would be quite willing to ask my party or maybe it would be better if the Chairman officially contacted the political parties and sort of enumerated three or four things. Any information they could give us would be helpful in arriving at decisions. Or, even better, invite them to present a brief if they wish, but at least try to provide us with the information we would like.

• 1100

The Chairman: The forces no longer want this late reporting system. So to match them we either have to advance the registration of candidates a week or put the name of the party on the ballots. I believe these are the two solutions.

Mr. Dewis, in your view, would the armed forces object if instead of putting the name of the candidate in we put in the name of a party?

Colonel Dewis: As I understand it, they would just put in the name of the party. But would the candidates list be available? Servicemen are not too much different from civilians and I do know of a number of service people who will vote for the man rather than the party. I would be very loath to recommend on behalf of the forces that that be adopted, particularly when it is not done in the civilian vote. Most of the service people feel they should be able to vote as a civilian.

Now the other variation or alternative is that in Canada all servicemen vote as civilians. This would be only a partial merging of the service vote, but it would be better than now because we have large concentration of military personnel at Petawawa, Greenwood, Borden, et cetera.

The Chairman: But, Mr. Dewis, this list will still be available wherever possible.

[Interprétation]

M. Benjamin: Ces personnes ne seront pas ici à titre de représentants de partis?

Le président: Non.

M. Benjamin: Elles seront ici à titre de particuliers.

M. Lefebvre: Peut-être devrions nous demander...

M. Benjamin: Je crois qu'il y a des domaines où il serait injuste de demander des renseignements à l'heure actuelle, soit à M. Hamel ou à d'autres témoins ou représentants de son bureau, des renseignements que les partis politiques pourraient donner. Je ne suis pas certain que le mien en ait mais je consentirais à en demander à mon parti. Il serait peut-être mieux encore que le président communique officiellement avec les partis politiques et qu'il énumère trois ou quatre choses. Tout renseignement qu'ils pourraient donner serait utile pour en arriver à une décision. Ou mieux encore, invitez-les à présenter un document s'ils le veulent, mais essayer, au moins de nous obtenir les renseignements qui nous intéresseraient.

Le président: Les forces armées ne veulent plus de ce système. Il faudrait donc avancer la date de mise en candidature des représentants ou bien inscrire le nom du parti sur le bulletin de vote. Voilà, à mon avis, les deux solutions au problème.

Monsieur Dewis, croyez-vous que les militaires, s'opposeraient à ce qu'on inscrive le nom du parti au lieu de celui des candidats?

M. Dewis: Sauf erreur, ils mettraient seulement le nom du parti. Cependant, est-ce qu'il y aurait une liste des candidats? Je sais que les militaires ne sont pas tellement différents des civils. Ils aiment mieux voter pour un homme que pour le parti. Je ne voudrais pas que l'on recommande ceci pour les militaires si ça ne se fait pas pour les civils. La plupart des militaires veulent voter comme s'ils étaient des civils. L'autre solution, ce serait que les militaires votent comme des civils. Cela ne ferait que réunir en partie le vote militaire car il y a de grands camps à Petawawa, Greenwood, Borden, etc.

Le président: Mais, monsieur Dewis, cette liste sera toujours disponible dans la mesure du possible?

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: If you had the alternative, if you had left that 14 days as is, where there are names, names are provided, as well as the party, and if there is the odd constituency with one two or three names short, that is too bad—all they will have is the name of the party. This would place more onus on the party...

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: ...to get their nominations in quicker.

Mr. Duquet: Then those votes would be applied to their constituency, to the official candidate of such and such a party.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes. Where the names were already nominated and the Chief Electoral Officer had them, fine, they would be on the list.

Mr. Hamel: In Canada the names would be known only through the normal means of the press and so on, because if the intention is to let the members of the forces vote during the same period of time as at present it means that they would even vote before nominations are closed—because nominations start at 9:00 o'clock on the 14th day and they close at 2:00 o'clock on the 14th day. So we could not send any list until maybe the following afternoon, on the 13th day, and this would be in the nearest places.

If I may add something, in 1955, when the idea was put of advancing nomination day to the 21st day, I understand that the objection came from the headquarters of the parties. They may have changed their views since then, but I could not say.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to Mr. Lefebvre's question. I hope I do not give the impression of trying to suppress ideas; I am just trying to show some of the problems.

On this question of affidavits, in the general election of 1957 in one electoral district in Ontario there were 900 names added to the list of electors on the basis of affidavits. This is no confidential document; this is in the report of the Chief Electoral Officer to the Speaker of the House of Commons. These names were added during the revision and it is as a result of this that we had the new system of revision introduced in 1960. At the same election we had over 300 fictitious names added in an electoral district in Montreal. This was done in a very methodical way. There was a commission of inquiry into this. They did not add more than three or four names in each poll. They did not add 900

[Interpretation]

M. Benjamin: Si on laisse les quatorze jours tels quels et que l'on a les listes des noms et des partis et s'il y a deux ou trois circonscriptions qui sont à court de deux ou trois noms, tout ce qu'il y aura sur le bulletin, c'est le nom du parti, n'est-ce pas? Cela obligerait d'avantage le parti...

Le président: Oui.

M. Benjamin: ...à faire parvenir à temps leurs présentations.

M. Duquet: Les votes s'appliqueront alors à leur circonscription, au candidat officiel d'un parti ou l'autre.

M. Benjamin: Lorsque les noms sont disponibles et que le Directeur général des élections les connaît, ils figurent sur la liste.

M. Hamel: Au Canada, les noms sont connus simplement par les moyens normaux de la presse parce que, si vous avez l'intention de faire voter les militaires durant la même période qu'à l'heure actuelle, ils voteraient avant la fin des mises en candidature car celles-ci commencent à 9h et se terminent qu'à 14 heures le 14^e jour. On ne peut envoyer de liste avant l'après-midi du 13^e jour et ce dans les endroits les plus rapprochés.

En 1955, lorsqu'on eut l'idée d'avancer la date de nomination au 21^e jour, je crois que l'objection provenait des bureaux centraux des partis. Ils ont peut-être changé leur point de vue depuis, je n'en sais rien.

Si vous permettez, monsieur le président, j'aimerais revenir à la question de M. Lefebvre; j'espère que je ne donne pas l'impression que je veux m'opposer à certaines idées, mais je veux simplement mettre les problèmes en lumière.

Au sujet des affidavits lors des élections générales de 1957, dans un district électoral de l'Ontario, il y a eu 900 noms à ajouter à la liste des électeurs, d'après les affidavits. Ce n'est pas un document confidentiel, cela figure dans le rapport du Directeur général des élections à l'Orateur de la Chambre des communes. Ces noms ont été ajoutés pendant la révision. Cette situation a entraîné une révision du système en 1960. Lors de cette élection, 300 noms fictifs ont été ajoutés dans une circonscription de Montréal. Ceci s'est fait d'une façon très méthodique. Il y a eu une commission d'enquête. On n'a pas ajouté plus de trois ou quatre noms dans chaque bureau de vote. On n'a pas ajouté 500 noms à la même place, names at the same place but three here and two there and four there—and these were all added on the basis of affidavits.

[Texte]

• 1105

Mr. Duquet: I think this is inevitable Mr. Hamel, and I think we should ensure that it is not possible to promote such an undertaking. We know many people are not too scrupulous as long as there is a vote to get. I think that system of affidavits is presenting an open door to such people.

Mr. Hamel: That is exactly what I was trying to point out. I personally feel that if you rely strictly on an affidavit you are certainly inviting very serious problems.

Mr. Duquet: What do you think of the suggestion that was made. Mr. Dewis just mentioned that all the Canadian Armed Forces would vote as civilians and the forces abroad would remain as they are now. Of course it would not eliminate that week of suspense but it would be much lower as far as numbers of voters is concerned.

Mr. Hamel: I do not know what the reaction of the forces would be. I do not see any problem and, in fact, I personally would be in favour of it. The results of the votes of the forces outside the country would be known only one week later, but the impact would be relatively small.

Mr. Duquet: Very small.

Mr. Hamel: Particularly if you extend the right to vote to civil servants. In such case you would have an almost equal number of forces and civil servants.

The Chairman: Well, they could vote as civilians if we have a proxy system. If there are 5,000 armed forces in Valcartier, Quebec and they voted as civilians they would have to vote in the civilian polls. But if their last domicile was, let us say, in Saskatchewan or in British Columbia then, to register their votes and put them in the constituency where they belong, a proxy system would be needed.

Mr. Hamel: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe they should be given that option. If they vote as civilians, they should vote as civilians.

The Chairman: The parties will not accept that.

Mr. Hamel: This is, of course, the problem.

Last week I was asked to find out how in provincial elections members of the forces mais trois ici, quatre là, à droite et à gauche, et tout ceci, grâce aux affidavits.

[Interprétation]

M. Duquet: Il ne devrait pas être possible d'agir de la sorte. Il y a bien des gens qui ne sont pas très scrupuleux lorsqu'il s'agit d'obtenir un vote. Je pense que ce système d'affidavit, c'est une porte qui leur est ouverte.

M. Hamel: C'est ce que j'ai essayé d'indiquer. Personnellement, je pense que si l'on se fie seulement à un affidavit, il y aura de graves problèmes.

M. Duquet: Que pensez-vous de la suggestion qui a été faite. M. Dewis vient de dire que toutes les Forces canadiennes voteraient en tant que civils et que le vote des militaires, outre-mer, resterait comme aujourd'hui. Cela n'éliminerait pas cette semaine de «suspense» mais le nombre des votants concernés serait moins important.

M. Hamel: Je ne sais pas quelle serait la réaction des Forces armées à ce sujet. Je n'y vois pas de problème en fait. Je serais personnellement favorable à une telle suggestion. Maintenant, le résultat du vote des militaires en dehors du pays, serait connu une semaine plus tard mais l'effet en serait peu important.

M. Duquet: Très peu.

M. Hamel: Surtout si vous donnez le droit de vote aux fonctionnaires, vous aurez alors un nombre égal de militaires et de fonctionnaires.

Le président: Ils pourraient voter en tant que civils, si nous avons un système de vote par procuration. S'il y a 5,000 militaires à Valcartier (Québec) il faudra qu'ils votent dans les bureaux de votation avec les civils. Si leur domicile antérieur était en Saskatchewan ou en Colombie-Britannique, il faut avoir un système de vote par procuration pour inscrire leur nom sur la liste des électeurs de la circonscription à laquelle ils appartiennent.

M. Hamel: Je crois qu'on n'a pas à leur donner le choix, ils devraient voter en tant que civils.

Le président: Les partis n'accepteront pas cela.

M. Hamel: C'est naturellement le problème.

La semaine dernière, on m'a demandé de voir comment les Forces armées sont traitées were treated. There are only two provinces which make some provision for the members of the forces. In all other provinces they vote as civilians. In other words a member of the forces originally from Ontario or Saskatchewan and posted in Manitoba, if he has the qualifications under the law as to residence, age and other qualifications, he votes as any other Manitoban. The only two provinces are Nova Scotia and Ontario. Ontario's new legislation received their reading last week, and under the Ontario and Nova Scotia legislation members of the forces can vote by proxy if they are of course outside the province. But if their permanent residence is Toronto, for instance, and they are posted to Petawawa they cannot vote in Toronto, they have to vote in Petawawa. But if they are outside the province or outside the country they can vote by proxy.

[Text]

Mr. Benjamin: Provided they have been resident in Petawawa long enough.

Mr. Hamel: That means provided they are there on the date of the issue of the writ, and they have been in the province for a year.

Mr. Benjamin: But suppose they were not there on the date of the issue of the writ—they just got posted to Petawawa—would they then vote where they come from in Toronto?

Mr. Hamel: No. If they come from Toronto and are posted to Petawawa and are not there on the date of issue of the writ, no, they do not vote—or they have to go back to Toronto.

Mr. Benjamin: I see. There is no absentee provision for them.

Mr. Hamel: This has some limitations, as you can immediately imagine, because to vote by proxy in both provinces the name of the elector must be on the list. So if the serviceman is posted overseas with his wife, who will take care of putting his name on the list? So this has some limitations.

The Chairman: If members do not have any further questions to ask Mr. Dewis or Mr. Nash, perhaps next week we will start with Miss Flora MacDonald, whose appearance is scheduled for 11:00.

Mr. Dewis, you have given us very valuable information, for which we thank you. We will surely try to deal with some of the complaints made in the past regarding the actual system. Thank you very much.

[Interpretation]

lors des élections provinciales. Il y a deux provinces seulement qui prévoient des dispositions pour les Forces armées. Dans toutes les autres provinces, ils votent en tant que civils. Donc, un militaire de l'Ontario ou de la Saskatchewan qui se trouve au Manitoba, s'il a les qualifications nécessaires d'après la loi, vote comme tout autre Manitobain. Les deux seules provinces: l'Ontario et la Nouvelle-Écosse. La nouvelle législation de l'Ontario a été examinée la semaine dernière et, d'après les lois de ces deux provinces, les membres des Forces armées peuvent voter par procuration s'ils se trouvent à l'extérieur de la province. Mais si leur résidence est à Toronto et qu'ils se trouvent à Petawawa, alors, ils sont obligés de voter à Petawawa. S'ils sont en dehors de la province, ils doivent voter par procuration.

M. Benjamin: Pourvu qu'ils aient résidé assez longtemps à Petawawa.

M. Hamel: S'ils sont dans la province depuis un an, le jour de l'émission du bref.

M. Benjamin: S'ils ne sont pas là le jour de l'émission du bref, est-ce qu'ils doivent voter à Toronto ou non?

M. Hamel: Non.

S'ils viennent de Toronto et sont envoyés à Petawawa, et qu'ils ne s'y trouvent pas ce jour-là, ils sont obligés de revenir à Toronto, ou ils ne votent pas.

M. Benjamin: Le vote des absents ne s'applique pas à eux alors?

M. Hamel: Il y a des limites comme vous le voyez, à cause du vote par procuration dans les deux provinces. Le nom de l'électeur doit se trouver sur la liste. Donc, si le militaire se trouve à l'étranger avec sa femme, qui va s'occuper de mettre son nom sur la liste? Il y a des limites à ce système.

Le président: Si les membres n'ont pas d'autres questions à demander à M. Dewis et à M. Nash, la semaine prochaine, nous écouterons Mlle MacDonald à 11 heures.

Monsieur Dewis, vous nous avez donné des renseignements très utiles, nous vous remercions de l'expérience que vous nous avez apportée. Nous allons essayer d'éliminer les plaintes que nous avons eues par le passé. Merci beaucoup.

[Texte]

[Interprétation]

• 1110

Col. Dewis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

M. Dewis: Merci, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: This meeting is adjourned until Tuesday at 11:00.

Le président: La séance est levée jusqu'à mardi prochain à 11 heures.

[Text]

[Translation]

APPENDIX 2

THE OTTAWA CITIZEN

Tuesday, 3 July 1962.

Announcement of the servicemen's vote

The delay in announcing results of the service vote in the general election took on a particular significance because of the closeness of the returns in a number of ridings. This should prompt members of the new Parliament to consider once again means of ensuring that all federal election returns are made public at the same time.

As it turned out, the results of votes cast by some 96,000 servicemen, dependents in Europe and hospitalized veterans gave the Liberals two more seats at the expense of the Progressive Conservatives. Weakness in existing election machinery meant that the party standings were not known until six days after the election date.

Such situations tend to create uncertainties for political parties and candidates alike. Many servicemen complain that too much attention is drawn to the way in which the service vote is allocated among the various parties under the present system. It should be noted, however, that since the results of all polls are made available to the public it would be quite possible for the trend of the service vote to be determined in any case.

The necessity to extend voting privileges to servicemen located at establishments from Camp Borden, to the Congo does present difficulties for electoral officials. But surely there are avenues that can be explored to reduce the time gap between Canada's election date and the announcement of the results of the service vote.

One possibility that should be explored again is that of advancing the day of nomination by one week—thus allowing three full weeks for the conduct of advance polls and for receipt of the returns. It should be possible to cut down on the period during which servicemen are permitted to vote—now about a week. These are matters that Parliament should not overlook when the Canada Elections Act again comes up for study.

APPENDICE 2

THE OTTAWA CITIZEN

Le mardi 3 juillet 1962

Publication des résultats du vote militaire

Le délai encouru dans la publication des résultats du vote militaire au terme de l'élection générale a pris une importance particulière en raison des résultats serrés enregistrés dans un certain nombre de circonscriptions. Ceci devrait amener les députés qui viennent d'être élus à étudier de nouveau les moyens à prendre pour s'assurer que tous les résultats d'une élection fédérale soient rendus publics en même temps.

La publication des résultats du vote de 96,000 militaires cantonnés en Europe, de leurs dépendants et des militaires hospitalisés a permis aux libéraux de ravir deux autres sièges aux progressistes-conservateurs. La faiblesse du système fait qu'il a fallu attendre six jours après la date de l'élection pour connaître la position des partis en Chambre.

De telles situations tendent à provoquer l'incertitude tant chez les partis politiques que chez les candidats eux-mêmes. Plusieurs militaires se plaignent de ce qu'on porte une trop grande attention à la répartition, sous le présent système, du vote militaire entre les divers partis politiques. Il faut toutefois noter qu'il demeure possible de déterminer la tendance du vote militaire puisque les résultats de tous les bureaux de scrutin sont rendus publics.

Le fait qu'il soit nécessaire d'accorder le droit de vote aux militaires cantonnés quelque part entre Camp Borden et le Congo présente des difficultés pour les officiers électoraux. Mais il existe certes des moyens de réduire le délai entre la date des élections au Canada et la publication des résultats du vote militaire.

Il faudrait étudier à nouveau la possibilité de devancer d'une semaine la date de la présentation des candidats; il y aurait ainsi trois semaines complètes pour la mise sur pied des bureaux provisoires de scrutin et la réception des résultats. Il devrait être possible de réduire cette période au cours de laquelle les militaires peuvent déposer leurs bulletins de vote, qui s'échelonne actuellement sur une semaine. Le Parlement ne devrait pas ignorer ces aspects lorsque les députés seront appelés à réétudier la Loi électorale du Canada.

[Texte]

THE OTTAWA JOURNAL

Monday, July 9, 1962

The Soldiers' Vote — An Old Fashioned System

The results of the June 18 General Election threw into prominence the fact that the existing method of counting and announcing the votes of Canada's armed forces and veterans is out of date and even undemocratic.

There were 96,179 of these votes cast, between June 11 and June 16, but they were not announced until June 24. The result of the separate announcement, six days after election day, meant that the public was able to know that 63.5 per cent of the service vote went Liberal, compared to the 36.9 per cent slice given the Liberals by the general civilian vote. Conservatives got 25.5 per cent in the service vote and 37.5 per cent in the civilian vote.

Our concern here is not with the fortunes of either party, or their reputation. Had the trend been reversed our concern would be the same. Our concern is that of one segment of Canadians it is possible to say: "they voted Liberal," or "they voted Tory."

In a democratic system based on a secret ballot one should no more be able to say "the soldiers voted Liberal" than one could say with accuracy "the doctors voted Conservative", or the merchants or the teachers or the miners.

The present system enables the serviceman overseas, or in Canada but away from his place of domicile, to vote on the six days of the week before the Monday of General Election. But the counting does not begin until the day after Election Day; "such counting shall be carried out with all possible despatch, and shall be completed not later than the Saturday next following such polling day."

The delay is said to be caused by the fact that nomination of candidates does not close until two weeks before Election Day. It is said to take a full week for the nomination list to be processed in Canada by the Chief Electoral Officer and then despatched overseas and delivered to the various places where Canadian forces are situated. Then, it is said, there must be a full week given for voting, because

[Traduction]

THE OTTAWA JOURNAL

Le lundi 9 juillet 1962

Le vote militaire: Un système démodé

La publication des résultats de l'élection générale du 18 juin a démontré que la méthode actuelle de dépouillement et de publication du vote des militaires et des anciens combattants canadiens est démodée et même peu démocratique.

96,179 de ces votes militaires ont été déposés entre le 11 et le 16 juin mais les résultats n'en ont été rendus publics que le 24 juin. Le fait que ces résultats aient été annoncés 6 jours après l'élection signifie que les contribuables canadiens ont pu savoir que 63.5 p. 100 du vote militaire est allé aux Libéraux alors que le reste de la population canadienne accordait son appui aux Libéraux dans une proportion de 36.9 p. 100. De leur côté les progressistes-conservateurs obtenaient 25.5 p. 100 du vote militaire et 37.5 p. 100 du vote des autres contribuables.

Ce qui nous inquiète ici ce n'est pas le sort réservé à l'un ou l'autre des partis non plus que leur réputation. Si la tendance avait été à l'inverse de ce qu'elle a été nous nous serions inquiétés de la même façon. Ce qui nous inquiète c'est que les Canadiens peuvent dire d'une partie de la population: «Ils ont voté Libéral» ou «Ils ont voté Conservateur».

Lorsqu'un système démocratique s'appuie sur le scrutin secret personne ne devrait pouvoir dire «Les militaires ont voté libéral» pas plus qu'on ne devrait pouvoir dire avec précision «Les médecins ont voté conservateur», ou les commerçants ou les instituteurs ou les mineurs.

Le système actuel permet aux militaires qui sont outre-mer ou au Canada mais éloignés de leur lieu de résidence, de voter pendant les six jours de la semaine qui précède le jour des élections générales. Mais le dépouillement ne débute que le lendemain de l'élection; «ce comptage doit être effectué avec toute la diligence possible, et être terminé au plus tard le samedi qui suit immédiatement ledit jour du scrutin.»

La difficulté vient de ce que la présentation des candidats ne se termine que deux semaines avant le jour du scrutin. Il faut une semaine complète pour que la liste des noms des candidats soit préparée par le bureau du directeur général des élections au Canada et expédiée outre-mer afin d'être livrée partout où sont cantonnés les soldats canadiens. Il faut par la suite qu'une semaine complète soit of the inaccessibility of many servicemen, and the fact that they may not all be given time off to vote on the same day.

[Text]

As things are we must take a week to get the nomination list to the troops, give them a week to vote, give the voting official a week to count.

Several remedies seem worth examining.

1. As most candidates are nominated well before the 14-day deadline we might advance nomination day by a week. (As it is, nomination day in distant places such as the Yukon or Northwest Territories must be 28 days in advance of polling day.) If the nomination list were made available to the forces a week earlier then they could vote a week earlier and the counting process would be completed a week earlier and in time for inserting it into the General Election results;

2. If it were found undesirable to advance nomination day it is entirely possible with modern communications that the week now employed to deliver the lists to the troops could be cut to four days, the week now employed to enable the troops to vote could be cut to four days, and the week now given for counting and reporting could be cut to three days. This would telescope the three-week operation into two and permit the inclusion of the armed forces vote into the civilian vote without identification of either being possible.

It is interesting to note that the British and American armed forces vote is not segregated as is ours. The British soldier leaves a proxy with a friend before he goes overseas, giving that proxy authority to vote for him as he sees fit or giving him authority to exercise the proxy when the serviceman writes him instructions. It is assumed the British serviceman will be interested enough to find out by newspapers or mail or broadcasts who is running in his constituency and it is up to him to instruct his proxy or leave his proxy to vote as he sees fit.

[Translation]

prévue pour le déroulement du scrutin parce que certains militaires peuvent difficilement se présenter au bureau et tous ne peuvent pas être libérés en même temps afin de voter le même jour.

Il faut donc en définitive une semaine pour expédier la liste des noms des candidats jusqu'aux cantonnements des militaires, une semaine pour déposer leur bulletin de vote, puis une semaine aux officiers d'élection pour le compiler.

Voici à titre d'exemple quelques solutions au problème.

1. Puisque la plupart des candidats sont déjà choisis longtemps avant cette période de quatorze jours avant l'élection, il serait possible d'avancer d'une semaine la date de la présentation des candidats. (De fait, la présentation des candidats dans les endroits éloignés tels que les Territoires du Yukon et du Nord-Ouest doit se faire 28 jours avant le jour du scrutin). Si la liste des noms des candidats était remise aux Forces armées une semaine plus tôt, les militaires pourraient voter une semaine plus tôt, le dépouillement pourrait s'effectuer une semaine plus tôt, et ce résultat pourrait être inséré avec les autres résultats de l'élection générale.

2. S'il n'apparaît pas souhaitable de devancer la date de la mise en candidature, il est très certainement possible grâce aux communications modernes, de réduire à quatre les sept jours actuellement nécessaires pour faire parvenir les listes aux différents cantonnements des militaires; de réduire à quatre le nombre de jours actuellement prévus pour le scrutin lui-même; et de réduire à trois le nombre de jours actuellement prévus pour le dépouillement et la publication des résultats. On condenserait ainsi en deux semaines trois opérations qui en prennent actuellement trois, ce qui permettrait d'incorporer le résultat du vote militaire au vote des autres contribuables canadiens sans qu'il soit possible d'affirmer qui a voté de quelle façon.

Notons que le vote militaire en Grande-Bretagne et aux États-Unis n'est pas séparé du vote des autres contribuables comme c'est le cas chez nous. Le soldat anglais laisse une procuration à un ami avant de se rendre outre-mer l'autorisant de voter comme bon lui semble ou d'utiliser cette procuration lorsque le militaire lui aura fait parvenir ses instructions. On suppose que le militaire britannique sera assez intéressé à l'élection pour apprendre par les journaux, le courrier ou les émissions radiophoniques, quels sont les candidats dans sa circonscription; il lui appartiendra de communiquer son choix à celui qui détient sa procuration ou de lui laisser le choix de voter comme bon lui semble.

[Texte]

The American soldier is given opportunity to vote at the scene of his posting sufficiently in advance of the general election date so that the vote of American forces is included in the general results, with no identification or segregation possible.

It is surely within the wit of Canadians to amend our voting laws so that the soldiers, sailors and airmen may not be singled out as something separate.

It is not impossible that in these days of tight government the present system would encourage a two-way pressure between the armed forces and the political parties. The forces might try to exact special considerations in return for their vote, or the politicians might be inclined to hold out special bait for the armed forces. We could even find ourselves with an armed forces lobby.

But the force of our desire to have the system changed does not depend upon the uncertain and even unlikely possibility of graft or unwise voting practices. It springs from the fundamental proposition that we should not be able to single out any group of people in our electorate by their occupations and say this is how they voted.

THE GAZETTE

Monday, November 15, 1965

COMMENT

That Service Vote Delay

It may be hoped that this has been the last election in which the vote of the armed services will be reported nearly a week after election day. This practice is bad, in every way. It should be possible to conduct the service vote in such a way that it could be merged with the civilian vote and reported on the same day.

There seems to be no sufficient reason for this long delay in reporting how the services have voted. Advanced polls are conducted for many citizens who, for one legitimate reason or another, cannot be in the country on election day. The reporting of these votes is not delayed; they form part of the regular national total.

The present system of conducting the service vote is bad for two important reasons.

[Traduction]

Le soldat américain peut voter là où il est cantonné assez tôt avant l'élection générale pour que le vote militaire soit inclus dans les résultats généraux afin de rendre toute identification impossible.

Les Canadiens sont sûrement assez intelligents pour modifier les lois électorales afin de permettre aux soldats, aux marins et aux aviateurs de ne plus être considérés comme des gens à part.

Il est possible que le système actuel encourage de part et d'autre des pressions entre les Forces armées et des partis politiques. Les militaires pourraient tenter d'obtenir des faveurs spéciales en promettant de voter de telle, ou telle façon, tandis que les politiciens pourraient tenter d'offrir certains appâts spéciaux aux Forces armées. Nous pourrions même voir les membres des Forces armées faire de l'antichambre.

Si nous désirons si ardemment changer le système ce n'est pas parce que nous craignons la possibilité de pots-de-vin ou de pratiques électorales peu sages. C'est tout simplement parce que nous ne devrions pas, croyons-nous, pouvoir dire de tel ou tel groupe d'électeurs, quelle que soit leur occupation, qu'il a voté de telle ou telle façon.

THE GAZETTE

le lundi 15 novembre 1965

COMMENTAIRE

Le délai du vote militaire

Il est à espérer que nous venons de connaître la dernière élection générale qui comporte un délai d'une semaine avant la publication des résultats du vote militaire. Cette façon d'agir est mauvaise, à tout point de vue. Il devrait être possible d'organiser le scrutin de telle sorte que les résultats du vote militaire soient rattachés à ceux du reste de la population et rendus publics le même jour.

Il ne semble y avoir aucune raison suffisante pour justifier ce long délai entre la tenue du scrutin et la publication des résultats d'un vote militaire. Des bureaux provisoires de scrutin sont à la disposition de tous ceux qui, pour une raison légitime ou une autre, savent qu'ils ne seront pas au pays le jour du scrutin. La publication de ces résultats n'est pas retardée; ils sont incorporés aux résultats compilés dans l'ensemble du pays.

Deux raisons principales rendent mauvaise la façon dont se tient actuellement le vote militaire.

[Text]

In the first place, it leaves the results of the voting on election day still undecided, in the case of a close vote, as occurred on Monday, it leaves the fate of the Government in the balance.

In any case, it leaves some constituencies with uncertainty as to whom they have actually elected. In the days when Canada had a two-party system these narrow margins were less likely to occur. But now that the vote in many constituencies is split three or more ways, narrow margins of victory are far more frequent.

In the second place, this delayed reporting of the service vote tends to place the servicemen in a category of their own, as though, as citizens, they were set apart, but this is not the basis of the services in Canada. The services are made up of volunteers. Even though professional servicemen, they are still, in a real sense citizen-servicemen. We do not live in a country where the armed forces are a state within the state. Their vote should be considered as a citizen vote, and tallied with the rest of the citizen vote.

If the electoral laws could be changed, we would no longer hear from politicians on election night the same statement: "We will have to wait for the service vote." On election night the decision would be, as it ought to be, complete and final. The people would have spoken, and the servicemen would be, as they ought to be, among the people.

[Translation]

Tout d'abord elle permet le jour même du scrutin la publication de résultats imprécis. Lorsque le vote est serré, comme ce fut le cas lundi, le sort du gouvernement demeure incertain.

Quoi qu'il en soit, certaines circonscriptions ignorent quel candidat elles ont élu. Lorsque le Canada ne comptait que deux partis politiques, la possibilité d'une élection par une faible majorité était moins marquée. Mais de nos jours, il est plus fréquent de voir un candidat remporter la victoire par une faible majorité puisque dans plusieurs circonscriptions les électeurs ont le choix entre 3 candidats ou même davantage.

Deuxièmement, la publication tardive des résultats du vote militaire tend à placer les membres des forces armées dans une catégorie différentes, tout comme si, en tant que citoyens, ils faisaient classe à part. Telle n'est pas la situation. Ce sont des volontaires qui font partie des forces armées. Bien que militaires professionnels, ils n'en demeurent pas moins en un certain sens des citoyens-soldats. Nous ne vivons pas dans un pays où les forces armées sont un État dans l'État. Leur vote devrait être considéré comme tout autre vote et compilé avec les autres.

Si les lois électorales pouvaient être changées nous n'entendrions plus les politiciens répéter, le soir de l'élection: «Il nous faudra attendre le résultat du vote militaire». La décision serait complète et finale, comme elle devrait l'être, le soir même du scrutin. Le peuple aurait parlé et les militaires feraient partie, comme ils le devraient, de ce peuple.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

COMITÉ PERMANENT

ON

DES

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET

AND EVIDENCE

TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 5

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1969

LE MARDI 9 DÉCEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir les procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Président
Vice-président

and Messrs.

et MM.

Mr. Alkenbrack,
Mr. Benjamin,
Mr. Cafik,
Mr. Code,
Mr. Côté (Richelieu),
Mr. Duquet,

Mr. Forest,
Mr. Forrestall,
Mr. Fortin,
Mr. Francis,
Mr. Howard (Skeena),
Mr. Howe,

Mr. Jerome,
Mr. Lefebvre,
Mr. Macquarrie,
Mr. Marceau,
Mr. Murphy,
Mr. Trudel—20.

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

[Text]

TUESDAY, December 9, 1969.

(6)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11:15 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Alkenbrack, Code, Duquet, Forrestall, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie—(8).

Witnesses: Miss Flora MacDonald, Administrator, Queens University; Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Committee resumed its study of the Canada Elections Act.

The Chairman introduced Miss MacDonald and requested her to make a summary of her brief.

The members questioned Miss MacDonald thereon.

On Motion of Mr. Jerome, it was Agreed,—that Miss MacDonald's brief entitled "Electoral and Party Reform" be printed as an Appendix to this day's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (See Appendix 3).

The Committee agreed that Miss MacDonald be reimbursed for reasonable travelling expenses incurred by reason of her appearance before the Committee.

The Chairman thanked Miss MacDonald on behalf of the Committee for her interest and assistance to the Committee.

At 12:45 p.m. the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m., December 11, 1969.

PROCÈS-VERBAL

[Traduction]

Le MARDI 9 décembre 1969.

(6)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit aujourd'hui à 11 h. 15 du matin. Le président M. Laflamme occupe le fauteuil.

Députés présents: MM. Alkenbrack, Code, Duquet, Forrestall, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie—(8).

Témoins: M^{lle} Flora MacDonald, administrateur, Université Queens; M. J.-M. Hamel, directeur général des élections.

Le Comité reprend l'étude de la Loi électorale du Canada.

Le président présente M^{lle} MacDonald et lui demande de faire un exposé de son mémoire.

Les membres questionnent ensuite M^{lle} MacDonald.

M. Jerome propose, et

Il est convenu—que le mémoire de M^{lle} MacDonald intitulé "Réformes des partis et réforme électorale" soit publié en appendice au compte rendu de ce jour (voir appendice n° 3).

Le Comité convient de rembourser à M^{lle} MacDonald les frais de voyage raisonnables qu'elle a dû déboursier pour venir témoigner devant le Comité.

Le président remercie M^{lle} MacDonald de la part du Comité pour l'intérêt et l'aide qu'elle a apportés à ce dernier.

À 12 h. 45 le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'au 11 décembre 1969 à 11 h. 00 du matin.

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, December 9, 1969.

• 1116

The Chairman: Would the meeting come to order, please, as I see we now have a quorum to hear evidence? While we are almost 15 minutes late, I will start by introducing to you Miss Flora MacDonald who is our witness today.

Miss MacDonald, we are pleased to have you with us this morning. You travelled a slippery way to be here on time which you were.

I believe Miss MacDonald has some documentation to circulate among the member. As I already have told you, articles 62 and 63 which deal with the election expenses have been withdrawn from our terms of reference by the House, but as it is such a closely related matter I will not object if you have some practical remarks to make in this regard. I would appreciate if you could make a general review of the main points on which you want to raise the attention of the members, after which we will start with the question period so the members can get your views on their particular inquiries. Miss MacDonald.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Queen's University): Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman mentioned that I had some documentation. I am not just quite sure about distributing it in such an august body because, in a sense, it might be termed a partisan document, and knowing that I am in a very non-partisan forum I wish to make you aware that the document in question, although it was delivered to what might be called a partisan body, does not, in fact, relate to any political persuasion or partisan view.

It is a paper which I had written for delivery to a conference at Niagara Falls which dealt with electoral reform as it is reflected in the operations of political parties, covering both the financial resources of political parties and how they might be related to the Canada Elections Act and also certain legal matters now under the Act which I had some beliefs might, in fact, be changed or might be improved.

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 9 décembre 1969.

Le président: Nous allons commencer. Nous avons suffisamment de députés présents pour entendre des témoignages. Nous commençons toutefois avec quinze minutes de retard. Je vous présente donc M^{lle} MacDonald.

M^{lle} MacDonald, nous sommes heureux de vous avoir parmi nous ce matin. Je sais que vous avez dû affronter des routes verglacées pour arriver à temps et je m'excuse du retard que nous vous imposons.

Je crois que M^{lle} MacDonald a des documents à distribuer aux membres du Comité et, comme je l'ai dit, les articles 62 et 63 sur les dépenses électorales ont été éliminées de notre mandat par la Chambre des communes, mais comme il s'agit d'un sujet pertinent, je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que vous fassiez quelques observations à ce sujet. J'espère que vous pourrez nous donner un aperçu général des points principaux sur lesquels vous voulez attirer l'attention des députés. Après quoi, nous pourrions passer à une période de questions et réponses qui permettra à chaque député de préciser les points qui lui semblent obscurs. M^{lle} MacDonald.

Mlle Flora MacDonald (Université Queen): Merci, monsieur le président.

Comme l'a mentionné monsieur le président, j'ai certains documents à distribuer. Je ne sais pas si je puis toutefois les distribuer. Il s'agit en quelque sorte d'un document partisan et sachant que l'audience à laquelle je m'adresse n'est pas du tout partisane, j'aimerais que vous soyez bien conscients du fait que les documents en question, même s'ils ont été distribués à un organisme partisan, n'ont pas trait, en fait, à quelque persuasion politique ou à quelque opinion partisane.

Il s'agit d'un document que j'ai préparé pour une conférence à Niagara Falls sur la réforme électorale telle qu'elle est reflétée dans l'activité des partis politiques. Il traitait des ressources financières des partis politiques, de leur rapport avec la Loi électorale du Canada et de certaines questions juridiques qui relèvent actuellement de la loi et qui, à mon avis, devraient faire l'objet de modification ou d'amélioration.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, December 9, 1969.

• 1116

The Chairman: Would the meeting come to order, please, as I see we now have a quorum to hear evidence? While we are almost 15 minutes late, I will start by introducing to you Miss Flora MacDonald who is our witness today.

Miss MacDonald, we are pleased to have you with us this morning. You travelled a slippery way to be here on time which you were.

I believe Miss MacDonald has some documentation to circulate among the member. As I already have told you, articles 62 and 63 which deal with the election expenses have been withdrawn from our terms of reference by the House, but as it is such a closely related matter I will not object if you have some practical remarks to make in this regard. I would appreciate if you could make a general review of the main points on which you want to raise the attention of the members, after which we will start with the question period so the members can get your views on their particular inquiries. Miss MacDonald.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Queen's University): Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman mentioned that I had some documentation. I am not just quite sure about distributing it in such an august body because, in a sense, it might be termed a partisan document, and knowing that I am in a very non-partisan forum I wish to make you aware that the document in question, although it was delivered to what might be called a partisan body, does not, in fact, relate to any political persuasion or partisan view.

It is a paper which I had written for delivery to a conference at Niagara Falls which dealt with electoral reform as it is reflected in the operations of political parties, covering both the financial resources of political parties and how they might be related to the Canada Elections Act and also certain legal matters now under the Act which I had some beliefs might, in fact, be changed or might be improved.

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 9 décembre 1969.

Le président: Nous allons commencer. Nous avons suffisamment de députés présents pour entendre des témoignages. Nous commençons toutefois avec quinze minutes de retard. Je vous présente donc M^{lle} MacDonald.

M^{lle} MacDonald, nous sommes heureux de vous avoir parmi nous ce matin. Je sais que vous avez dû affronter des routes verglacées pour arriver à temps et je m'excuse du retard que nous vous imposons.

Je crois que M^{lle} MacDonald a des documents à distribuer aux membres du Comité et, comme je l'ai dit, les articles 62 et 63 sur les dépenses électorales ont été éliminées de notre mandat par la Chambre des communes, mais comme il s'agit d'un sujet pertinent, je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que vous fassiez quelques observations à ce sujet. J'espère que vous pourrez nous donner un aperçu général des points principaux sur lesquels vous voulez attirer l'attention des députés. Après quoi, nous pourrions passer à une période de questions et réponses qui permettra à chaque député de préciser les points qui lui semblent obscurs. M^{lle} MacDonald.

Mlle Flora MacDonald (Université Queen): Merci, monsieur le président.

Comme l'a mentionné monsieur le président, j'ai certains documents à distribuer. Je ne sais pas si je puis toutefois les distribuer. Il s'agit en quelque sorte d'un document partisan et sachant que l'audience à laquelle je m'adresse n'est pas du tout partisane, j'aimerais que vous soyez bien conscients du fait que les documents en question, même s'ils ont été distribués à un organisme partisan, n'ont pas trait, en fait, à quelque persuasion politique ou à quelque opinion partisane.

Il s'agit d'un document que j'ai préparé pour une conférence à Niagara Falls sur la réforme électorale telle qu'elle est reflétée dans l'activité des partis politiques. Il traitait des ressources financières des partis politiques, de leur rapport avec la Loi électorale du Canada et de certaines questions juridiques qui relèvent actuellement de la loi et qui, à mon avis, devraient faire l'objet de modification ou d'amélioration.

[Text]

The first matter I would like to deal with actually comes under Section 2 of the Act, that is, the section dealing with interpretation or definition and because so many of the other recommendations that I make later in the paper relate to this very basic matter, I in fact, wish to bring up this right at the outset. This deals with the question of the recognition of political parties as legal entities under the Canada Elections Act.

In framing the legislation of 1874 by which candidates are required to report election expenditures, no mention was made of political parties.

My view in this is that in the terms of definition, or in the definitions included in Section 2, the term "political party" should be defined.

At that time, of course, that is in 1974, political parties were in an embryonic state in Canada and their role in election campaigns was minimal. Although the ensuing years have seen that role grow to one of considerable proportions, Parliament has continued to sanction the oversight of the 1874 legislation by neglecting to accord official legal recognition to political parties under the Canada Elections Act.

The result has been a parliament with schizophrenic tendencies where, on the one hand, parties are recognized for certain legislative purposes, that is, privileges are accorded to leaders of opposition "parties" in the House of Commons, while at the same time parties are denied status for purposes of electing those same leaders to Parliament. Until such legal recognition is granted, all other proposals that I have to make concerning political parties—and in my paper I deal with matters which will be coming before this special committee or are relevant to this special committee, that is, disclosure, subsidization, and limitation of campaign expenses—are legally unenforceable. So I would propose that political parties be explicitly recognized under the Canada Elections Act.

The question arises, of course: how does one define a party? Naturally this is a matter for discussion by your group. There already have been certain proposals made. One might say that recognition could be based on a requirement that a party must field a specified number of candidates in any current election, or have obtained a specified percentage of votes in the preceding election. Actually, for purposes of national broadcasting during a national political campaign, the

[Interpretation]

La première question dont j'aimerais traiter relève de l'article 2 de la loi sur l'interprétation ou à la définition et cela, parce que plusieurs des recommandations que j'ai faites plus loin ont trait à cette question fondamentale. Il s'agit de la reconnaissance des partis politiques à titre d'entités juridiques en vertu de la Loi électorale du Canada. Je déclare donc:

Que la loi de 1874, en vertu de laquelle les candidats doivent déclarer leurs dépenses électorales, ne fait pas mention des partis politiques.

A mon avis, dans les définitions comprises dans l'article 2, l'expression «parti politique» devrait être définie.

A ce moment-là, en 1874, les partis politiques canadiens n'étaient qu'à l'état embryonnaire et leur rôle dans les campagnes électorales était minime. Au cours des années subséquentes ce rôle n'a cessé de s'accroître et a pris des proportions considérables. Le Parlement a entériné la loi de 1874 et a négligé de reconnaître juridiquement et officiellement les partis politiques aux termes de la loi électorale du Canada.

Le Parlement a donc manifesté des tendances schizophréniques car d'une part les partis sont reconnus pour certaines raisons législatives, c'est-à-dire que certains privilèges sont accordés aux leaders des partis de l'opposition à la Chambre et en même temps, les partis se voient nier leur statut afin d'élire ces mêmes leaders au Parlement. Jusqu'à ce qu'une telle reconnaissance juridique soit accordée, toutes les autres propositions que j'avais à faire au sujet des partis politiques, et dans ce document je traite des questions qui seront soumises au comité spécial ou qui s'adressent au présent comité permanent, soit du relevé des dépenses, des subventions et la limitation des dépenses des campagnes. Tout cela est presque impossible à appliquer sur le plan juridique. Je propose donc que l'on reconnaisse les partis politiques dans la Loi électorale du Canada.

Naturellement, comment définit-on un parti politique? Votre groupe pourrait débattre cette question. On a déjà avancé certaines propositions à ce sujet. On pourrait fonder la reconnaissance d'un parti sur le fait qu'un parti doit présenter un certain nombre de candidats à une élection ou a obtenu un pourcentage bien précis de votes lors de l'élection précédente. En fait, lors d'une campagne électorale nationale, la Société Radio-Canada fixe une norme à laquelle un parti politique doit

[Texte]

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in granting free time to political parties, sets down certain criteria that a national political party must meet. It says:

- (i) it must have a policy program in regard to a great many matters involving the national interest;
- (ii) it must have a nationally recognized leader;
- (iii) it must have a national organization set up as a result of a national conference or convention;
- (iv) it must have representation in the House of Commons;
- (v) it must appeal for voters in at least three provinces, and present a candidate in at least one of every four ridings.

That is the way the CBC looks at political parties when it is meting out national free-time broadcasting.

• 1125

The new election act of the Province of Quebec defines a political party. It says that a recognized party means the party of the Prime Minister or of the leader of the official opposition, and a party which at the last general election had 10 official candidates or which at the current general election is permitted to designate an official agent under Section 375, which reads:

A political party wishing to incur election expenses shall appoint, by a writing signed by its recognized leader, an official agent. The appointment of an official agent of a party shall be delivered to the chief returning-officer with proof to the satisfaction of the latter that the signatory is the recognized leader of the party. The appointment of the official agent shall not be accepted unless the party has at least ten official candidates at the last general elections or it is shown that it will have that number at those in progress.

I cite these different interpretations to show that there are different ways by which parties can be defined. They are being defined by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Broadcasting Act, by the Quebec election act, and by the commission which is looking into electoral revision in Nova Scotia.

I have said that it might be based on the requirements that the party must field a specified number of candidates in any current se conformer pour profiter gratuitement d'une période d'antenne.

[Interprétation]

- i) un parti politique doit avoir un programme d'action sur un grand nombre de questions d'intérêt national;
- ii) il doit avoir un chef national reconnu;
- iii) il doit avoir une organisation nationale créée à la suite d'un congrès national;
- iv) il doit avoir des représentants à la Chambre des communes;
- v) il doit briguer les suffrages dans au moins trois provinces et mettre un candidat en lice dans au moins une circonscription sur quatre.

Voilà comment Radio-Canada considère les partis politiques qui demandent une période d'antenne gratuite pour la diffusion de messages politiques à l'échelle nationale.

La Loi électorale de la province de Québec définit un parti politique comme le parti du premier ministre ou du leader de l'opposition officielle et un partie qui, lors de la dernière élection, avait au moins dix candidats officiels sur les rangs ou qui, à l'élection en cours, a droit de nommer un agent en vertu de l'article 375 qui stipule:

Un parti politique désirant faire des dépenses électorales doit, par écrit signé de son chef reconnu, nommer un agent officiel. La nomination d'agent officiel d'un parti est remise au président général des élections avec une preuve à la satisfaction de ce dernier que le signataire est le chef reconnu du parti. La nomination d'agent officiel n'est acceptée que si le parti avait au moins dix candidats officiels aux dernières élections générales ou s'il démontre qu'il aura ce nombre à celles qui sont en cours.

Ces différentes interprétations indiquent les diverses manières de définir un parti politique. Cette expression fait l'objet d'une définition de la Société Radio-Canada de la Loi électorale du Québec, et de la commission chargée de la révision de la Loi électorale en Nouvelle-Écosse.

J'ai déclaré qu'on pourrait exiger que le parti ait un certain nombre de candidats ou ait obtenu un certain pourcentage des votes election or have obtained a specified percentage of votes in the preceding election. These are ways in which this might be done.

[Text]

Each political party would be required to register, and presumably such registration would necessitate that each party stipulate the names of its representatives legally responsible for its activities. Failure of a party to register officially would disqualify it from receiving any benefits under the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. Candidates sponsored by the registered party would be designated as party candidates on the ballot and all others would be described as independents.

The reason I say this is that I feel quite strongly that we must face the reality that politics is more importantly a party process than an individual process and that we must make allowance for this under the Canada Elections Act. In so doing political parties would not only enjoy legally recognized rights, but would equally incur legal obligations.

I go on in my paper from this point to deal specifically with those two sections which you mentioned are really outside the terms of reference of this Committee, that is, Sections 62 and 63 of the Canada Elections Act. But you may wish to pass on copies of this paper to the other committee. The points I deal with there can be grouped in three categories, and I will outline them briefly so that you will know what they are.

One deals with disclosure of party funds. At present the Act calls for disclosure of funds raised by candidates, but I put forward the proposal that complete statements of party income, including the explicit identification of all sources and expenditures, should be required to be published at the conclusion of each election campaign, and annually.

Then the second major matter with which I deal is subsidization of political parties. Again this is at the national level, and I say that the state should subsidize electoral activity of the political parties by making all radio and television election broadcasts available on a free-time basis, but there should be limits to the use of these media for campaign purposes. I am talking here not only about the public networks but also about the private networks.

Then with regard to limitation, I say that there should be no limitation to the expenditures that political parties might make except within the confines of the broadcast media, and they would be confined because of the au cours de l'élection précédente. Voilà quelques façons de procéder.

[Interpretation]

Chaque parti politique devrait obligatoirement être inscrit, ce qui présuppose qu'il devra faire connaître le nom de ses représentants chargés juridiquement de ses activités, à défaut de quoi, un parti ne pourrait recevoir aucune compensation en vertu de la Loi électorale du Canada. Les candidats appuyés par les partis inscrits seraient désignés comme des candidats du parti sur les bulletins de votes et les autres seraient inscrits à titre de candidats indépendants.

Si j'avance ces propos, c'est que je crois que nous devons faire face à la réalité suivante: la politique est de plus en plus l'affaire d'un parti que celle d'un particulier. Nous devons donc tenir compte de cette situation dans le cadre de la Loi électorale du Canada. De cette façon, non seulement les partis politiques bénéficieraient de droits reconnus juridiquement, mais assumeraient également certaines obligations juridiques.

Je traite ensuite de deux articles bien précis de la loi, les articles 62 et 63, qui ne relèvent pas du mandat du Comité. Vous aimeriez peut-être distribuer ce document à l'autre comité. Ces arguments peuvent être groupés sous trois catégories que je vous explique en quelques mots. Je voudrais d'abord traiter du relevé de la caisse électorale. La loi actuelle exige le relevé des sommes d'argent recueillies par les candidats, mais j'avance le relevé détaillé des revenus du parti, y compris l'identification de toutes les sources et dépenses d'argent doivent être publiées à la fin de chaque campagne électorale et de chaque année.

La deuxième question a trait aux subventions versées aux partis politiques. Il s'agit également de l'échelle nationale. L'État devrait subventionner l'activité électorale des partis politiques en mettant gratuitement à leur disposition les organes de diffusion, comme la radio et la télévision, mais de façon limitée. Il s'agit ici de réseaux publics et privés de radiodiffusion.

Donc, en ce qui concerne les limites, je dis qu'il ne doit pas y avoir de plafonnement des dépenses des partis politiques, sauf pour l'utilisation des organes de radiotélédiffusion, parce qu'ils reçoivent déjà des subventions et

[Texte]

• 1130

[Interprétation]

fact that they are being subsidized and only a limited amount of time would be available to them.

Donations to political parties or candidates of up to $100 should be tax deductible for income tax purposes. There should be more stringent enforcement of existing provisions of the Canada Elections Act in respect to the disclosure of candidate income and expenditure.

Finally, elected candidates should be required to disclose any private interests or associations which might be constructed to conflict with the fulfillment of their public responsibility.

That in general covers the items which would deal with Sections 62 and 63, but as you can see it would be impossible to enforce any of these proposals unless the basic promise, that is, the recognition of political parties as legal entities is included. It is interesting to note, of course, that at the present time, under the Canadian Forces Voting Regulations which are, of course, related to the Canada Elections Act, we do recognize political parties in that, if I am correct Mr. Hamel, the ballots which go to our Armed Forces voters do in fact show the party affiliation of the various candidates.

That was one major point that I wanted to deal with, and the second was this question of registration of voters which I know has been dealt with by your Committee before. Mr. Castonguay has appeared before you and you have studied the report of the Representation Commissioner. I gather that it is not quite a closed subject, or at least that it would be permissible to make certain suggestions on this subject.

Having had some experience with election campaigns and their length, I think that we must take into consideration, in this whole operation under the Canada Elections Act, not just the cost in dollar terms but the cost in wear and tear on individuals involved, and the way in which an election campaign over a period of time begins in fact to intrude itself, sometimes to the disadvantage of the democratic process. There is also the cost of the movement of moneys in other ways, in accelerated costs to parties over a lengthy period of time as against the cost to perhaps the public purse.

que leur période d'antenne serait limitée.

Les dons faits aux partis politiques devraient être déductibles jusqu'à concurrence de $100. Il faudrait une application plus rigoureuse des dispositions actuelles de la Loi électorale du Canada au sujet de la révélation des revenus et des dépenses des candidats.

Finalement, un candidat élu devrait être obligé de révéler quels sont les intérêts privés ou les associations qui pourraient avoir des motifs de ne pas remplir leur responsabilité envers le peuple.

Cela, en général, tient compte des questions qui traiteraient des articles 62 et 63, mais, comme vous pouvez le voir, monsieur le président, il serait impossible de faire appliquer l'une ou l'autre de ces propositions à moins que l'on ne modifie les prémisses c'est-à-dire que l'on reconnaisse les partis politiques comme des entités juridiques. Il est intéressant de remarquer naturellement qu'à l'heure actuelle, en vertu des Règlements électoraux concernant les forces canadiennes qui naturellement se rapportent à la Loi électorale du Canada, nous reconnaissons les partis politiques, en ce sens que, à moins que je ne me trompe, les bulletins de vote qui vont aux électeurs des Forces armées indiquent effectivement l'affiliation politique des divers candidats.

C'est le premier point important dont je voulais discuter. Passons maintenant à la question de l'enregistrement des électeurs, qui, je le sais, avait été traitée antérieurement par votre Comité. Monsieur Castonguay est venu témoigner et vous avez étudié le rapport du Commissaire à la représentation. Je pense qu'il ne s'agit pas là d'une question secrète ou qu'on pourrait peut-être faire quelques suggestions à cet effet.

Fort d'une certaine expérience des campagnes électorales et de leur durée, je crois qu'il faut considérer pour cette opération, dans le cadre de la Loi électorale du Canada; non seulement le coût mais l'effort, et la fatigue de ceux qui travaillent du fait qu'une campagne électorale au bout d'une certaine période de temps pèse d'une façon néfaste quelquefois sur le processus démocratique. Il y a le coût de déplacement de l'argent vers des frais accrus, sur une période de temps assez longue, proportionnellement plus importantes pour les partis que pour le public.

[Text]

I have come back to this question of this whole system of enumeration in Canada and whether or not we do have the most efficient and effective means of enumeration to allow us to carry out the electoral process. It seems to me that one thing we must keep in mind at all times is the desire to make the franchise available to the largest number of people with the least possible inconvenience. I am not sure that our present system does not bear further investigation to see if this is being done. Certainly in a comparison of the various enumerative systems that are now in vogue in Western countries—I will quote from the remarks of Professor R. C. Scammon, Director of the Election Research Centre of Government Affairs at the Institute of Washington, who recently gave as his opinion:

...that an enumeration system such as we have in Canada, a continuous electoral roll system such as applies in Australia, or the permanent voters' list maintained in Britain—in fact any system which places upon the state apparatus the responsibility for ensuring that people get on the voters' lists—is more practical than one which depends on voluntary registration as is the case in the United States.

He continues:

The present Canadian system—while providing a comparatively uncomplicated and reasonably efficient method of registering the electorate, has certain shortcomings.

A prescribed period of time is necessary between the issuance of the writ and polling day to fulfil the statutory requirements

So the minimum of

...57 days required by the Chief Electoral Officer to perform his duties determines that any federal election campaign will be of at least two months duration, a period which many consider too long.

The requirement that an elector must vote in the poll where he has been enumerated has the effect of disfranchising those who move to new locations between enumeration and polling day.

Perhaps the most glaring drawback...

And you are all familiar with this one

... concerns the Armed Forces vote. Lacking any system of absentee voting which would make provision for all those away from their homes on polling day to cast their ballot, the special treatment

[Interpretation]

Donc, je suis revenu à la question de l'énumération au Canada et si nous avons les moyens d'énumération les plus efficaces qui nous permettent de mener à bien une élection, nous devrions avoir toujours présent à l'esprit le désir de permettre au plus grand nombre possible de personnes d'exercer leur droit de vote avec le moins d'ennuis possible. Je me demande si notre système actuel ne mériterait pas d'être étudié plus à fond dans ce sens, en comparant les différents systèmes d'énumération en vogue dans les pays occidentaux. Je me reporterais donc aux observations de M. R.-C. Scammon, directeur du Centre de recherches en matières d'élection de l'Institut de Washington, qui déclarait récemment qu'un système d'énumération dans le monde occidental, du Canada ou le système de la liste électorale continue en Australie ou de la liste permanente des électeurs en Grande-Bretagne, en réalité, tout système qui rejette sur l'État la responsabilité de s'assurer que les gens figurent sur la liste des électeurs—est plus pratique que celui qui laisse aux citoyens la liberté de s'inscrire sur la liste, comme aux États-Unis.

Il ajoute que le système actuel au Canada bien qu'étant une méthode simple et assez efficace d'énumération des électeurs présente certaines lacunes.

Pour respecter les exigences statutaires, il faut que s'écoule un délai prescrit entre le moment de l'émission du bref d'élection et le jour de votation. Aussi le minimum de 57 jours exigé par le directeur général des élections pour remplir ses fonctions oblige toute campagne électorale fédérale à durer au moins deux mois, période que beaucoup considèrent comme étant trop longue.

Le fait que l'électeur doive voter au bureau de votation de l'endroit où il a été inscrit retire le droit de vote à ceux qui déménagent entre le moment de l'énumération et le jour de votation.

Peut-être la plus grande lacune...

Et peut-être êtes-vous au courant des dispositions qui ont trait au vote des Forces armées. En l'absence d'un système de vote pour les absents qui permettrait à tous ceux qui sont éloignés de leur foyer le jour de votation de voter. Le traite-presently accorded the Armed Forces has the effect of singling out their voting patterns for special scrutiny.

[Texte]

We know, of course, the procedures by which this is done, and this has been discussed by you. I think the procedure does in fact permit two inequities as regards the Armed Forces vote.

First, the voting patterns of the Armed Forces are publicized in a way which applies to no other sector of the voting public; second, many service voters, often through...

lack of knowledge

...improperly register at the time of regular enumeration in the constituencies in which they happen to be stationed—even though their official registration is a matter of record on their signed declaration. On occasion this has resulted in a serviceman voting illegally in the wrong constituency.

And on occasion, too, this has resulted in ...controverted elections in Canada...

In failing to provide a system of absentee voting, the Canadian system succeeds in disfranchising all Canadians out of the country on government business, i.e. diplomatic staff, trade commissioners, etc.

There are the people in hospitals, and in fact a great variety of people to whom I think your Committee should be directing its attention to see that these people do in fact, if at all possible, have the right of the franchise extended to them.

The Australian system is probably the one which could be most easily adapted to this country. It does have certain advantages and certain drawbacks. It does make ...registration compulsory, and the responsibility for enrolment rests directly on the elector.

There are a number of people who might initially object to a system which makes registration compulsory, but I think that in this country we have by and large accepted this principle, in that social insurance and various methods of registration for social security benefits have in fact made this just another facet of our lives. As we move further and further toward what some might consider a form of minimum annual income, we will in fact be moving even further toward this question of compulsory registration.

I think the advantages in Canada of a system similar to the Australian system, or adapted from the Australian system, are ment spécial que l'on accorde actuellement aux Forces armées a pour effet d'indiquer séparément leur vote aux fins d'un examen spécial.

[Interprétation]

Nous savons, naturellement, comment on procède et vous en avez discuté. Je pense que cette procédure permet deux injustices en ce qui concerne le scrutin des Forces armées.

Tout d'abord, la structure de leur scrutin est rendue publique plus que pour tout autre secteur du vote public; deuxièmement, beaucoup de militaires, souvent par... manque de connaissance... ils ne sont pas convenablement enregistrés dans les circonscriptions électorales où ils se trouvent stationnés—même si leur enregistrement officiel dépend de leur déclaration signée. Il arrive parfois qu'un soldat vote illégalement dans une mauvaise circonscription.

Et, parfois, aussi, il en est résulté lors d'élections controversées au Canada...

En ne donnant pas un système de vote pour les absents, le système canadien réussit à enlever le droit de vote à tous les Canadiens qui se trouvent à l'extérieur du pays pour affaires—soit les diplomates, les délégués commerciaux, etc. Il y a aussi les personnes hospitalisées et en fait toute une série de gens sur qui ce Comité devrait porter son attention et s'assurer que, si cela est possible ils puissent avoir le droit de vote eux aussi. Le système australien pourrait peut-être être adapté le plus facilement à ce pays. Il y a des avantages et des désavantages. Il rend l'inscription obligatoire et la responsabilité de l'inscription est directement entre les mains des électeurs.

Il y a un certain nombre des gens qui s'opposeraient peut-être au système obligatoire, mais je crois en fait que nous avons déjà accepté ce principe, car dans le domaine de l'assurance sociale et des différentes méthodes d'enregistrement destinées aux avantages de sécurité sociale, nous y sommes déjà habitués. Comme nous nous avançons de plus en plus vers le concept du salaire minimum garanti, nous accepterons encore plus la question de l'inscription obligatoire.

Les avantages au Canada d'un système semblable au système australien adapté du système sont nombreux.

[Text]

several. In the first place, it would eliminate the present system of enumeration thereby reducing the length of time our election machinery requires from approximately 60 to perhaps as little as 30 days. And I do feel, and have found, that the general public grows weary of political campaigning long before any campaign reaches its conclusion. But whatever the reaction of the general public, it cannot be compared with the mental and physical strain to which party leaders, their aides, candidates and workers are subjected for the lengthy period of our present campaigns. I have often thought that some of the humane rules developed by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals should be applied to persons caught up in political campaigns.

Secondly, registration with its built-in safeguards would permit the introduction of absentee and postal voting procedures. This would mean that members of the Armed Forces, government personnel overseas, students and invalids, would be able to avail themselves of one or other of these processes, thereby correcting past injustices. And it is interesting to note that in the 1966 election in Australia approximately 10 per cent of the electorate took advantage of these means of voting, either by absentee or postal voting procedures.

I do know that the question of cost has been raised as one of the disadvantages that could be cited. I think that Mr. Castonguay mentioned something in the vicinity of $44 million as the cost over a four-year period. But the cost of our present enumeration would be eliminated, as would the salaries of hundreds of casual employees the present system necessitates. Furthermore, by a series of relatively minor amendments—and perhaps this is something which we could direct to the Federal-Provincial Conference—federal and provincial regulations regarding voting age, rules of residence and poll boundaries could be brought into conformity, thus permitting the utilisation of the electoral polls at both levels of government and thereby eliminating the cost of provincial enumeration as well.

However, as I said earlier, cost cannot be equated in dollar terms alone and the saving in wear and tear on the persons on whom campaign responsibilities rest heaviest also merits consideration.

Then there is the difficulty perhaps of keeping such a system up to date. I believe that Mr. Castonguay said that he estimated the electoral status of approximately 25 per cent of Canada's population changes annually,

[Interpretation]

D'une part, cela éliminerait le système actuel d'énumération en réduisant la période de temps nécessaire à la machine électorale, soit de 60 à 30 jours environ. J'ai découvert que le public est souvent très fatigué de la campagne électorale longtemps avant la fin. Quelle que soit la réaction du public, cela ne peut pas se comparer à la fatigue physique et intellectuelle des chefs de partis, leurs auxiliaires, des candidats et de tous ceux qui travaillent aux élections pendant cette longue période. J'ai souvent pensé que certaines règles de la Société protectrice des animaux devraient être appliquées aux personnes qui sont impliquées dans une campagne politique.

Deuxièmement, l'énumération et ses sauvegardes inhérentes pourraient permettre les votes des absents ou le vote par courrier, ainsi le personnel des Forces armées, le personnel gouvernemental, les étudiants et les invalides pourraient faire appel à l'une ou l'autre de ces méthodes, ce qui corrigerait les erreurs du passé. Il est intéressant de remarquer qu'aux élections de 1966 en Australie, environ 10 p. 100 des électeurs se sont servis de ces moyens, du vote que ce soit des absents ou du vote par courrier.

Je sais que la question du coût a été soulevée au rang des désavantages. Je crois que M. Castonguay l'a évalué à environ 44 millions de dollars pour une période de 4 ans, mais le coût de l'énumération actuelle serait éliminé, tout comme le salaire de centaines d'employés occasionnels qu'exige le système actuel. Ensuite, par une série de modifications relativement peu importantes et peut-être pourrions-nous discuter de cette question lors de la conférence fédérale-provinciale, les règlements fédéraux et provinciaux concernant l'âge de l'électeur, la résidence et la limite des districts électoraux pourraient être uniformisés, ce qui permettrait d'utiliser les bureaux de votation aux deux niveaux de gouvernement et d'éliminer les coûts de l'énumération provinciale.

Toutefois, comme je l'ai dit précédemment, il faut tenir compte non seulement de la question du coût, mais surtout du travail et de la fatigue des personnes sur lesquelles retombe le poids de la campagne.

Puis, il y a aussi peut-être la difficulté de tenir à jour un système de ce genre. Je pense que M. Castonguay a dit qu'à son avis, environ 25 p. 100 des électeurs du Canada changeaient tous les ans de statut, ce qui nécessi-which would necessitate approximately 2,500,000 changes on the rolls if the Australian system or something similar to it were to apply here.

[Texte]

In dismissing this question with computer analysts and people involved in the whole question of data processing, it has been suggested to me that in this era of such astonishing electronic advancement systems can be developed to cope with our highly mobile population and the electoral changes that would be necessary. I know that it was cited that we did try some comparable system, a kind of permanent voters' list back in the mid-nineteen-thirties and that it was not successful. But I think one would be hard put to compare the two periods, with the technology now available to cope with the necessary changes.

• 1145

A question was also raised in your earlier discussions about the time factor—whether or not a period of 30 or 35 days would be sufficient to allow an election to be run in this country. Well, the Commissioner did say that it could be done, from a practical point of view, by those people handling the election machinery, but I think some objection was raised as to whether or not parties in fact would be able to cope with this.

If I may just revert to a position as a political spokesman, I would suggest that perhaps this is what parties need to force them to focus not only their attention in a limited period during an election campaign but it would also force them to act in a more efficient and more effective way as political educators between elections. In this way they would be fulfilling more of a role, a role which is necessarily theirs, which they might not be able to carry out at the present time if, in fact, they did not have this latitude which they presently have in a 60-day campaign.

There are just one or two other points which I would like to mention before you question me. I earlier had touched upon the fact that in the recognition of parties as legal entities would be included the acceptance of the fact that the party name would be put on the ballot. In fact, recognition of the legal status of political parties paves the way for inclusion of the candidate's party affiliation on the ballot.

Numerous instances I think, can be cited where substantial sums of money have been spent in an effort to identify the candidate with his party. The fact that such expenditerait environ 2,500,000 changements à ces listes, en supposant que l'on adopte le système australien ou quelque système semblable.

[Interprétation]

En discutant de cette question avec des analystes en ordination, et des personnes qui s'occupent du traitement électronique des données, on m'a laissé entendre que dans ce domaine où les progrès techniques sont si extraordinaires, on peut arriver à trouver un système qui tienne compte de la haute mobilité de nos gens et des changements électoraux qui s'imposeraient. Je sais que l'on a avancé que nous avons mis à l'épreuve un système semblable au genre de liste permanente des électeurs dans les années '30 et que cela n'avait pas réussi, mais je crois qu'on ne peut guère comparer ces deux périodes, compte tenu des progrès actuels de la technologie dont nous disposons pour nous adapter aux changements qui ont lieu.

Il y a aussi le facteur temps qui a été soulevé au cours des discussions préalables à savoir si une période de 30 à 35 jours serait suffisante pour mener à une élection au Canada. Eh bien! le commissaire a dit que cela pourrait être fait, d'un point de vue pratique, par les personnes préposées à l'élection, mais je pense que l'on a soulevé une objection sur la possibilité pour les partis de s'y soumettre.

Pour parler à nouveau comme politicien, je dirais que c'est peut-être là ce dont les partis ont besoin pour consacrer toute leur attention à la période limitée des élections, mais aussi pour devenir avec plus d'efficacité des éducateurs politiques entre les élections. De cette façon, ils rempliraient le rôle qu'ils ne peuvent peut-être pas remplir actuellement à cause des 60 jours de campagne électorale mis à leur disposition.

Il y a encore un ou deux points que j'aimerais mentionner avant de passer aux questions. J'avais fait état tout à l'heure qu'en reconnaissant les partis politiques en tant qu'entités juridiques, on accepterait le fait que le nom du parti figurerait sur le bulletin de vote. En fait, la reconnaissance du statut juridique des partis politiques a pour conséquence d'inscrire le nom du parti du candidat sur le bulletin de vote.

On peut donner de nombreux exemples, je pense, de sommes substantielles d'argent qui ont été dépensées pour attacher le nom du candidat à un parti. Que ces dépenses n'aient tures have not always achieved their goal is attested to by the fact that many voters seek assistance at the pool in relating candidates to parties. Party affiliation on the ballot would obviate such queries. The frequent mistakes made by the voters who, in the privacy of the poll, are unable to remember the name of their party's candidate and gamble wildly when placing their "X" would be eliminated, as would the confusion caused by candidates with similar names.

[Text]

And finally, I think the question of voting age may in fact already—I am not sure—have been determined elsewhere. However, I would say that at the present time our provincial and federal jurisdictions exhibit an ambivalent approach to the age at which persons are eligible to vote. In the federal field it is 21; in B.C. it is 19; in Alberta it is 19; in Saskatchewan it is 18; in Manitoba legislation is now before the House to reduce the age to 18; in Ontario the Premier indicated recently that legislation might be forthcoming to reduce the age to 18; in Quebec it is 18; in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia it is 21; in Prince Edward Island it is 18; and in Newfoundland it is 19.

This is one of the matters in which it seems to me federal and provincial agreement could be easily forthcoming. I would just like to make the point that coming from a full-time position where most of the decisions are now being made by students, I have long since passed the point where I think the voting age should be reduced to 18. When I see the manner in which students are in fact participating in universities, in committees, on decision-making boards and handling themselves so capably, I would say that we should be looking to these people and encouraging them in the decision-making processes in the country at large. Thank you very much.

• 1150

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Miss MacDonald. As I said earlier, Miss MacDonald is in a position to answer questions on any particular point raised. Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would like to ask a question, Mr. Chairman, not because it is the most important matter Miss MacDonald has dealt with but because it is the last one.

[Interpretation]

pas toujours entraîné de résultat est démontré par le fait que de nombreux électeurs sont obligés de demander des renseignements dans leur bureau de votation pour savoir à quel parti le candidat appartient. En mettant le nom du parti sur le bulletin de vote, on éviterait de telles questions. L'erreur fréquente du votant dans l'isoloir parce que celui-ci a oublié le nom du candidat de son parti et essaie vainement de se rappeler le nom pour apposer son "X" serait évitée ainsi que la confusion qui résulte des noms similaires des candidats.

Et, en fin de compte, pour parler de l'âge du votant question qui a peut-être déjà été traitée ailleurs je n'en suis pas sûr. Toutefois je dirais qu'actuellement les compétences provinciales et fédérale ont une attitude ambivalente sur l'âge de la personne qui aurait le droit de voter. Au fédéral, c'est 21 ans, en Colombie-Britannique, 19 ans, en Alberta, 19 ans et en Saskatchewan, 18 ans. Au Manitoba on demande actuellement à la Chambre de réduire l'âge à 18 ans. En Ontario, le premier ministre a dit récemment qu'il y aurait probablement une réduction à 18 ans; au Québec, l'âge est fixé à 18 ans; au Nouveau-Brunswick et en Nouvelle Écosse, à 21 ans; dans l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, à 18 ans; et à Terre-Neuve, à 19 ans.

Je crois qu'on pourrait certainement se mettre d'accord au fédéral et au provincial à ce sujet-là. Étant donné son travail à plein temps dans un endroit où la plupart des décisions sont prises actuellement par des étudiants, il y a longtemps que, pour ma part, j'ai accepté l'idée de fixer l'âge du votant à 18 ans. Lorsque je vois la façon admirable dont les étudiants participent en fait dans les universités, aux comités, aux conseils où se prennent les décisions et la façon dont ils se comportent, je dirais que nous devons leur faire confiance et les encourager à participer à la prise de décisions au pays. Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Merci beaucoup, M^{lle} MacDonald. Comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, M^{lle} MacDonald est en mesure de répondre aux questions relatives aux différents points qui ont été soulevés. Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: J'aimerais poser une question non pas parce qu'il s'agit du sujet le plus important dont ait traité M^{lle} MacDonald, mais parce que c'est le dernier.

[Texte]

You have no doubt read the excellent report of the United Kingdom committee which looked into the whole question of age of majority.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Macquarrie: We have, through many of our election acts, an age for voting and a higher age for candidates and the lawyers have fun on this. After your careful study, are you of the opinion that it would be a good idea to have the age of voting and the age to qualify as a candidate the same?

Miss MacDonald: Yes, I am. In Britain the Committee on the Age of Majority under Mr. Justice Latey has in fact recommended, and I believe legislation is under way, to reduce the age of majority to 18. I think that we should be consistent within the context of all these discussions and I would set the age at 18. I would recommend the age of 18.

Mr. Macquarrie: I agree with you. Do you know of a Canadian jurisdiction which has lowered the candidacy eligibility?

Miss MacDonald: No, I do not. At least I am unaware that any has.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you. The candidate's age is something I hope we will be taking up in due course.

The Chairman: Mr. Hamel may be able to elaborate on the question of age.

Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Only Quebec, P.E.I. and Newfoundland have retained 21 as the age of candidates while dropping the age of the electors. In all other provinces, the age to be a candidate is the same as the age to be an elector because one of the qualifications of the candidate is to be a qualified elector.

Mr. Macquarrie: The three western provinces are the ones?

Mr. Hamel: That is correct. Well, the four western provinces because Manitoba has done the same recently.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, that has just happened lately. That is disturbing because I used to think that wise men came from the east.

The Chairman: Miss MacDonald, on this question of the voting age, do you draw the conclusion that the youth may vote at 18 because you see them acting so capably as part of the university process?

[Interprétation]

Vous avez certainement lu l'excellent rapport du Comité du Royaume-Uni qui s'est penché sur la question de l'âge de la majorité.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Macquarrie: Dans plusieurs de nos lois sur les élections, il y a une catégorie d'âge pour les votants et une autre plus élevée pour les candidats, ce qui amuse les avocats. Après avoir soigneusement étudié la question, êtes-vous d'avis que l'âge des votants devrait être le même que celui des candidats?

Mlle MacDonald: Oui. En Grande-Bretagne, le Comité sur l'âge de la majorité présidé par le juge Latey a en fait recommandé que l'on réduise l'âge de la majorité à dix-huit ans, et je crois que des mesures législatives sont en voie d'être prises à cet égard. Je crois que compte tenu de toutes ces discussions, l'âge devrait être fixé à dix-huit.

M. Macquarrie: J'en conviens. Connaissez-vous une autorité canadienne qui ait abaissé l'âge d'admissibilité des candidats?

Mlle MacDonald: Je n'en connais pas. Tout au moins, j'ignore si on l'a fait.

M. Macquarrie: Merci. J'espère que l'on pourra aborder en temps opportun la question de l'âge des candidats.

Le président: Monsieur Hamel pourrait ajouter quelques commentaires sur le sujet.

M. Jean-Marc Hamel (Directeur général des élections): Seules les provinces de Québec, de Terre-Neuve, et l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard ont gardé 21 ans comme étant l'âge des candidats tout en baissant l'âge du votant. Dans les autres provinces, l'âge des candidats est le même que celui du votant car une des conditions d'éligibilité d'un candidat est celle d'être habile à voter.

M. Macquarrie: Dans les trois provinces de l'Ouest?

M. Hamel: C'est exact. Je dirais que les quatre provinces de l'Ouest, car le Manitoba aussi a décidé tout récemment de faire la même chose.

M. Macquarrie: Oui, cela s'est produit récemment. C'est étonnant parce que j'ai toujours cru que les sages venaient du Levant.

Le président: M^{lle} MacDonald, en ce qui concerne l'âge du votant, est-ce que vous tirez la conclusion que les jeunes peuvent voter à dix-huit ans parce que vous les voyez agir avec compétence dans le processus universitaire?

[Text]

Miss MacDonald: I see them acting as capably as some at the age of 60. I do not limit it necessarily to university, though I have had some experience in seeing them on committees and, in fact, chairing committees on which the principal of the university has sat as a member. I have been extremely impressed by the way in which, given responsibility, they handle responsibility.

• 1155

The Chairman: Mr. Lefebvre.

Mr. Lefebvre: In your former experience as a high official of the Conservative Party—you may still be—I am not too sure...

Miss MacDonald: Neither am I.

Mr. Lefebvre: You are not too sure? You know, you are giving your testimony in the Liberal caucus room. I hope you know that.

You mentioned candidates' names as well as party affiliations. Do you feel, from your past experience, that there were candidates of your party who might have been defeated because the party name was not on the ballot? You mentioned a lot of confusion in some constituencies because of the fact that the names of the party were not on the ballot.

Miss MacDonald: No. I cannot cite any particular instance where I feel this has happened. Again I will not say that it may not in any party, but my point was really not in doing it from the point of view of either the party or the candidate but from the point of view of convenience to the elector, who I feel sometimes has his vote spoiled or his franchise ruined by the fact that he or she is not sure, when the moment of truth comes, whom he is voting for.

Mr. Lefebvre: I am quite in favour of this. I just wanted to know your opinion on it. Thank you.

The Chairman: Miss MacDonald, you talked about legal recognition of parties and you referred to some definitions of parties in the Quebec law and the national broadcasting system. Have you yourself any definition of what could or should be a party?

Miss MacDonald: Well, in the first place, it has to be slightly different from a provincial approach. The Quebec act, and I believe the Nova Scotia, base it on the number of candi-

[Interpretation]

Mlle MacDonald: Je vois qu'ils agissent avec autant d'aptitudes que des gens de 60 ans. Je ne limite pas cela au domaine universitaire bien que j'aie déjà vu des jeunes au sein de comité, et même présider des comités alors que le président de l'université y siégeait à titre de membre. J'ai été extrêmement impressionné par leur façon d'agir. Quand on leur donne une responsabilité, ils savent l'assumer.

Le président: Monsieur Lefebvre.

M. Lefebvre: Votre expérience passée en tant que haut fonctionnaire du parti conservateur, vous l'êtes encore peut-être, je n'en suis pas sûr.

Mlle MacDonald: Non je ne le suis pas.

M. Lefebvre: Vous n'en êtes pas sûre? Vous savez qu'en ce moment vous témoignez. J'espère que vous le savez dans la salle du caucus libéral. Vous avez mentionné des noms de candidat ainsi que leur affiliation aux partis. D'après votre expérience passée, croyez-vous que des députés de votre parti auraient pu être défaits parce que le nom du parti ne figurait pas sur le bulletin de vote? Vous avez mentionné la confusion qui existait dans certaines circonscriptions parce que les noms des partis ne figuraient pas sur les bulletins de vote.

Mlle MacDonald: Non. Je ne peux pas citer de cas particuliers où cela s'est produit. Je ne veux pas dire que cela ne s'est pas produit pour un parti, mais je parlais moins au point de vue du parti ou du candidat que de la commodité que cela représentait pour l'électeur qui, souvent, voit son vote, ou son droit de vote annulé parce que, le moment venu, il ne sait plus pour quel candidat il est en train de voter.

M. Lefebvre: Je suis tout à fait de cet avis, mais je voulais simplement avoir votre opinion à ce sujet. Merci.

Le président: Mademoiselle MacDonald, vous avez parlé de la reconnaissance juridique des partis, et vous vous êtes reportée à certaines définitions des partis dans la loi du Québec et au réseau de radiodiffusion canadien. Pouvez-vous nous dire ce qu'un parti pourrait ou devrait être, selon vous?

Mlle MacDonald: En premier lieu, il faut que ce soit quelque peu différent de l'optique provinciale. La loi du Québec, et je crois qu'il en est de même pour la Nouvelle-Écosse, est dates but I think we have to remember that what we are talking about here is a national party and that it must be able to make some claim to national scope. It could not be "The Party of Maritime Union", for instance. It must have some basis which could claim for it national prominence. This might mean 15 per cent of the popular vote throughout the country, even though it were mainly in certain areas.

[Texte]

Suppose that you had one which was perhaps oriented toward the major cities or oriented to some particular group but nevertheless could claim that much of the popular vote. Then it would have every right. Fifteen per cent is just a figure I pulled out. I think that 5 per cent would be too small to say that it was national though I really have not come to any definitive view of this. I think that it also must run a certain number of candidates. I do not think that you could put up, say, five candidates in various parts of the country and group them together under a party label and claim that they are a national party and therefore should have all the benefits that I go on to cite through subsidization and so on.

The Chairman: Mr. Duquet.

•1200

Mr. Duquet: Miss MacDonald, you listed a few conditions which would qualify a party as a national party.

Miss MacDonald: Yes. This is the way in fact, for broadcasting purposes, that the CBC defines a national party.

Mr. Duquet: Among such conditions I think you said that a party should field candidates in three provinces.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Duquet: What would be your evaluation of a party which, for instance, fielded 25 or 30 candidates, all in the one province, with just a token showing in two other provinces?

Miss MacDonald: You know, what I was quoting was the CBC's understanding of what a national party was. My own feeling is that it should be tied to one of two things, or perhaps jointly the percentage of votes it got at the last election or the number of candidates it fields in the current election, or a combination of these two.

Mr. Duquet: Would you go as far as mentioning a minimum as to the number of votes?

[Interprétation]

fondée sur le nombre de candidats, mais je crois qu'il faut se souvenir que nous parlons d'un parti national qui doit pouvoir prétendre à une envergure nationale. Cela ne pourrait être le parti de l'union des Maritimes, par exemple. Il faut une base pour prétendre à une importance nationale. Cela peut représenter, par exemple, 15 p. 100 du vote populaire au pays, même si ce n'est concentré que dans certaines régions.

Supposons que vous ayez un parti orienté vers les villes principales ou vers un groupe particulier, mais qui, néanmoins, recueillerait autant de votes populaires. C'est alors qu'il aurait tous les droits. Je crois que 5 p. 100 constituerait une proportion bien minime pour prétendre à une importance nationale, bien que je ne sois pas arrivé à une conclusion à ce sujet. Il faut aussi que ce parti ait un certain nombre de candidats. Vous ne pouvez pas tout simplement présenter cinq candidats dans diverses parties du pays, et parler d'un parti national, et par conséquent, prétendre à tous les droits et à tous les avantages, comme les subventions et autres.

Le président: Monsieur Duquet.

M. Duquet: Mademoiselle MacDonald, vous avez indiqué quelques conditions qui feraient d'un parti un parti national.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui. Aux fins de la radio-diffusion, c'est ainsi que Radio-Canada définit un parti national.

M. Duquet: Vous avez dit que pour être un parti national, un parti doit présenter des candidats dans trois provinces.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Duquet: Quelle serait votre évaluation d'un parti, qui par exemple présenterait 25 ou 30 candidats dans une province, et juste quelques-uns dans deux autres provinces?

Mlle MacDonald: Vous savez, je parlais de la façon dont Radio-Canada voyait un parti national. Mais en ce qui me concerne, je pense que cela doit être relié à une de deux choses, ou peut-être aux deux aspects ensemble, c'est-à-dire au pourcentage du vote populaire à la dernière élection ou au nombre de candidats qu'il présente à l'élection courante, ou aux deux à la fois.

M. Duquet: Iriez-vous jusqu'à stipuler des minimums quant au nombre de votes requis?

[Text]

Miss MacDonald: Yes. I had mentioned 15 per cent and I would be prepared to say 10 per cent, but I do not think I would agree that a party which gets 5 per cent of the vote is a national party. On the other hand, suppose that a party in Ontario, like the U.F.O., ran a sizeable number of candidates even though it might not have had any vote at all in the previous election, I think in such a case it would have to be considered as a national party for purposes of both meeting the obligations and receiving the benefits.

Mr. Duquet: Thank you.

The Chairman: Could you allow me to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Duquet: Yes.

The Chairman: But if a new party organized how could one judge the growth of such a party before an election?

Miss MacDonald: This is why I say that recognition might be based on a requirement that the party must field either a specified number of candidates in any current election or have obtained a specified percentage of votes in the preceding election, or a combination of both. But I think if a group is able to get together, field and organize around a sizeable number of candidates it does in fact merit consideration. I do not think that this can be done just because a group of people think that they are going to go out and organize a party overnight—I just do not believe from practical experience that that sort of thing can be brought about. And the benefits that I go on to cite with regard to what candidates would receive—I go back to this question of finance—is all predicated on what they subsequently receive in the way of ballots at the polls. In fact, you might get the very odd case where a party is able to field 50 candidates and pay out a sizeable amount of election expenditures. But if they do not get the percentage of votes that I cite then they are not going to get any of this back, financially. So I think that anybody who would take a gamble on this is going to make sure that they are a pretty sure bet to attract electoral support before they get into it.

• 1205

The Chairman: Thank you. Mr. Alkenbrack.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I would like to ask Miss MacDonald a question regarding national party recognition. I would like to have her

[Interpretation]

Mlle MacDonald: Oui, j'avais mentionné quelque chose comme 15 p. 100. J'irais peut-être jusqu'à accepter 10 p. 100, mais je ne crois pas qu'un parti qui reçoit uniquement 5 p. 100 des votes puisse être reconnu comme étant un parti national. D'autre part, supposez qu'un parti en Ontario comme les « Fermiers unis de l'Ontario » ait présenté un grand nombre de candidats, même s'il n'avait pas eu de vote à l'élection précédente, je pense que dans ce cas, ce parti devrait être reconnu comme étant un parti national, pour avoir rempli les conditions et bénéficié des avantages.

M. Duquet: Merci.

Le président: Me permettez-vous une question complémentaire?

M. Duquet: Oui.

Le président: S'il s'agit d'un nouveau parti, comment pouvez-vous juger la valeur de ce parti, avant l'élection?

Mlle MacDonald: C'est la raison pour laquelle je soutiens que la reconnaissance d'un tel parti pourrait se fonder sur la nécessité pour ce parti de présenter un certain nombre de candidats dans toute élection courante, ou d'avoir gagné un certain pourcentage du vote à l'élection précédente ou une combinaison des deux. Mais si un nouveau parti présente un nombre suffisant de candidats, il mérite une considération. Je ne crois pas que l'on doive s'y fier simplement parce qu'un groupe de personnes décide de former un parti du jour au lendemain; l'expérience me dit que ce genre de choses ne peut donner de résultat. Les avantages que retireraient les candidats, et je reviens à la question financière, sont prévus dans ce qu'ils obtiendront subséquentement sous forme de bulletin de vote au scrutin. En fait, il arrive parfois qu'un parti soit en mesure de présenter 50 candidats et dépense de fortes sommes d'argent aux élections, mais s'ils n'obtiennent pas le pourcentage de voix que je préconise, ils ne pourront rien récupérer, au point de vue financier. Quelqu'un qui prendrait un tel risque ferait en sorte que ses candidats soient assez sûrs d'attirer un appui électoral avant de s'y lancer.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Alkenbrack.

M. Alkenbrack: J'aimerais poser à M^{lle} MacDonald une question concernant la reconnaissance d'un parti au niveau national. Je comment on the fact that we already have a very unsatisfactory condition now brought about by this government or its immediate predecessor, the same party, where we recognize parties which, I am sure, have obtained less than 5 per cent of the national vote. I believe that parliamentary recognition is given if you have 12 members. Is that not right, Mr. Chairman?

[Texte]

The Chairman: For the leader of any such party to receive an additional allowance.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Alkenbrack: And he is subsidized by the public purse?

The Chairman: In a sense, yes.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I wonder if the electoral act was amended to do that? That is another question I would like to ask.

Miss MacDonald: That is the House of Commons Act; that is not...

Mr. Lefebvre: That is a parliamentary group.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, it is the House of Commons, but the House of Commons represents the electors of Canada.

Miss MacDonald: But it is not part of the Canada Elections Act though. My point was that in order to get those 12 people there there had to be a great many more candidates than that running and that is what in fact, I say, entitles it to recognition under the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have heard a lot of pros and cons regarding party affiliation on the ballot. Could this not be an option of the candidate? At every election just before the ballots are printed, the candidates are asked in what manner they want their names to appear upon the ballot and an option is given the candidate in that regard. He is given an option as to his occupation nomenclature. Could he not be given the option, party-wise, as well?

I ask that question because the democratic process still evolves from the individual—the voter?

Miss MacDonald: Of course, what I was saying was that sometimes we take the choice away because the person does not really voudrais connaître son point de vue sur le fait que ce gouvernement ou son prédécesseur immédiat sont la cause d'une situation peu satisfaisante à l'heure actuelle, où nous reconnaissons des partis qui j'en suis certain, avaient obtenu moins de 5 p. 100 du vote national. Je crois que la reconnaissance parlementaire est accordée aux partis qui ont 12 députés. Est-ce exact monsieur le président?

[Interprétation]

Le président: Le chef d'un tel parti reçoit une allocation supplémentaire.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Alkenbrack: Subventionnée par le trésor public?

Le président: Dans un certain sens, oui.

M. Alkenbrack: Je me demande si la loi électorale a été amendée à cet effet? C'est une autre question que je voudrais poser.

Mlle MacDonald: Oh, il s'agit de la Loi sur la Chambre des communes.

M. Lefebvre: C'est un groupe parlementaire.

M. Alkenbrack: Oui, c'est la Chambre des communes, mais n'oubliez pas que cette institution représente les électeurs du Canada.

Mlle MacDonald: Mais cela n'est pas inscrit dans la Loi électorale du Canada. Je veux dire que pour en faire élire 12 il faut que le nombre des candidats soit beaucoup plus élevé. C'est justement le fait de présenter un grand nombre de candidats qui est l'une des normes qui permettraient à un parti de se faire reconnaître en vertu de la Loi électorale du Canada.

M. Alkenbrack: J'ai entendu beaucoup de pour et de contre en ce qui concerne l'inscription de l'affiliation d'un parti sur le bulletin de vote. Est-ce que le candidat ne pourrait pas choisir de lui-même l'inscription qu'il veut faire porter sur le bulletin? A chacune des élections, juste avant l'impression des bulletins, on demande aux candidats s'ils veulent avoir leur nom et prénom inscrits au complet. Comment veulent-ils que leur nom soit inscrit sur le bulletin de vote? On leur permet d'y inscrire la nomenclature de leur profession. Ne pourrait-on pas également leur donner la même option en ce qui concerne l'inscription du nom du parti? Je pose cette question parce que le processus démocratique découle de l'individu, c'est-à-dire du votant.

Mlle MacDonald: Évidemment, ce que je disais, c'est que parfois, nous devons enlever ce choix, parce que la personne ne se rappelle recall, is excited or gets upset. It is very easy in a rural riding, because everyone knows everyone else and so on, but in the fast-changing metropolitan or urban ridings this does become a problem.

[Text]

• 1210

People may only have been in a riding perhaps six months or five months and have not had a chance to get to know the incumbent or the new candidates. It is something which is now so highly mobile. The other thing is that we have to face up to certain practices which have taken place in the past where people have been put on ballots whose names are absolutely identical and this has caused confusion and upset. It is these sorts of practices and inconveniences which I think party affiliation on the ballot would serve to eliminate.

Mr. Duquet: Is it not also a fact that some candidates will be elected on the leader's popularity rather than on their own, and having the affiliation of the party on the ballot may work for any party?

Miss MacDonald: Yes. They identify that party more with the leader than they do with the candidate.

Mr. Duquet: This comes with your argument that some of the candidates may not be very well known to new-comers in the riding or something like that.

Miss MacDonald: But the party may.

Mr. Duquet: Then it may help.

Miss MacDonald: My premise throughout the whole paper was the fact that people who are in fact political activists must begin to be more aware than they have given indication in the past that the political party system as such is under attack and they have to do everything they can to strengthen it if they are going to make sure that it remains as it is now—an essential part of the democratic process.

Mr. Duquet: I agree with that.

The Chairman: Mr. Alkenbrack.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I would like to discuss that first question a little further. It is the opinion of many people, many members of this Commons and many electors, many thousands of electors in Canada that recognition of these parties in the Commons without the pas exactement de tous les éléments dont elle a besoin au moment du vote. C'est facile, dans les comtés ruraux parce que tout le monde se connaît, mais dans les régions urbaines, cela constitue un problème.

[Interpretation]

Les gens n'habitent parfois que 5 ou 6 mois dans une circonscription et ne connaissent pas les candidats ou le titulaire. La population est tellement mobile que cela cause des problèmes presque insurmontables. D'autre part, il nous faut tenir compte de certaines situations où des noms absolument identiques ont été inscrits sur les bulletins de vote, ce qui a provoqué une certaine confusion. Je crois que l'inscription du nom du parti sur le bulletin de vote aiderait à régler ce problème.

M. Duquet: N'est-ce pas également un fait établi que certains candidats seront élus en fonction de la popularité du chef du parti plutôt qu'en vertu de leurs propres qualités, de sorte que le fait d'inscrire ainsi le nom du parti sur le bulletin de vote avantagerait le parti?

Mlle MacDonald: Oui. Ils identifient ce parti, plus en fonction du chef que du candidat.

M. Duquet: Ceci est en accord avec votre point de vue, à savoir que certains candidats peuvent être des inconnus ou des nouveaux venus.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui, mais le parti est connu.

M. Duquet: Alors c'est utile.

Mlle MacDonald: J'ai traité de cela dans le document mentionné au début de la séance. Les activistes politiques doivent se rendre compte plus qu'ils ne l'ont fait dans le passé que le système des partis politiques comme tels est maintenant soumis à des attaques violentes, et ils doivent tout faire pour le renforcer, s'ils veulent que les choses restent telles qu'elles sont présentement, un important élément du processus démocratique.

M. Duquet: J'en conviens.

Le président: Monsieur Alkenbrack.

M. Alkenbrack: J'aimerais approfondir cette question. De l'avis de bien des gens, de bien des députés de la Chambre et de milliers d'électeurs au Canada, la reconnaissance de ces partis à la Chambre des communes sans amender la loi électorale, ce qui veut dire la amendment of the electoral act—and recognition of parties willy-nilly throughout the country for electoral purposes is not a good move because you would have them springing up like mushrooms and saying they are the B.C. Coast party or the Maritime party or the Arctic party and so on. You would have them springing up automatically, all demanding assistance from the public purse.

[Texte]

Miss MacDonald: Well, of course, if the principle were ever accepted, it would require a fair amount of study and working out and negotiation among the present parties and their feelings as to the best possible solution. In seeking to recognize or to legalize the term “political parties” within the Canada Elections Act, what followed from there in my proposals was the disclosure of party funds, the limitation of the amounts that might be spent on subsidization to a degree from the public purse through the use of the public airwaves and so on.

These things will in the long run serve to enhance the image of the political party with the general public and thereby strengthen our whole system, and I think that the chance of parties just springing up—and mind you I recognize that there is a certain danger in this—but I think the benefits to be derived far outweigh the dangers and that in devising legislation and in writing the regulations they can be done carefully enough so as to eliminate the abuses that might otherwise be brought under this.

• 1215

I think that very definitely in seeking to define what a national political party is one must keep in mind that there are dangers and that there are ways in which this could be abused. If you are aware of this when it is defined, then it will be looked after.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have one more question, Mr. Chairman. I did not hear Miss MacDonald say just how far—probably she discreetly did not mention how far her paper would recommend that individual candidates be subsidized.

Miss MacDonald: No, I did not go into that but I certainly did in the paper. My whole premise in this is that with the question of campaign expenditures, whether they are at the national level or at the candidate level, the area in which costs are growing most quickly is in the whole field of the media. For instance, to give you an idea of how they are growing, in national broadcasting in the 1965 election campaign, the total costs to political parties for paid time on private radio and reconnaissance, bon gré, mal gré, des partis dans tout le Canada aux fins électorales, n'est pas à conseiller car vous aurez des partis qui pousseront comme des champignons et se donneront comme nom «le parti de la côte Ouest», ou le «parti des Maritimes» ou le «parti de l'Arctique», etc... Ils se multiplieront du jour au lendemain et demanderont de l'aide provenant des deniers publics.

[Interprétation]

Mlle MacDonald: Si le principe était accepté, cela demanderait une étude assez étendue. Il faudrait qu'il y ait des négociations entre les partis actuels pour tenter de déterminer quelle serait la solution idéale au problème. En essayant de reconnaître ou de légaliser le terme «partis politiques» dans le cadre de la Loi électorale du Canada, je voulais parler de la divulgation des fonds du parti, de la limitation des sommes qui pourraient être affectées à la subvention à même les fonds publics par l'utilisation de la radiodiffusion, etc.

Ces facteurs, à la longue, amélioreront l'image des partis politiques que se fait le public en général, et du fait même raffermiront tout notre système. Je pense que les avantages que pourraient en tirer les nouveaux partis qui se forment sont bien plus grands que les risques à courir et que l'élaboration des mesures législatives et des règlements peut être faite assez soigneusement afin d'éliminer les abus qui pourraient se produire.

Je suis persuadée qu'en essayant de déterminer la définition d'un parti politique, il faut se rappeler que l'on court des risques et qu'il peut y avoir des gens qui abuseront de la situation. Si, à ce moment-là, on en tient compte, le problème se réglera de lui-même.

M. Alkenbrack: Me permettez-vous une autre question, monsieur le président? M^{lle} MacDonald ne nous a pas dit dans quelle mesure elle recommandait que des candidats particuliers seraient subventionnés?

Mlle MacDonald: Non, je n'en ai pas parlé mais j'ai traité de cette question dans le document. Je me fonde, dans ces cas-ci, sur l'hypothèse que les dépenses pour la campagne électorale au niveau national ou au niveau du candidat augmenteront le plus rapidement dans le domaine de l'information. Pour vous donner une idée de l'augmentation des dépenses dans l'utilisation des organes de diffusion à l'échelle nationale, au cours de l'élection de 1965, le coût total pour le temps réservé par television stations amounted to $1,211,963.91. By 1968 this figure had climbed to $1,425,528.65. Now that is at the national level for paid time, and this is the area in which I would recommend subsidization at the national level.

[Text]

Mr. Alkenbrack : TV and radio?

Miss MacDonald: TV and radio. In fact what I say in my paper is that national political parties should be prohibited from purchasing any radio or television time on the private networks; that they will be given free time by the private network in the same way they are now by the public network. You know that you cannot buy time on the CBC. Then at the candidate level, the same thing, it seems to me, is happening when I look at the campaign costs of individual candidates; that the greatest growth of expenditure is in this field of the media.

So what I propose is that candidates be allowed to incur expenses of not more than 15 cents per elector in the print and broadcast media, including television, radio, film production, newspapers, periodicals, posters, billboards, pamphlets and election gimmicks; in that whole field, that the individual candidate be tied to the number of electors in his riding and then allowed to spend not more than 15 cents per elector and that on presentation of official receipts after the election, any candidate who receives at least 15 per cent of the votes cast would be entitled to reimbursement of a sum equal to five cents per elector towards media and advertising costs; also that on presentation of official receipts, each candidate would be reimbursed for postage costs of mailing two pieces of campaign literature to every elector in his constituency; and that "Vote At" cards, which are now a plethora, at least in urban ridings, instead of being distributed by the numerous candidates with resulting duplication of effort and costs, would become the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer and his officials.

So, these would be the ways in which you would be limited from spending more than a certain amount in the media field. You would be reimbursed a portion of that, one-third of it. You would also have two mailings looked after and the "Vote At" card would no longer be the responsibility of the candidate. It seems to me that these things would mitigate the cost to the candidate. What I was refer-les partis politiques auprès des stations privées de radio-télévision a atteint $1,211,963.91. En 1968, ce chiffre a grimpé à $1,425,528.65. Ceci c'est pour le temps payé à l'échelle nationale. C'est dans ce domaine que je recommanderais le versement de subsides au niveau national.

[Interpretation]

M. Alkenbrack: Parlez-vous de la télévision et de la radio?

Mlle MacDonald: Oui, télévision et radio. En fait, les partis politiques nationaux devraient se voir interdire l'achat de réclames à la radio et à la télévision privée. On leur donnera du temps gratuitement sur les réseaux privés comme cela se fait sur les réseaux public à l'heure actuelle. Vous savez très bien que vous ne pourrez acheter de la réclame à Radio-Canada. Au niveau du candidat, la même chose se produit, si l'on regarde le coût de la campagne pour chacun des candidats; on voit que la plus grosse augmentation des frais se produit dans le domaine de l'information.

Je propose donc que l'on permette aux candidats que des dépenses de 15 cents par électeur en ce qui concerne les organes de diffusion de masse, y compris la radio et la télévision, les journaux, les magazines, les périodiques, les annonces, les dépliants, les brochures; que le candidat soit lié au nombre d'électeurs dans sa circonscription et qu'il ne lui soit permis de dépenser que 15 cents pour chacun des électeurs dans sa circonscription; que sur présentation du compte officiel après les élections, tout candidat qui aura reçu 15 p. 100 des votes pourra se faire rembourser une somme égalant 5 cents par électeur pour l'utilisation des organes de diffusion; d'autre part, sur présentation d'un reçu officiel, chacun des candidats se fera rembourser les frais d'affranchissement pour documentation officielle composée de deux pièces envoyées à chaque électeur dans sa circonscription; et que les cartes «Votez à» qui sont envoyées en grand nombre, du moins dans les circonscriptions urbaines, devienne la responsabilité du directeur général des élections et des fonctionnaires, au lieu d'être distribuées individuellement par les nombreux candidats, ce qui éviterait une double dépense d'effort et de fonds.

Ce serait une façon de limiter les dépenses dans le domaine des organes d'information. Le candidat pourrait s'en faire rembourser une partie, le tiers disons, ainsi que les frais de deux communications à chaque électeur; de plus, il n'aurait plus à s'occuper de la carte «Votez à». Cela diminuerait les frais du candidat. Selon moi, le système actuel est très injuste parce que les dépenses électorales sont ring to in the paper was the fact that I consider the present system highly inequitable in that the election cost, that is, the cost of running our democratic system, is borne by the few rather than the many and it should be the other way around if we are all interested and involved in it.

[Texte]

I also feel that there are people in this country who would make excellent candidates, excellent members, and so on, but at present they are prohibited from doing this because of the current high costs of running elections. And so these are the...

Mr. Alkenbrack: The things you cite that could be subsidized do not include such things as hall rentals, and so on.

Miss MacDonald: No.

Mr. Alkenbrack: That is good. If a candidate rents a hall and gets a crowd before him in that hall and starts to talk about some things that some of the electors might not agree with, they would quickly try to shut him up because they would remind him that they are subsidizing him.

Miss MacDonald: In regard to subsidization, one of the things that concerns me again is the public impression of political parties and the fact that there is a great deal of mythology—I will admit that in some cases there is some basis for it—that political campaigns, whether at the national or the local level, are not always open and aboveboard with regard to financing and people have a very real suspicion of this. I am making recommendations in those areas which in fact are already in the public knowledge. Everything that is done in the media you can check on so that the possibility of evasion, or any of this type of thing which the public now suspects, is limited. In fact, it is done away with. So all of the things that I cite, in which a person would either be limited in their application of or reimbursed, are in those areas where the public is already knowledgeable and they are open to public inspection.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I am also going to ask a question or two about the party designation. I do not actually think it is the most important part of Miss MacDonald's presentation; I think what she said about absentee voting and the list is actually more fundamental in terms of function. However, since she is now in the ivory tower I think she should be asked to philosophize a bit.

[Interprétation]

supportées par la minorité et non la majorité. Ça devrait être le contraire, si nous sommes tous intéressés.

Je crois aussi que nombreux sont ceux qui feraient d'excellents candidats, d'excellents députés. Ces personnes ne peuvent se présenter à cause des frais élevés. Et ainsi...

M. Alkenbrack: On ne rembourserait cependant pas les frais de location des salles, etc...

Mlle MacDonald: Non.

M. Alkenbrack: C'est très bien. Si un candidat loue une salle, y réunit des électeurs et commence à leur parler de choses sur lesquelles ils ne sont pas d'accord, ceux-ci essaieront de le faire taire car ce sont eux qui le subventionnent.

Mlle MacDonald: Au sujet des subsides, ce qui m'inquiète, c'est l'impression que font sur le public les partis politiques et le fait qu'il y a beaucoup de mythes en cause, j'admets que dans certains cas il y a de bonnes raisons pour que les campagnes électorales au niveau national ou au niveau local ne soient pas toujours ouvertes et loyales en ce qui concerne leur financement. Les gens qui voient dépenser ces sommes folles regardent avec une réelle suspicion les partis politiques. Je présente des recommandations en ce moment, dans un domaine qui est déjà connu du public. Tout ce que vous pouvez faire dans ce domaine des moyens d'information peut être réglé, aussi les possibilités de fuite ou de ce genre de chose que soupçonne le public sont très limitées. En fait il n'y en a pas. Aussi lorsque je dis qu'une personne se verrait limitée dans ce qu'elle pourrait faire ou remboursée de ses dépenses, je parle des secteurs que le public connaît déjà et que le public peut actuellement inspecter.

M. Alkenbrack: Merci.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poser une ou deux questions sur l'identification du nom du parti sur les bulletins de vote. Je ne pense pas que ce soit la partie la plus importante de l'exposé de Mademoiselle MacDonald. Ce qu'elle a dit au sujet du vote des absents et de la liste électorale porte essentiellement sur l'aspect fonctionnel. Maintenant que mademoiselle MacDonald s'est

[Text]

Do you feel that this extension of the unofficial designation of people by parties—and the Chief Electoral Officer does it, he does it more in reference to the military voters too, he does it after when he gets his report out, and so on—that if this were officialized it would make for an increase in the rigidity of the party system? Can you conceptualize that it might be more difficult for me in the House of Commons if I wanted to shuffle off the coil of my political party? Do you think that this is an inhibitor? Does it allow for structuring in more rigidity in the party system? Did this go through your mind as you followed this?

• 1225

Miss MacDonald: Very much so because I think we have in fact already become politicized to this. I think that anyone who is in any way connected with the political party process is in fact locked into a hierarchical structure that all too few people are in any way willing to counteract—to use that famous phrase, the “countervailing force”, and I think that far more of this needs to be done in political parties, particularly at the moment—and this inhibits a lot of open discussion which should be carried on. I do not feel that putting political party names or affiliation, or any other sort of identification of the political party, is in any way going to make this any worse than it is at the moment. I do not see how it possibly can. However, I do not think what you are suggesting is altogether the proper approach. While I have some appreciation for the fact that there must be certain cohesion of views, and so on, we do not have the latitude, for instance, in Canada that there is in Britain to take a different stand with one's party, that in the party process we are not really encouraged to speak out, which I think could be just as advantageous as some people think the opposite.

What I am really saying is that I do not think by having party affiliation on the ballot that it is going to in any way structure or make more rigid the present system. What I think I am appealing for is a change of attitude in the minds of people engaged in a political process so that they realize the real parameters of the political party system and make use of them in a way that we have not done in the past.

[Interpretation]

installée dans sa tour d'ivoire elle devrait nous exposer ses idées.

Est-ce que vous pensez que cette désignation officielle des candidats par parti et le directeur général des élections le fait, dans le cas des militaires aussi, le fait après avoir fourni son rapport et ainsi de suite, si cette procédure était rendue officielle, pensez-vous que le système de partis en serait rendu plus rigide? Serait-il plus difficile par exemple pour moi, qui suis à la Chambre des communes, de me dépouiller de mon appartenance à mon parti politique? Pensez-vous qu'il s'agit là d'une mesure inhibitrice? Est-ce que vous pensez que ceci augmenterait la rigidité de la structure du parti? Avez-vous pensé à cela lorsque vous nous exposez votre point de vue là-dessus?

Mlle MacDonald: Oui, énormément, car je crois que d'un point de vue politique, nous sommes devenus en fait très conscients de ce qu'une personne qui appartient de quelque façon à une structure de parti politique est liée à une hiérarchie contre laquelle très peu de gens malheureusement voudraient s'élever. Pour utiliser l'expression célèbre de «force de neutralisation» et qu'une telle action devrait être plus fréquente au sein des partis politiques actuellement et ceci jugule bien des possibilités de discussions publiques qui devraient avoir lieu. Je ne pense pas qu'inscrire le nom du parti politique ou mentionner l'affiliation politique d'un candidat ou identifier d'une façon ou d'une autre le parti politique compliquera la tâche davantage qu'elle ne l'est actuellement. Je ne vois pas pourquoi il n'en serait pas ainsi. Toutefois, je ne pense pas que ce que vous proposez soit la bonne solution. Bien que je sois d'accord sur le fait que nous devons avoir une certaine cohésion dans nos points de vue, nous n'avons pas au Canada la latitude d'adopter comme en Grande-Bretagne une attitude différente de celle de notre parti. On ne nous encourage pas, dans le cadre du parti à exprimer nos opinions réellement ce qui je pense est aussi bien que l'attitude contraire.

Ce que je veux en fait dire, c'est que le fait d'inscrire sur le bulletin de vote le nom du parti ne changera rien à la rigidité du présent système. Ce que je demande réellement, c'est un changement de mentalité chez les gens qui s'occupent de politique, qu'on sache utiliser mieux que par le passé les vraies possibilités du système de parti politique.

[Texte]

Mr. Macquarrie: I am not really frightened of it. I was just wondering if perhaps by taking the official move that you are perhaps sewing the political label on rather than just sticking it on, as it is on now. It is pretty adhesive, I know. You did not think, when you were considering the ballots, of putting the party name on and not the candidate, as they did in the Weimer Republic?

Miss MacDonald: No, I had not really thought of that. I do not think I would go that far. With a name like MacDonald, I would want it to be known.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have one more question which is not quite so facetious as that one. Have you reflected upon the possibility, in terms of the media, radio and TV, of extending down where practicable from the national free time procedure to the constituency as a partial and helpful alleviation of this problem which you rightly say is becoming just too much.

Miss MacDonald: Yes, I did seriously consider this but I think that when we are looking at the number of radio, television, newspaper—the actual working of this during an election campaign—the amount of paper work back and forth, the division, and so on, which would all have to be co-ordinated by some central body, might in fact not be to the best advantage by the time the whole thing got straightened out. It is very easy to do this at the national level when you are talking about six hours of free time divided among “X” number of parties in certain packages, but when you have to do it with a multitude of radio and television stations and newspapers at the local level in that period of time, that in fact might not be as efficient. I considered it and discarded it in favour of saying that you can spend up to 15 cents per electorate on the media in any way you want to use the media.

• 1230

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes.

Miss MacDonald: And be reimbursed for it after. I thought that in the period of time I was talking about—and hopefully this is going to be a shorter period of time—it would be more efficient to allow the candidate to make his choice of what he considers the best use of media for him in his own local constituency.

Mr. Macquarrie: Good.

[Interprétation]

M. Macquarrie: Oh, cela ne me fait pas peur du tout. Je me demandais seulement si, en prenant cette nouvelle attitude officielle—vous ne cousiez pas l'étiquette politique plutôt que de la coller comme elle l'est actuellement. Elle colle assez en ce moment, je le sais! Vous ne pensiez pas lorsque vous étudiez le scrutin à mettre le nom du parti au lieu de celui du candidat comme ils l'ont fait dans la République de Weimar.

Mlle MacDonald: Non. Je ne crois pas que j'aurais été aussi loin. Avec un nom comme MacDonald j'aimerais qu'il soit connu.

M. Macquarrie: J'aurais une autre question moins fastidieuse que celle-là. Avez-vous étudié la possibilité en ce qui concerne la radio et la télévision d'accroître, lorsque cela est possible de transférer le temps mis gratuitement à la disposition des candidats au niveau de la circonscription électorale pour éliminer partiellement ce problème qui comme vous le dites devient trop important?

Mlle MacDonald: Oui. J'ai étudié ceci sérieusement mais je crois que lorsque nous regardons le nombre de stations de radio et de télévision et le nombre de journaux, la façon dont ils sont utilisés en fait au cours d'une campagne électorale, le montant de documents qui sont échangés, la division, etc., et tout ceci devrait être coordonné par un organisme central, tout ceci, en fin de compte, pourrait se révéler pas avantageux. Il est très facile d'établir ceci au niveau national lorsque vous parlez de six heures de temps alloué et disons entre «x» nombre de partis, en gros, mais lorsqu'il vous faudra tenir compte d'une multitude de stations de radio et de télévision et de journaux au niveau local pendant cette période de temps le processus risque de ne pas être aussi efficace. C'est pourquoi, j'ai étudié la question et j'ai rejeté cette proposition. Je propose plutôt que l'on dépense jusqu'à 15c. par électeur pour un moyen de diffusion au choix.

M. Macquarrie: Oui.

Mlle MacDonald: Vous serez remboursé par la suite. Il serait peut-être préférable de laisser le choix aux candidats quant à ce qu'ils considèrent comme le meilleur organe de diffusion auquel ils pourraient avoir recours dans leur propre circonscription.

M. Macquarrie: Bon.

[Text]

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Macquarrie.

May I ask you a question regarding a post that you occupied at the headquarters of a national party with a view to having your ideas of what would be the reaction of any national party to help solve one of the complaints made by the armed forces against the late reporting of their ballots? In order to eliminate this late reporting it would be necessary to advance the nomination day by one week. With the experience you have, do you think there would be any great objection by any national party, let us say, to having the nomination day three weeks before the polling day instead of two weeks?

Miss MacDonald: No, I certainly do not think there would be any objection to it. I do not think there should be any objection. I may say in all of these proposals that I have put forward, I do want to make it clear that I put them forward as an individual...

The Chairman: I agree with that.

Miss MacDonald: ...and not with any party sanction which they do not have of course. I thought I would mention that just in case anyone got the idea that the Conservative Party had suddenly adopted full disclosure.

The fact is, if a party is going to get its candidate nominated in that period which we are talking about, say three weeks, as opposed to two weeks, as it now stands, it is doing it knowing that it is not going to win that seat anyhow. In at least 99 cases out of 100 when it is left that late, it is left for all sorts of reasons and one of them is that it has not been able to find anyone. The party would have to be in pretty tight straits to let a nomination go that long. I just cannot recall any cases offhand, although I am sure there may have been a few where the candidate was nominated just a few days to the nomination day.

The Chairman: Thank you. Are there any more questions Mr. Jerome?

Mr. Jerome: What time are we going to adjourn and are we coming back at 3.30 this afternoon?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Jerome: We are not?

The Chairman: I do not think so.

Mr. Jerome: I wonder if I might ask Miss MacDonald one or two questions then?

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Puis-je vous poser une question au sujet d'un poste que vous avez occupé au quartier général d'un parti national au sujet des plaintes formulées par les forces armées concernant le système de scrutin et des conditions de vote, disant qu'il fallait avancer d'une semaine le jour de la présentation des candidats. D'après votre expérience, pensez-vous qu'il pourrait y avoir d'importantes objections de la part d'un parti national si l'on fixait cette date trois semaines avant les élections au lieu de deux?

Mlle MacDonald: Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait d'objections. Il ne devrait pas y en avoir. Au sujet des propositions que j'ai avancées, je voudrais qu'il soit très clair que je les ai avancées à titre personnel et...

Le président: Je suis d'accord avec vous.

Mlle MacDonald: Je n'ai l'approbation d'aucun parti.

Je ne voudrais pas que l'on pense que le parti conservateur a adopté cette politique. Si un parti veut que ses candidats soient mis en candidature dans cette période, de trois semaines plutôt que de deux semaines, il sait que, de toute façon, le candidat ne sera pas élu. Dans la plupart des cas, quand on attend aussi longtemps, c'est qu'il nous faut une personne. Donc, un parti doit être dans une situation très difficile pour attendre si tard pour faire sa mise en candidature. Je ne me souviens pas de cas, il y en a peut-être eu bien sûr, où un candidat a été élu simplement quelques jours après la date de mise en candidature.

Le président: Merci. D'autres questions? M. Jerome?

M. Jerome: Est-ce que nous allons revenir à 3h30?

Le président: Non.

M. Jerome: Nous ne reviendrons pas?

Le président: Je ne crois pas.

M. Jerome: Je voudrais poser une ou deux questions.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: Do you feel that in addition to the considerations you have set forth this morning about the party affiliation on the ballot, in addition to liking the leader, or liking the party, the opportunity of the voter who attempts to cast his ballot on the basis of his desire perhaps to be represented by a government or an opposition member is something that leans rather heavily on the party affiliation, as opposed to the individual member. That might be another very valid consideration for having the party identified on the ballot.

Miss MacDonald: Yes, you mean that he in fact is able to gauge, or at least to have some idea of the way the campaign has gone. I think this is very definitely what not only individuals, but whole groups of communities and larger groups feel is a valid reason for supporting certain individuals. Another is that there are certain benefits which people believe can be derived if they are represented by the government party, rather than the opposition party.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Miss MacDonald: I do feel that this is another consideration.

Mr. Jerome: I wonder if we do not rather narrowly confine ourselves in this question to attempting to accommodate people who like the Liberal Party, or who like the Conservative Party, or who like the New Democratic Party or whatever. I wonder if there is not perhaps something a little more objective than that involved, because there are a great number of voters. I think basically a voter likes to see his ballot used well. No one likes to waste their ballot basically. Now I suppose there are a great number of people who are avid or rabid party affiliates who will say: "I would not care if I thought that my party's candidate was only going to get one vote, it is going to be mine, and that is it."

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: There are certain of those, but in the floating electorate, which is after all the determining factor in the change of elections...

Miss MacDonald: And which is getting larger all the time.

Mr. Jerome: Of course, as it should. Of those there should be, I think, a great many people who say: "I think that we should try to be represented by a government member, or I think that the party which has the greatest chance of forming the government in the

[Interprétation]

M. Jerome: Pensez-vous qu'en ce qui concerne l'identification du parti sur le bulletin, pour un électeur qui essaie de voter en songeant qu'il voudrait être représenté par un membre du gouvernement ou de l'opposition, cela pèse lourdement sur l'identification du parti par rapport au membre individuel. C'est là une raison très importante d'identifier le parti sur le bulletin de vote.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui. Au fait, vous voulez dire, il peut juger ou tout au moins, avoir une idée de la façon dont la campagne s'est développée. Sans aucun doute, non seulement dans le cas des individus mais de toutes les collectivités même les plus importantes, je pense que c'est un argument valable, pour appuyer un particulier. Il y a des avantages que peut retirer un candidat qui représente un parti gouvernemental plutôt qu'un parti d'opposition.

M. Jerome: Oui.

Mlle MacDonald: Je pense que c'est une autre question.

M. Jerome: Est-ce que nous n'essayons pas de nous limiter, dans ces questions, à accommoder ceux qui aiment le parti libéral, conservateur ou néo-démocrate? Est-ce qu'il n'y aurait pas quelque chose de plus objectif, parce qu'il y a un grand nombre d'électeurs. L'électeur ne veut pas que son vote soit perdu ou gaspillé. Il y a aussi le votant enragé qui se dit que même si son candidat ne devait avoir qu'un seul vote il voudrait que ce soit le sien.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Jerome: Il y a aussi l'électorat mobile qui après tout constitue l'élément déterminant dans le résultat de l'élection...

Mlle MacDonald: Et qui s'accroît constamment.

M. Jerome: Il y a beaucoup de gens qui disent: je pense que nous devrions être représentés par un membre du gouvernement, ou le parti qui a le plus de chance de former le gouvernement au cours de la prochaine élection est ce parti-ci par conséquent, je vais next election is this party, therefore I am going to vote for their candidate in my riding regardless", that kind of thinking.

[Text]

Miss MacDonald: Yes, I completely agree with that, plus the fact I think a great many people, and there are some who might dispute them, but in looking at it from that point of view they look at it also from the point of view that this party may have run a stronger campaign, or may be in a better position and therefore has the best chance of providing us, not only with the government, but with a majority government.

Mr. Jerome: Right, this is another factor that might enter into their consideration.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: All of which, relatively speaking, is somewhat removed from a romance with the party itself.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: I wonder if as well we could not minimize the difficulty that Mr. Macquarrie was raising about someone who was really not that anxious to do a handholding routine with his party when he went to the polls, as is the case in some constituencies in the country where the member feels that he gets elected rather personally to a very great extent. I wonder if the answer is that if he really wants to put that theory to the test he could always run without a party affiliation? For some reason or other the candidates envisaged by Mr. Macquarrie always seem to go through the exercise of seeking a party nomination and should at least be able to live up to it at election time.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Put the party name on...

Mr. Jerome: Well, sure, I think it does. I feel very strongly that anyone who seeks a party nomination should stick with it on the ballot.

Miss MacDonald: Right.

Mr. Jerome: Can we shorten up the time of elections?

Miss MacDonald: This is the whole thing. I feel that the only thing that can really do it is to change our whole system of enumeration.

Mr. Jerome: You will find complete agreement from Mr. Hamel. I have already been through that with him many times.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

[Interpretation]

voter pour leur candidat dans ma circonscription.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui, je suis pleinement d'accord avec cela et en plus, beaucoup de gens disent, en tenant compte de ce point de vue, que ce parti a peut-être fait une campagne électorale plus solide ou est peut-être en meilleure posture, et par conséquent, a plus de chance de nous donner, non seulement un gouvernement, mais un gouvernement majoritaire.

M. Jerome: Oui, c'est un autre facteur dont ils tiennent compte.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Jerome: Tout cela se rapporte assez peu au parti même.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Jerome: Est-ce que l'on ne pourrait pas minimiser la difficulté soulevée par M. Macquarrie à l'effet qu'il ne voulait pas particulièrement soutenir le député de son parti, comme c'est souvent le cas dans les régions rurales ou bien souvent le votant à l'impression que c'est lui personnellement qui est élu. Si un candidat veut se présenter sans être affilié à un parti il devrait pouvoir le faire. Mais en général, un candidat cherche toujours à avoir l'appui d'un parti. Je pense que toute personne qui cherche à avoir une nomination d'un parti doit faire tout en son possible pour lui faire honneur en temps d'élection.

M. Alkenbrack: Y mettre un nom de parti...

M. Jerome: Je crois que oui. Je crois que celui qui tient à se faire présenter par un parti devrait faire inscrire le nom de son parti sur le bulletin de vote.

Mlle MacDonald: Parfaitement.

M. Jerome: Pouvons-nous raccourcir la période électorale?

Mlle MacDonald: Voilà toute la question. Je crois que la seule façon d'y arriver serait de changer tout notre système.

M. Jerome: Ceci me revient. Vous aviez tout à l'heure l'accord total de M. Hamel là-dessus, Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Jerome: All right; given that fact, do you think we can really control election expenses?

Miss MacDonald: There are going to be a great many people who will dispute this, but I think we can control them in those areas where the expenses are the fastest growing. There is no question, if Parliament wanted to say we are going to adopt such and such laws—and they are doing it in other parts of the country—if we adopted in the field of the media and enforced the co-operation of the media, then there is no way that a national party can go out and spend $2 million on the media instead of $500,000 or whatever it might be.

Mr. Jerome: Yes.

Miss MacDonald: They just will not be allowed to have the time available to them. I think this is the area more and more. We are only seeing the tip of the iceberg, so to speak. If we let this go on uncontrolled, there is no one who is going to be able to run an election, a political party, a candidate or anyone else.

In 1956 we were just entering the television era and yet here we are spending, just on the paid time private network last time $1.5 million. If we do not stop this tremendous escalation, which can only be done through controlling the media...

Mr. Jerome: I do not necessarily disagree with you. It is a very fascinating subject and I suppose it is correct to say that it is not directly a part of our terms of reference this time around but the funny part about this is that this money is raised without now resorting to government. Even if we can assume that without completely controlling it, if we can tend to equalize the opportunities of people to become political candidates which is really one of the points I think that you were stressing which is a very valid one; even assuming that we can go a long way to limit the amount of money spent and to equalize, therefore, the opportunities of people to run, knowing that they do not have to go out and knock on doors and raise the money or do not have to have heavy financial backers; even if we could accomplish that, is there justification for switching over from the system which at the present time perhaps is not nearly as equitable, but at least does not use government resources and tax dollars to run elections?

Miss MacDonald: Again I have dealt with this in the paper I am going to leave with you all, but I think some of the most successful

[Interprétation]

M. Jerome: Alors, de ce fait, pensez-vous qu'on peut vraiment contrôler les dépenses d'élection?

Mlle MacDonald: Il y a un grand nombre de personnes qui se seront pas d'accord avec cela mais on peut les contrôler dans les régions où les coûts s'accroissent plus rapidement. Si le Parlement voulait par exemple, adopter telle loi,—et on le fait dans d'autres parties du pays—dans le domaine des organes de communication et essaie d'avoir la coopération de ces derniers, alors, un parti national ne pourrait pas dépenser deux millions de dollars dans ces organes d'information plutôt que 500 mille.

M. Jerome: Oui.

Mlle MacDonald: On ne leur permettrait pas. Nous ne voyons que le sommet de l'iceberg pour l'instant. Si nous ne contrôlons pas cela, personne ne pourra plus faire d'élections.

En 1956, nous commençons à peine à avoir de la télévision, et voilà que nous dépensons un million et demi de dollars sur les réseaux privés. Si nous n'arrêtons pas cette escalade, et c'est seulement par le contrôle...

M. Jerome: Je ne suis pas forcément en désaccord avec vous. C'est un sujet très intéressant. Ça ne fait pas partie de notre mandat, et ce qui est étrange, c'est que cet argent est obtenu sans faire appel au gouvernement. Même si l'on peut supposer que sans le contrôler complètement, on peut au moins donner des chances égales à tous les citoyens de devenir des candidats, comme vous l'avez si bien souligné, et si on peut limiter l'argent dépensé pour donner des chances égales à tous, en sachant que les gens ne sont pas obligés d'avoir des appuis financiers importants; même si nous pouvons y arriver, cela justifie-t-il le fait de modifier le système actuel qui n'est peut-être pas aussi équitable, mais qui tout au moins ne fait pas appel à l'argent du contribuable.

Mlle MacDonald: Je traite de cette question dans le document que je vous ai remis. A mon avis, nos meilleures réalisations au things we have done in this country have been in the field where we have co-operated or have brought in co-operation between the public purse and private enterprise, and really what I am suggesting is that there are certain things which would be subsidized from the public purse but by no means the whole of the campaign. It still, you know, is going to be a question of private donations.

[Text]

Mr. Jerome: Then you would envisage a system whereby candidates who enjoy a certain measure of success would be reimbursed for certain of the things that they have done in order to eliminate the risk they run of being without funds or else using their personal money.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Jerome: But you do not envisage a system under which candidates would require to be controlled in the amount that they spend so that the election is not going to be decided on the man with all the bankroll.

Miss MacDonald: No, no; only in the field of the media cost do I put any limitation either nationally or at the local level.

Mr. Jerome: It is a subject that I would like to explore further, but I am keeping the Committee and you on a subject that is not strictly within our terms of reference this time around so I do not want to keep you.

Miss MacDonald: Would it be all right if I left some of these with you, because it goes into all of this in much greater detail?

Mr. Jerome: That is great.

The Chairman: Miss MacDonald has brought a recommendation to us which I think should be circulated among the members. Mr. Virr, will you do this?

I ask whether it is the consensus that the documentation of Miss MacDonald be part of today's records? May I have a motion in this regard?

Mr. Jerome: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: We had planned to have another meeting this afternoon and if Members will indicate to me that they have more questions to ask of Miss MacDonald we will have this afternoon meeting. If it is the desire of Members to continue on some other points with our present witness we will adjourn the meeting until Thursday.

[Interpretation]

Canada sont celles où il y a eu collaboration entre les deniers publics et l'entreprise privée. Il y a certaines choses qui devraient être subventionnées par les deniers publics mais certainement pas toute la campagne. Il y aura toujours des dons venant du secteur privé.

M. Jerome: Vous envisagez donc un système où les candidats qui ont un certain succès seraient remboursés d'une partie de leurs dépenses, afin d'éliminer le risque pour eux de manquer de fonds ou d'avoir à utiliser leur argent personnel.

Mlle MacDonald: Oui.

M. Jerome: Mais vous n'envisagez pas un système qui contrôlerait le montant des dépenses des candidats afin que l'élection ne soit pas emportée par le candidat le plus riche.

Mlle MacDonald: J'imposerais une limite soit au niveau national, soit au niveau local, seulement en ce qui a trait aux frais de publicité.

M. Jerome: Il y a une question que j'aimerais discuter plus longuement, mais cela ne fait pas partie exactement de notre mandat.

Mlle MacDonald: Est-ce que je peux vous laisser quelques-uns de ces documents qui vous donneront plus de détails à ce sujet.

M. Jerome: Cela me plairait beaucoup.

Le président: M^{lle} MacDonald nous a apporté de la documentation et je crois que ce serait utile de la distribuer aux membres du Comité. Pourriez-vous vous en occuper monsieur Virr?

J'aimerais savoir si les membres sont d'accord pour que la documentation de M^{lle} MacDonald puisse faire partie du compte-rendu d'aujourd'hui? L'un d'entre vous pourrait-il proposer une motion dans ce sens?

M. Jerome: Je propose la motion.

La motion est adoptée.

Le président: Nous avons l'intention de revenir cet après-midi, et si les membres du comité ont d'autres questions à poser à M^{lle} MacDonald, nous nous réunirons cette après-midi. S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions, eh bien, nous pourrions lever la séance jusqu'à jeudi.

[Texte]

Mr. Duquet: With the documentation, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we need to come back.

● 1245

The Chairman: Yes, it is pretty well all in there. On behalf of the members, Miss MacDonald, I want to thank you very much for the contribution you have given us today and we thank you for the great interest you are taking in this great democratic process. Before we adjourn, is it agreed that Miss MacDonald be reimbursed for her expenses incurred in appearing here today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: This meeting is adjourned until Thursday at eleven o'clock.

[Interprétation]

M. Duquet: Je crois qu'avec toute la documentation que nous avons, il n'est pas nécessaire de revenir.

Le président: Au nom du Comité, mademoiselle MacDonald, j'aimerais vous remercier pour la contribution que vous avez faite aujourd'hui. Nous vous remercions pour l'intérêt que vous avez pris à ce processus particulièrement démocratique. Avant de terminer, est-ce que vous êtes d'accord pour que l'on rembourse les frais de déplacement de Mlle MacDonald?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: La séance est levée jusqu'à jeudi 11 heures.

APPENDIX 3

ELECTORAL AND PARTY REFORM

A paper prepared by MISS FLORA MACDONALD

RÉFORME ÉLECTORALE
ET RÉFORME DES PARTIS

par M^{lle} Flora MacDonald

The subject I have been asked to consider by the Conference Committee is Electoral Reform. In addition, it was suggested that I offer some reflections and comments in regard to the role of political parties, and to possible changes and reforms in this area.

Making democracy work in any society is the responsibility of the entire social body. In order to make it work, however, there must be structures and procedures which facilitate, rather than hinder, the democratic process. Free elections are essential to this process. Implicit in the idea of free elections is the notion that the electorate will have access to information that will help them to choose between candidates, that candidates will be able to present their views to the electors, and that rules of fair play will prevail. In Canada, as in most other western nations, the political party is seen as an integral—indeed an essential—institution within the democratic framework. In dealing with the question of electoral reform in Canada, I will direct my attention to three critical areas where changes in structure and procedures are long overdue:

First, as it applies to the dollar costs of maintaining political institutions, particularly the financing of elections campaigns;

Second, as it applies to legislation governing election procedures;

Third, as it applies to the role of parties within the framework of the democratic system.

I. ELECTORAL REFORM—EXPENSES

Election campaigns are expensive. The purpose of this paper is not to suggest otherwise. Candidates and parties have legitimate electoral expenses and must have the means to meet those expenses. A sufficient reservoir of funds, properly used, is essential to the democratic process. It is a fact of life, however, that Canadians are reluctant to accept the cost of maintaining our political institutions as a legitimate societal expense. Whereas we acknowledge that religious and educational institutions have a rightful claim on our dollar earnings, a parsimonious reaction can be expected to any discussion of election expenditures, Members' salaries or political party expenses.

Le comité de la Conférence m'a demandé de traiter de la réforme électorale et d'aborder la question du rôle des partis politiques et des changements et réformes possibles dans ce domaine.

Dans toute société, c'est au corps social tout entier qu'il incombe de faire fonctionner la démocratie. Et pour y parvenir, il faut des structures et des procédures qui facilitent, au lieu de paralyser, le processus démocratique. Des élections libres sont essentielles à ce processus. Le concept d'élections libres présuppose que l'électorat a accès à l'information qui l'aide à choisir entre plusieurs candidats, que les candidats pourront exposer leurs vues aux électeurs, et que les règles du fair play seront respectées. Au Canada, comme dans la plupart des pays occidentaux, le parti politique est considéré comme une institution intégrante, voire même essentielle, de la structure démocratique. En parlant de réforme électorale, j'insisterai sur trois points névralgiques qui appellent depuis longtemps des changements de structures et de méthodes:

Premièrement, le coût des institutions politiques, et surtout le financement des campagnes électorales;

Deuxièmement, la législation qui régit les élections;

Troisièmement, le rôle des partis dans le cadre du régime démocratique.

I. LA RÉFORME
ÉLECTORALE—DÉPENSES

Les campagnes électorales coûtent cher et je n'ai pas l'intention de laisser croire le contraire. Les candidats et les partis ont des dépenses électorales légitimes et doivent avoir les moyens de les payer. Un réservoir suffisant de fonds, utilisés à bon escient, est un élément essentiel du processus démocratique. Il est bien clair, cependant, que les Canadiens n'acceptent pas de bon gré de considérer le coût des institutions politiques comme une dépense sociale légitime. Nous ouvrons volontiers nos goussets aux institutions religieuses et aux maisons d'enseignement, mais nous les refermons bien vite dès qu'il est question de dépenses électorales, de salaires des députés ou de dépenses des partis politiques.

The question here should be not the cost of elections, but the manner in which these costs are met and by whom.

The aim should be not to reinforce an already niggardly approach to the financing of political institutions, but to legitimize the expenditure of reasonable sums of money.

No official debate of election expenses has taken place in the Canadian House of Commons for years. Governments in office have been reluctant to raise the matter with the result that it has been consigned to limbo, to be exhumed only occasionally by some enterprising private member or curious journalist.

In 1874, and again in 1907-08, Parliament instituted a series of reform measures with regard to election expenses. In 1920 a number of minor amendments were effected. Since then no Canadian Government has found it necessary or expedient to introduce new legislation or to revise the existing laws. This is not to say that pleas for reform and innovative proposals have not been voiced by private members, or discussed in committee, or debated in public forums. Nor has the reluctance of the federal government to act been a barrier to progressive and even radical measures adopted by some of our provincial legislatures.

Fifty years of inaction on the part of federal governments precipitated the need for a thorough review of the financing of election campaigns. On October 27, 1964, a Committee on Election Expenses was appointed to conduct just such a review. The Committee's Report, tabled by the Prime Minister on October 11, 1966, has languished through three subsequent sessions of the House and there is no indication as to when, if ever, the necessary study and debate will occur.

The report of the Federal Committee on Election Expenses, the measures adopted in January, 1964, by the Quebec National Assembly, the report of the Royal Commission on Election Expenses in Nova Scotia in February of this year, and the current sessions of the Select Commission on Election Laws of the Ontario Legislative Assembly, reflect the increased sensitivity of governments to and the mounting interest of the general public in the subject of election expenses. As a stimulus to further discussion in this area, the following recommendations are put forward:

a) POLITICAL PARTIES:

1. Recognition of Political Parties: In framing the legislation of 1874 by which can-

Il ne faudrait donc pas parler du coût des élections, mais plutôt de la façon dont ces dépenses sont payées, et par qui.

Il ne faudrait pas chercher à renforcer la mesquinerie déjà existante à l'égard du financement des institutions politiques, mais plutôt à légitimer la dépense de sommes raisonnables.

Aucun débat officiel n'a eu lieu à la Chambre des communes du Canada depuis plusieurs années sur les dépenses d'élections. Les gouvernements ayant toujours hésité à soulever la question, elle a été reléguée aux oubliettes pour n'en être exhumée que de temps en temps par quelque député audacieux ou journaliste curieux.

En 1874, et de nouveau en 1907-1908, le Parlement avait institué une série de réformes des dépenses électorales. En 1920, il y eut quelques modifications mineures. Mais depuis, aucun gouvernement canadien n'a jugé nécessaire ou opportun de présenter une nouvelle mesure ni de reviser les lois existantes. Il ne faudrait pas croire, cependant, que des demandes de réformes ou d'innovations n'ont pas été formulées par des députés, ou dans des comités, ou dans le grand public. Il ne faudrait pas croire non plus que l'immobilisme du gouvernement fédéral, a empêché l'adoption de mesures progressives et mêmes radicales par certaines assemblées législatives provinciales.

Cinquante années d'inaction par le gouvernement fédéral ont mis en lumière la nécessité d'une révision complète du financement des campagnes électorales. Le 27 octobre 1967, cette révision fut confiée à un comité des dépenses électorales. Le rapport de ce comité, déposé par le premier ministre le 11 octobre 1966, dort sous la poussière depuis trois sessions de la Chambre et rien ne permet de prévoir pour bientôt le débat et l'étude qui s'imposent.

Le rapport du comité fédéral des dépenses électorales, les mesures adoptées en janvier 1964, par l'Assemblée nationale de Québec, le rapport de la Commission royale d'enquête sur les dépenses électorales en Nouvelle-Écosse, publié en février de cette année, et les séances présentement en cours de la Commission spéciale des lois électorales de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario, démontrent que les gouvernements sont de plus en plus sensibilisés à cette question des dépenses électorales et que le public s'y intéresse davantage. Pour amorcer une nouvelle discussion sur la question, nous formulons les recommandations suivantes:

a) PARTIS POLITIQUES:

1. Reconnaissance des partis politiques: Lors de la rédaction de la loi de 1874 qui didates are required to report election expenditures, no mention was made of political parties. At that time, of course, political parties were in an embryonic state in Canada and their role in election campaigns was minimal. Although the ensuing years have seen that role grow to one of considerable proportions, Parliament has continued to sanction the oversight of the 1874 legislation by neglecting to accord official legal recognition to political parties under the Canada Elections Act. The result has been a Parliament with schizophrenic tendencies where, on the one hand, parties are recognized for certain legislative purposes (i.e., privileges accorded leaders of opposition "Parties" in the House of Commons), while at the same time parties are denied status for purposes of electing those same leaders to Parliament. Until such legal recognition is granted, all other proposals as they apply to political parties—disclosure, subsidization limitation—are legally unenforceable.

I would propose that political parties be explicitly recognized under the Canada Elections Act. Such recognition might be based on a requirement that the party must field a specified number of candidates in any current election or have obtained a specified percentage of votes in the preceding election.

Each political party would be required to register, and presumably such registration would necessitate that each party stipulate the names of its representatives legally responsible for its activities.

Failure of a party to register officially would disqualify it from receiving any benefits under the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. Candidates sponsored by registered parties would be designated as party candidates on the ballot; all others would be described as Independents.

2. Disclosure: The mystery and mythology which for so long have shrouded the collection and disbursement of political funds have succeeded in generating suspicion among the electorate. As a consequence, the image of Canadian political parties has suffered, their motives called into question, their activities suspect. Insistence on the privacy of the political party purse is equated with "something to hide." By its lack of candor, the whole exercise has invited harassment, distortion and abuse.

It is my firm opinion that political parties pay a high price in terms of prestige and credibility as a result of this mythology and speculation, unwarranted though such suspicion may be. It has yet to be proven, at least in recent years, that contributors can or do oblige les candidats à faire rapport de leurs dépenses électorales, il n'a pas été fait mention des partis politiques. A l'époque, les partis politiques n'étaient encore que des embryons et leur rôle, dans les campagnes électorales, était secondaire. Par la suite, ce rôle a pris des proportions considérables, mais le Parlement a quand même continué de sanctionner l'oubli de la loi de 1874 en négligeant d'accorder une reconnaissance officielle et juridique aux partis politiques en vertu de la Loi électorale du Canada. Conséquemment, le Parlement est en proie à des tendances schizo-phréniques: d'un côté, les partis sont reconnus pour certaines mesures législatives (par exemple, les privilèges accordés aux chefs des partis d'opposition à la Chambre des Communes), et par ailleurs, ils n'ont aucun statut reconnu quand il s'agit d'élire ces leaders au Parlement. Tant qu'il n'y aura pas une reconnaissance juridique, il sera impossible de faire respecter par la force de la loi les autres propositions énoncées à l'égard des partis politiques: divulgation, limite des subventions.

Je pense que les partis politiques devraient être explicitement reconnus en vertu de la Loi électorale du Canada. Pour être reconnu, on pourrait peut-être exiger que le parti présente un certain nombre de candidats à une élection et recueille un certain pourcentage des votes à l'élection précédente. Chaque parti politique serait tenu de s'inscrire, et cette inscription exigerait sans doute que chaque parti donne les noms de ses représentants responsables de ses activités devant la loi.

Un parti qui négligerait de s'inscrire officiellement n'aurait plus droit à aucun des avantages prévus par la Loi électorale du Canada. Les candidats appuyés par un parti enregistré seraient désignés comme candidats de ce parti sur le bulletin de vote. Tous les autres seraient inscrits comme indépendants.

2. Divulgation: Le mystère et les mythes qui entourent depuis si longtemps la perception et la répartition des fonds politiques ont fini par faire naître une sorte de méfiance dans l'esprit des électeurs. Le prestige des partis politiques en souffre, leurs motifs sont mis en doute, et leur action est suspecte. A force de conserver le caractère confidentiel de la caisse du parti, on finit par faire croire qu'il y avait «quelque chose à cacher». Le manque de franchise fait naître les soupçons, les faussetés et les abus.

J'ai la ferme conviction que les partis politiques payent très cher en prestige et en crédibilité cette mythologie et ces conjectures, même si les soupçons sont sans fondement. Il reste encore à démontrer, du moins ces dernières années, que les souscripteurs peuvent exert "undue influence." Given the absence of hard facts, however, and lacking knowledge of who contributes to what party and how much, speculation about political patronage is bound to develop. In a recent attitudinal survey, 73% of those questioned felt that large contributions could corrupt a political party.

If the electorate is to retain confidence in the democratic system, it must have the opportunity to make its own assessment of the situation. In removing the mystery surrounding political contributions, in presenting the financial facts of life as they really exist, a more realistic attitude on the part of the electorate may be fostered.

It is curious to note that while contributions to community chest and similar campaigns are equated with civic awareness and responsibility, political contributions elicit no such accolade. Financial support of the democratic system through the operative vehicle—the political party—is reflected in distrust and distortion. Surely candor and openness are the prerequisites to attitudinal change.

Two arguments will of course be raised against the disclosure of the sources of party funds. One objection will be that such disclosure will merely expose the parties to attempt by their enemies to link their policy positions to the interests of their financial contributors thereby reducing public trust in the parties even further.

My reply to this argument is that I have the feeling that these expected innuendoes will carry not more but less weight when the parties disclose their sources. It will then have to be argued that the parties "sold out the country" for a specific sum of money received from one contributor or group of contributors (say $10,000), a far less credible proposition than the charge as it is made today where the amount is unspecified and often intimated to be in the vicinity of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

It may also be argued that disclosure will result in the curtailment of campaign donations. That this is inevitable is refuted by the example of the state of Florida where in the ten years following the adoption of disclosure, total donations increased faster than total expenses. But even if disclosure did result in the reduction of contributions, this is still something I could live with, since the total impact of the proposals I am proposing will ou veulent exercer une influence indue. Mais, faute de renseignements clairs et personne ne connaît de précisions quant aux noms et aux montants, les soupçons de favoritisme politique se multiplient inévitablement. Une récente enquête a démontré que 73 p. 100 des répondants à l'enquête estimaient que des contributions importantes pouvaient corrompre un parti politique. Si nous voulons que l'électeur garde sa confiance au régime démocratique, il faut lui donner l'occasion d'évaluer lui-même la situation. En dissipant le mystère qui entoure les contributions politiques, en présentant les chiffres tels qu'ils existent, on cultiverait peut-être une attitude plus réaliste de la part de l'électeur.

Il est curieux de constater que les contributions à la fédération des œuvres et aux collectes semblables sont considérées comme des actes de civisme et de responsabilité, tandis que les contributions politiques ne sont pas vues du même œil. L'appui financier apporté au régime démocratique par l'entremise de son organe moteur, c'est-à-dire le parti politique, est jugé avec méfiance et suspicion. La franchise et la divulgation complètes me semblent être les prémisses essentielles à tout changement d'attitude.

Deux arguments seront évidemment évoqués contre la divulgation des sources de financement du parti. Premièrement, on dira que les partis adversaires, connaissant ce renseignement, essaieront naturellement d'établir un rapport entre les positions politiques du parti et les intérêts de ses principaux souscripteurs, ce qui ne ferait que réduire encore davantage la confiance du public envers le parti.

En réponse à cet argument, je dirai qu'à mon avis, ces insinuations, loin d'avoir plus de poids, en auront moins lorsque les partis divulgueront leurs sources de financement. Il faudra alors démontrer que les partis ont «vendu le pays» pour tel montant reçu d'un souscripteur ou d'un groupe de souscripteurs (mettons $10,000). Ce serait bien plus difficile à croire que les accusations faites aujourd'hui où les montants ne sont pas connus et où certains laissent entendre qu'ils sont parfois de l'ordre de centaines de milliers de dollars. Certains diront peut-être que la divulgation fera diminuer les dons aux partis pour les campagnes électorales. Pour réfuter l'argument qui dit que c'est inévitable, il suffit de voir ce qui s'est passé dans l'État de la Floride où, dans les dix années qui ont suivi l'adoption de la divulgation, le total des dons a augmenté plus vite que le total des dépenses. Mais même si la divulgation devait amener une diminution des contributions, je be such as to substantially reduce the sums required from private contributors.

The other likely objection to disclosure is that the privacy of a donor is a principle that must be respected. My reply to this is that I don't really see why we, as party activists, should encourage perpetuation of a situation that treats political participation as something to be hidden and denied. I doubt that the parties will succeed in improving their standing in the Canadian community until they start asserting that political support, whatever its nature, is to be sanctioned rather than obscured.

In summary, then, I would propose that a complete report of party income and expenditure be made public following each general election campaign by the party's financial agent. In addition, audited statements of receipts and disbursements of national policy funds would be presented annually.

Contrary to widely-held opinion that parties have unlimited resources of wealth and spend it recklessly, disclosure would show that Canadian political parties seldom, if ever, have sufficient funds to meet the obligations the democratic system imposes on them—the responsibility to inform the electorate of the issues, and to propose solutions to domestic and international problems.

3. Limitations on Income and Expenditure: The imposition of statutory controls and/or voluntary agreements to limit party contributions has met with only limited success in West Germany, the United States, Sweden and Argentina. Unrealistic controls coupled with weak enforcement measures, have encouraged the development of evasive practices. As a result public cynicism has increased with a corresponding decrease in trust in political parties.

The United States is a case in point. Federal legislation completely bans donations from corporations and labour unions, and restricts individual contributions to $5,000. Such restrictions are open invitations to circumvent the regulations by channelling individual contributions through the multiplicity of national, state and local committees the situation has spawned.

Controls over election expenditures have been adopted by a number of countries—the United Kingdom, Australia, Japan and the United States, among others—mainly in an effort to keep costs down. Again, they have met with varying degrees of success. In the United States where committees are limited to expenditures of $3,000,000 a year under serais prête à l'accepter, car la conséquence globale de mes propositions serait telle qu'elle réduirait sensiblement les sommes requises des souscripteurs privés.

L'autre objection à prévoir contre la divulgation, c'est que l'anonymat du donateur est un principe à respecter. A cela, je réponds que je ne vois pas pourquoi des activistes de parti, comme nous, devraient essayer de perpétuer une situation qui considère la participation politique comme une chose à cacher et à nier. A mon sens, les partis ne retrouveront leur prestige aux yeux des Canadiens qu'en affirmant que le soutien politique, peu importe sa nature, doit être sanctionné et non caché.

En résumé, je propose qu'un rapport complet des revenus et des dépenses du parti soit publié après chaque élection générale par l'agent financier du parti. En outre, un état vérifié des recettes et des déboursés de fonds politiques serait présenté chaque année.

Contrairement à l'opinion très répandue voulant que les partis aient des ressources illimitées, et dépensent sans compter, la divulgation montrera que les partis politiques canadiens n'ont jamais, ou presque jamais, assez de fonds pour faire face aux obligations que leur impose la démocratie, c'est-à-dire la responsabilité d'informer les électeurs sur les questions en litige et de proposer des solutions aux problèmes nationaux et internationaux.

3. Restriction des revenus et des dépenses: L'Allemagne de l'Ouest, les États-Unis, la Suède et l'Argentine ont imposé, par des contrôles statutaires ou des ententes facultatives, une restriction des contributions aux partis qui n'a obtenu qu'un succès restreint. Des contrôles peu réalistes et des mesures d'application peu coercitives ont favorisé la recherche d'échappatoires, ce qui a accentué le cynisme public et diminué davantage la confiance portée aux partis politiques.

Prenons l'exemple des États-Unis. La loi fédérale interdit complètement les dons de sociétés et de syndicats ouvriers et restreint les dons individuels à $5,000. De telles restrictions sont des invitations ouvertes à esquiver le règlement en canalisant les contributions personnelles par la multiplicité de comités à l'échelle du pays, de l'État et de la localité. Des mesures de surveillance des dépenses électorales ont été adoptées par certains pays, dont le Royaume-Uni, l'Australie, le Japon et les États-Unis, surtout dans le but de réduire les frais. Et le succès obtenu par ces mesures a été varié. Aux États-Unis, où les comités ne doivent pas dépasser des dépenses de trois millions par année en vertu d'une loi fédérale, l'esprit de cette disposition est souvent violé federal legislation, the intent of the provision is often violated by the formation of new committees whenever the $3,000,000-limit is reached.

The Quebec legislation of 1964 and the recommendations of the Royal Commission on election expenses in Nova Scotia both advocate limits on the amounts political parties may spend during election campaigns. In each case the amount proposed is not more than 25c. multiplied by the number of electors in the constituencies in which the party has official candidates. Assessment of the success or otherwise of this method must await further trial.

Apart from the one limitation noted below, I do not think that we in Canada should impose statutory limits on the sums of money parties may receive or spend. My reasoning here does not rely primarily on the fact that attempt to enforce such limits have met with little success in other countries. To do so would be to assume that the problem is inherently unsolvable (something I cannot bring myself to admit) and to assume, as well that Canadian parties will inevitably seek to circumvent such limits (again an unnecessarily odious premise).

My main reason for opposing such limits is that they will inevitably fail to attain their objective, which is to place the parties on a more or less equitable basis in their electoral competition. Statutory limits will fail to achieve this end because of the multitude of non-monetary services which may be rendered to political parties, a circumstance that will always permit the claim that the principle of equity underlying the financial limits has been broken. In the end, political animosity and mistrust may be more serious than they are now.

Secondly, the imposition of limits seems to me to rest on unacceptable assumptions. These are, first, that contributions (henceforth to be reported) above a certain amount will cause parties to neglect the public interest in favor of the contributor's interest and, secondly, that individuals should be denied the right to determine for themselves how much of their resources they wish to devote to political objectives.

The one limitation I would suggest is that political parties be prohibited from purchasing or using any paid time on radio or television since this is the area in which they will be substantially subsidized.

4. Subsidies: The combination of private enterprise and state subvention which characterizes the Canadian economy has proven par la création de nouveaux comités chaque fois que la limite de trois millions est atteinte.

La Loi du Québec de 1964 et les recommandations de la Commission royale d'enquête sur les dépenses électorales en Nouvelle-Écosse préconisent d'imposer une limite aux montants que les partis politiques peuvent dépenser pendant une campagne électorale. Dans les deux cas, le montant proposé est un maximum de 25c. multiplié par le nombre d'électeurs dans les circonscriptions où le parti a un candidat officiel. Pour savoir si cette méthode donne de bons ou de mauvais résultats, il faudra attendre de la voir à l'œuvre plus longtemps. A l'exception de la restriction dont je parlerai plus loin, il me semble que le Canada ne devrait imposer aucune limite aux montants que les partis peuvent recevoir ou dépenser. Si je fais cette affirmation, ce n'est pas surtout en pensant au peu de succès remporté par les mesures adoptées par d'autres pays pour tenter d'imposer des limites. Si je raisonnais ainsi je présumerais que le problème est insoluble en soi (ce que je ne saurais admettre) et que les partis politiques canadiens chercheront inévitablement à se soustraire à ces limites (autre prémisse inutilement odieuse).

Si je m'oppose à ces limites, c'est surtout parce qu'elles rateront inévitablement leur objectif qui est de mettre les partis à peu près sur un pied d'égalité dans la lutte électorale. Des limites statutaires n'atteindront pas cet objectif à cause de la multitude de services non monétaires qui peuvent être rendus à des partis politiques et c'est un argument qui permettra toujours de prétendre que le principe d'égalité, qui est à la base des limites financières, a été violé. A la fin, l'animosité politique et la méfiance pourraient être plus graves qu'aujourd'hui.

Deuxièmement, l'imposition des limites me semble reposer sur des postulats inacceptables dont le premier établit que des contributions (jusqu'ici non divulguées) dépassant un certain montant pousseront les partis à négliger l'intérêt public pour favoriser plutôt le donateur, et dont le deuxième dit que des personnes ne devraient pas avoir le droit de déterminer elles-mêmes quelle partie de leurs ressources elles veulent consacrer à des objectifs politiques. Ma seule restriction, ce serait d'interdire aux partis politiques d'acheter ou d'utiliser des périodes payées à la radio ou à la télévision, car c'est à cette fin qu'ils obtiennent des fonds considérables.

4. Subsidies: Le combinaison de la subvention venant de l'entreprise privée et de l'État, qui caractérise l'économie canadienne, s'est both operative and practical. While some elements of society advocate complete state control, and others support complete freedom of the marketplace, the Canadian solution has produced successful compromises in the fields of broadcasting, transportation, and health, to name but a few.

It is proposed that the principle of joint private-state action be extended to the financing of election costs. Complete state subsidization could, in my opinion, exert a debilitating effect on party organization. On the other hand, recent elections have shown that the burden of financing campaign costs all too often falls on the few.

In his 1965 study of Canadian attitudes to election expenses Professor J. Meisel found out that 67.3 per cent of the general public support either total (29.8 per cent) or partial (37.5 per cent) subsidization of campaign costs from the public purse.

In advocating partial subsidization by the state, the area selected is that of the broadcast media.

Utilization of the facilities of the five television and radio networks and the numerous private stations in Canada, accounts for the most rapidly accelerating cost factor in political campaigns. In the 1965 election campaign, total costs to political parties for paid time on private radio and television stations amounted to $1,211,963.91. By 1968 this figure had climbed to $1,425,528.65. Significantly this does not take into account the free time provided by the networks and private stations which in 1968 totalled 985.85 hours of television and radio time.

Clearly this is an area which merits controls and subsidization.

The Federal Committee on Election Expenses recommends that a total of six hours of prime broadcast time be made available to duly registered national parties on each public and private network, free of cost to the political parties. Parties would be prohibited from purchasing or using any paid time on radio or television in addition to its share of the six hours of subsidized time.

In the elections of 1957, 1958, 1962, 1963, 1965, and 1968, C.B.C. English and French networks provided six, six, six, five, five and a half, and four hours of free time respectively to the national parties. It would appear the present recommendation of six hours on each public and private network is a reasonable one. The allocation of time among the parties would, as in the past, be arrived at by révélée pratique et efficace. Alors que certains éléments de la société préconisent une maîtrise entière de l'État et que d'autres sont en faveur d'une liberté complète de l'entreprise privée, la solution canadienne a permis de trouver des compromis heureux dans le domaine de la radiodiffusion, du transport, de l'hygiène, et j'en passe.

Nous proposons que ce principe de l'action conjointe de l'État et de l'entreprise privée soit élargi et appliqué au financement des élections. A mon avis, un financement exclusif par l'État pourrait être néfaste pour l'organisation du parti. Par ailleurs, les récentes élections ont démontré que le fardeau du financement des campagnes électorales retombe trop souvent sur quelques épaules.

Dans son étude de 1965 sur les attitudes des Canadiens à l'égard des dépenses d'élection, le professeur J. Meisel a constaté que 67.3 p. 100 du grand public favorise soit un financement total (29.8 p. 100) ou partie (37.5 p. 100) des frais électoraux par les derniers publics.

Pour préconiser un financement partiel par l'État, nous choisissons celui de la radiodiffusion.

L'utilisation des cinq réseaux de télévision et de radio et de nombreuses stations privées au Canada est l'élément qui fait augmenter le plus vite le coût des campagnes politiques. Pour la campagne de 1965, le coût total supporté par les partis politiques pour les périodes de temps payées aux stations privées de radio et de télévision avait atteint $1,211,963.91. En 1968, ce chiffre est monté à $1,425,528.65. Il faut remarquer que ces montants ne tiennent pas compte des périodes de temps mises gratuitement à la disposition des partis par les stations et les réseaux privés et en 1968, il y a eu en tout 985.85 heures de télévision et de radio.

De toute évidence, c'est un domaine où des contrôles et des subventions s'imposent.

Le comité fédéral des dépenses électorales recommande un total de six heures, à des périodes de cote d'écoute élevée, soit mis gratuitement à la disposition des partis nationaux enregistrés, par chaque réseau public et privé. A part ces six heures de temps subventionné, il serait interdit aux partis d'acheter et d'utiliser du temps payé à la radio ou à la télévision. Pour les élections de 1957, 1958, 1962, 1965 et 1968, les réseaux anglais et français de Radio-Canada ont accordé respectivement six heures, six heures, six heures, cinq heures, cinq heures et demie et quatre heures, gratuitement aux partis nationaux. La présente recommandation de six heures sur chaque réseau public et privé semble raisonnable. La répartition du temps entre les partis serait, comme par le passé, établie au moyen negotiation among the representatives of the political parties, the networks and the C.R.T.C. Inherent in the proposal of network free-time would be the inclusion of production time and costs.

5. Tax Deduction: Federal recognition for purposes of deduction under income tax law is accorded a multitude of worthwhile causes. Deduction privileges have never applied to contributions to political parties, even though these organizations form an integral part of the democratic system. The failure of parties to press for such recognition, and the neglect of governments to propose such legislation, have placed party contributions in a less favored category thereby serving to reinforce the generally unfavorable impression the public has of political party funds.

Individuals should be encouraged to contribute to the political party of their choice and, by way of incentive, I would propose that donations of up to $100.00, either to political parties or candidates, be available as deductions for income tax purposes.

b) CANDIDATES:

Many of the foregoing recommendations relating to political parties should be applied to individual candidates:

1. Disclosure: Form 61 of the Canada Elections Act (Return of Election Expenses) requires the candidate's official agent to disclose the names and addresses of all donors, and the amounts donated, to campaign funds. As well, the form requires a detailed accounting of all monies spent in connection with the campaign. The failure of many candidates to report either the one, or both, of these requirements indicates the laxity with which this regulation is applied. In 1968, 267 candidates did not report income and expenditure; in 1965—255; in 1963—248; in 1962—198; in 1958—163, and so on.

Enforcement of the legislation has been far from effective. And a completely blind eye has been turned to the imposition of penalties for non-filing.

In an effort to make the political system more credible, the present hypocritical approach must be abolished in favor of realistic controls, effectively implemented. Concomitant with their reporting of election receipts and disbursements, I would recommend that elected members be required to make a full disclosure of their private interests and associations where these could conceivably give rise to conflict of interest cases. In the United States where such cases have been the subject of much public debate, legislation has been introduced which subjects the de négociations entre les représentants des partis politiques, les réseaux et le C.R.T.C. Cette proposition du temps gratuit accordé par les réseaux comporterait évidemment le temps de production et les frais.

5. Déduction pour fins d'impôts: Le gouvernement fédéral accorde des déductions pour fins d'impôts aux dons versés pour toutes sortes d'œuvres valables. Ce privilège de la déduction n'a jamais été appliqué aux contributions aux partis politiques, même si les organisations sont une partie intégrante du régime démocratique. Les partis n'ayant pas insisté pour obtenir ce privilège, et les gouvernements ayant négligé de proposer des mesures législatives en ce sens, les contributions politiques sont dans une catégorie moins favorisée, ce qui renforce l'impression défavorable que le public se fait des caisses électorales.

Les particuliers devraient être incités à contribuer au parti politique de leur choix, et comme mesure d'incitation, je proposerais que les dons ne dépassant $100, faits à des partis politiques ou à des candidats soient déductibles pour fins d'impôts sur le revenu.

b) LES CANDIDATS:

Beaucoup des recommandations ci-dessus ayant trait aux partis politiques devraient s'appliquer à chaque candidat:

1. Divulgarion: La formule 61 de la loi électorale du Canada (Déclaration de dépenses électorales) oblige l'agent officiel du candidat à divulguer les noms et les adresses de tous les donateurs, ainsi que le montant donné aux fonds électoraux. Ce formulaire exige aussi un détail de toutes les sommes dépensées pour une campagne. Beaucoup de candidats ne se sont pas pliés à l'une de ces exigences, ou même aux deux, ce qui démontre que le règlement n'est pas appliqué rigoureusement. En 1968, 267 candidats n'ont pas fait rapport de leurs revenus et dépenses; en 1965: 255; en 1963: 248; en 1962: 198; en 1958 163, et ainsi de suite. L'exécution de cette loi a été loin d'être efficace. Et on a complètement oublié de pénaliser ceux qui avaient négligé de présenter leurs déclarations.

Si l'on veut que le régime politique inspire davantage confiance, il faudra abolir la présente méthode de l'hypocrisie et la remplacer par des contrôles qui soient réalistes et appliqués efficacement. Je recommanderais qu'on oblige les députés, lorsqu'ils font rapport et soumettent leurs reçus et frais d'élection, à dévoiler complètement leurs intérêts privés et leurs relations d'affaires, au cas où ces choses pourraient donner lieu à des incompatibilités. Aux États-Unis, où des cas semblables ont fait l'objet de maints débats publics, on a introduit une loi qui soumet les affaires commer-business affairs of the administration and of representatives to close scrutiny. In Canada, not even the first steps have been taken to avoid possible abuses.

2. Limitations on Income and Expenditure: Few candidates come through campaigns without having accumulated sizable election debts. I do not propose, therefore, that any restriction be placed on the amounts donors can contribute to election funds; rather, electors should be encouraged to contribute so that the burden of financing political campaigns will not fall on the few.

The limitation of expenses, and direct subsidies to candidates, are major features of the legislation already introduced in Quebec and currently proposed by the Royal Commission in Nova Scotia, whereas such proposals were not put forward by the Federal Commission of Election Expenses. To some extent this reflects the differing nature of provincial and federal campaigns. Federal jurisdiction over the broadcast media makes it possible to impose controls on radio and television programming. Lacking these regulatory powers, the provinces place greater reliance on other devices, limitation of expenses and direct subsidies being two examples.

It is difficult to see, however, how candidates can be placed in a position of financial equality merely by limiting the expenditures they may incur, for there will always be differences in the amount of voluntary contribution of work and time that each candidate can generate.

It is proposed, therefore, that, as with political parties, limitations on candidate expenditures be imposed only in the media where public awareness provides its own regulatory powers.

Reinforcing this intent to introduce only those regulations which have reasonable expectation of enforcement, is the knowledge that mass media costs are fast becoming the most expensive part of any election campaign.

I would propose that candidates be allowed to incur expenses of not more than fifteen cents per elector in the print and broadcast media, including television, radio, film production, newspapers, periodicals, posters, billboards, pamphlets and election "gimmicks." This limitation would apply to total expenditures in the media, whether incurred by the ciales des membres de l'administration et des représentants à un examen rigoureux. Au Canada, on n'a même pas posé les premiers jalons d'une mesure qui permettrait d'éviter la possibilité d'abus.

2. Restrictions sur le revenu et les dépenses: Rares sont les candidats qui ont mené une campagne électorale sans accumuler des dettes appréciables. Je ne propose donc pas de limiter le moins du monde les montants que les électeurs peuvent verser à la caisse électorale; il serait plus indiqué d'encourager les électeurs à fournir une contribution, de manière que le fardeau du financement des campagnes politiques ne retombe pas sur la minorité.

La limitation des frais et l'attribution aux candidats d'une aide directe constituent les principaux traits caractéristiques de la loi déjà adoptée au Québec et dont la Commission royale a proposé l'adoption en Nouvelle-Écosse, alors que la Commission fédérale d'enquête sur les frais d'élection n'a formulé aucune proposition en ce sens. Dans une certaine mesure, on peut voir là une indication de la différence qui existe entre les campagnes provinciales et les campagnes fédérales. Fort de sa compétence en matière de radiodiffusion, le gouvernement fédéral peut imposer des contrôles sur l'établissement des programmes, tant pour la radio que pour la télévision. Faute de pouvoirs de réglementation, les provinces comptent davantage sur d'autres moyens, notamment la limitation des frais et l'attribution d'une aide directe.

On voit mal, toutefois, comment les candidats peuvent se trouver sur un pied d'égalité, financièrement parlant, du simple fait qu'on limite leurs frais admissibles, car il y aura toujours des différences en ce qui concerne la somme d'heures et d'efforts bénévoles que chaque candidat saura susciter en sa faveur.

Nous proposons donc qu'on impose, comme cela se fait pour les partis politiques, des restrictions quant aux frais engagés par les candidats, uniquement dans les organes d'information où la conscience populaire assure ses propres pouvoirs de réglementation.

Le fait certain que les frais liés aux organes d'information deviennent rapidement la partie la plus coûteuse des campagnes électorales renforce le désir de n'établir que les règles dont on peut raisonnablement attendre l'observation.

Je proposerais qu'on permette aux candidats de dépenser au plus quinze cents par électeur pour des fins de publicité écrite et parlée, y compris la télévision, la radio, la réalisation de films, les journaux, les périodiques, les affiches, les tableaux d'affichage, les brochures et les «trucs» d'élections. Cette restriction s'appliquerait à l'ensemble des dépen-candidate himself or his campaign committee, or by individuals or groups of supporters who may wish to advertise on his behalf.

In the 1968 campaign, 887 hours of free time were made available to candidates by private radio and television stations. This contribution by the private stations is to be commended and encouraged, with the stipulation that where free time is made available, it should be provided on an equitable basis to all candidates.

3. Subsidies: The high cost of running elections has been a deterrent to many persons who might otherwise have offered themselves as party candidates. The limitations of expenditures a candidate may make in the print and broadcast media, and the provision of the undernoted subsidies for other necessary election expenditures, seeks to redress this inequity.

a) On presentation of official receipts, any candidate who receives at least 15% of the votes cast would be entitled to reimbursement of a sum equal to five cents per elector towards media and advertising costs referred to in Part 2 above.

b) On presentation of official receipts, each candidate would be reimbursed for postage costs of mailing two pieces of campaign literature to every elector in his constituency.

c) "Vote At" cards, now distributed by numerous candidates with resulting duplication of effort and costs, would become the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer and his officials.

4. Tax Deduction: As outlined above, donations of up to $100.00 to either political parties or to an individual candidate would be regarded as deductible for purposes of income tax law.

c) DISCLOSURE BY THE MEDIA:

To ensure that controls on the use of the media are not violated and that candidates receive accurate reimbursement for their expenditure, radio and television stations and networks, and newspapers and periodicals, would be required to file reports detailing election programs, insertions and rates. The imposition of higher "political" rates or the extending of preferential rates to any one candidate or party during the period of an election campaign would be considered an offence.

ses faites dans ces directions, qu'elles soient le fait du candidat lui-même ou de son comité de propagande, ou bien d'individus ou de groupes de partisans voulant lui faire de la publicité.

Lors de la campagne de 1968, 887 heures de temps gratuit ont été accordées aux candidats par les stations privées de radio et de télévision. Cette contribution doit être soulignée et recommandée, la seule réserve résidant dans le partage égal, entre tous les candidats, du temps gratuit ainsi mis à disposition.

3. Aide financière: Le coût élevé des activités d'élections a découragé maintes personnes, qui se seraient autrement présentées comme candidats d'un parti. On pourrait redresser cette injustice en limitant les dépenses qu'un candidat peut faire pour obtenir une publicité écrite ou parlée et en prévoyant les secours mentionnés ci-dessous, en vue du paiement des autres dépenses inséparables d'une élection.

a) Sur présentation de reçus officiels, tout candidat qui obtient au moins 15 p. 100 des voix aurait droit au remboursement d'une somme égale à cinq cents par électeur, pour ce qui est des frais de publicité dont il est question dans la Partie 2c ci-dessus.

b) Sur présentation de reçus officiels, chaque candidat serait remboursé des frais d'expédition, à chaque électeur de son comté, de deux articles de publicité électorale.

c) Les cartes indiquant l'adresse des polls, que distribuent actuellement maints candidats, constituent double emploi et double dépense; on devrait confier ce travail au directeur général des élections et à ses délégués.

4. Dégrèvement fiscal: Comme nous l'avons dit plus haut, les dons faits aux partis politiques ou aux divers candidats jusqu'à concurrence de $100 seraient admissibles pour fins de dégrèvement fiscal.

c) DIVULGATION PAR LES ORGANES D'INFORMATION:

Pour s'assurer que le règlement sur l'utilisation des organes d'information n'est pas enfreint et que les candidats touchent le remboursement exact de leurs frais, on devrait exiger des stations et des réseaux de radio et de télévision, ainsi que des journaux et des périodiques, la présentation de rapports exposant en détail les émissions portant sur les élections, le nombre des réclames et les taux demandés. Seraient considérées comme délictueuses l'imposition de taux majorés dits «politiques» ou l'autorisation de taux privilé-

d) ENFORCEMENT AND CONTROL:

Compliance with the foregoing proposals will, of course, be impossible without—

a) Realistic and enforceable controls which, if breached, result in severe penalties;

b) A spirit of reform and co-operation among the parties and their officials.

It is not my intention in this paper to detail procedures as to how the proposals suggested in this section should be enforced. Suffice it to say the present regulations have been violated for as long as they have been in existence. No serious attempt has ever been made to enforce them and, in fact, under present legislation, action seeking to redress infractions of the rules has to be initiated by concerned members of the general public at their own expense.

The present lax approach cannot help but encourage evasion. Procedures must be devised for official regulation of election financing and reporting and the penalties which evasive or corrupt practices will merit must be suitably severe so as to discourage violation of the rules.

II. ELECTORAL REFORM—PROCEDURES

1. REGISTRATION OF VOTERS:

Much cooperative research has been done on the system of voter registration in democratic states.

In a recent appearance before the Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws, Professor R. C. Scammon, Director of the Election Research Centre of Government Affairs, Institute of Washington, gave as his opinion that an enumeration system such as we have in Canada, a continuous electoral roll system such as applies in Australia, or the permanent voters' list maintained in Britain—in fact any system which places upon the state apparatus the responsibility for ensuring that people get on the voters' lists—is more practical than one which depends on voluntary registration as is the case in the United States.

The present Canadian system—that of enumeration prior to each election—while providing a comparatively uncomplicated and giés pour un candidat ou un parti quelconque au cours de la campagne électorale.

d) APPLICATION ET SURVEILLANCE

Le respect des propositions qui précèdent ne pourra évidemment être assuré que par:

a) l'établissement de mesures réalistes, dont on puisse contrôler l'application et qui, en cas d'inobservation, entraînent de graves sanctions;

b) le maintien, au sein des partis et chez les représentants, d'un esprit de réforme et de collaboration.

Je n'ai pas l'intention d'exposer en détail, dans le présent mémoire, les modes d'application des propositions formulées dans le présent chapitre. Qu'il suffise de dire qu'il y a eu violation continue du règlement actuel depuis sa mise en vigueur. On n'a jamais tenté sérieusement d'en assurer l'observation; de fait, aux termes de la loi actuelle, il faut que les citoyens intéressés entreprennent, à leurs propres frais, les démarches nécessaires pour obtenir le redressement des infractions au règlement.

Trop laxiste, le régime actuel ne peut qu'inciter à la fraude. Il importe d'élaborer des méthodes en vue d'édicter un règlement officiel concernant le financement et la diffusion des élections; de plus, il faut enrayer les pratiques frauduleuses ou corruptrices, en prévoyant des peines assez sévères pour empêcher les infractions aux règlements.

II. LA RÉFORME ÉLECTORALE—PROCÉDURES

1. INSCRIPTION DES VOTEURS

On a fait beaucoup de recherches en collaboration au sujet de la méthode utilisée dans les États démocratiques pour l'inscription des voteurs.

Alors qu'il déposait récemment devant l'Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws (Comité ontarien des lois électorales), le professeur R. C. Scammon, directeur du Centre de recherche sur les élections de l'Institut des affaires gouvernementales, à Washington, a déclaré que le système d'énumération, méthode employée au Canada, le système de rôle électoral permanent, qui est appliqué en Australie, ou la liste permanente des électeurs, qu'on a établie en Grande-Bretagne, bref tout système qui confère à l'appareil de l'État la responsabilité de l'inscription des voteurs sur les listes électorales, est plus pratique que la méthode de l'inscription volontaire, comme on la trouve aux États-Unis.

Le système qui a cours actuellement au Canada—celui de l'énumération faite avant chaque élection—même s'il permet un relevé reasonably efficient method of registering the electorate, has certain shortcomings.

A prescribed period of time is necessary between the issuance of the writ and polling day to fulfil the statutory requirements of the Canada Elections Act pertaining to enumeration, preparation of lists and revision. The minimum 57 days required by the Chief Electoral Officer to perform his duties determines that any federal election campaign will be of at least two months duration, a period which many consider too long.

The requirement that an elector must vote in the poll where he has been enumerated has the effect of disfranchising those who move to new locations between enumeration and polling day. This situation was particularly apparent during the 1965 election when thousands of students who were enumerated at their home addresses in early September found themselves denied the privilege of voting in their university locales.

Perhaps the most glaring drawback and the one which produces the most comment concerns the Armed Forces vote. Lacking any system of absentee voting which would make provision for all those away from their homes on polling day to cast their ballot, the special treatment presently accorded the Armed Forces has the effect of singling out their voting patterns for special scrutiny.

Armed Forces personnel, no matter where they are located, cast their votes at any time during the week immediately preceding election day. When a man joins the forces he makes a declaration indicating the constituency to which he wishes his vote to be assigned. He may change that designation in January or February of any year, but at no other time. At the conclusion of the week of voting, all ballots, whether in Canada or abroad, are taken to four central headquarters at Halifax, Ottawa, Edmonton and London, England for counting. The tabulation of these votes is more complicated and necessitates a longer period than ordinary counting procedures, since each ballot must be assigned to the constituency designated by the serviceman in his declaration. As a result the tabulation of the Armed Forces vote is not made public until several days after the regular vote has been announced.

These procedures permit two inequities: First, the voting patterns of the Armed Forces are publicized in a way which applies to no other sector of the voting public; assez simple et raisonnablement efficace de l'ensemble des électeurs, comporte certaines lacunes.

Il importe de fixer un délai obligatoire entre la délivrance d'un bref et la date du scrutin, afin de satisfaire aux exigences statutaires de la Loi sur les élections au Canada en ce qui a trait à l'énumération, à l'établissement des listes et à la révision. D'après le délai minimum de 57 jours exigé par le directeur général des élections pour accomplir ses tâches, une campagne d'élections fédérales doit durer au moins deux mois, délai que beaucoup estiment trop long.

La condition selon laquelle un électeur doit voter au poll où il a été inscrit a pour effet de désavantager ceux qui déménagent entre la date de l'énumération et celle du scrutin. La chose fut particulièrement évidente au cours des élections de 1965, alors que des milliers d'étudiants ont été inscrits selon leur domicile au début de septembre, puis n'ont pas été admis à voter aux bureaux de leur université.

L'inconvénient le plus frappant et qui suscite le plus de commentaires est peut-être celui qui est lié au vote militaire. En l'absence de tout système de votation pour les absents, qui prévoirait la possibilité, pour ceux qui sont absents de leur foyer, le jour des élections, de donner leur vote, le traitement spécial accordé actuellement aux Forces armées ne témoigne que plus de la nécessité d'étudier leurs pratiques en ce qui concerne le vote.

Le personnel des Forces armées, en quelque endroit qu'il se trouve, dépose son vote n'importe quand au cours de la semaine qui précède immédiatement le jour des élections. En s'enrôlant, le militaire fait une déclaration indiquant le comté pour lequel il désire être inscrit. Il peut changer cette désignation en janvier ou en février, chaque année, mais uniquement à ces époques-là. A la fin de la semaine de votation, tous les votes, tant au Canada qu'à l'étranger, sont rassemblés dans quatre bureaux principaux; à Halifax, à Ottawa, à Edmonton et à Londres (Angleterre), à des fins de comptage. La compilation de ces votes est plus complexe; elle nécessite plus de temps que les procédures ordinaires de comptage, car chaque vote doit être rattaché au comté désigné par le militaire dans sa déclaration. Il en résulte que la compilation du vote militaire n'est rendue publique que plusieurs jours après l'annonce du vote régulier.

Ces procédures donnent lieu à deux injustices. D'abord, les modes de votation des Forces armées sont annoncées d'une manière qu'on ne retrouve dans nul autre secteur électoral; second, many service voters, often through ignorance, improperly register at the time of regular enumeration in the constituencies in which they happen to be stationed—even though their official registration is a matter of record on their signed declaration. On occasion this has resulted in a serviceman voting illegally in the wrong constituency. Mistakes in this latter category have occasioned a number of controverted elections in Canada, the most recent example being the contestation and subsequent by-election in the constituency of Comox-Alberni in April of this year.

In failing to provide a system of absentee voting, the Canadian system succeeds in disfranchising all Canadians out of the country on government business, i.e. diplomatic staff, trade commissioners, etc.

The British system of maintaining a permanent voters list allows for annual up-dating of the lists and a further period of revision. The new list comes into force on February 16th of each year and serves for all elections for a period of one year. Its greatest drawback is that no names can be added or removed during that period. Under the British system of registration, an election campaign can be limited to as little as three weeks.

The Continuous Electoral Roll system which applies in Australia received detailed study and analysis by Canada's Representation Commissioner during this review in 1967-68 of methods of registration of electors.

The Australian system makes registration compulsory, and the responsibility for enrolment rests directly on the elector. A complete review of the electoral rolls is carried out annually, between January and March, under the direction of permanent returning officers. Persons who move, marry, or come of age in the succeeding months are required to notify their returning officer within 21 days. Changes in the rolls are permitted up to and including the dates of issuance of the writ.

There are certain decided advantages in adopting a system of continuous electoral rolls:

a) It would eliminate the necessity of enumeration, thereby reducing the length of time our election machinery requires from approximately 60 to as little as 30 days.

deuxièmement, bon nombre de voteurs militaires, souvent par ignorance, s'inscrivent mal au moment de l'énumération régulière dans les comtés où ils sont cantonnés, même si leur inscription officielle constitue un élément intégrant de la déclaration qu'ils ont signée. Il en résulte parfois qu'un militaire a voté illégalement dans le mauvais comté. Les erreurs de cette dernière catégorie ont entraîné, au Canada, de nombreux cas d'élections controversées, l'exemple le plus récent étant celui de la contestation qui s'est produite, en avril dernier, dans le comté de Comox-Alberni et de l'élection complémentaire qui s'en est suivie.

En ne fournissant pas de système de vote pour les absents, le régime canadien finit par défavoriser les Canadiens qui se trouvent à l'étranger en service public commandé, c.-à-d. le personnel diplomatique, les délégués commerciaux, et le reste.

Le système anglais, qui prévoit le maintien d'une liste permanente des voteurs, permet la mise à jour annuelle des listes et une période de révision supplémentaire. La nouvelle liste entre en vigueur le 16 février de chaque année et sert à toutes les élections pendant une période d'un an. Son inconvénient le plus sérieux, c'est qu'on ne peut y ajouter de noms ni en enlever au cours de cette période. Sous le système anglais d'inscription, une campagne électorale peut être limitée à une durée aussi courte que trois semaines.

Le système de liste électorale permanente, qui a cours en Australie, a fait l'objet d'une analyse approfondie de la part du commissaire canadien à la représentation au cours de la présente étude des méthodes d'inscription électoral, qui a été faite en 1967-1968.

Le système australien rend l'inscription obligatoire, et ce sont les électeurs qui ont la responsabilité directe de leur consignment sur les rôles électoraux. Ceux-ci sont révisés complètement chaque année, entre janvier et mars, sous la direction des présidents d'élection permanents. Les personnes qui déménagent, se marient ou atteignent l'âge de voter au cours des mois qui suivent sont tenues de notifier leur président d'élection dans les 21 jours. Les modifications aux rôles sont permises jusqu'à la date de délivrance du bref d'élection inclusivement.

Il y a des avantages à adopter un système de rôles électoraux permanents:

a) On élimine ainsi la nécessité de faire l'énumération, et l'on réduit, partant, de 60 à 30 jours la période des formalités électorales. Sauf dans le cas de Terre-Neuve, où les campagnes de trois semai-

It has been my experience (except in Newfoundland where three-week campaigns are the rule rather than the exception) that the general public grows weary of political campaigning long before it reaches its conclusion. But whatever the reaction of the general public, it cannot be compared with the mental and physical strain to which party leaders, their aides, candidates and workers are subjected for the lengthy period of our present campaigns. I have often thought that some of the humane rules developed by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals should be applied to persons caught up in political campaigns.

b) Registration, with its built-in safeguards, would permit the introduction of absentee and postal voting procedures. Members of the Armed Forces, government personnel overseas, students, and invalids would be able to avail themselves of one or other of these processes, thereby correcting past injustices.

During the 1966 election in Australia, 10 per cent of the Electorate took advantage of these measures.

A number of arguments will be raised in opposition to the introduction of the Australian system to Canada:

a) Cost: It is estimated that the costs of maintaining continuous electoral rolls in Canada could run as high as $44,000,000 in a four year period, as compared with $14,428,000 spent in 1968 (or once every four years). However the cost of the present enumeration would be eliminated as would the salaries of hundreds of casual employees the present system necessitates. Furthermore, by a series of relatively minor amendments, federal and provincial regulations regarding voting age, rules of residence and poll boundaries could be brought into conformity, thus permitting the utilisation of the electoral rolls at both levels of government. If this were to be done, the cost of enumeration each time a provincial election is called would be eliminated.

However, cost cannot be equated in dollar terms alone. The saving in wear and tear on the persons on whom campaign responsibilities rest heaviest, also merits consideration.

b) Difficulty of keeping the rolls up to date: In his appearance before the House Committee on Election and Privileges, the Representation Commissioner esti-mes sont la règle, et non l'exception, mon expérience prouve que le public en général se lasse des campagnes politiques bien avant qu'elles ne soient terminées. Néanmoins, quelle que soit la réaction du grand public, elle ne se compare pas avec la tension physique et mentale à laquelle sont soumis les chefs de partis, leurs aides, les candidats et les collaborateurs pendant les interminables campagnes qu'on mène aujourd'hui. J'ai souvent pensé que certaines règles humanitaires élaborées par la Société protectrice des animaux devraient être appliquées aux personnes engagées dans les campagnes électorales.

b) L'inscription, grâce à ses garanties inhérentes de protection, permettrait l'introduction de procédures pour la votation en cas d'absence et par voie postale. Les membres des Forces armées, les fonctionnaires postés à l'étranger, les étudiants et les invalides utiliseraient l'un ou l'autre de ces moyens, et l'on redresserait ainsi les injustices passées. Au cours de l'élection de 1966 en Australie, 10 p. 100 des électeurs ont pu profiter de ces mesures.

Bon nombre d'objections seront soulevées pour empêcher l'introduction au Canada du système utilisé en Australie:

a) Le coût: On estime que les frais du maintien, au Canada, de rôles électoraux permanents pourraient atteindre 44 millions de dollars en une période de quatre ans, alors qu'il en a coûté $14,428,000 en 1968 (montant dépensé une fois tous les quatre ans). Toutefois, le coût de l'énumération qu'on fait actuellement serait éliminé, tout comme les salaires de centaines d'employés occasionnels qu'il faut embaucher en vertu du système actuel. De plus, par une série de modifications assez simples, les règlements fédéraux et provinciaux sur l'âge de voter, les conditions de résidence et les limites des polls pourraient être uniformisés, ce qui permettrait d'utiliser les rôles électoraux aux deux paliers de gouvernement. Advenant l'adoption de ces modifications, le coût de l'énumération, à chaque élection provinciale, serait éliminé. Néanmoins, le coût ne peut s'évaluer uniquement en argent. L'économie d'énergies, pour les personnes qui portent les plus lourdes responsabilités des campagnes électorales, est un aspect digne de considération.

b) La difficulté de tenir les rôles à jour: Déposant devant le Comité des élections et des privilèges, le commissaire à la représentation a indiqué, que chaque mated that approximately 25 per cent of Canada's population moves annually. This would necessitate approximately 2,500,000 changes on the rolls, if the Australian system were to apply here. There was some question on the part of the Committee as to whether methods could be devised to keep track accurately of all these changes. I would suggest that in this era of such astonishing electronic advancement, systems can be developed to cope with such a highly mobile population.

c) Time Factor: Some of the discussion during the Commissioner's appearance before the committee centered on the fact that sufficient time would not be allowed for candidates to be nominated and still "cover" their constituencies. While this might provide some hardship in a number of our large rural ridings, improved methods of transportation and communication will render this objection increasingly less relevant.

We are told by the Representation Commissioner that the adaptation of the Australian system to Canada would be administratively feasible, and I for one would welcome its acceptance.

2. PARTY NAME ON BALLOT:

Recognition of the legal status of political parties, as proposed in Section 1, paves the way for inclusion of the candidates party affiliation on the ballot. Numerous instances can be cited where substantial sums of money have been spent in an effort to identify the candidate with his party; the fact that such expenditures have not always achieved their goal is attested to by the fact that many voters seek assistance at the poll in relating candidates to parties. Party affiliation on the ballot would obviate such queries. The frequent mistakes made by voters who, in the privacy of the poll, are unable to remember the name of their party's candidate and gamble wildly when placing their "X" would be eliminated, as would the confusion caused by candidates with similar names.

3. VOTING AGE:

Provincial and federal jurisdictions in Canada exhibit an ambivalent approach to the age at which persons are eligible to vote. To qualify as a voter in a federal campaign, a person must be 21 years of age.

année, environ 25 p. 100 de la population du Canada se déplace. Il faudrait ainsi apporter quelque 2,500,000 modifications aux rôles, si l'on adoptait ici le système australien. Le Comité a exprimé des doutes quant à la possibilité de consigner correctement toutes ces modifications. Je crois que, dans notre ère de progrès électroniques étonnants, il y a moyen de mettre au point des méthodes permettant de relever convenablement ces déplacements de population.

c) Le facteur temps: Les délibérations qui ont accompagné la déposition du Commissaire devant le Comité ont porté notamment sur le temps dont disposent les candidats entre la période précédant leur nomination et la visite de leurs comtés. Certes, la chose comporte de grandes difficultés dans un certain nombre de nos grands comtés ruraux; néanmoins, l'amélioration des moyens de transport et de communication rendra cette objection de moins en moins pertinente.

Selon les dires du commissaire à la représentation, l'adoption par le Canada du système australien est concevable sur le plan administratif; pour ma part, je ne peux que la souhaiter.

2. INSCRIPTION DU NOM DU PARTI SUR LE BULLETIN DE VOTE

Du fait de la reconnaissance, proposée dans le chapitre 1^{er}, du statut légal des partis politiques, il deviendra possible d'indiquer, sur les bulletins de vote, l'allégeance politique des candidats. Comme on pourrait le démontrer par de nombreux exemples, d'importantes sommes d'argent ont été dépensées pour tâcher de consigner solidairement le candidat et son parti. Que ces dépenses n'aient pas toujours atteint leur but, c'est ce dont témoigne le fait que nombre d'électeurs demandent l'aide des employés des polls pour déterminer l'allégeance des candidats. En indiquant celle-ci sur le bulletin de vote, on supprimerait des demandes de ce genre. On éliminerait les fréquentes erreurs commises par les électeurs qui, dans le secret du poll, sont incapables de se souvenir du nom du candidat de leur parti et inscrivent leur croix à tout hasard; de plus, ce serait la fin de la confusion qu'engendre une ressemblance de noms chez les candidats.

3. L'ÂGE DE VOTER

Les administrations provinciales et fédérales se font, au Canada, une conception double de l'âge auquel les gens ont droit de vote. S'il s'agit d'une campagne fédérale, le voteur doit avoir 21 ans. Quant aux provinces, l'âge

The provinces vary as follows: B.C., 19; Alta., 19; Sask., 18; Man., 21 (Legislation is now before the House to reduce the age to 18); Ont., 21 (An unofficial statement by Premier Robarts indicates the voting age will be lowered to 18); Que., 18; N.B., 21 (A recent referendum rejected the proposal that the voting age be lowered); N.S., 21; P.E.I., 18; Nfld., 19.

In Britain a Committee on the Age of Majority under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Latey recently recommended that the age of majority to be reduced to 18. While this proposal has not yet been enacted into law, it no doubt was a determining factor in the decision of Prime Minister Wilson to introduce a bill which will, if passed, lower the voting age in Britain to 18.

I am firmly convinced that the growing and significant participation of young people in the decision-making processes at school, at university and in community activities is recommendation enough that the voting age be reduced to 18 in federal elections.

4. AMENDMENTS TO BROADCASTING REGULATIONS:

From time to time legislation is enacted to meet specific situations, only to remain in effect long after the need for such legislation has any relevance. Certain broadcasting regulations fall into this category and should be amended or repealed:

a) "Black-out" regulations should be made consistent with other branches of the media.

At the present time, the Canadian Elections Act provides for a black-out on all election programming on the ordinary polling day and on the two days immediately preceding it. The Broadcast Act, on the other hand reduces the ban to the day of and the day preceding the vote. In addition, the Broadcast Act prohibits the dissemination of any material of a politically partisan nature on the day of and the day preceding any municipal, provincial or federal campaign with the result that elections in one jurisdiction prevent the airing of political material specifically prepared for other jurisdictions, if campaigns are being waged concurrently.

These conflicting regulations, which increasingly are being violated, suggest to me that broadcasters should be given the same latitude as the print media, namely, de voter varie comme suit: C.-B., 19; Alb., 19; Sask., 18; Man., 21 (Le Parlement étudie actuellement un projet de loi visant à réduire cet âge à 18 ans); Ont., 21 (Selon une déclaration officielle du premier ministre Robarts, l'âge de voter sera abaissé à 18 ans); Qué., 18; N.-B., 21 (À l'occasion d'un récent référendum, on a rejeté la proposition visant à baisser l'âge de voter); N.-É., 21; Î.P.-É., 18; T.-N., 19.

En Grande-Bretagne, le comité chargé d'étudier l'âge de majorité, présidé par le juge Latey, a recommandé récemment que l'on abaisse la majorité à 18 ans. Même si cette proposition n'a pas encore été adoptée par une mesure législative, elle n'en a pas moins constitué un facteur déterminant de la décision du premier ministre Wilson, qui entend présenter un projet de loi dont l'adoption abaisserait l'âge de voter, en Grande-Bretagne, à 18 ans.

J'ai la ferme conviction que la participation de plus en plus générale et active des jeunes à la prise de décisions au niveau scolaire et universitaire ainsi qu'au sein de la collectivité constitue en elle-même une recommandation pour que l'âge de participation aux élections fédérales soit ramené à 18 ans.

4. MODIFICATIONS AUX RÈGLEMENTS SUR LA RADIODIFFUSION

De temps en temps, certaines lois sont adoptées pour répondre à des besoins précis mais, en définitive, demeurent en vigueur longtemps après qu'elles n'ont plus de raison d'être. Un certain nombre de règlements sur la radiodiffusion se classent dans cette catégorie, et doivent être modifiés ou abrogés:

a) Les règlements concernant les périodes de black-out devraient être conformes à ceux qui sont en vigueur dans les autres secteurs de cette industrie.

À l'heure actuelle, la Loi électorale du Canada exige une période de black-out pour tous les programmes à caractère électoral le jour même des élections ainsi que les deux jours qui le précèdent. La Loi sur la radiodiffusion, par contre, réduit cette interdiction au jour du vote et à celui qui le précède. En outre, cette Loi interdit la diffusion de tout programme politique faisant preuve d'esprit de parti le jour et la veille de toute campagne municipale, provinciale ou fédérale; il en résulte que les élections tenues dans un secteur empêchent l'écoute d'émissions politiques spécialement destinées à d'autres secteurs lorsque les campagnes sont menées concurremment.

Ces règlements contradictoires, de moins en moins respectés, me portent à croire que les radiodiffuseurs devraient bénéficier de la même latitude accordée à that all blackout restrictions be withdrawn except for purposes of transmitting election results.

b) The Broadcast Act prohibits appeals for funds by political parties. Political parties should and must have the right and the means to educate the public to the realities of political party finance. The sooner we overcome our inhibitions in this regard and launch a public dialogue which will include the solicitation of funds through the media, the better it will be for the party and probably for the electorate.

c) More stringent enforcement of the regulations prohibiting the use of foreign stations by political parties or candidates or their supporters is recommended, to prevent any repetition of the use made by the Liberal Party of the Buffalo station in the 1962 and 1963 campaigns.

III. REFORM OF POLITICAL PARTIES

As a person who believes that healthy political parties are essential to our democratic system I am becoming increasingly alarmed at the growing numbers of people who feel that political parties are no longer relevant. I have no scientific data to support this statement—only the opinions expressed by many persons, young and old, with whom I have discussed the subject.

Much of the critical comment directed to parties is unfair—but it exists. Some of it stems from ignorance of the political party system, some from lack of interest in the Canadian political scene, but much of it results directly from the fact that political parties have been unnecessarily secretive about their operations. At a time when candor and openness are becoming prevalent characteristics of society, political evasion is equated with shame and pretense.

The credibility gap which exists between the party activists' view and the general public's view of political parties must not only be acknowledged, it must be bridged.

The motivation behind the proposals presented in the foregoing section has been a) to ameliorate existing inequities in our electoral practices, and b) to do it in a manner that will make political parties more viable and relevant agents in today's society.

la presse, c'est-à-dire que toutes les restrictions concernant le black-out soient levées, à l'exception de la diffusion des résultats d'élections.

b) La Loi sur la radiodiffusion interdit la sollicitation de fonds par les partis politiques. Ces derniers devraient avoir le droit et les moyens de mettre le public au courant du financement des partis politiques. Plus tôt lèverons l'interdit à cet égard en amorçant un dialogue avec le public incluant la sollicitation de fonds par l'entremise de la radiodiffusion, le mieux ce sera pour les partis politiques et probablement pour l'électorat.

c) On recommande une application plus rigide des règlements qui interdisent aux partis politiques et à leurs candidats ou partisans l'usage de stations étrangères, afin d'éviter toute répétition de la situation provoquée par le Parti libéral qui utilisa le poste de télévision de Buffalo au cours des campagnes de 1962 et de 1963.

III. RÉFORME DES PARTIS POLITIQUES

En tant qu'individu qui croit que des partis politiques actifs sont un élément essentiel de notre système démocratique, je suis de plus en plus inquiet du nombre toujours croissant de personnes qui jugent que ces partis n'ont plus leur raison d'être. Je ne possède aucune donnée scientifique pour supporter cette affirmation, si ce n'est l'opinion exprimée par de nombreuses personnes de tous les âges avec qui j'ai eu l'occasion d'en discuter.

La majeure partie des critiques formulées à l'égard des partis politiques sont injustes, mais sont néanmoins exprimées. Certaines découlent d'une mauvaise connaissance des structures d'un parti, d'autres dénotent un manque d'intérêt dans la scène politique canadienne, mais la plupart sont imputables au fait que les partis politiques ont fait preuve d'une discrétion superflue quant à leur gestion. A une époque où la bonne foi et la franchise deviennent des caractéristiques de bon ton dans la société, les faux-fuyants politiques équivalent au scandale et à la simulation.

Le fossé de méfiance qui existe entre l'opinion du militant de parti et celle du grand public au sujet des partis politiques doit être non seulement reconnu, mais aussi comblé.

Deux motifs ont présidé à l'élaboration des propositions formulées ci-dessous: a) réduire les injustices qui existent actuellement dans nos pratiques électorales, et b) y parvenir de manière que les partis politiques deviennent des auxiliaires plus viables et plus utiles dans notre société.

I have proposed a more candid and open approach in the belief that knowledge and familiarity dispel suspicion. The opening of the political purse to public inspection will educate the electorate to the realities of political finance. It will show beyond any shadow of doubt that whatever the financial situation in election periods, political parties exist on a hand to mouth basis most of the time. The Liberal Party, even while in power, seriously considered closing its national offices because of the lack of funds; the Conservative Party has laboured under the burden of heavy debts for months at a time. Such knowledge would provide an antidote to the belief that large sums of money are readily available to political parties in exchange for political patronage. The time is long past when that hoary myth should be laid to rest, but it can only be done by making the facts available.

I have proposed a realistic approach to limitations on political income and expenditure to avoid past practices of open toleration of abuses. Hypocrisy on the part of political parties and cynicism on the part of the public would diminish if not disappear.

A more equitable approach to campaign expenditures would allow persons, for whom the high cost of elections has previously proven a deterrent, to offer themselves as candidates. The subsidization of certain campaign expenses and the shortening of the length of the campaign would ease the burden on the individual candidate who too often in the past has found himself saddled with substantial election debts.

Incentives offered contributors by way of income tax deductions would hopefully result in larger sums being made available for the development of comprehensive party programs, the establishment of adequately staffed research bureaus and other major necessities in between election periods. In the past such measures have been hopelessly inadequate—not through any absence of good intentions, but because human and financial resources were lacking.

But the foregoing proposals in themselves will not produce an improvement in public attitudes toward political parties. More is required than just a willingness to be candid and fair.

Have the parties recognized the fact—are they willing to recognize the fact—that they must adapt to meet the changing needs of society? When a person says to me, as one did recently, "What's a party for and who cares?" I, for one, am concerned that parties are fail-

Étant convaincu que la connaissance dissipe le doute, j'ai proposé une méthode plus ouverte et plus franche. La mise à jour de la caisse d'un parti politique aux fins de vérification publique permettra de renseigner l'électorat sur les réalités du financement d'un parti. Cette façon de procéder démontrera sans l'ombre d'un doute que quelle que soit la situation financière en période électorale, les partis politiques vivent presque toujours au jour le jour. Même au pouvoir, le parti Libéral a sérieusement considéré la fermeture de ses bureaux nationaux en raison du manque de fonds; le parti Conservateur a dû faire face à de lourdes dettes durant des périodes de plusieurs mois. De telles réalités offriraient un démenti à la croyance qui veut que d'importantes sommes d'argent sont mises à la disposition des partis politiques en échange de faveurs politiques. Il y a longtemps que ce mythe séculaire devrait être enterré, mais on ne peut le faire disparaître qu'en mettant les choses au clair.

J'ai proposé un moyen réaliste de limiter les revenus et les dépenses des partis politiques afin d'éviter l'ancienne et flagrante tolérance des abus. L'hypocrisie des partis politiques et le cynisme du public s'atténueraient, ou peut-être même disparaîtraient.

Une perspective plus juste des dépenses électorales permettrait à certaines personnes, jusque là retenues par le coût prohibitif d'une campagne électorale, de se porter candidates. Des subventions accordées pour certaines dépenses électorales et un raccourcissement de la durée de la campagne soulagerait le candidat qui a trop souvent, par le passé, subi le fardeau de dettes d'élection considérables.

Des primes offertes aux contribuables sous forme de déductions d'impôts pourraient permettre de recueillir des fonds plus considérables pour l'élaboration de programmes d'ensemble, l'établissement de bureaux de recherche mieux dotés en personnel et autres nécessités qui pourraient se présenter entre les périodes d'élection. Ce genre de mesure a été jusqu'à présent irrémédiablement insuffisant, non pas par manque de bonne volonté, mais par manque de ressources humaines et financières.

En elles-mêmes, les mesures déjà citées n'apporteront cependant pas un changement d'attitude du public envers les partis politiques. Le désir de franchise et de loyauté n'est pas suffisant.

Est-ce que les partis ont reconnu, ou vont-ils reconnaître, qu'ils doivent s'adapter aux exigences nouvelles de la société? Lorsqu'on me dit, comme je l'ai entendu récemment, «quelle est l'utilité d'un parti politique et qui s'en soucie?», je suis personnellement inquiet ing to meet the needs of the society they claim to serve.

Should we not be reminding ourselves that because of their special position in the democratic system, a more significant contribution is required of political parties than of other groups?

What is the role of the political party generally seen to be, and what might it become?

The political party is generally assumed to be one among the many voluntary associations in society, that is, one of a number of private groups as distinguished from public bodies.

But in effect, the political party differs in degree as well as in scope from groups which exist to foster special interests or unite common concerns such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Boy Scouts' Association.

The political party is a voluntary association insofar as its members are recruited voluntarily from all segments of society, but its interests extend to all aspects of social and economic concern. Its status is quasi-public as compared with the private interest groups one usually associates with the term "voluntary association".

The recommendations I have suggested in preceding section, e.e., disclosure, limitation and subsidization, would have the effect of making the political party an even more public body, and the recommendations for new and extended activities outlined below, emphasizing the social function of the political party, will further serve to distinguish it from other special interest groups.

The political party is generally acknowledged to have two principal functions—political and legislative. I would suggest that the time has come to add a new dimension—the social function.

The political function involves the recruitment of party candidates, and participation in the electoral process. All too often the public impression of the political party association is that its activities begin and end with the nomination of candidates, the provision of election machinery, and the dissemination of party literature. Valuable as these exercises are, party associations deserve to be regarded as something more than robots turned on for action every four years to get their candidates elected, or as mere echo chambers of the party line.

It must be acknowledged; however, that this assumption on the part of the public is based on more than idle speculation. It is true de voir que ces organismes n'ont pas réussi à répondre aux besoins de la société qu'ils prétendent servir.

Ne devrions-nous pas nous rappeler qu'en raison de leur position particulière au sein d'un système démocratique, les partis politiques se doivent d'apporter une contribution plus marquée que les autres groupes?

Quel semble être le rôle général d'un parti politique, et que pourrait-il devenir?

En général, on suppose que le parti politique est un des nombreux organismes bénévoles d'une collectivité, c'est-à-dire un des éléments du groupe des organismes privés par opposition au groupe des organismes publics.

Cependant, le parti politique est en réalité différent, tant en importance qu'en envergure, des organismes chargés d'encourager ou de coordonner les divers intérêts spéciaux ou communs, soit par exemple l'Association des manufacturiers canadiens, la Chambre de commerce du Canada, ou l'Association des boys-scouts.

Le parti politique est une association bénévole dans la mesure où ses membres sont des volontaires recrutés dans toutes les couches de la société, mais ses intérêts touchent tous les secteurs de la vie sociale et économique. Ses statuts sont pratiquement publics, par comparaison aux organismes privés généralement associés à la notion d'«association bénévole».

Les recommandations formulées précédemment, soit mise à jour, restriction et subventions, rendraient le parti politique encore plus démocratique, et les nouvelles propositions à plus grande portée indiquées ci-dessous, mettant l'accent sur le rôle social du parti, contribueront à mieux distinguer ce dernier des autres organismes à intérêts particuliers.

Il est généralement reconnu que le parti politique possède un double rôle: politique et législatif. Je suggère que le moment est venu d'en ajouter un troisième, soit un rôle social.

Le rôle politique comprend le recrutement des candidats et la participation au mécanisme électoral. Le public a trop souvent l'impression que le rôle du parti politique est restreint à la nomination de candidats, à la mise au point de la machine électorale et à la diffusion de la propagande du parti. Sans vouloir dénigrer l'utilité de ces initiatives, les associations politiques ne doivent pas être considérées comme de simples robots mis en marche tous les quatre ans pour assurer l'élection de leurs candidats, ou comme de simples porte-parole de la politique du parti.

Il faut cependant reconnaître que cette impression du public est fondée sur autre chose que de vaines spéculations. Il est vrai that many constituency associations come alive only during election periods. Between elections they lie dormant, with such activity as does exist centering around small executives which lack the resources to rouse their membership from lethargy.

What I am proposing is that the party association ought not to be regarded simply as a vote-getting machine; it has a special responsibility in its legislative function to ensure the continued well-being of our democratic system.

Other speakers in this stream will be dealing at length with the relationship between parties and the parliamentary process. My concern is with the legislative function of the extra-parliamentary party, and the degree of participation in the decision-making processes accorded the host of Canadians who identify themselves as party activists; for the degree to which they are involved will reflect the viability of the party as an ongoing institution.

The term "participatory democracy", coined long before Mr. Trudeau made his debut on the political stage, has lost some of its impact through over-usage. But this does not diminish the importance of the concept. Conferences such as this one, and similar conferences being held later this year by the New Democratic and Liberal parties, provide unique opportunities for the general membership to become involved in the discussion and formulation of policy, but one is still prone to question the degree to which such conferences represent the varied interests of the party. Policy conferences should be organized not only at the national, but at regional and constituency levels; and they should bring together not just the elite but the so-called "rank and file".

The extra-parliamentary membership must be involved in the discussion and formulation of policy, not only because it will provide them with a raison d'être for existence other than in election periods, but also because it will better equip them to meet their responsibility as political educators. I said earlier that the democratic system imposes on political parties the obligation to inform the electorate of the issues and to propose solutions to domestic and national problems. This would be impossible of realization if the burden were to fall solely on our 264 Members of Parliament. The extra-parliamentary party must shoulder its share of this responsibility.

en effet que, dans de nombreuses circonscriptions, les associations ne sont actives qu'en périodes électorales. Entre temps, elles demeurent en veilleuse; la seule activité se concentre autour de bureaux de faible envergure qui ne possèdent pas les moyens nécessaires pour secouer leurs membres de leur léthargie.

Je propose que l'association de parti ne soit pas uniquement considérée comme une machine électorale; de par ses fonctions législatives, elle est particulièrement responsable d'assurer le salut de notre régime démocratique.

A ce sujet, d'autres personnes traiteront en détails du rapport entre les partis et le système parlementaire. Je suis intéressé par le rôle législatif du parti extra-parlementaire, et par le degré de participation à la prise de décisions accordée à la foule de Canadiens qui se qualifient de militants; en effet, leur degré de participation reflètera la viabilité du parti comme organisme agissant.

L'expression «démocratie de participation», créée bien avant l'arrivée de M. Trudeau sur la scène politique, a perdu de sa signification par un usage excessif. Son importance n'en est cependant pas diminuée pour autant. Des conférences comme celle-ci et autres réunions analogues qui seront tenues au cours de l'année par le Nouveau parti démocratique et par le parti Libéral, offrent à l'ensemble de leurs membres une occasion unique dans le domaine de la discussion et de l'élaboration de lignes de conduite; toutefois, on est enclin à se demander jusqu'à quel point ces conférences représentent les divers intérêts du parti. Ces conférences devraient être organisées non seulement à l'échelle nationale, mais également au palier de la région et de la circonscription; elles ne devraient pas réunir uniquement l'élite du parti, mais aussi le reste des militants.

Les membres extra-parlementaires doivent être inclus dans les discussions et l'élaboration des lignes de conduite, non seulement parce que ces initiatives leur donneront une raison d'exister en d'autres temps qu'en période électorale, mais aussi parce que cela leur permettra de mieux préparer leur rôle d'éducateurs politiques. J'ai déjà dit que le régime démocratique obligeait les partis à informer l'électorat sur les diverses questions et à proposer des solutions aux problèmes locaux et nationaux. Cette tâche serait irréalisable si elle incombait uniquement aux 264 députés. La section extra-parlementaire du parti doit assurer sa quote-part de cette responsabilité.

But this is not possible unless the party officials realistically encourages the development of a communications system which permits the upward as well as the downward flow of information for purposes of decision-making.

The argument can be made that this is not the case at present. Habits of conformity and subservience dominate political gatherings. Dissent, rather than being encouraged as a means of focussing awareness, is equated with disloyalty. The views of the party hierarchy are accepted without question. Authoritarian attitudes inhibit grass roots activity. When was the last time a constituency association spoke out publicly, not as individuals but as a political group, on matters of concern to its community?

And yet, should not the party association be continually aware that as the group responsible for the initial steps in the democratic process, it has a special obligation to take a stand on matters of public concern. Do we fear that public statements, however constructively critical they may be, may result in controversy? We need to remind ourselves that public comment on legislative action or inaction will come, be it from political opponents or the media. Would not governments be equally as well-served if their political associates were as alert as their political opponents in voicing their concern about situations which call for redress, and in pressing for solutions? It is not the charge of creating tensions within the party structure that disturbs me, so much as the fear that by their lack of action within the community political parties will become increasingly irrelevant.

Which leads me to urge that political parties should assume a social function that will facilitate the creation, through involvement and study, of a public consciousness. What I am suggesting is that parties develop a new role at the constituency level as action groups involved in and concerned with all kinds of social issues—poverty, drugs, law reform, housing, penal reform, status of minority groups, etc.

In a moving address to the General Synod of the Anglican Church at Sudbury in July, Bishop Dean of Cariboo warned that without a radical reform in its structures, the church may have as little as ten years of survival.

Mais cela ne peut être possible que si les dirigeants du parti encouragent véritablement la mise au point d'un réseau de communication permettant un flot pendulaire de renseignements aux fins d'une prise de décision éventuelle.

On peut prétendre que ce n'est pas le cas à l'heure actuelle. Une attitude de soumission domine les congrès politiques. Au lieu d'être encouragée comme une voix de la conscience, la dissension est qualifiée de déloyauté. Les opinions des dirigeants du parti sont acceptées sans discussion. L'attitude autoritaire entrave l'activité fondamentale. Quelle est la dernière fois qu'une association d'une circonscription s'est prononcée publiquement sur des questions intéressant l'ensemble de sa collectivité, non pas à titre personnel mais en qualité de groupe politique?

Cependant, est-ce que l'association du parti ne devrait pas être toujours consciente, en tant que groupe responsable des premiers échelons du régime démocratique, qu'elle a une obligation particulière de se prononcer sur des questions d'intérêt public? Avons-nous peur que les déclarations publiques, quel que puisse être le degré de critique constructive, puissent entraîner une controverse? Nous devons nous rappeler que la critique de notre action ou de notre inaction politique se fera connaître, qu'elle émane de nos adversaires politiques ou du public en général. Est-ce que les gouvernements ne bénéficieraient pas des mêmes avantages si leurs associés politiques faisaient preuve de la même vigilance que leurs adversaires en exprimant leurs inquiétudes au sujet de certains problèmes et en exigeant la prise de mesures qui s'imposent pour les résoudre? A cet égard, je suis plus inquiet de voir les partis politiques devenir de plus en plus inutiles par suite de leur manque d'initiative au sein de la collectivité que de les voir aux prises avec des tensions internes.

Cela m'amène à insister sur le fait que les partis politiques devraient assumer un rôle social qui, par l'entremise de mesures pratiques et théoriques, faciliterait l'éclosion d'une prise de conscience du public. Je propose donc que les partis jouent un nouveau rôle dans le cadre de la circonscription; sous forme de groupes d'action, ils pourraient être engagés dans toutes sortes de problèmes sociaux: pauvreté, drogues, réforme juridique, habitation, réforme pénale, statuts des groupes minoritaires, et ainsi de suite.

Dans une émouvante allocution prononcée devant les délégués au Synode générale de l'Église anglicane, tenu à Sudbury en juillet, l'évêque Dean, de Cariboo, a déclaré qu'à moins d'une réforme radicale de ses structu-

The church, it would appear, is more conscious of the danger inherent in Bishop Dean's warning than are political parties of a similar fate. There is more evidence of radical change in the church in the past five years than in the preceding one hundred. Do political parties think they have reason to escape the fate to which the church has been alerted?

There is a growing danger to political parties that pressure groups, protest movements, student activists, social planning councils, will so establish themselves as agent of social change that parties will have little room to manoeuvre. Many already feel there is so little genuine radicalism inside the party system that anyone wishing to change must look elsewhere.

Unless parties adapt to meet the needs of a changing society—unless party associations become more actively involved in the life of the community—unless we recognize that the need is pressing and the time ripe for the role of constituency associations to evolve into something new and uniquely different—then the day may not be far off when the community will question, with some justification, the privilege of small groups, bearing party labels, to foist their choice of candidates on the electorate.

It seems to me that in order to retain this privilege, which is the essence of their being, Canada's political parties must become much more a part of our "aware" society by assuming this whole new function and structure that I have outlined. Change is rendering many practices obsolete, making the need for new functions more obvious.

I firmly believe that political parties have a unique opportunity to deliver politics back to the people, not through any huckster attempt at a "new" politics, but by means of a "concerned" politics.

I said earlier that essential to the democratic system as we know it is the maintenance of a healthy party system. But I doubt that parties today are in a state of robust health. They are afflicted chronically by apathy, ennui, inertia, anaemia. Total immersion in the life of the community can provide an antidote.

res, l'Église pourrait être appelée à disparaître dans une décennie.

Il semble que l'Église est plus consciente du danger pressenti par les déclarations de l'évêque Dean que ne le sont les partis politiques devant un sort analogue. L'Église a fait place à plus de changements radicaux durant les cinq dernières années qu'elle n'en a connus au cours du siècle écoulé. Est-ce que les partis politiques ont des raisons de croire qu'ils peuvent échapper au danger qui menace l'Église?

Les groupes de pression, les mouvements de protestation, les activistes des mouvements d'étudiants et les conseils de planification sociale qui font figure de champions de l'évolution sociale présentent un danger croissant pour les partis politiques qui n'auront plus qu'un terrain de manoeuvre restreint. Déjà, nombreux sont ceux qui pensent qu'il existe si peu de véritable radicalisme au sein d'un parti que toute personne éprise de changements doit chercher ailleurs.

A moins que les partis ne se conforment aux exigences d'une société en pleine évolution, à moins que les associations politiques ne prennent une part plus active à la vie de la collectivité, et à moins que nous ne reconnaissons qu'il existe un pressant besoin et que le moment est opportun pour modifier les associations des circonscriptions en leur donnant un rôle à la fois nouveau et totalement différent, il est possible qu'avant peu de temps, la collectivité mette en doute, non sans raison, le privilège accordé à de petits groupes portant les couleurs d'un parti politique d'imposer leurs candidats aux électeurs.

Il me semble qu'en vue de maintenir ce privilège, qui est à l'origine même de leur existence, les partis politiques canadiens doivent s'intégrer beaucoup plus solidement à notre société «vigilante» en assumant cette fonction et cette structure entièrement nouvelles que je viens d'expliquer. Les changements entraînent la désuétude de nombreux usages et soulignent la nécessité de nouvelles fonctions.

Je suis persuadé que les partis se voient offrir l'occasion unique de rendre la politique au peuple, non pas par quelque manoeuvre visant à établir une «nouvelle» politique, mais au moyen d'une politique «agissante».

J'ai dit précédemment que le maintien d'une saine structure politique était essentiel au régime démocratique que nous connaissons. Je doute cependant que les partis jouissent à l'heure actuelle d'une bonne santé. Ils sont touchés par une apathie, un ennui, une inertie et une anémie chroniques. Une immersion totale dans la vie de la collectivité peut se révéler un bon antidote.

In summary, I suggest that the development of this new social function will exert a positive influence on the political and legislative functions of parties. Consider for a moment the interrelatedness of these functions.

A well-developed social function at the community level would contribute to a more effective exercising of the legislative function in that the increased volume of communication between the parliamentary and extra-parliamentary groups would create a greater awareness of and a greater sensitivity to social issues on the part of the elected bodies, thereby providing sounder bases for decision-making.

Concurrently, this wider involvement would lead to an ongoing interest in party activity so that it would no longer be necessary for the political function to be cranked up for election periods only—it would be operative on a year-round basis. The political function would be further affected in that the need for costly and intensive election campaigns would diminish as the role, and therefore the public awareness of party activity, increases. And, most important, this new dimension of party involvement would serve to attract and recruit potential candidates and leadership material which otherwise might go unrecognized.

Pour récapituler, je soutiens que la mise au point de ce nouveau rôle social exercera une bonne influence sur les fonctions politiques et législatives des partis. Arrêtez-vous un instant pour étudier la corrélation entre ces diverses fonctions.

Un rôle social bien développé au niveau de la collectivité permettrait d'exercer plus efficacement les fonctions législatives, étant donné que des relations plus étroites entre les parlementaires et les groupes extra-parlementaires entraîneraient chez les élus une meilleure prise de conscience et un plus grand intérêt dans le domaine des problèmes sociaux, établissant ainsi une base plus solide pour la prise de décisions.

Parallèlement, cet engagement plus marqué entraînerait un regain d'intérêt dans l'activité du parti; c'est ainsi qu'il ne serait plus nécessaire de relancer l'action politique uniquement en période électorale, et qu'elle pourrait fonctionner à l'année longue. Cette action politique serait davantage touchée étant donné que la nécessité de campagnes coûteuses et intensives perdrait de l'importance au fur et à mesure de l'augmentation du rôle, donc de la prise de conscience, de l'activité du parti. En outre, et ceci revêt une extrême importance, cet engagement d'une nouvelle envergure permettrait d'attirer et de recruter des candidats et des dirigeants éventuels qui auraient pu demeurer méconnus.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE
ON

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 6

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1969

LE JEUDI 11 DÉCEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

La Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir Procès-verbaux)

STANDING COMMITTEE
ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman

and Messrs.

M. Ovide Laflamme
Mr. Steve Paproski

Président
Vice-président

et MM.

Mr. Alkenbrack,
Mr. Benjamin,
Mr. Code,
Mr. Côté (Richelieu),
Mr. Duquet,
Mr. Forest,

Mr. Forrestall,
Mr. Fortin,
Mr. Francis,
Mr. Howard (Skeena),
Mr. Howe,
Mr. Jerome

Mr. Lefebvre,
Mr. Macquarrie,
Mr. Marceau,
Mr. Murphy,
Mr. Richard,¹
Mr. Trudel—20.

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. VIRR,
Clerk of the Committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(4)(b),
¹ Mr. Richard replaced Mr. Cafik on Dec
11, 1969.

Suivant l'article 65(4)(b) du Règlement
¹ M. Richard remplace M. Cafik le 11 décembre 1969.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

THURSDAY, December 11, 1969

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be granted permission to sit in Toronto, Ontario, and that the necessary supporting staff do accompany the Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

Le président,
OVIDE LAFLAMME,
Chairman.

RAPPORT À LA CHAMBRE

Le JEUDI 11 décembre 1969

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections a l'honneur de présenter son

TROISIÈME RAPPORT

Le Comité recommande qu'il lui soit permis de siéger à Toronto (Ontario), et que le personnel de soutien nécessaire accompagne le Comité.

Respectueusement soumis,

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, December 11, 1969
(7)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11:10 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Code, Côté (Richelieu), Duquet ForreSTALL, Howard (Skeena), Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Murphy, Trudel (12).

Witness: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Committee resumed its study of the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Hamel outlined the supervisory powers assigned to the Representation Commissioner by the Canada Elections Act. After discussion thereon

On motion of Mr. Duquet,

The Committee agreed to recommend the restoration of powers to the Chief Electoral Officer and the withdrawal of supervisory powers from the Representation Commissioner.

On motion of Mr. Lefebvre,

Agreed,—That the Committee seek permission to sit in Toronto and that the necessary supporting staff do accompany the Committee.

On motion of Mr. Howard,

Agreed,—That the Steering Committee study the mechanics of inviting the public to submit briefs to the Committee in Toronto or elsewhere.

After further debate

The Committee adjourned at 12:15 p.m. until 11:00 a.m. Tuesday, December 16, 1969.

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le JEUDI 11 décembre 1969
(7)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit ce matin à 11 h. 10. Le président, M. Laflamme occupe le fauteuil.

Députés présents: MM. Code, Côté (Richelieu), Duquet, ForreSTALL, Howard (Skeena), Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Murphy, Trudel—(12).

Témoin: Le directeur général des élections, M. J.-M. Hamel.

Le Comité poursuit l'étude de la Loi électorale du Canada.

M. Hamel souligne les pouvoirs de surveillance attribués au Commissaire à la représentation aux termes de la Loi électorale du Canada.

A la suite de discussions sur ce sujet M. Duquet propose et Il est décidé—de recommander de rendre les pouvoirs au directeur général des élections et de les enlever au Commissaire à la représentation.

M. Lefebvre propose et

Il est décidé—que le Comité puisse siéger à Toronto et que le personnel de soutien nécessaire puisse l'accompagner.

M. Howard propose et

Il est décidé—que le Comité de direction étudie la façon dont on pourrait inviter le public à présenter des mémoires au Comité quand il siégera à Toronto et ailleurs au Canada.

Après d'autres délibérations

Le Comité ajourne la séance à 12 h. 15 jusqu'au mardi 16 décembre 1969 à 11 h.

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, December 11, 1963.

• 1113

The Chairman: Order, please. I see that we have a quorum for the purpose of taking evidence.

I think we should revert this morning to some of the items under discussion at previous meetings. Some have to do with the powers of the Chief Electoral Officer and the restoration of certain powers to him. As you may know, when Mr. Castonguay resigned as Chief Electoral Officer the House of Commons arranged that he act as Representation Commissioner, with power to ensure that everything worked well in the Chief Electoral Officer's office: I believe it would be appropriate if the Chief Electoral Officer we now have, Mr. Hamel, had precisely the same powers as the Chief Electoral Officer used to have. I believe that Mr. Castonguay already has recommended that his powers relating to the Chief Electoral Officer be abolished. Perhaps we could have some explanations from Mr. Hamel about this.

Mr. J. M. Hamel (Chief Electoral Officer): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Maybe it is not very appropriate for me to express an opinion on this—this is a major policy decision—but perhaps I could provide the Committee with some background information.

• 1115

In 1963, when the former Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Castonguay, became, by the Representation Commissioner Act, Representation Commissioner it was quite apparent that his successor as Chief Electoral Officer would have to come from outside his office. There was no heir apparent or presumptive in his office at that time. So the prospective incumbent being unknown at that time, the lawmakers decided to give Mr. Castonguay some supervisory responsibility over the conduct of elections.

Personally if I may express one opinion, I think this was a very wise decision on the part of the legislators because if there is an agency or an administrative body that cannot afford to break down at certain times it has

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 11 décembre 1963

Le président: A l'ordre! Je vois que nous avons quorum pour entendre les témoignages. Pour commencer, ce matin, je crois que nous devrions reprendre l'étude de certaines des questions dont il a été question lors des réunions précédentes. Quelques-unes avaient trait aux pouvoirs du directeur général des élections, et à la restauration de ses pouvoirs. Comme vous le savez, lorsque M. Castonguay a démissionné de son poste de directeur général des élections, la Chambre des communes l'a nommé commissaire à la représentation avec les pouvoirs voulus pour assurer que tout aille bien au bureau du directeur général des élections. Il serait à propos, je crois, que M. Hamel, nouveau directeur général des élections, ait précisément les mêmes pouvoirs que le directeur avait auparavant. Je crois que M. Castonguay a déjà recommandé que ses pouvoirs en rapport avec ceux du directeur général des élections soient abolis. Peut-être que M. Hamel pourrait nous donner certaines explications à ce sujet.

M. J.-M. Hamel (Directeur général des élections): Merci, monsieur le président. Peut-être n'est-il pas approprié que j'exprime une opinion à ce sujet, car s'il s'agit d'une décision de principe n'est-ce pas? Je puis toutefois vous donner quelques renseignements de base.

En 1963, lorsque l'ancien directeur général des élections, M. Castonguay est devenu commissaire à la représentation au titre de la Loi pertinente, il était évident que son successeur à la direction général des élections devait venir de l'extérieur de son bureau. Il n'y avait pas à l'époque d'héritier présomptif dans son bureau. Le successeur éventuel n'étant pas connu, à l'époque, les législateurs décidèrent de donner à M. Castonguay certains pouvoirs de surveillance à l'égard des élections.

Personnellement, si je puis exprimer une opinion, je crois que la décision de la Chambre était très judicieuse car s'il y a un organisme ou un corps administratif qui ne peut se permettre de tomber en panne à un to be the election machinery. By doing this the lawmakers more or less ensured that the next election would be conducted according to the same practices, the same general thinking as had been the case in the past since Mr. Castonguay had to make sure that everything would go smoothly.

[Text]

As for myself, I consider that I was extremely fortunate in having this opportunity to share Mr. Castonguay's experience and knowledge in that field. Without his constant advice and assistance I am sure that I never would have been able to absorb whatever knowledge I have been able to acquire over the past three and a half years. I think he was a very good professor.

Now the question is whether the present arrangement should be continued or whether the situation as it was in the past, before Mr. Castonguay was Representation Commissioner, when he was Chief Electoral Officer, should be restored.

Basically those powers include the discretionary powers to add additional election officers, to extend the periods for doing such things as enumeration and revision. It also includes the power to investigate alleged infractions to the Act and to prosecute. Basically, these are the main powers. In a nutshell, this is mainly covered in subsection (2) of Section 5 of the Canada Elections Act. Subsection (1), first of all, outlines the duties and powers of the Chief Electoral Officer, which are the same as they were in the past except that subsection (2) qualifies this as follows, and I quote:

(2) The Chief Electoral Officer shall, in the exercise of his powers and the performance of his duties referred to in subsection (1), be responsible to and act under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner.

So this is basically the situation at the moment.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): As one who was involved in an indirect way with the situation in the early sixties—I think Mr. Hamel said 1963—when the redistribution structure was established, I think what Mr. Hamel says is absolutely correct and reflective of the feeling and the desire at that time. And because we have always tried, and have been successful at it, to ensure that the operation of the Chief Electoral Officer's structure and office is one which reflects a non-partisan attitude on the part of Parliament, there always has been the activity of consultation and an attempt moment donné, c'est l'organisme électoral. Ce faisant, les législateurs se sont assurés que la prochaine élection, se ferait comme auparavant suivant les mêmes pratiques, dans le même optique général que par le passé et M. Castonguay devait s'assurer que tout irait bien.

[Interpretation]

Pour ma part, j'étais très heureux d'avoir l'occasion de partager l'expérience et les connaissances de M. Castonguay dans ce domaine. Sans ces conseils constants, et son assistance, je suis sûr que je n'aurais jamais pu absorber toutes les connaissances que j'ai pu acquérir depuis trois ans et demi. Je crois qu'il a été un excellent professeur.

Maintenant la question est de savoir si les dispositions actuelles devraient se poursuivre ou si la situation antérieure, avant que M. Castonguay ne devienne Commissaire à la représentation et alors qu'il était directeur général des élections, s'il faudrait la restaurer.

Fondamentalement, ces pouvoirs comprennent les pouvoirs discrétionnaires d'ajouter des directeurs du scrutin, de prolonger la durée de certaines choses, comme l'énumération et la revision. Ils comprennent aussi le pouvoir d'examiner les présumées violations de la loi et de prendre des mesures judiciaires. Voilà les principaux pouvoirs, en un mot, cela se trouve dans le paragraphe 2 de l'article 5 de la Loi électorale du Canada qui se lit comme suit:

(2) Le directeur général des élections est comptable au commissaire de l'exercice de ses pouvoirs et de l'accomplissement de ses fonctions, que mentionne le paragraphe (1), et il doit agir sous la direction et la surveillance du commissaire.

Voilà essentiellement la situation à l'heure actuelle.

Le président: M. Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): Ayant été directement mêlé à la situation au début des années 60—M. Hamel a parlé des années 1963—lors de la redistribution de la carte électorale, ce que M. Hamel a dit est absolument exact et reflète les désirs et les aspirations à l'époque, parce que nous nous sommes toujours efforcés avec le plus de succès possible de nous assurer que les structures et les rouages du bureau électoral ne reflètent pas une attitude partisane de la part du Parlement... Il y a toujours eu des consultations et des tentatives pour s'assurer que chaque groupe représenté to ensure that every group represented in Parliament is in agreement with what takes place, both in relation to the appointment and selection of a Chief Electoral Officer and in relation to his activities. This is one area in the conduct of our free and democratic elections where we do not want partisanship to become involved, and I think we have always been able to remain aloof from that.

[Texte]

There was unanimous agreement on Mr. Hamel after he had been carved up and looked at by all the political parties in whatever manner they do it. I for one—and I am sure there would be no disagreement about this—have found the choice to have been an excellent one, in the subsequent events of elections and conversations with Mr. Hamel. It would seem to me most appropriate and correct that we now take this other step of in fact completely and fully confirming Mr. Hamel in the position of Chief Electoral Officer.

I am in complete agreement, and so are the members of the New Democratic Party, who, just coincidentally, really thought about this some weeks ago when the prospect of the Committee inquiring into the Elections Act came to the fore. We thought, just generally at that time, without communicating it to anybody else, that this would be the necessary thing to do. So there is complete agreement with the suggestion that you make.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Howard. Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps my colleague would like to follow that up?

The Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not want anyone to think that the New Democratic Party has been thinking any more about the issue, or thinks any more of Mr. Hamel, than we do. I always regretted the “ad hocery” that was necessary in relation to the existing legislation, but I did recognize that the “ad hocery” was necessary.

I think we should now revert to the status of the Chief Electoral Officer being in fact the chief.

I quite agree with what is clearly a point of view here. I have not checked the legislation of either act on whether or not our intent will require anything further than the section to which Mr. Hamel referred in both documents; but, if so, I think it would be wise to do it, and do it quickly.

[Interprétation]

au Parlement soit d'accord tant pour ce qui est de la nomination que pour le choix du directeur général des élections et de son travail. Voilà un domaine, où dans la conduite de nos élections libres et démocratiques, nous ne voulons pas que l'esprit de parti s'introduise et, je pense que nous avons toujours été au-dessus de cela.

Il y a eu accord unanime dans le choix de M. Hamel, après que celui-ci eût été l'objet de la plus minutieuse étude par tous les partis politiques. Pour ma part—et je pense que personne ne me contredira—je suis parfaitement d'accord à ce sujet. Je trouve que le choix a été excellent et nous en avons eu la confirmation dans les élections subséquentes et par mes conversations avec M. Hamel. Il me semble donc tout à fait souhaitable et approprié que nous prenions maintenant cette autre mesure pour confirmer pleinement M. Hamel dans ses fonctions de directeur général des élections.

Je suis parfaitement d'accord, et il en va de même pour les membres du Nouveau parti démocratique qui, par pure coïncidence, ont songé à la chose il y a quelques semaines lorsqu'on a envisagé la possibilité que le Comité enquête sur la loi électorale. On a pensé, en général à l'époque, sans en faire part à qui ce soit, que c'était la chose qui s'imposait. Nous sommes donc parfaitement d'accord avec votre proposition.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Howard. Monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: Mon collègue voudra peut-être poursuivre dans ce sens.

Le président: Monsieur Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: Je ne veux pas que personne pense que le Nouveau parti démocratique ait songé plus à ce problème, ait songé plus à M. Hamel que nous-même. J'ai toujours regretté l'«ad hoc» crie qui existait dans la loi actuelle, mais je me suis aperçu que cette «ad hoc» crie était nécessaire. Maintenant, je pense que nous devrions en revenir au statut du directeur général des élections qui est en effet le chef. Je suis parfaitement d'accord avec ce qui paraît bien être ici un point de vue personnel. Je n'ai pas vérifié la législation ou chacune des lois, et je ne sais pas si nous proposons de faire exiger d'autres dispositions en plus de celles que prévoit l'article auquel M. Hamel s'est référé dans les deux documents. Mais, dans l'affirmative, je pense qu'il serait sage de le faire et de le faire rapidement.

[Text]

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Macquarrie. Although we may have the quorum of 11 members to pass motions, if we agree on the principle of complete restoration of the earlier powers that the Chief Electoral Officer used to have, the draft legislation could be prepared and submitted back to us.

Is there any further discussion on this particular item? I have some further points that I want to bring to your attention today about the function of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Another item which I would like to bring to your attention in relation to the function of the Chief Electoral Officer, as Mr. Howard has quite accurately mentioned, is that the control of the expenses of the Chief Electoral Officer is not actually statutory. This means that as Chief Electoral Officer he has always to refer to the House of Commons when he has some expenses to be approved. He is not free to do it.

I submit the idea—and this exists in many other provinces—that budget control of the Chief Electoral Officer should be statutory. This would mean that the Chief Electoral Officer would not have to ask the Secretary of State and, later on, the House of Commons for permission to spend money when he requires to.

Perhaps we should ask Mr. Hamel to tell us the exact situation which exists relative to this right to spend.

• 1125

Mr. Hamel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If you will recall, this is a matter I touched upon earlier this year when I submitted a detailed account of the expenses of the last election. I feel quite free to speak about this now—although these are comments again—because not only have I the concurrence of a senior official of the Treasury Board but I am also doing it at his suggestion.

At the moment the operations of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer are paid for out of two different sources. There are what we call the administrative expenses, which cover the normal expenses of my office and which have to be budgeted and approved by the Treasury Board before being submitted to Parliament in exactly the same manner as does any other government department.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Merci, monsieur Macquarrie. Bien que nous puissions obtenir éventuellement un quorum de 11 membres pour adopter des motions si nous adoptons le principe de la restauration entière des pouvoirs conférés autrefois au directeur général des élections, alors le projet de loi pourrait être préparé et soumis à nouveau au Comité.

Y a-t-il d'autres observations à ce sujet? Il y a d'autres questions que j'aimerais porter à votre attention aujourd'hui quant aux fonctions du directeur général des élections.

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Il y a une autre question que je voudrais vous signaler au sujet des fonctions du directeur général des élections, comme M. Howard l'a mentionné avec justesse, c'est que le contrôle des dépenses du directeur général des élections n'est pas une question prévue par la Loi. Autrement dit, en sa qualité, le directeur doit toujours s'en référer à la Chambre des communes pour l'approbation des dépenses qu'il doit faire. Il n'est pas libre de les approuver lui-même.

Je voudrais simplement vous soumettre l'idée—et cette situation existe dans beaucoup d'autres provinces—que le contrôle budgétaire du bureau du directeur général des élections devrait être prévu par la loi. Ce qui voudrait dire que le directeur général des élections n'aurait pas à demander au secrétaire d'État ni, plus tard, à la Chambre des communes, la permission de faire les dépenses qui s'imposent. Peut-être, devrions-nous demander à M. Hamel de nous exposer la situation exacte en ce qui a trait à son droit de faire des dépenses.

M. Hamel: Merci, monsieur le président. Si vous vous souvenez bien, j'en ai discuté plus tôt cette année lorsque j'ai présenté un exposé détaillé des dépenses électorales pour la dernière élection. Je me sens très libre d'en parler, au risque de répéter certains commentaires, parce que je le fais non seulement avec l'approbation d'un fonctionnaire supérieur du conseil du Trésor, mais aussi sur ses propres conseils.

En ce moment, les activités du directeur général des élections sont financées à partir de deux sources. Il y a ce qu'on appelle les dépenses administratives qui englobent les dépenses ordinaires de mon bureau et qui doivent faire l'objet d'un budget approuvé par le conseil du Trésor avant d'être présentées au Parlement, comme c'est le cas pour tout autre ministère du gouvernement.

[Texte]

The other aspect, or the other side, of the operations deals with, all the expenses incurred in connection with a specific election, be it a general or a by-election. This is statutory. This is paid out of the unappropriated Consolidated Revenue Fund.

In terms of actual amount, the administrative budget is usually between $175,000 and $200,000 a year, even during a year of a general election. I will explain later why this is not increased at the time of a general election.

On the other side of it, the statutory expenses usually run in excess of $350,000 a year, even between elections, because we have to buy stocks of forms and books for the next election.

There is considerable inter-relationship between these two activities, because my administrative budget is directly influenced by a number of factors over which I have absolutely no control. A very simple example is the number of by-elections that may be held during a year. We usually try to establish our travel budget and our expenses for stationery, telephone and telegrams on the basis of four by-elections per year. But a couple of years ago we had eleven. That means that we cannot operate with the budget that has been approved by the Treasury Board, so we have to seek supplementary estimates. It may be purely academic, because I want to emphasize that I have never had any problems in the past with the Treasury Board about getting additional money.

But the other side of the coin, the aspect mentioned to me by this senior official of the Treasury Board, is that the Treasury Board is more or less in a position only to rubber stamp my request. When the last general election was called I needed $180,000, which is almost the same amount that I had previously budgeted for my administrative budget. I am pretty sure that everybody appreciates that the Treasury Board is in no position to question whether or not I need that money to conduct the election. Furthermore, from a purely academic point of view, you may say that the government indirectly is in a position to control my operations at a very critical time.

Another aspect of this is that this additional money was given to me from the Department of Finance's own budget. As a result, it is not shown as expenses of elections. It is hidden in the so-called contingencies vote of the Department of Finance.

I understand that the Treasury Board may have some observations about this. I really do

[Interprétation]

L'autre aspect des opérations a trait à toutes les dépenses qui comporte une élection déterminée, qu'elle soit générale ou complémentaire. Cela est prévu dans la Loi. Cela est financé à même le fonds du revenu consolidé sans destination spéciale. En termes de montants effectifs, le budget administratif s'établit entre $175,000 et $200,000 par an, même au cours d'une année électorale. Je vais expliquer plus loin pourquoi il n'est pas plus élevé au cours d'une année électorale.

Quant à l'autre aspect, les dépenses statutaires se chiffrent annuellement par plus de $350,000, même entre les élections, car il faut se procurer des stocks de formules, de livres en vue de la prochaine élection.

Il y a beaucoup de rapports entre ces deux activités, car mon budget administratif est directement influencé par un certain nombre de facteurs tout à fait indépendants de ma volonté. Voici un exemple fort simple, celui du nombre d'élections complémentaires pouvant être tenues au cours d'une année donnée; nous essayons d'établir un budget de déplacements, de nos dépenses, de papeterie, de télégrammes, de téléphones sur la base de quatre élections complémentaires par année. Il y a quelques années, nous en avons eu 11 au cours de l'année. Cela veut dire que nous ne pouvons pas fonctionner d'après un budget approuvé par le conseil du Trésor. Il nous faut demander des fonds supplémentaires. C'est peut-être purement spéculatif, mais je dois souligner que jamais dans le passé, je n'ai eu de problèmes avec le conseil du Trésor pour obtenir des fonds supplémentaires.

D'un autre côté, il y a cet aspect que ce haut fonctionnaire du conseil du Trésor m'a indiqué c'est-à-dire que le conseil du Trésor ne fait plus ou moins qu'approuver automatiquement mes demandes. Au cours des dernières élections générales, j'avais besoin de $180,000, soit presque le même montant qui avait été inscrit à mon budget administratif précédent. Je suis tout à fait sûr que tout le monde se rend compte que le conseil du Trésor n'est pas en mesure de mettre en doute mes besoins pour mener l'élection à bien. De plus, au point de vue spéculatif, on peut dire que le gouvernement, indirectement, est en mesure de contrôler mes opérations à un moment décisif.

D'autre part, ces fonds supplémentaires m'ont été accordés à même le budget du ministère des Finances lui-même. Donc, cela ne figure pas comme une dépense électorale. Ceci s'inscrit sous le crédit «éventualités» du ministère des Finances.

Je crois comprendre que le conseil du Trésor aurait quelques observations à faire à ce sujet.

[Text]

not know the actual substance of the observation. This is something one of the officers told me recently.

In some cases I would say it even presents a pretty awkward situation. If I am not taking too much of your time, gentlemen, I would like to explain what happened in 1967 when we had these general elections in the Northwest Territories.

The actual expenses for the elections are, of course, statutory, but if I have to send one of my officers up there because of some problems, this comes out of my statutory budget.

In 1967, instead of using the same returning officers as in the past, we had 14 new returning officers and we did not feel it was appropriate nor fair to these people to just throw the book at them and say, "You conduct the election." We felt that some training was necessary. Had I called these 14 people to Ottawa at an expense, probably, in excess of $11,000—this is statutory—no questions would have been asked except perhaps by the Committee, but on the other hand had I felt it would be more efficient from more than one point of view and cheaper to send one or two of my officers up there to train these people in a centrally located place such as Yellowknife or Whitehorse, this would have had to come out of my administrative budget. At that time, since this had not been foreseen, I had to go to Treasury Board and seek additional funds, something like $1,200, which in effect were to save at least $6,000 of public funds. In a sense it is a bit ridiculous to seek permission of the government to save money because we are in kind of a straitjacket.

• 1130

As I said and I want to emphasize this, I have never encountered any problem with the Treasury Board. The only problem, in fact, is twofold. One, which is mainly academic, as I mentioned earlier, is the fact that technically the government may at critical times control my operations and the second, it only adds in many cases to our own redtape.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Hamel dealt with this in a very lucid and easily understandable way, but there is something additional involved, which we talked about earlier, the relationship of

[Interpretation]

Je ne sais pas au juste quelle est la teneur exacte de ses observations. Ceci m'a été rapporté récemment par l'un des fonctionnaires du Conseil.

Dans certains cas, je dirais même que cela mène à une situation particulièrement embarrassante. Messieurs, je ne voudrais pas prendre trop de votre temps, mais j'aimerais vous dire ce qui est arrivé en 1967, lors de la tenue des élections générales dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest.

Les dépenses électorales effectives sont naturellement prévues par la Loi, mais si je dois envoyer un de mes fonctionnaires pour régler certains problèmes, les dépenses impliquées viennent alors en déduction de mon budget statutaire.

En 1967, au lieu d'employer les mêmes directeurs du scrutin qu'auparavant, nous en avons pris 14 nouveaux. Nous n'avons pas cru qu'il était ni juste ni souhaitable de donner simplement à ces gens un bouquin et de leur dire: «Allez-y!» Nous avons cru qu'il fallait les former. J'ai donc demandé à ces 14 personnes de venir à Ottawa, ce qui a occasionné des dépenses de plus de 11,000 dollars. Il s'agit de d'une dépense statutaire. Personne n'aurait posé de questions, sauf peut-être le Comité. D'autre part, si à mon sens, il est plus efficace à plus d'un point de vue et moins coûteux d'envoyer un ou deux de mes fonctionnaires là-bas pour former ces gens dans un endroit central comme Yellowknife ou Whitehorse, les dépenses dans ce cas sont imputées sur mon budget administratif. A ce moment-là, vu que cette dépense n'avait pas été prévue, j'ai dû demander au conseil du Trésor 1,200 dollars de fonds supplémentaires, pour épargner environ 6,000 dollars des fonds publics. Il est donc un peu ridicule de demander au gouvernement la permission d'épargner de l'argent puisque nous sommes dans une camisole de force.

Je n'ai jamais eu de problèmes véritables avec le conseil du Trésor. Le problème que j'ai eu présente deux aspects. Il s'agit surtout d'un problème spéculatif. Le gouvernement peut à un moment critique contrôler mes opérations et deuxièmement, c'est un problème qui fait ressortir notre bureaucratie interne.

Le président: Monsieur Howard.

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, je crois que M. Hamel nous a fort bien expliqué la situation. Toutefois, j'aimerais revenir à quelque chose dont nous avons discuté plus tôt, soit les rapports entre le bureau the office of the Chief Electoral Officer to Parliament and the attempt to ensure that this office is for the purpose of giving effect to the full feeling of democracy that we have and not something else. I can understand everybody's feeling that Treasury Board which has as its head a political person, a person who is involved in the partisanship of parties, a person who is involved in the conduct of the elections in an attempt to convince the voters that that particular party is the right one and so on, is an awkward area.

[Texte]

We also, I think, should consider, inasmuch as the committee system of Parliament has undergone some changes in the last few years and is still undergoing changes by the mere process of development and we do not foresee everything that committees might be involved in although, I am sure, many members can see some of the difficulties that committees are having as a result of this growing process in finding a function and a position within the Parliamentary structure, whether we might not take precipitous action right at the moment. Not that I disagree, I do agree with the proposition as put forward that there is an area there that needs to be sorted out and needs to be dealt with, but whether we might not consider looking at it in a little more detail and give some thought to the prospects of the relationship with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer through the Privileges and Elections Committee as a part of the whole relationship to Parliament.

Committees now, as we all know, can only deal with those things which Parliament or the House of Commons refers to them. We have no authority under the rules to initiate some inquiries or to initiate subject matters for examination and because the rules in the House are such, it is almost a necessity, in order for a committee to have some subject matter to study, for the government to make the decision. In other words, because government controls the Order Paper, in effect, and has the authority to juggle its business and determine what a committee is going to study or if a committee is going to study anything, whether we might not think in terms of trying to carve out an area of activity on a more precise basis than exists now in so far as the Committee's relationship to Parliament is concerned—I am talking of this Committee—and the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and his relationship to Parliament in the total sense, not through the Treasury Board or in any other way.

• 1135

I just raised that because I think there is an area in so far as the relationship with the du directeur général des élections et le Parlement et la tentative de s'assurer que ce poste ou cette fonction permet de réaliser les objectifs démocratiques de notre société. Si je comprends bien, chacun croit que le conseil du Trésor a à sa tête une personne qui a été nommée par politique et qui pourrait donc affecter la tenue d'une élection. Cette personne pourrait convaincre les votants que tel ou tel parti est le meilleur parti et que l'on doit voter pour celui qu'il recommande.

[Interprétation]

C'est pourquoi, d'après moi, nous devrions tenir compte de ce qui suit: si le système des Comités du Parlement a connu des changements au cours des dernières années et continuant de subir des modifications à l'heure actuelle, et qu'on ne peut pas prévoir dans quelles situations les Comités seront engagés, je suis certain que plusieurs députés comprennent très bien les problèmes des Comités par suite de la difficulté de trouver leur fonction dans la structure parlementaire. Alors, n'allons pas prendre des mesures précipitées. Je ne suis pas en désaccord, bien au contraire, je suis plutôt d'accord avec les propositions qui ont été faites par M. Hamel, mais je pense qu'il faut les étudier soigneusement et davantage en détail, par l'entremise du Comité des privilèges et élections pour tenir compte des relations entre le poste de directeur général des élections et les exigences du Parlement.

N'oubliez pas que les Comités ne peuvent étudier que ce qui leur est confié pour étude par le Parlement et la Chambre des communes. Nous n'avons pas les pouvoirs nécessaires pour entreprendre de notre plein gré des études nouvelles. Les règles sont strictes et prévoient qu'il est indispensable qu'un Comité se voit féliciter un mandat de la part du gouvernement. C'est le gouvernement qui contrôle le feuillet et qui a l'autorité voulue pour établir les questions qui seront étudiées et c'est le Parlement qui précise le mandat de chacun des comités, leurs fonctions et leurs attributions. Il faudrait peut-être en arriver à établir des relations plus précises entre le système des comités et le Parlement, et de la même façon, entre le poste de directeur général des élections et le Parlement sans avoir à passer par le conseil du Trésor.

Je soulève cette question qui a trait au rapport du bureau du directeur général des élec-office of the Chief Electoral Officer is concerned, if the Committee could be effectively established on a more permanent basis than exists now. In other words, if perhaps we could effect some alteration in the rules that would place the Committee on a more permanent basis as a sort of extension of the House of Commons in relationship of the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, we might be able to develop the financial relationship in such a way that it would be more nonpartisan and less subject, as Mr. Hamel said, although we doubt that this will ever occur, to the whims and idiosyncracies of whoever might happen to be the controlling influence in Treasury Board or over Treasury Board at any given time.

[Text]

I simply raised this as a thought at the moment which I think might require some further exploration to see if we can develop something—we are undergoing growing pains, we are trying to develop a system that is more meaningful and more viable in itself—rather than take the immediate action of agreeing that the financing should be of a statutory nature, and has to go through Treasury Board and be subject to whatever might exist there.

I was sort of thinking out loud at the moment, Mr. Chairman, hoping that we might be able to explore it further rather than make determination about it right at this stage.

Perhaps before I leave I could pose a question to Mr. Hamel about the urgency involved which he can answer right away or later on. Is it necessary to take immediate action or can this wait for further exploration?

Mr. Hamel: As I believe I pointed out, I do not feel very strongly one way or the other. This was something I believe I raised with your Chairman as a result of a conversation I had with a senior official of the Treasury Board in discussing some of the purely routine problems we had in the office. There is certainly no matter of urgency and, as I said, I do not feel strongly about it one way or the other because Treasury Board so far has never done anything to hamper my operations. In fact, I have always had 100 per cent co-operation.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, as Mr. Hamel presented the matter I thought, then, it was one which would require further consideration. It was a fundamental one. Mr. Howard has moved it into an area even more profound which, I think, requires an examitions et je me demande si l'on ne devrait pas établir les comités sur une base plus permanente? Alors, est-ce que le poste de directeur général des élections ne devrait pas subir le même sort? Faudrait-il modifier les règlements pour placer les comités dans une situation plus permanente, étant en quelque sorte, une extension de la Chambre des communes? A ce moment-là, il faudrait établir quelles seront les relations financières et préciser qu'elles ne doivent pas être partisans. Je me demande si jamais cela sera réalisé. Mais il faut éviter le fait que le directeur général des élections puisse être influencé par la personne qui occuperait le poste de président du conseil du Trésor au moment des élections.

[Interpretation]

C'est pourquoi il faudrait étudier davantage ces propositions. Nous connaissons une évolution pénible et nous tentons d'établir un système plus viable, plus sûr et plus efficace au lieu de prendre des mesures immédiates et dire que le financement doit être fait d'une façon statutaire, et passer par le Conseil du Trésor.

Je vous communique à voix haute les réflexions qui me viennent à l'esprit actuellement, monsieur le président, et je suis sûr qu'on pourra les étudier davantage au lieu de prendre des décisions précipitées.

Je pourrais peut-être poser la question à M. Hamel, quant à ce qu'il croit être la gravité de la situation. Croit-il qu'il est urgent d'adopter des mesures ou pourrait-on attendre d'avoir étudié davantage le sujet?

M. Hamel: Comme je l'ai fait remarquer, je n'ai pas formulé d'opinion à ce sujet. J'ai discuté de la question avec votre président. Après des entretiens avec un haut fonctionnaire du conseil du Trésor; c'est pourquoi je vous communiquais ces réflexions. Il s'agit de problèmes courants que nous avons à notre bureau. Je ne crois pas que la situation soit très grave ou très urgente de sorte qu'il faille prendre des mesures immédiates. Disons, que jusqu'ici, j'ai obtenu la collaboration la plus entière du conseil du Trésor.

M. Howard (Skeena): Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Macquarrie.

M. Macquarrie: De la façon dont M. Hamel a présenté la question, il me semble qu'il faudrait l'étudier davantage. Il s'agit d'une question fondamentale et mon collègue, M. Howard, a bien souligné qu'il faut se rendre compte que la question est très grave et a ation of a good many things such as the whole fiscal pattern of responsibility and what does happen to those administrative aspects of the over-all government which are, and of right, objects and subjects of responsibility to Parliament rather than to the administrative, to the executive. I think we should look at these. I suppose you could carry it to a reductio ad absurdum that at some time an executive might say we cannot afford an election. This is the brittle legality at the present time. Of course it is an absurdity, but at the same time to forestall even the most remote absurdities is one structure of good government. I would agree that we had better look at it a little further and I think it should be improved. Generally, that is my feeling.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Howe.

• 1140

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I was rather interested in this reference made to contingency funds of the Department of Finance and if my memory serves me correctly I think the Auditor General made some remarks about contingency funds in some of his reports, did he not? Did he have any particular remark to make about this particular one that you spoke about, Mr. Hamel?

Mr. Hamel: Not that I can recollect. As you well remember, the finance contingency vote is quite enormous. It is in millions of dollars and the share I borrowed or got from that fund is relatively small. It is less than $200,000, but still it is part of the over-all package.

Mr. Howe: Petty cash, for instance?

Mr. Hamel: I understand it is used for every unforeseen emergency, or unforeseen circumstance.

Mr. Howe: Of course, even if this change were made that you are speaking about, making it statutory, there would be occasions when you would have to come back for supplementaries anyway, would there not? If our inflationary trend goes on, why no one knows what an election will cost in 10 years from now.

Mr. Hamel: It would not change anything from what we actually do at the present time in that respect, because I do not have a clue as to how much the next general election is going to cost and this is statutory. We set up the tariff of fees under Section 60 of the Canada Elections Act which is approved by the Governor in Council and everything has to be paid on that basis. Therefore every bien des ramifications. Elle met en cause plusieurs responsabilités financières et plusieurs aspects administratifs qui relèvent de l'ensemble du Parlement plutôt que de l'administration ou de l'exécutif. Il faudrait étudier la situation à fond. En voulant prouver par l'absurde, on pourrait dire qu'un directeur pourrait décider que nous ne pouvons nous payer une élection. Pour l'instant, c'est notre point fragile. Nous devons éliminer la possibilité d'en arriver à des situations absurdes. Cette prévoyance manifeste la santé d'une structure gouvernementale. Il faut étudier la situation à fond, de façon à l'améliorer.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur Howe.

M. Howe: Si ma mémoire est fidèle, l'auditeur général n'a-t-il pas parlé des fonds de réserve pour les éventualités du ministère des Finances.

N'a-t-il pas fait quelque observation particulière au sujet des fonds dont vous avez parlé, M. Hamel?

M. Hamel: Je ne me rappelle pas. Comme vous savez, le crédit des dépenses imprévues du ministère des Finances est très considérable. Il contient des millions de dollars et la part que j'ai reçue de ce fonds est peu élevée. Il s'agit de moins de 200,000 dollars, mais cela fait partie encore du montant global.

M. Howe: La petite caisse, pour ainsi dire.

M. Hamel: Je crois qu'on s'en sert pour des situations d'urgence ou des circonstances imprévues.

M. Howe: Bien sûr, même si l'on effectuait la modification que vous mentionnez, soit de rendre ce crédit statutaire, il y aurait des cas où vous auriez à demander des fonds supplémentaires, n'est-ce pas?

M. Hamel: Cela ne modifierait pas la façon de procéder à ce sujet, parce que nous n'avons aucun indice nous permettant de déterminer les frais des prochaines élections générales et cela est statutaire. Nous avons établi le tarif des honoraires en vertu de l'article 60 de la Loi électorale du Canada approuvée par le gouverneur en conseil et nous devons nous fonder sur ce tarif pour payer les frais des enumerator gets so much and if we have 70,000, well we only know the cost afterwards, because it is on a per-electors basis in most cases. Most of the election officers are paid on a per-electors basis.

[Text]

The only aspect of my operations that would be affected is my regular annual budget of operation—the salaries of my staff, the normal telephone expenses, travel expenses and this kind of thing. It would not change anything else regarding my staff, who would still come under the Public Service Employment Act for recruitment, promotion and that kind of thing.

I would still be subject to the general control throughout the government with respect to travel, for instance; the mode of travel, the equipment that we can buy and so on. This has no direct influence on the operations themselves. It is strictly a matter of having this part of my expenses approved beforehand by the Treasury Board before being submitted to Parliament and it always ends up in this Committee, as you well know.

Mr. Howe: It is just since the Committee system has changed that the estimates have all been brought before the Committee. They used to be discussed in the House of Commons before this practice of bringing all the estimates before committees took place. This is an area in which we are not sure we are giving it the same scrutiny as was before given in the case of quite a number of the estimates. I go along with Mr. Macquarrie and Mr. Howard that this is a step—probably not a big step but one where we sometimes wonder whether we are giving away control of the House of Commons to committees or something like that which we have seen growing and gathering force for the last short period of time. I think we should give a lot of consideration before we make any changes in the procedure that was followed before.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Howe. I see we now have a quorum and perhaps we could turn back to the earlier principle on which we agreed. May I have a motion that the powers of the Chief Electoral Officer be restored to what they were in the past and that appropriate amendments to the Act be made accordingly and submitted back to us for approval.

[Interpretation]

élections. Par conséquent, tous les énumérateurs reçoivent de tels honoraires et si nous en avons 70,000, ce n'est qu'après l'élection que nous savons combien cela a coûté car dans la plupart des cas, on calcule les frais selon les nombres d'électeurs. La plupart des officiers d'élection sont payés d'après les électeurs.

Le seul aspect de mes opérations qui serait affecté est mon budget annuel d'exploitation—notamment, les traitements de mon personnel, les dépenses ordinaires pour le service téléphonique, les frais de voyage et ainsi de suite. Cela ne modifierait rien en ce qui concerne mon personnel, qui relèverait encore de la Loi sur l'emploi dans la Fonction publique quant au recrutement et aux promotions.

Nous serions encore sous contrôle général du gouvernement, en ce qui concerne les voyages, par exemple, les moyens de transport et le matériel que nous pouvons acheter. Cela n'a aucune influence directe sur notre fonctionnement. Il s'agit plutôt de faire approuver d'avance ces dépenses par le conseil du Trésor avant de les présenter au Parlement, et comme vous le savez, cela revient toujours au présent Comité pour étude.

M. Howe: Depuis que le système des Comités a été modifié, toutes les prévisions budgétaires sont étudiées en Comité. Elles étaient discutées en Chambre, avant que ne soit adoptée la procédure d'étudier toutes les prévisions budgétaires en Comité. Nous ne sommes pas sûrs si nous étudions un bon nombre d'entre elles avec autant d'attention qu'on le faisait auparavant. Comme l'ont dit MM. Macquarrie et Howard, il s'agit d'une mesure—peut-être pas très importante—mais au sujet de laquelle nous nous demandons parfois si nous ne passons pas aux Comités le contrôle exercé par la Chambre des communes et cela va s'amplifiant depuis quelque temps avant de prendre des mesures quant à la modification de la procédure suivie jusqu'ici.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Howe. Je vois que nous avons maintenant le quorum. Peut-être que nous pourrions revenir au principe sur lequel nous nous étions déjà mis d'accord. Pourrais-je avoir une motion portant qu'on rétablisse les pouvoirs que le directeur général des élections détenait dans le passé et qu'on apporte les modifications appropriées à la Loi, qui nous seraient ensuite soumises pour approbation.

[Texte]

Mr. Duquet: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: As you know, we decided earlier that we would look into the possibility of having a joint meeting with the Ontario Select Committee on Election Laws. They requested that we go to Toronto instead of their coming here. Our Clerk has been in touch with the Chairman, Mr. Dunlop, and his staff and they suggested that an appropriate date might be January 15. We could go on Wednesday evening and sit the whole day on January 15. We could take more time if we needed it, but I believe a full day of discussion with them would clear up many of the issues that we want to discuss. For this we have already tabled a report in the House but we need to have a motion by this Committee seeking permission to sit in Toronto and for the Clerk and necessary supporting staff to accompany the Committee.

As the Committee has already agreed that we go to Toronto if they were not able to come to Ottawa and sit with us, does this meet with the approval of the members of the Committee now? If so and if the motion is passed, I will table a report requesting authority to go to Toronto on January 15 to sit with the Select Committee on Election Laws. Yes, Mr. Howard?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I am not averse to this procedure, but as you recall we raised the general question earlier of the worth-whileness or the propriety, probably, of the Committee's going to a particular place without taking some steps to afford others, and those we go to meet with, the opportunity to appear before the Committee and make a presentation if they so desire.

As you recall, in Halifax and Quebec and Fredericton we got into that area of discussion and at that time it seemed to me that it was not really a valuable thing in the sense of the money expended for the information received. I would not want to go through the same sort of situation in Toronto, or elsewhere for that matter, keeping in mind as I understand it, that there has been a fair amount of prior publicity given to people in the City of Regina. To what extent they have taken it up and indicated their desire to appear before the Committee and make known their views I do not really know. But I

[Interprétation]

M. Duquet: Je le propose.

Motion adoptée.

Le président: Comme vous le savez, nous avons décidé d'étudier la possibilité de tenir une réunion conjointe avec le Comité spécial de l'Ontario sur les lois électorales. On nous a demandé de nous rendre à Toronto car ils ne pouvaient pas venir à Ottawa. Notre greffier a communiqué avec le président de ce Comité, M. Dunlop, et son personnel et on nous a proposé que la date qui conviendrait le mieux serait peut-être le 15 janvier. Nous pourrions nous rendre à Toronto le mercredi soir et siéger le 15 janvier, toute la journée. En ce cas de besoin, on pourrait prendre plus de temps, mais je crois qu'une journée complète de discussion avec les membres de ce comité nous permettrait d'étudier un bon nombre des questions qui nous intéressent. Nous avons déjà présenté à la Chambre un rapport à ce sujet, mais nous avons besoin d'une motion de la part du Comité pour obtenir la permission de nous réunir à Toronto, et nous voudrions que le greffier et le personnel de soutien nécessaire puissent accompagner le Comité.

Comme ce dernier s'est déjà mis d'accord sur le fait que nous pourrions nous rendre à Toronto au cas où les gens de Toronto ne pourraient pas venir à Ottawa pour siéger, êtes-vous d'accord avec cette motion? Si la motion est adoptée, je déposerai un rapport demandant l'autorisation d'aller à Toronto le 15 janvier et de siéger avec le Comité spécial sur les lois électorales. Monsieur Howard?

M. Howard (Skeena): Monsieur le président, je ne m'oppose pas à cette façon de procéder, mais si vous vous rappelez, nous avons déjà soulevé cette question d'ordre général, à savoir si cela valait la peine que le Comité se rende à un endroit déterminé sans prendre les mesures voulues pour que d'autres gens—et ceux que nous allons rencontrer—aient les moyens de se présenter devant le Comité et d'exposer leurs idées s'ils le désirent.

Si vous vous en souvenez bien, à Halifax, comme à Québec et à Fredericton, nous avons discuté de ce sujet et à ce moment-là—il me semblait que cela ne valait pas la peine—si l'on considère ce que nous avons dépensé par rapport aux renseignements que nous avons obtenus. Je ne voudrais pas que la même situation se produise à Toronto ou ailleurs, se rappelant qu'on a fait assez de publicité concernant les gens de la ville de Regina. Je ne sais pas jusqu'à quel point ils ont exprimé leur désir de comparaître devant le Comité pour exposer leurs idées. A mon avis, nous devons nous assurer non seulement que nous think we not only have to make sure, because we are dealing with the right of people to vote, that we provide every opportunity for people to appear, but that we make it look that way as well and publicize the fact. If people do not want to come or do not take advantage of it and consider that their rights of democracy are properly protected or dealt with, that is their business. But I think we could develop a reaction against going somewhere simply for the purpose of meeting one particular group and excluding anyone else who might want to appear. I wondered if this part of it had been looked at.

[Text]

• 1150

The Chairman: Yes. I do not want to push the members for a decision one way or another, but I would just mention that this idea of meeting with the members of the Select Committee of the Legislature of Ontario has already been decided unanimously by the members of this Committee. The only problem left was whether they were coming here or we were going there. Therefore, as they requested that we go there, it is up to you to decide whether or not we will go. The appropriate time for this would be January 15. We need authority from the House now because we will not have time to obtain this authority when we resume after the Christmas recess. Yes, Mr. Macquarrie?

Mr. Macquarrie: I quite agree with what you are saying, Mr. Chairman, but I do not think that it is actually counter to the question which Mr. Howard believes is pertinent also. I certainly support the motion, as I support the idea, but I do not know whether we should be considering that our visit to Toronto be in such a form that as well as meeting with this important Select Committee we also make ourselves available to hearing other people. That will then open the question, which we must not lose sight of, that if we move elsewhere we will have to recall and recover from the mistake we made when we went to Eastern Canada and did not give the people there an opportunity.

In other words, while I am not at all a devotee of too much pilgrimaging about I would want the whole thing kept in broad perspective—that we do not go to City A and meet with a small group, move on to City B and meet the general public and forget that we have already been in City L and did not give anyone a chance. So I think Mr. Howard is right, that we should consider this. But on this point of our going, these people have fournissons à tous l'occasion de se faire entendre, mais également que nous faisons comprendre à tous qu'ils peuvent en profiter, parce qu'on s'occupe du droit des gens au vote. Si les gens ne veulent pas venir ni en tirer parti et s'ils pensent que les droits qu'ils possèdent en démocratie sont respectés, cela est leur affaire.

[Interpretation]

A mon avis, il se peut qu'on s'oppose au fait que nous nous rendions à un endroit pour rencontrer un groupe particulier et qu'on ne permette pas à une autre personne de se faire entendre. Je me demande si l'on a considéré cette question.

Le président: Oui. Je ne voudrais pas influencer les membres du Comité en ce qui concerne leur décision à ce sujet. Mais je veux simplement mentionner que cette proposition visant à rencontrer les membres du Comité spécial de l'Ontario a déjà été acceptée à l'unanimité par le Comité. Il s'agissait uniquement de déterminer si le Comité venait à Ottawa ou si l'on se rendait à Toronto. Puisque le Comité de l'Ontario nous a demandé de nous rendre à Toronto, vous devez décider si l'on y va ou non. La date appropriée pour cette rencontre serait le 15 janvier. Nous avons besoin maintenant de l'autorisation de la Chambre parce que nous n'aurons pas le temps d'obtenir cette permission à notre retour des vacances de Noël. Oui, monsieur Macquarrie?

M. Macquarrie: Je suis d'accord avec ce que vous dites, monsieur le président, mais je ne pense pas que cela s'oppose réellement à la question qui, selon M. Howard, est aussi importante. Bien sûr, j'appuie aussi bien la motion que l'idée même, mais je me demande si nous devrions considérer que notre visite à Toronto a pour but de rencontrer non seulement le Comité spécial, mais aussi d'autres groupes et d'autres personnes. Il ne faudrait quand même pas répéter l'erreur que nous avons commise lorsque nous sommes allés dans l'est du pays, où les gens n'ont pas eu l'occasion de nous exprimer leur opinion.

Autrement dit, bien que je ne sois pas tellement en faveur de trop longs voyages, j'aimerais bien que toute l'affaire soit considérée sous une large perspective. Il ne s'agit pas d'aller par exemple visiter la ville A pour rencontrer un groupe de témoins, puis de nous rendre dans la ville B pour rencontrer le public et oublier que nous avons déjà visité la ville L sans leur donner l'occasion d'exprimer leur opinion. Par conséquent, je donne raison been very helpful, it is more convenient for us to go, we are actually initiating it, and I think the trip to Toronto is quite in order. However, I think it would be wise—we have until January 15—to arrange an extra day to see if anyone wants to come and give us his view.

[Texte]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is the point I was getting at.

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not hate Toronto at all.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Did you say you do not like Toronto?

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not hate Toronto at all.

The Chairman: Could I say, from information that I received from our clerk, Mr. Virr, that the meeting on January 15 is going to be a jointly chaired one with the members of the Select Committee of the Ontario Legislature. So for January 15 we cannot appropriately have people from outside. But if it is the view of the members that from now on up to January 15 we should inform the public that if they would like to appear before us and present briefs, we would meet them there on January 16. Is this agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: In what way will it be done, by way of advertisement in the papers?

Mr. Macquarrie: I do not think it would be at all difficult to have the Ontario people agree to giving us the use of provincial buildings. Then I think we would have to start advertising and say that on January 16 we will be in the East Block, or wherever it is, and will be hearing petitioners, and tell them how to get in touch with us.

The Chairman: Perfect. Yes, Mr. Lefebvre.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Howard and other members have a very good point. I think by meeting this Select Committee in the Ontario House we will have already made quite a step forward, because this Committee is made up of all parties represented in the Ontario House and we will get quite a cross-section of opinions of the à M. Howard lorsqu'il dit que nous devrions tenir compte de cet aspect. Mais en ce qui concerne ce voyage, ces gens nous ont été très utiles; il est plus commode d'y aller. En réalité, c'est une nouvelle façon de procéder et je pense que le voyage à Toronto est de mise. Cependant, il serait sage, d'ici le 15 janvier, de prévoir un jour supplémentaire pour permettre à ceux qui le voudraient, d'exprimer leur opinion.

[Interprétation]

M. Howard (Skeena): C'est justement ce que je voulais dire.

M. Macquarrie: Je n'en veux pas du tout à la ville de Toronto.

M. Howard (Skeena): Avez-vous dit que vous n'aimiez pas Toronto?

M. Macquarrie: Je ne déteste pas du tout cette ville, loin de là.

Le président: D'après les renseignements que me donne notre greffier, M. Virr, se pourrait-il que la séance du 15 janvier soit présidée conjointement avec les membres du Comité spécial de la Législature de l'Ontario? Ainsi, pour le 15 janvier, il ne serait pas approprié d'entendre l'opinion de personnes de l'extérieur, mais si les membres du Comité le désirent, d'ici le 15 janvier, nous pourrions aviser le public que s'il veut exprimer son opinion, on pourra nous présenter des mémoires à Toronto le 16 janvier. Cela vous convient-il?

Des voix: Oui, d'accord.

Le président: Alors, comment allons-nous procéder. Allons-nous publier des annonces dans les journaux?

M. Macquarrie: Je pense que nos collègues de l'Ontario voudront bien nous permettre d'utiliser les salles des édifices provinciaux. Nous devrions donc commencer par publier des annonces disant que nous serons disponibles à l'édifice de l'Est, et que nous sommes disposés à entendre les intéressés, et comment ils peuvent se mettre en rapport avec nous.

Le président: C'est parfait. Oui, monsieur Lefebvre.

M. Lefebvre: M. Howard et les autres ont raison. Je crois que si nous rencontrons ce Comité spécial, dans les édifices de la Législature de l'Ontario, nous aurons déjà fait un grand pas en avant, étant donné que ce Comité est formé de membres qui représentent tous les partis de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario et, de ce fait, nous disposerons various political parties and will have the benefit of the great study these gentlemen have made.

[Text]

In respect of briefs from other bodies, what other bodies, people, or societies are we going to accept briefs from? Are we going to have a chance to ask these people to forward their briefs to this Committee two weeks prior to our visit so that we can choose which ones we will have time to discuss, or are we just going to leave the door wide open and let anybody walk in with a brief? If it is one man representing one opinion, I do not know whether or not that opinion will be worthwhile studying, but if he represents a group of persons who have made a study of Canada's electoral laws then I think everybody would be agreeable to studying it. What regulations are we going to set up? We might end up with 55 people, each with a brief, coming in. I believe we have to have some regulations.

The Chairman: I think regulations should be established in respect of the form of presentation. Perhaps we should request that submissions be made to us in writing so that we can table them. Then, judging from the number that we, receive, we could decide whether to listen to just a verbal summary of their brief.

Yes, Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forrestall: I have just one observation to make. It seems to me that the point made in respect of both Fredericton and Halifax, the costly venture we went on earlier, must be thought out a little more clearly in light of what we are talking about now. It was my understanding—and I do not believe that it was necessarily implicit in any action the Committee has taken today—that we were perhaps going to shy away from any kind of a national tour. Speaking for myself, I would be very much adverse to getting into the area of inviting public submissions in Toronto until such time as we were very clear about our attitude with regard to the West. I think that if we go to Toronto to speak to a Select Committee that has done an extensive piece of work, that is one thing, but if we decide to go to Toronto and invite opinions from perhaps the organized political parties in that province and other interested groups, then we must be very careful to have stated beforehand that it is our intention to do the same in other provinces.

[Interpretation]

d'un profil d'opinion des divers partis politiques et pourrions bénéficier des grandes connaissances de ces messieurs.

Quant aux mémoires présentés par d'autres organismes, je me demande quels sont les organismes, groupes ou sociétés dont nous accepterons les mémoires? Peut-être devrions-nous demander aux groupes intéressés de nous faire parvenir leurs mémoires, deux semaines avant que nous nous rendions à Toronto, ce qui nous permettra de choisir ceux que nous sommes intéressés à rencontrer, pour ne pas arriver à la dernière seconde à Toronto, et laisser la porte grande ouverte à toute personne qui vient présenter un mémoire? S'il s'agit d'un particulier qui veut exprimer son opinion personnelle. Je me demande si la chose en vaut la peine, mais si ce particulier représente un groupe de personnes qui ont déjà fait une étude sur les lois électorales du Canada, je pense bien que tout le monde serait d'accord de l'entendre. Quelles règles allons-nous établir? On pourrait finir par avoir 55 particuliers qui se présenteraient chacun avec son mémoire; c'est pourquoi je pense qu'il doit y avoir des règles bien établies.

Le président: Je pense qu'il faudrait préciser la forme que devraient prendre les mémoires présentés. Nous devrions peut-être exiger que les mémoires nous soient soumis par écrit, pour qu'ils puissent être déposés. Ensuite, d'après le nombre de mémoires que nous recevrons, nous pourrions décider d'entendre simplement un résumé de leur document. Oui, monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forrestall: J'avais une seule observation à faire. Il me semble que ce qui a été dit à propos de Fredericton et de Halifax—l'aventure coûteuse dont il était question plus tôt—doit être bien pesé à la lumière de ce dont il s'agit actuellement. J'ai cru comprendre—et je ne crois pas que cela soit nécessaire implicite dans les mesures prises par le Comité aujourd'hui,—que nous allions éviter toute sorte de tournées nationales. Personnellement, je m'opposerais à cette question d'inviter le public à nous présenter des mémoires à Toronto jusqu'à ce que notre attitude à l'égard de l'Ouest soit bien définie. Si nous allons à Toronto pour parler au Comité spécial, qui a fait un très bon travail, c'est d'accord, et d'inviter les opinions des partis politiques, organisés dans cette province, et d'autres groupes intéressés, il nous faudra d'abord déterminer d'avance, et bien clairement que nous avons l'intention de faire la même chose dans d'autres provinces.

[Texte]

I raise this because I would not want to see the Committee put in the position of having Mr. Bennet or somebody stand up and say, "Here is a further question of alienation of the West, we are a forgotten people out here; they do not care about us."

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Forrestall.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, has the Ontario Committee submitted a report, with recommendations, so that we could study them ahead of time?

The Chairman: There is a preliminary report that has been tabled at the Legislature there. I think Mr. Hamel has a copy of it.

Mr. Forest: If that could be circulated amongst the members during the recess we could have a look at it and we would then know on what specific items we could question them, when meeting there?

The Chairman: The Clerk tells me that he will make copies available for circulation before the recess.

Mr. Forest: That is a good idea.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): We have talked about a lot of things and what you require now are some motions or some action. I think you require endorsement of the idea that we would be prepared to meet on January 15 with the Select Committee of Ontario.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): We cannot always deal with these things when twenty people are trying to do it, but the mechanics and the procedures about the Committee's hearing additional people, the advertising, the regulations as to briefs beforehand...

The Chairman: This could be left to the steering committee.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): ...could be dealt with by the steering committee. I think if I could just move the two motions, not at the same time but in sequence, we might be able to effectively work out something.

The Chairman: I think this is a very good suggestion—it will leave time for the members of the Committee to speak on other points we have under discussion today. I

[Interprétation]

Je soulève cette question, parce que je n'aimerais pas voir le Comité devenir la cible de critiques de la part de M. Bennet ou d'autres personnes et de les entendre dire: «Voici une autre question qui risque d'éloigner encore plus l'Ouest. On nous oublie; on ne s'intéresse pas à nous!»

Le président: Merci beaucoup, monsieur Forrestall.

M. Forest: Est-ce que le Comité de l'Ontario a déjà présenté un rapport et des recommandations pour que nous puissions les étudier avant de nous y rendre?

Le président: Oui, il existe un rapport préliminaire qui a été déposé à l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario. M. Hamel en a un exemplaire.

M. Forest: Pourriez-vous nous distribuer ce document ou le faire circuler pour que nous puissions voir quelles sont les questions précises qui y sont traitées et être en mesure de poser nos questions en conséquence?

Le président: Le greffier dit qu'il va obtenir un nombre suffisant d'exemplaires pour vous les distribuer avant la fin de la séance.

M. Forest: C'est une bonne idée.

M. Howard (Skeena): Nous avons discuté de plusieurs points, et ce que vous demandez à présent ce sont des motions ou l'adoption de certaines mesures. Vous demandez d'appuyer l'idée selon laquelle nous serions disposés à rencontrer le Comité spécial de l'Ontario le 15 janvier.

Le président: Oui.

M. Howard (Skeena): Nous ne pouvons pas toujours nous occuper de ces choses lorsqu'une vingtaine de personnes essaient de le faire, mais c'est le rouage et la procédure établis pour entendre des témoins supplémentaires, la publicité, les règlements relatifs aux mémoires...

Le président: Le Comité de direction pourrait s'en charger.

M. Howard (Skeena): Cela pourrait être réglé par le Comité de direction. Je crois que si je présente les deux motions peut-être pas à la fois, mais l'une à la suite de l'autre, nous pourrions en venir à quelque chose.

Le président: Cette proposition me paraît excellente d'autant plus que les membres du Comité disposeront de plus de temps pour discuter d'autres questions inscrites à l'ordre think your suggestion could be approved—that the matter of adjusting the mechanics be referred to the Standing Committee.

[Text]

• 1200

Mr. Forrestall: Could it be included in one of those general motions that some of our thought and intention is in regard to the rest of Canada?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You mean the most important part of Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: The youngest part of Canada.

The Chairman: I will put the first motion that the Committee seek permission to sit in Toronto, and that the Clerk and the necessary supporting staff accompany the Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I move that the Steering Committee be empowered to study the mechanics of the invitation of the public in Toronto, and report to the Committee on January 16.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hamel: For the information of the Committee, regarding the report of the Select Committee on Election Laws of Ontario, this was a preliminary report published in February, 1969, and then on November 4 of this year a bill was introduced which received third reading last week. They have now finished with their work, and this is their new act.

The Chairman: May we have copies of both?

Mr. Hamel: Yes.

Mr. Lefebvre: Does anyone know, Mr. Chairman, if this preliminary report was a unanimous report of the Committee?

Mr. Hamel: The report itself is relatively short. It covers only seven or eight pages. The rest is a draft legislation which, in fact, was introduced almost as is, with a few minor editorial amendments. Mainly, the gist of their recommendations is on pages 6 and 7 of this report.

Mr. Lefebvre: I was wondering if this had been a unanimous report of the Committee, or was a vote taken and was it strictly along party lines?

[Interpretation]

du jour. Votre proposition portant sur la question de mettre au point la façon de procéder soit déferée au Comité de direction pourrait être approuvée.

M. Forrestall: Pourrait-on l'inclure dans une de ces motions d'ordre général portant nos intentions en ce qui concerne le reste du Canada.

M. Howard (Skeena): Vous parlez de la plus importante partie du Canada.

M. Forrestall: La plus jeune partie du Canada.

Le président: Donc, je proposerai la première motion portant que le comité demande la permission de siéger à Toronto, et que le greffier et son personnel de soutien accompagne le Comité.

La motion est adoptée.

M. Howard (Skeena): Je propose que le comité directeur ait l'autorisation d'étudier les dispositions qui permettraient d'inviter le public à témoigner à Toronto, et d'en faire rapport au Comité le 16 janvier.

La motion est adoptée.

M. Hamel: Pour la gouverne du Comité, au sujet du rapport du Comité spécial sur les lois électorales de l'Ontario, je dois souligner qu'il s'agit d'un rapport préliminaire publié en février 1969, et le 4 novembre de cette année, on a présenté un projet de loi à l'Assemblée et dont la troisième lecture a eu lieu la semaine dernière. Le travail est maintenant terminé et voilà la nouvelle loi ontarienne.

Le président: Pouvons-nous avoir des exemplaires de ce bill et du rapport?

M. Hamel: Oui.

M. Lefebvre: Au sujet de ce rapport préliminaire, s'agit-il d'un rapport unanime du Comité?

M. Hamel: Le rapport lui-même est assez bref. Il ne couvre que sept ou huit pages de texte. Le reste comprend le projet de loi qui a été présenté presque tel quel à part quelques changements mineurs. L'essentiel de la recommandation se trouve aux pages six et sept du présent rapport.

M. Lefebvre: Je me demandais tout simplement s'il s'agissait d'un rapport unanime du Comité. Un vote a-t-il été pris ou a-t-on procédé selon les politiques des partis tout simplement?

[Texte]

Mr. Hamel: To my knowledge it was unanimous. I attended one meeting of the Committee, and they seemed to be quite unanimous on these recommendations.

Mr. Duquet: Most of the recommendations have been implemented in the new law.

Mr. Hamel: That is correct.

The Chairman: There is another point about which I would like the members of the Committee to be aware. It is—I do not know whether we can discuss this in the presence of the Chief Electoral Officer, but I believe we can discuss this matter even if he is here—in regard to the idea raised by Mr. Howard, of getting this function of the Chief Electoral Officer away from politics completely.

The function of the Chief Electoral Officer is fixed by law. If the law is not amended for 10 or 15 years, he always receives the same treatment. He is, in such way, a civil servant. While the civil servants do receive increases in salary, in a different way the Chief Electoral Officer has to ask either the Secretary of State or the House of Commons to have his salary readjusted.

I am just making suggestions. I do not know if the members will want a further study of this. I want to raise this matter because I believe it is important. In some functions similar to the ones of the Chief Electoral Officer, the salary is established in a different way. For these persons the function is determined and the indemnity or salary is fixed, compared with some other function, let us say like a judge of the Exchequer Court with the supplementary treatments authorized in the law fixing the salaries of the judges.

• 1205

Actually, the treatment of the Chief Electoral Officer is determined in the law, period. It means that if the law is not amended for the next 10 or 15 years, he will never get an increase in salary like the other civil servants get. So, if you want to keep it this way, it is up to the members to decide. I would like to hear the views of the members of the Committee in this particular regard.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I recall previous occupants of the office and previous meetings. I think the way it is at the present time is not satisfactory. I am not thinking only of certain other groups with the same problems, like members of Parliament, and

[Interprétation]

M. Hamel: A ma connaissance, ce fut un rapport unanime. J'ai assisté à une réunion du comité. Il me semble qu'il s'agissait d'un rapport unanime au sujet des recommandations.

M. Duquet: Il me semble que la plupart des recommandations ont été mises en vigueur n'est-ce pas?

M. Hamel: Oui, c'est exact.

Le président: Il y a une autre question que j'aimerais signaler aux membres du Comité. Je ne sais pas si nous pouvons en discuter en présence du directeur général des élections, mais je crois que nous pouvons en parler même en sa présence.

Cela concerne l'une des questions soulevées par M. Howard, c'est-à-dire que les fonctions du directeur général des élections n'aient aucun lien politique. Quant aux honoraires du directeur général des élections, ce sont des honoraires qui sont fixés par la loi actuellement. Si la loi n'est pas modifiée pour dix ou quinze ans, le directeur continue de toucher le même traitement tout comme un fonctionnaire, sauf que celui-ci touche des relèvements annuels, tandis que le directeur général des élections doit demander au Secrétaire d'État ou à la Chambre des communes une modification de son traitement.

Je ne fais que formuler des suggestions. Je suppose que les membres voudront les étudier plus profondément, mais je veux soulever cette question, car elle me semble importante. Dans certaines fonctions semblables à celles du directeur général des élections, le salaire est établi d'une façon différente. Pour les personnes dont la fonction est déterminée et le traitement fixé, en regard d'autres fonctions, comme c'est le cas pour un juge de la cour de l'Échiquier, les honoraires supplémentaires sont autorisés par la Loi qui fixe les salaires des juges.

Le traitement actuel du directeur général des élections est fixé par la Loi, ce qui veut dire que si la Loi n'est pas modifiée au cours de dix ou quinze ans, il n'aura aucun relèvement de traitement, ce qui n'est pas le cas pour les autres fonctionnaires.

Donc, si vous voulez garder les choses telles qu'elles sont, libre à vous, mais j'aimerais avoir les opinions des membres du Comité à cet égard.

M. Macquarrie: Monsieur le président, je me souviens, d'avoir discuté cette question à des réunions antérieures. Je crois que les choses étant ce qu'elles sont, ce régime n'est pas satisfaisant. Je saisais qu'il y a d'autres groupes, comme les députés, qui ont les so on. I think it should not be so frozen in the legislation, and I believe we would be wise and thoughtful to look at it at the appropriate time.

[Text]

The Chairman: Are there any comments? Mr. Forest.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, your proposition would be concerning the salary of Mr. Hamel?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Forest: It would be incorporated in the electoral law. Is that the proposition?

The Chairman: No, it is in the law right now, but it is in such a way that the Chief Electoral Officer, for the period of time during which there is no amendment to the law, does not get an increase in salary.

Mr. Lefebvre: In other words, it could be 10 years.

The Chairman: It could be 15 or 20 years.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Any further bids?

The Chairman: As to the importance of the post, I believe we should think of having the treatment of the Chief Electoral Officer related to some other function in the Public Service, and then getting either the advantages or disadvantages of similar functions. If you look at the Official Languages Act, the Commissioner is going to receive a salary comparable to the ones received by the justices of the Exchequer Court, with the supplementary treatments authorized by Section 20 of the Judges Act. So it means that they are no longer related to the Secretary of State.

Today, with the actual law, if the Chief Electoral Officer wants to have an increase in salary, he has to go and beg it of the Secretary of State, who is a political person. I believe that we should look into this.

M. Trudel: Monsieur le président, avez-vous considéré la question suffisamment pour trouver un poste qui serait comparable auquel on pourrait associer la position de...

The Chairman: No, I cannot deride it myself. I am only raising the matter.

M. Trudel: Ce n'est pas la question. Avez-vous étudié la question suffisamment pour trouver un poste? Est-ce que vous avez cherché ou trouvé une échelle, une équivalence qui pourrait servir de base à notre discussion?

[Interpretation]

mêmes problèmes. Je ne crois pas que ces salaires devraient être gelés par la Loi. Il serait utile, je crois d'envisager la chose au moment voulu.

Le président: Y a-t-il des observations? M. Forest.

M. Forest: Monsieur le président, votre proposition touche le traitement de M. Hamel?

Le président: Oui.

M. Forest: Selon vous, ce traitement devrait être indiqué dans la loi électorale, non?

Le président: Non, il est déjà dans la Loi de telle façon que le directeur général des élections, durant la période où la loi n'est pas modifiée, ne reçoit aucun relèvement de traitement.

M. Lefebvre: En d'autres mots cela pourrait durer dix ans.

Le président: Oui, dix ans, quinze ans ou vingt ans.

M. Howard (Skeena): D'autres pronostics?

Le président: Quant à l'importance du poste, il nous faut songer à l'idée que le traitement du directeur général des élections est lié à certaines autres fonctions dans la Fonction publique. Il faut envisager le pour et le contre à l'égard de fonctions similaires. Si l'on étudie la Loi sur les langues officielles, le commissaire aux langues officielles recevra, je le cite à titre d'exemple, le même traitement que les juges de la cour de l'Échiquier, y compris des traitements supplémentaires autorisés par l'article 20 de la Loi sur les juges. Par conséquent, les traitements ne sont plus reliés à l'échelle des salaires du Secrétariat d'État.

Aujourd'hui, si le directeur général des élections veut obtenir un relèvement de traitement, il doit s'adresser un secrétaire d'État, qui est une personne politique. Je crois qu'il nous faudrait étudier la chose.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Chairman, have you considered the question sufficiently to find a position which would be comparable or which could be related to the...

Le président: Non, je ne peux décider moi-même. Je ne fais que soulever le problème.

Mr. Trudel: That is not the point. Have you studied sufficiently the matter to find a position? Have you looked for or found a scale, an equivalent that could serve as a basis for our discussion?

[Texte]

Le président: Personnellement, je ne l'ai pas fait. Je demande plutôt aux membres du Comité de se renseigner. Nous pourrions peut-être inviter un commissaire de la Fonction publique à venir nous faire une analyse du poste ou de la fonction et peut-être à nous donner une idée du salaire qui serait approprié ou de la liste des salaires qui sont payés aux différents postes supérieurs, dans la Fonction publique de façon à nous faire une idée plus précise.

C'est à vous de décider comment nous allons procéder. Mais, personnellement, je pense que nous devons d'abord nous prononcer sur ce principe: est-ce qu'il est logique et normal que le directeur général des élections ait un salaire fixé par une loi qui peut être modifiée par le Parlement seulement, ce qui, d'après notre expérience, n'est fait que tous les dix ou quinze ans? De sorte que c'est un fonctionnaire public d'une importance considérable et qui est obligé, s'il veut recevoir une augmentation de salaire, de la demander au secrétaire d'État, pendant que les fonctionnaires dont les fonctions sont reliées à la Fonction publique ont des augmentations de salaire régulières. Or le secrétaire d'État est une personne politique.

Je pense que le lien est trop direct, et que si l'on veut en faire une fonction complètement détachée de la Fonction publique, il s'agit là d'un point extrêmement important.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, does this only include the Chief Electoral Officer himself or does it include his staff as well? Do they come under the Public Service Commission or are they a separate entity as the Chief Electoral Officer is?

Mr. Hamel: Only the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer is fixed in the statute. The Assistant Chief Electoral Officer's salary is set by Order in Council and the other officers and employees of my office are paid according to the general rules applicable to all public servants because they come under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Howe: In other words, your chief assistant is in almost the same category as you are?

Mr. Hamel: No, sir, because the Assistant's salary is set by Order in Council which is much more flexible than an Act of Parliament.

There is one point, perhaps,—it is rather embarrassing to discuss this matter, but since

[Interprétation]

The Chairman: I have not done it personally. I would rather ask the members of the Committee to get information on the subject. We could perhaps invite a Public Service Commissioner to come here and give us an analysis of the position or the functions and give us an idea of the salary that would be appropriate, or a list of salaries that are paid for various higher positions in the Public Service so that we may have a more precise idea.

It is up to you to decide on the way we are going to proceed. But personally I think that we should first settle the question about whether it is normal and logical that the Chief Electoral officer have a salary fixed by a law amendable by Parliament only and that, as far as we know, is done only every 10 or 15 years. So that he is a public servant of considerable importance who if he wants an increase of salary has to ask the Secretary of State while the other civil servants have regular increases. We know that the Secretary of State is a political person.

I think the link is too direct and if we want this position to be completely independent from the Public Service this is a very important point.

M. Howe: Monsieur le président, est-ce que cela comprend seulement le directeur général des élections ou bien tout son personnel? Sont-ils considérés comme des fonctionnaires ou appartiennent-ils à une catégorie à part, comme le directeur général des élections lui-même?

M. Hamel: Seul le traitement du directeur général des élections est fixé par la loi. Celui du directeur adjoint est établi par un décret du gouverneur en conseil et le personnel de mon bureau est rémunéré conformément aux règlements généraux d'application dans la Fonction publique. Ils tombent sous le coup de la Loi sur les relations de travail dans la Fonction publique et de la Loi sur l'emploi dans la Fonction publique.

M. Howe: Autrement dit, votre adjoint est à peu près dans la même catégorie que vous-même.

M. Hamel: Non, car le traitement de mon adjoint est établi par un décret du conseil ce qui est beaucoup plus souple que la Loi.

Il est assez embarrassant pour moi d'en discuter, mais vu que vous me donnez des res-you gave me additional responsibilities perhaps I should feel a bit more at ease to talk about this—which I believe is the crux of the problem and that is that the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer should be statutory. In my own opinion I think it should be statutory, not only to effectively remove the Chief Electoral Officer from actual control by the government of the day, but also to convince the public—and to me this is very important, probably even more important than the first one—that the loyalty of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall I say, is not for sale more or less. I believe it is extremely important that the public has confidence in this official.

[Text]

This purpose is partly defeated by the fact that the salary of that official can be amended only by a bill which has to be presented by the government because it would be a money bill. Therefore, as the Chairman pointed out earlier, that pitfall was avoided in the recent Official Languages Act by relating the salary of the Commissioner of Official Languages to another statutory function in which there is a group of people and in which the salary is not determined in relation to one individual, but to a group of individuals. If the salary were related to that of other public servants, it may defeat the basic principle that it be statutory because the salaries of all other public servants with the exception of the Representation Commissioner and the Auditor General are set by Order in Council—in other words, by a decision of the executive—and there is quite a lot of variation between a certain minimum and a certain maximum.

•1215

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, it might be a good idea if members of the Committee were to open the book entitled General Election Instructions for Returning Officers which includes the Canada Elections Act on page 156, Section 4 of which states:

4. (1) The Chief Electoral Officer shall rank as and have all the powers of a deputy head of a department...

So that might be a way in which we can compare his present remuneration which is stated here as being $22,680. I do not know the salaries of all the deputy heads of departments, but I am sure none of them gets $22,000. I believe they are all in the range of $30,000 or more. I mention this just because it is already in the Act that his salary should be comparable to a deputy head of a department...

The Chairman: Yes.

[Interpretation]

pensabilités supplémentaires, je me sens un peu plus libre d'en parler. Je crois que l'essentiel est que le traitement du Directeur général des élections soit fixé par la loi. Il devrait l'être, non seulement pour que le directeur général des élections ne soit pas sous la dépendance du gouvernement, mais ce qui est encore plus important à mes yeux, pour convaincre le public de son incorruptibilité. Il est très important que le public ait confiance en un tel fonctionnaire.

Mais on va à l'encontre de ce but, en partie, car le traitement de ce fonctionnaire ne peut être modifié qu'en vertu d'un projet de loi qui doit être présenté par le gouvernement parce qu'il s'agit d'un projet de loi financière. Un tel écueil a été évité, comme le président l'a signalé plus tôt, dans la Loi sur les langues officielles où le traitement du commissaire des langues officielles a été établi en le comparant à un autre poste statutaire où le traitement n'est pas déterminé en fonction d'un seul fonctionnaire, mais de plusieurs. Si le traitement est en rapport avec celui d'autres fonctionnaires, cela peut aller à l'encontre du principe fondamental qui veut qu'il soit fixé par la loi. En effet les traitements de tous les fonctionnaires, à part celui du commissaire à la représentation et de l'auditeur général sont établis par un décret en conseil, autrement dit, par décision du cabinet et la marge entre le minimum et le maximum est bien large.

M. Lefebvre: Monsieur le président, ce serait une bonne idée que les membres du Comité prennent connaissance dans les Instructions aux officiers rapporteurs sur les élections générales du texte de l'article 4 (1) à la page 164:

Le directeur général des élections a le rang et tous les pouvoirs d'un sous-chef de ministère...

Par conséquent, ce serait peut-être une façon de comparer son traitement actuel qui est de $22,680. Je ne connais pas quels sont les traitements des sous-ministres, mais je n'en connais aucun qui ne gagne que $22,000. Le traitement est de $30,000 ou plus. Je mentionne ceci tout simplement parce que cela figure déjà dans la Loi et que son traitement devrait être comparable à celui des sous-ministres.

Le président: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Lefebvre: ...and it might give an idea to the members.

An hon. Member: Where is this?

Mr. Lefebvre: It is Section 4 on page 156.

An hon. Member: In the English or the French version?

Mr. Lefebvre: This is the English version.

The Chairman: If the members agree on the principle, the steering committee will attempt to get people here to inform the members of the Committee if the Public Service Commission, for instance, has already made an evaluation of the treatment of the position. It is already defined in the Act, but we could secure information on this and give it to the members. However, before we make any move on this, members of the Committee should decide if we should change—as Mr. Macquarrie has said—the actual status which is not accurate and which does not make, in a sense, the Chief Electoral Officer separate from politicians.

Mr. Macquarrie: I think there has been a pretty good consensus of our views on it, but I think, as you suggest Mr. Chairman, we will need to get a little more information and think about it a bit more. Ideally, I would like to think of a group which comprised people who were officers of Parliament rather than of the executive level, but at the moment I do not know if that group would be a practical group. Our aim always is to have this particular and very important officer of the country be, in fact, an officer of the country and of Parliament and not an emanation of the executive. Not that I have ever suggested that in our time there has been any problem there, but we must try. I think we should think it over a bit more. I almost sound as if I were at the conference yesterday.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly in favour, as you have enunciated, that the salary should not be fixed in the law. Would it be sufficient to say in the Act that the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer would be that of say, a judge of the Exchequer Court? They get an increase naturally and it goes by automatically after...

The Chairman: It is a way of defining the kind of salary that we could allocate to him. If we make it comparable to some other function in the civil service, then it will follow the line of the rules that will apply to the function.

Mr. Forest: I certainly would be in favour of that.

[Interprétation]

M. Lefebvre: Ça peut donner des idées aux députés.

Une voix: Où cela se trouve-t-il?

M. Lefebvre: L'article 4 de la page 156.

Une voix: Version anglaise ou française?

M. Lefebvre: Version anglaise.

Le président: Si tous les députés sont d'accord sur le principe, le comité de direction nous dira si la Commission de la Fonction publique a déjà évalué le traitement du poste. Cela a été déjà défini dans la Loi mais nous pourrions obtenir des renseignements à ce sujet, et vous les communiquer—cependant, avant de faire des propositions à ce sujet, les députés devraient décider, comme l'a dit M. Macquarrie, s'il faudrait modifier la loi actuellement en vigueur qui n'est pas précise et qui ne laisse pas le directeur général des élections indépendant des politiciens.

M. Macquarrie: Je crois que nous sommes tous d'accord sur ce point, mais je crois que nous pourrions aller aux renseignements et réfléchir encore à la question. Personnellement, je crois que l'idéal serait un groupe qui comprendrait des fonctionnaires parlementaires plutôt que des membres du gouvernement, bien que je ne sache pas encore si ce serait pratique. Notre but, est que cet agent, dont le poste est si important, soit un agent du Parlement et non du gouvernement. Ce n'est pas qu'il y ait des problèmes, mais nous devons réfléchir davantage à la question.

M. Forest: Monsieur le président, je suis d'avis que le traitement ne devrait pas être fixé par la Loi. Serait-il suffisant de stipuler dans la loi que le traitement du directeur général des élections soit le même que celui d'un juge de la Cour de l'Échiquier. Les augmentations sont automatiques...

Le président: C'est une façon de définir le traitement qu'il pourrait recevoir. Si nous comparons ce traitement à d'autres dans la Fonction publique, les mêmes règles devront s'appliquer en l'occurrence.

M. Forest: Je serais en faveur de ce système.

[Text]

An hon. Member: So would I.

The Chairman: If there are no other questions by members, I think this Committee will stand adjourned until next Tuesday at 11 a.m. when we will have the pleasure of hearing evidence from Professor Cairns of the University of British Columbia.

Thank you, gentlemen.

[Interpretation]

Une voix: Moi aussi.

Le président: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions de la part des membres, je crois que nous pouvons ajourner jusqu'à mardi matin à 11 heures, alors que nous entendrons le témoignage de M. Cairns de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique.

Merci messieurs.

OFFICIAL BILINGUAL ISSUE

FASCICULE BILINGUE OFFICIEL

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHAMBRE DES COMMUNES

Second Session

Deuxième session de la

Twenty-eighth Parliament, 1969

vingt-huitième législature, 1969

STANDING COMMITTEE

ON

COMITÉ PERMANENT

DES

PRIVILEGES
AND ELECTIONS

PRIVILÈGES
ET ÉLECTIONS

Chairman

M. Ovide Laflamme

Président

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS
AND EVIDENCE

PROCÈS-VERBAUX ET
TÉMOIGNAGES

No. 7

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1969

LE MARDI 16 DÉCEMBRE 1969

Canada Elections Act

La Loi électorale du Canada

WITNESSES—TÉMOINS

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

(Voir le procès-verbal)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON
PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Chairman
Vice-Chairman

and Messrs.

Alkenbrack,
Benjamin,
Code,
Côté (Richelieu),
Duquet,
Forest,

Forrestall,
Fortin,
Francis,
Howard (Skeena),
Howe,
Jerome,

(Quorum 11)

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES
PRIVILÈGES ET ÉLECTIONS

Président
Vice-président

et MM.

Lefebvre,
Macquarrie,
Marceau,
Murphy,
Richard,
Trudel—(20)

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

MONDAY, December 15, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Orders for second reading of Bills C-14, C-72, C-78, C-87, C-97, C-101 and C-120 be discharged and the subject-matters thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1969.

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be granted permission to sit in Toronto, Ontario, and that the necessary supporting staff do accompany the Committee.

ATTEST.

Le greffier de la Chambre des communes,
ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

ORDRES DE RENVOI

Le LUNDI 15 décembre 1969.

Il est ordonné—Que les ordres portant deuxième lecture des Bills C-14, C-72, C-78, C-87, C-97, C-101 et C-120 soient révoqués et que la teneur desdits bills soit renvoyée au comité permanent des privilèges et élections.

Le MARDI 16 décembre 1969.

Il est ordonné—Qu'il soit permis au comité permanent des privilèges et élections de siéger à Toronto (Ontario) et que le personnel de soutien nécessaire accompagne le comité.

ATTESTÉ.

[Text]

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, December 16, 1969.

(8)

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections met this day at 11:05 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Laflamme, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Code, Duquet, Forest, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Paproski, Richard—(10).

Also present: Mr. McKinley, M.P.

Witness: Professor A. C. Cairns, University of British Columbia.

In attendance: Mr. J. M. Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer.

The Chairman introduced Professor Cairns, and invited him to summarize his paper entitled "The Electoral System and the Party System in Canada, 1921-1965."

The members questioned Professor Cairns on his statement.

The Committee agreed that Professor Cairns be reimbursed for travelling and living expenses incurred by reason or his appearance before the Committee.

The Chairman thanked Professor Cairns on behalf of the Committee, and the witness was permitted to withdraw.

The Committee agreed that the Clerk of the Committee be empowered to place appropriate newspaper advertising in Canadian Newspapers regarding the public hearings of the Privileges and Elections Committee on the Canada Elections Act.

At 12:30 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

[Traduction]

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le MARDI 16 décembre 1969.

(8)

Le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections se réunit ce matin à 11 h. 05. Le président, M. Laflamme, occupe le fauteuil.

Députés présents: MM. Code, Duquet, Forest, Howe, Jerome, Laflamme, Lefebvre, Macquarrie, Paproski, Richard—(10).

Autre député présent: M. McKinley.

Témoin: M. A. C. Cairns, professeur à l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique.

Comparaît: M. J.-M. Hamel, directeur général des élections.

Le président présente M. Cairns et l'invite à résumer le document qu'il a rédigé, intitulé Le système électoral et le régime des partis politiques au Canada, de 1921 à 1965.

Les membres du Comité interrogent M. Cairns au sujet de son exposé.

Les membres du Comité acceptent de rembourser M. Cairns des frais de séjour et de voyage qu'entraîne son témoignage devant le Comité.

Le président remercie M. Cairns au nom des membres du Comité et l'autorise à se retirer.

Il est décidé que le greffier du Comité soit autorisé à faire paraître dans les journaux canadiens les annonces appropriées relatives aux audiences publiques que le Comité permanent des privilèges et élections au sujet de la Loi électorale du Canada.

A 12 h. 30, le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'à nouvelle convocation du président.

Le greffier du Comité,
R. V. Virr,
Clerk of the Committee.

[Texte]

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, December 16, 1969

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. Before we deal with today's business on behalf of Colonel Dewis I wish to make a correction to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence Official Bilingual Issue, Issue No. 3, page 11 at the bottom of the left column:

COLONEL DEWIS: Mr. Chairman, in explaining this I am just trying to make...

These words and those following are attributed to Colonel Dewis and should be attributed to Mr. Benjamin.

We have the pleasure of having with us today Professor Cairns who is a well-known teacher of political science at the University of British Columbia. Professor Cairns on behalf of the members, I wish to express our thanks for your having accepted our invitation to come. Our Clerk has circulated among the members one of your papers related to the election systems. To start with, I believe Professor Cairns will give us a summary of his paper and then be submitted to a question period. Professor Cairns?

Professor A. C. Cairns (University of British Columbia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As has been indicated by the Chairman, the major thrust of my argument is contained in the article which has been circulated to you; however, for the sake of refreshing the memories of some of you who may not have managed to look at it recently or be to well aware of precisely what I have said, I am simply going to run over some of the main interpretations of some consequences of the existing electoral system, which I think merit examination and meriting examination possibly merit the looking at alternative kinds of electoral systems.

I might preface my remark by noting that, as you all know, we are now in a period of significant attempted constitutional revision, and this constitutional revision is premised on the assumption that the survival and national unity of this nation may depend on the creation of a constitution somewhat different than that which we were bequeathed in 1867.

This seems to me to make it an appropriate time also to consider the electoral system as one of the most important instrumentalities

[Interprétation]

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 16 décembre 1969

Le président: Messieurs, nous avons quorum. J'aimerais tout d'abord, au nom du colonel Dewis, apporter une rectification à la page 11 du fascicule bilingue officiel n° 3 des délibérations du Comité, au bas de la colonne de gauche:

M. DEWIS: Monsieur le président, j'essaie d'exprimer...

En fait, cette réplique devrait être attribuée à M. Benjamin.

Nous avons aujourd'hui l'honneur d'accueillir parmi nous M. Cairns, professeur de sciences politiques renommé de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique.

Au nom des membres du Comité, j'aimerais vous remercier d'avoir accepté notre invitation. Notre greffier a fait circuler un de vos documents sur les systèmes électoraux. Monsieur Cairns fera un résumé de son document et répondra ensuite aux questions que vous lui poserez. Monsieur Cairns?

M. A. C. Cairns (professeur à l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique): Merci, monsieur le président. Comme le président l'a indiqué, le principal point de mon argument se trouve dans l'article qu'on vous a distribué, pour rafraîchir la mémoire de ceux qui n'auraient peut-être pas pu le lire récemment ou qui ne sauraient pas précisément ce que j'ai dit, je vais simplement passer en revue quelques-unes des conséquences du système électoral actuel qui à mon avis, méritent un examen et probablement l'étude éventuelle des autres systèmes électoraux possibles.

Comme préface, je ferais remarquer que nous vivons actuellement une époque de révision constitutionnelle importante et que cette révision se fonde sur l'hypothèse que l'unité nationale peut dépendre d'une nouvelle Constitution un peu différente de celle de 1867.

Je crois qu'il serait également opportun d'étudier le système électoral entant que guide important de votre politique. C'est important by which our politics are conducted. Important also because it seems to me that the question of the consequences of the electoral system does bear on this issue of national unity, as I will try to clarify in the course of my remarks. I am not going to discuss all of the consequences of the electoral system, only some particular ones which I think are relevant and are less usually noticed.

[Text]

First of all, I might identify what I mean by an electoral system. By an electoral system, essentially I mean the set of rules by which votes are translated into seats. In other words, the formula by which one determines that a given distribution of votes for a particular political party is to result in a particular distribution of seats for that and other parties.

Our system is a single member plurality system; a system in which there are 260-odd individual constituencies scattered from coast to coast in which in most cases more than two parties compete for the single available seat and the candidate who wins the election is the one who gets more votes than anybody else. He does not have to get a majority; he simply has to get one more than the nearest contender. This system is frequently called the first past the post system, which perhaps summarizes the underlying philosophy which it contains.

Now I am going to briefly mention the standard criticism of this electoral system, not that I think it is one which this Committee need pay any attention to in this discussion as it is a widely known criticism, widely accepted as valid, although not everybody agrees that anything should be done to rectify the consequences. It is that this electoral system of individual member constituencies with winners elected by a plurality, by necessity, by its inherent nature, produces striking discrepancies between the percentage of seats and the percentage of votes which each party receives. It therefore discriminates against some parties and discriminates for some parties. It discriminates against some voters, and it discriminates on behalf of other voters. Typically it discriminates on behalf of the government party and collectively discriminates against the opposition parties, although it does not necessarily discriminate against each opposition party.

In other words, the system tends to produce legislative majorities at the level of seats where no majority exists in most cases at the level of votes. One can argue that this is parce qu'il me semble que les conséquences du système électoral se rapportent étroitement à la question d'unité nationale, comme je vais essayer de le démontrer au cours de mon exposé.

[Interpretation]

Je ne veux pas traiter de toutes les conséquences du système électoral, mais de celles qui sont pertinentes et qui sont généralement moins remarquées. J'aimerais tout d'abord dire ce que j'entends par régime ou système électoral. J'entends essentiellement par là un ensemble de règles en vertu desquelles le scrutin se traduit par l'élection des députés. Autrement dit, c'est une formule par laquelle on détermine qu'une répartition donnée des votes pour un parti politique en particulier entraîne une distribution particulière de sièges pour chacun des partis.

Notre système est un système majoritaire où l'on élit un député. On compte quelque 26 circonscriptions électorales au Canada où dans la plupart des cas, plus de deux partis se font la lutte pour un seul siège disponible. Le candidat qui remporte le plus de voix est déclaré candidat vainqueur. Il n'a pas besoin d'obtenir la majorité. Il lui suffit d'obtenir une voix de plus que son adversaire le plus rapproché. On a fréquemment dit de ce système qu'il est celui où le vainqueur emporte le morceau, ce qui résume le principe sous-jacent du système.

Je vais maintenant mentionner certaines des critiques ordinaires formulées à l'égard de ce régime non pas parce que le présent Comité doit s'y appesantir, car il s'agit des critiques reconnues généralement comme valables, bien que tout le monde ne s'accorde pas à vouloir le rectifier. Mais c'est que ce système de circonscriptions électorales particulières où des vainqueurs sont élus par le nombre de voix obtenues entraîne de par sa nature, un décalage entre le pourcentage des sièges et le pourcentage de voix accordées à chaque parti. Il y a donc distinction injuste pour certains partis et traitement de faveur pour d'autres. Il y a discrimination à l'égard de certains votants et traitement de faveur pour certains autres. Typiquement, il favorise le parti gouvernemental et va collectivement parlant à l'encontre des partis de l'opposition, quoique cela ne soit pas nécessairement à l'encontre de chaque parti de l'opposition.

Le système, autrement dit, entraîne des majorités législatives au niveau des sièges où il n'existe pas de majorité au niveau des votes dans la plupart des cas. On peut bien unfair. Different parties have to get more votes to get seats than do other parties, and it is frequently from the basis of this perspective that advocates of proportional representation take their stand. They simply claim that a party system should give equal weight to each voter's party preference; that our system does not do that; therefore that it is similar to a butcher using false scales and is by definition undemocratic and should be altered.

[Texte]

You can think that argument over. It is the standard platitudinous one universally used but it is not the point which I wish to discuss in my presentation. What I wish to examine is the relation of the electoral system to sectionalism or to regionalism. What are the consequences of the kind of electoral system we have, single member constituencies, in the kind of society we have, i.e., a society composed of four, or if you accept Mr. Bennett, five significant sectional divisions?

• 1115

Now one can start from the premise that one major task of the party system is to be sensitive to, and to devise appropriate policies to accommodate, the different interests of the various sections which make up this country; sections defined by differences in culture, differences in the nature of their economy, differences in their orientation towards world markets and so on. As you all know, this is a major problem. It is with respect to this problem that our political parties are frequently judged. Are they, in other words, contributing to some process of national integration, or at least of successful accommodation of these regional interests so that they are prepared to continue their membership in this political system? So we have significant sectional distinctions and these are significant for the task of the parties.

The second point, as a preliminary is that the existing parties, by which I mean not only the parties of 1969 but the parties of our entire history, have different voter strengths in different sections of the country. Parties are unevenly distributed in terms of the percentage of voter support they get in Quebec or the Prairies or Ontario or the Maritimes. They are not uniformly distributed in the sense that if a party gets 30 per cent of the vote it is likely to get 30 per cent everywhere; 30 per cent is an aggregate figure composed of 50 per cent here, 10 per cent there and 25 per cent somewhere else.

[Interprétation]

dire que c'est injuste. Certains partis doivent recueillir plus de voix que d'autres pour obtenir des sièges. C'est souvent sur cela que se fondent ceux qui préconisent la représentation proportionnelle. Ils prétendent simplement que le régime de parti devrait donner autant de poids au vote de chaque votant selon le parti pour lequel il vote; que notre système ne fait pas cela. Il ressemble donc à un boucher qui utiliserait des balances truquées. C'est par définition anti-démocratique. On devrait y apporter des changements.

Vous pourriez étudier cet argument. C'est le plus courant, mais je ne veux pas en discuter dans le présent mémoire. Ce que je veux faire, c'est examiner le rapport qui existe entre le système électoral et le régionalisme, quelles sont les conséquences du genre de système électoral que nous avons, avec le cadre de circonscriptions électorales où l'on élit un seul député, dans la société que nous avons, société qui se compose de quatre ou, comme chez M. Bennett, de cinq régions importantes?

On peut commencer en disant qu'une des principales tâches du régime des partis, c'est de refléter et d'élaborer des politiques concernant les différents secteurs qui constituent notre pays; secteurs définis par des cultures différentes, par des économies différentes, par des divergences de vues quant à leur orientation vers les marchés mondiaux, etc. Comme vous le savez tous, c'est un problème important et c'est sur ce problème que nos partis politiques sont souvent jugés. Autrement dit, est-ce qu'ils contribuent à quelque processus d'intégration nationale ou au moins à un accommodement des intérêts régionaux pour qu'ils puissent continuer à souscrire à ce régime? Il existe donc des divergences régionales qui sont très importantes pour les partis.

Le deuxième point, à titre préliminaire, que je veux faire ressortir c'est que les partis actuels—j'entends par là, non seulement les partis de 1969, mais les partis au cours de notre histoire—reçoivent différentes adhésions, selon les régions du pays. Les partis ne sont pas uniformément bénéficiaires du pourcentage de l'appui des votants. Selon que ceux-ci sont du Québec, des Prairies ou des Maritimes. Ce n'est pas une répartition uniforme en ce sens que si un parti recueille 30 p. 100 du suffrage, il devrait avoir 30 p. 100 partout. Ce 30 p. 100 se décompose en 50 p. 100 ici, 10 p. 100 là et 25 p. 100 quelque part d'autre.

[Text]

Given this sectional society and given this distribution of voter support, which is just a fact of life, what is the effect of the electoral system on the composition of the political parties in the legislative body which emerges from our process of counting votes and making them significant in the way in which we do. The effect to which I wish to draw your attention is that the electoral system, it seems to me, significantly exaggerates sectionalism and regionalism in this country. Therefore, I will argue, one can at least make a strong case that in a country which is significantly sectionally divided, an electoral system which exaggerates the importance of sectionalism constitutes a disservice to the major task which we have set the party system, or which our society by its nature has set the party system; namely, the task of national integration. Now this exaggeration of sectionalism is manifest in a number of ways and I will simply draw your attention to them occasionally referring to the article which has been distributed to you.

The most important point from which nearly everything else in my argument follows is that political parties in Canada are much more sectional at the level of representation, at the level of their membership in the House of Commons, than they are at the level of the electorate, than they are at the level of the voters. I will simply cite some examples of how the electoral system in the distorted fashion in which it cumulates votes into seats makes the parties less accurate reflections of the sectional support they have in the country than another electoral system could do.

Now, I am not sure whether the mimeographed paper you have refers to exactly the same pages which I have, so if I refer to a page you may not, in fact, follow it.

An hon. Member: It is the same one.

Professor Cairns: Yes, it is the same. Beginning at the bottom of page 60 and then on page 61 you will note I indicate that an analysis of CCF/NDP votes and seats—this is for the period 1921 to 1965—clearly illustrates the manner in which the electoral system has distorted the parliamentary wing of the party. Table IV reveals the extreme discrimination visited on Ontario supporters of the CCF from 1935 to 1957. With the exception of 1940, CCF Ontario voting support consistently constituted between 30 and 40 per cent of total

[Interpretation]

Étant donné ce régionalisme, cette répartition des suffrages, ce qui est un fait, quelle est l'incidence du système électoral sur la composition des partis politiques au niveau du corps législatif qui émerge de ce processus de dépouillement du scrutin et qui donne à ce processus l'importance que nous lui accordons? Je voudrais donc vous signaler que dans un pays divisé par régions aussi importantes, un système électoral qui exagère l'importance du régionalisme nuit au principe du système des partis, ou au principe sur lequel notre société a établi le système des partis, soit la tâche de l'intégration nationale. Cette exagération du nationalisme est visible dans bien des domaines et je ne ferais que vous les signaler à l'occasion m'en référant à l'article qui vous a été remis.

L'argument essentiel d'où presque tout le reste découle dans mon raisonnement est que les partis politiques au Canada sont bien plus régionalismes au niveau de la représentation qu'au niveau des députés à la Chambre des communes, qu'un niveau de l'électorat.

Je vais simplement citer quelques exemples pour montrer de quelle façon ce régime électoral peut fausser le calcul des votes pour les sièges, et rend le parti moins représentatif de l'appui qu'il reçoit dans chaque région du pays, que tout autre régime. Je ne sais pas au juste si le document autocopié que vous avez, porte le même numéro de page que le mien. Lorsque je cite une page, il se peut qu'en fait vous ne puissiez suivre.

Une voix: Oui, c'est le même document.

M. Cairns: Oui, nous avons le même document que vous. Au bas de la page 60 et à la page 61, vous remarquerez que j'ai donné une analyse de votes et des sièges du NPD de la période de 1921 à 1965 et cela illustre manifestement comment le système électoral a faussé la distribution des sièges au Parlement. Au tableau IV, on voit la discrimination qui est très manifeste à l'égard du CCF en Ontario de 1935 à 1957. Sauf en 1940, le vote CCF en Ontario s'est toujours maintenu entre 30 et 40 p. 100 de tous les votes souscrits au CCF et CCF voting support; yet, the contribution of Ontario to CCF parliamentary representation was derisory. During the same period there pourtant la représentation parlementaire de l'Ontario au parti CCF du Parlement a été dérisoire. Au cours de la même période, il y a was a marked over-representation of Saskatchewan in the CCF caucus. The 1945 election is indicative. The 260,000 votes from Ontario, 31.9 per cent of the total CCF vote, produced no seats at all while 167,000 voters from Saskatchewan, 20.5 per cent of the total party vote, were rewarded with 18 seats or 64.3 per cent of the total party seats. In other words, a small percentage of total CCF votes from Saskatchewan led to an overwhelming dominance of the CCF caucus by representatives from that province while much greater voting support from Ontario produced inconsequential representation.

[Texte]

In the next paragraph I go on to point out that this exaggeration of sectional differences in party support, or provincial differences in party support also affects the major parties. Really I think the distinction between the treatment which the electoral system accorded to Liberal and Conservative voters in Ontario and Quebec respectively makes most cogently the point which I am trying to communicate to you.

Table V makes it clear that the electoral system has been far from impartial in its treatment of Liberal and Conservative voting support from Ontario and Quebec. For 14 consecutive elections covering nearly half a century, there was a consistent and usually marked over-representation of Quebec in the parliamentary Liberal Party and marked underrepresentation in the parliamentary Conservative Party, with the exception of 1958. For 10 consecutive elections from 1921 to 1957, Ontario was consistently and markedly overrepresented in the parliamentary Conservative Party and for 11 consecutive elections from 1921 to 1958, there was consistent but less marked under-representation of Ontario in the parliamentary Liberal Party. Thus the electoral system, by pulling the parliamentary Liberal Party toward Quebec and the parliamentary Conservative Party toward Ontario, in the period which I discuss in this article, made the sectional cleavages between the parties much more pronounced in Parliament than they were at the level of the electorate.

How the electoral system affected the relationship of Quebec to the parliamentary wings of the two major parties is evident in the truly startling discrepancies between votes and seats for the two parties from that province. From 1921 to 1965 inclusive, the Liberals gained 752 members from Quebec and the Conservatives only 135. The ratio of 5.6 Liberals to each Conservative, which this distribution of seats amounts to in the House of Commons, contrasts sharply with the 1.9 to eu une représentation exagérée de la Saskatchewan au caucus CCF. L'élection de 1945 en est un bon exemple. Les 260,000 votes obtenus en Ontario soit 31.9 p. 100 du vote CCF total, n'ont procuré aucun siège, alors que les 167,000 électeurs de la Saskatchewan, soit 20.5 p. 100 du total des votes, ont abouti à 18 sièges ou à 64.3 p. 100 de tous les sièges. Autrement dit, un faible pourcentage de votes du CCF provenant de la Saskatchewan a donné une prédominance entière aux représentants de la Saskatchewan au caucus CCF, alors que l'appui électoral plus fort de l'Ontario n'a donné qu'une représentation dérisoire.

[Interprétation]

Le paragraphe suivant souligne que cette exagération des différences régionales ou provinciales influe aussi sur les principaux partis.

Je crois vraiment que cette distinction de traitement accordée par le système électoral aux partis libéral et conservateur en Ontario et au Québec respectivement illustre très bien l'aspect que je veux faire ressortir.

Le tableau V indique clairement que le système électoral a été loin d'être impartial en ce qui a trait à l'appui électoral accordé aux libéraux et aux conservateurs au Québec. Au cours de 14 élections successives réparties sur près d'un demi-siècle, il y a une représentation continue trop importante du Québec chez les libéraux et le contraire chez les conservateurs, sauf en 1958. Pendant dix élections consécutives, soit de 1921 à 1957, l'Ontario a toujours donné le haut du pavé au parti conservateur parlementaire et, pendant onze élections consécutives, soit de 1921 à 1958, il y a eu une sous-représentation continue, mais moins marquée du parti libéral parlementaire. Donc, le système électoral, en favorisant le parti libéral parlementaire dans le Québec et le parti conservateur parlementaire dans l'Ontario, durant la période dont je viens de parler a rendu les coupures régionalistes entre les partis beaucoup plus prononcées au Parlement qu'elles ne l'étaient au niveau de l'électorat.

La manière dont le système électoral a influé sur le rapport entre le Québec et la représentation parlementaire des deux partis principaux s'affirme d'une façon frappante dans les divergences marquées entre les votes et le nombre de sièges pour les deux partis dans cette province. De 1921 à 1965 inclusive, les libéraux ont eu 752 députés du Québec et les conservateurs seulement 135. Il y avait 5.6 libéraux pour 1 conservateur à la Chambre des communes.

[Text]

1 ratio of Liberals to Conservatives at the level of voters. In other words although there were only 1.9 Liberal voters in Quebec compared to 1 Conservative voter, there were 5.6 Liberals to 1 Conservative at the level of the House of Commons.

So the first major manifestation of our electoral system is that parties are more sectional at the level of representation than at the level of the electorate. To put it another way. Both the Liberals and the Conservatives would have more accurately reflected the interests of these two provinces had they been proportionately represented in Parliament rather than in the way they were.

The second point is that this bias, which I choose to call it, of the electoral system affects campaign strategy because it encourages parties to think and act in sectional terms; to conduct their campaigns in terms of the possibilities of significant sectional returns. Therefore, as once again I document here, or at least cite certain facts in support of here, political parties have in some sense appealed to sectional feelings, to sectional identities on the hope of getting a significant sectional pay off in terms of seats.

• 1125

The third point is that this electoral system once it has undertaken its toll of the distribution of votes which the party receives then affects the sensitivity of the political parties to the sections of the country from which they are poorly represented. The classic example here is surely the Conservative Party in Quebec. In other words, I am arguing that the Conservative Party has had, since World War I anyway, significant difficulty in devising policies appropriate to or acceptable to the Province of Quebec and in particular the French Canadian community in Quebec. One of the reasons is that the electoral system in two ways has made it difficult for that party to do so. It has made it difficult for it to do so because the party has constantly been struggling against an over-whelming Liberal dominance at the level of seats and occasionally this has lead it to act in a rather despairing fashion as to the possibility of getting seats itself.

It has also affected it in the sense that the formation of and decision on what Conservative Party policy should be with respect to Quebec, I would inferentially suggest, has been detrimentally affected by the fact that there have been very few French Canadian

[Interpretation]

Aussi ce rapport, cette répartition des sièges, à la Chambre des communes, contraste nettement avec le rapport de 1.9 à 1 de libéraux aux conservateurs au niveau de l'électorat. Autrement dit, bien qu'il n'y ait eu qu'un rapport de 1.9 électeur libéral à 1 électeur conservateur au Québec, il y avait 5.6 libéraux pour chaque conservateur au niveau de la Chambre des communes.

Donc, la première manifestation du système électoral au Canada, c'est que les partis sont plus régionalisés au niveau de leur représentation qu'au niveau de l'électorat. Autrement dit, les libéraux et les conservateurs auraient fourni une représentation plus exacte des intérêts de ces deux provinces, s'ils avaient été représentés de façon proportionnelle au Parlement, plutôt que de la façon dont les choses se sont passées.

Le deuxième point, c'est que ce gauchissement du système électoral, comme je l'appelle, influe sur la stratégie électorale, parce qu'il encourage les partis à penser et à agir en fonction des régions et qu'ils conduisent la campagne électorale en fonction d'un rendement important au niveau de la région. Par conséquent comme je le prouve ici une fois de plus, ou tout au moins comme je le fais remarquer en apportant des faits à l'appui, les partis politiques ont recouru en un certain sens aux sentiments régionaux, aux identités régionales afin d'obtenir un bon rendement régional en sièges.

Ce système électoral et cela, c'est mon troisième point, une fois qu'il pris la rançon en nombre de sièges, influe sur la façon dont les partis politiques s'intéressent aux régions où ils sont pauvrement représentés. L'exemple classique, ici est sûrement le parti conservateur au Québec. Autrement dit, je soutiens que le parti conservateur, depuis la Première guerre mondiale tout au moins, éprouve beaucoup de difficultés à élaborer une politique appropriée ou acceptable dans la province de Québec et surtout par la collectivité francophone. L'une des raisons, c'est que le système électoral, de deux façons, a rendu la tâche difficile à ce parti dans ce domaine, parce que le parti a toujours eu à lutter contre une prédominance libérale au niveau des sièges, et ceci a quelquefois pour effet de le porter à désespérer d'obtenir même des sièges pour le parti lui-même.

Une autre conséquence c'est que l'élaboration des politiques et des décisions du parti conservateur à l'égard du Québec a été, à mon avis, défavorisée par le fait qu'il y a eu très peu de représentation francophone du parti conservateur québécois au caucus conserva-representatives of the Conservative Party from Quebec sitting in the Conservative caucus able to influence the determination of party policies in ways congenial to the sensitivities of that community. The reason that the Conservative Party only had a small proportion of French Canadian spokesmen in its caucus was not just that its voting support in Quebec was lower than the Liberals which is true, but that the electoral system added an additional stimulus and discriminated against that degree of voting support it had, so its representation was even less than its votes. Therefore, the low support of the Conservatives in Quebec was given an exaggerated effect in the caucus of the Conservative Party.

[Texte]

My fourth sort of subpoint in discussing the significance of the electoral systems contributing to sectionalism and regionalism is that this set of consequences has probably been damaging to the pursuit of national integration. I will quote rather than just refer you to the argument on page 75 to 76:

Given the strong tendency to sectionalism found in the very nature of Canadian society the question can be raised as to the appropriateness of the existing electoral system. Duverger has pointed out that the single-member constituency system...

which we have

... "accentuates the geographical localization of opinions: one might even say that it tends to transform a national opinion... into a local opinion by allowing it to be represented only in the sections of the country in which it is strongest." Proportional representation works in the opposite manner for "opinions strongly entrenched locally tend to be broadened on to the national plane by the possibility of being represented in districts where they are in a small minority." The political significance of these opposed tendencies "is clear: proportional representation tends to strengthen national unity (or, to be more precise, national uniformity); the simple majority system accentuates local differences. The consequences are fortunate or unfortunate according to the particular situation in each country".

In other words what Duverger who was one of the leading scholars of party system and electoral systems is saying is that the choice of the kind of electoral system a society should make is in a very important way related to the kinds of divisions which that society has and in a society which is characterized by significant sectional cleavages teur pouvant influencer les politiques du parti et les orienter dans un sens satisfaisant pour la communauté francophone. La raison pour laquelle le parti conservateur n'avait qu'une faible représentation francophone au sein du caucus, n'était pas simplement que l'appui électoral au Québec était plus faible pour lui que pour le parti libéral, ce qui est vrai, mais aussi pour le parti libéral, que le système électoral était un stimulant supplémentaire et discriminatoire quant à cet appui électoral; de sorte que sa représentation était plus faible même que son nombre de votes. Par conséquent, le faible appui donné par les conservateurs au Québec se reflétait d'une façon exagérée au caucus du parti conservateur.

[Interprétation]

Quatrièmement, comme question secondaire, en ce qui a trait à la signification du régime électoral par rapport au régionalisme, c'est que cette série de conséquences a probablement défavorisé le concept de l'unité nationale. Je vais vous donner une citation, plutôt que de vous renvoyer aux pages 75 et 76.

Étant donné la forte tendance au régionalisme de notre société canadienne, on pourrait s'interroger au sujet de la valeur appropriée du système électoral actuel. Duverger a souligné que le système de circonscriptions électorales avec un député élu «accentuait la restriction géographique des opinions. On pourrait même dire que cela tend à transformer une opinion nationale en une opinion locale en ne lui permettant d'être représentée que dans la région du pays où elle est la plus forte.» La représentation proportionnelle va à l'inverse en ce sens que «les opinions, au niveau local, tendent à s'élargir sur le plan national avec la possibilité qu'elles ont, dans ce système, d'être représentées dans des districts où elles sont en faible minorité.» Le sens politique de ces tendances opposées «est clair: la représentation proportionnelle tend à renforcer l'unité nationale, (ou pour préciser, l'uniformité nationale), tandis que le système simple et majoritaire accentue les différences locales. Les conséquences sont heureuses ou malheureuses selon la situation particulière qui prévaut dans chaque pays.»

Autrement dit, Duverger qui est une autorité en ce qui concerne les systèmes de parti et les systèmes électoraux, dit que le choix que fait une société en ce qui concerne les systèmes électoraux est étroitement en rapport avec des genres de divisions qui existent au sein de cette société, divisions qui se traduisent par des clôtures régionales. Duverger

[Text]

Duverger suggests the possibility that some kind of proportional representation might be appropriate.

This is my summary of the basic effects of the existing system on a society characterized by sectional diversity such as ours. I go on to simply make a few suggestions. In a country in which sectionalism is strong its exaggeration is unhealthy, for sectionalism is already powerful, vital, capable of being divisive. We might seriously question the advisability of an electoral system which exacerbates that sectionalism. We might think of an electoral system in fact which does the reverse.

• 1130

My next suggestion is that the electoral system can and should be changed if a different electoral system would better suit the objectives Canadians wish to pursue. In other words electoral systems are not handed down by God, they are alterable instrumentalities which can be manipulated. I do not necessarily mean deviously or in the interests of the party in power, but in good conscience by honourable men trying to facilitate the creation of the sort of political system which will help the society in which those men live achieve the objectives they have for that society.

I suggest that it is incumbent on anyone who is looking at this electoral system seriously to ask himself whether the consequences which this electoral system creates are consequences which could be overcome by a different kind of electoral system which would not do an injustice to certain democratic values which we all share.

My next point is simply a reminder that Canadians have been unreasonably hostile to and indifferent to various kinds of proportional representation as a possible improvement on the existing system. Proportional representation, in fact, with only spasmodic exceptions in our history, has not been seriously discussed as an alternative way of organizing the method by which we translate votes into seats. The electoral system, in short, has never really been questioned. It has been taken as a given, but it only need be a given if we wish to so keep it.

My next reminder is that proportional representation in a variety of forms—and there are very many kinds of proportional representation—has been widely and successfully used in a number of European countries; for example Italy, West Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland and the Scandinavian countries. Proportional reprepréconise une sorte de représentation proportionnelle chez nous. Voilà le résumé des conséquences du système actuel, dans une société qui se caractérise par des séparations régionales comme les nôtres. Je vais faire maintenant quelques propositions. Dans un pays où le régionalisme est très fort, il n'est pas bon de l'exagérer, car le régionalisme est déjà un élément puissant de division. On peut mettre sérieusement en doute l'opportunité d'un système électoral qui exagère ce mal. On peut songer à un système électoral qui aurait des effets contraires.

[Interpretation]

Ma proposition suivante, c'est que le système électoral devrait être changé. On devrait s'enquérir s'il existe un système électoral différent qui pourrait mieux répondre aux objectifs que les Canadiens veulent poursuivre. Autrement dit, les systèmes électoraux ne sont pas d'inspiration divine, ils peuvent être modifiés. Je ne parle pas de façon indirecte ou dans l'intérêt du parti au pouvoir, mais en toute conscience, par des hommes loyaux qui chercheraient à faciliter la naissance d'une sorte de parti politique destiné à aider la société dans laquelle vivent des hommes qui cherchent à atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont fixés pour cette société.

Je dirais qu'il appartient à tous ceux qui examinent sérieusement ce système électoral de se demander si les conséquences du système ne sont pas des conséquences qui pourraient être changées par un nouveau système qui ne nuirait pas aux valeurs démocratiques dont nous bénéficions tous.

La proposition suivante vise simplement à rappeler que les Canadiens ont été sans raison hostiles ou indifférents à divers modes de représentation proportionnelle qui auraient pu améliorer le système actuel. Le régime de représentation proportionnelle, en fait, à quelques exceptions près dans notre histoire, n'a jamais fait l'objet de discussions sérieuses, en tant que solution de rechange pour en arriver à un régime de rapport entre les votes et les sièges. Autrement dit, on n'a jamais mis en doute notre système électoral. On l'a pris comme acquis; nous n'avons qu'à nous en prendre à nous-mêmes.

Ensuite, je voudrais aussi vous rappeler que la représentation proportionnelle sous ses différentes formes—et il y a plusieurs formes de représentation proportionnelle—a été utilisée très largement et avec succès dans nombre de pays européens; par exemple en Italie, en Allemagne de l'Ouest, en Belgique, en Suisse, en Hollande et dans les pays scandinaves. En sensation, in short, is not only found, as our mythology suggests, in countries which have a disastrous history of political breakdown and so on. It is found in highly stable political systems which we could consider emulating.

[Texte]

My next suggestion is that if it is felt that the existing electoral system has certain consequences which we do not like, then the choice is not between the existing system and any specific version of proportional representation. If one finds that the existing system has certain unfavourable consequences, the only conclusion I would like the Committee to draw, and the only one I would myself draw, rests on the assumption that electoral systems should be adapted to the particular requirements of particular countries. And we may not necessarily find the appropriate model we want by looking at other societies with electoral systems different from ours, although they will constitute important illustrations from which we can draw.

Next, if this Committee does not wish to examine alternatives, it is approving without study the existing electoral system which has had the following effects, and I quote from page 79, at the bottom:

From one perspective it can be argued that if parties succeed in overcoming sectional divisions they do so in defiance of the electoral system. Conversely, it can be claimed that if parties do not succeed this is because the electoral system has so biased the party system that it is inappropriate to call it a nationalizing agency. It is evident that not only has the electoral system given impetus to sectionalism in terms of party campaigns and policy, but by making all parties more sectional at the level of seats than of votes it complicates the ability of the parties to transcend sectionalism. At various times the electoral system has placed barriers in the way of Conservatives becoming sensitively aware of the special place of Quebec and French Canada in the Canadian polity, aided the Liberals in that task, inhibited the third parties in the country from becoming aware of the special needs and dispositions of sections other than those represented in the parliamentary party, and frequently inhibited the parliamentary personnel of the major parties from becoming attuned to the sentiments of the citizens of the prairies. The electoral system's support for the political idiosyncracies of Alberta for over two decades ill served the integration of that provincial community into the national political system at a time d'autres mots, la représentation proportionnelle n'existe pas seulement comme nous le pensons chez nous, dans les pays qui ont des situations instables et en faillite, mais on la retrouve dans des pays extrêmement stables et il y aurait peut-être lieu de les imiter.

[Interprétation]

Je voudrais souligner maintenant que si le système électoral existant a des conséquences que nous n'aimons pas, cela ne veut pas dire qu'il faut faire un choix entre le système existant et une version particulière de représentation proportionnelle. Si l'on se rend compte que le système actuel a des conséquences malheureuses, la seule conclusion que le Comité devrait en tirer—et c'est celle que je tirerais—c'est que le système électoral doit être adapté aux besoins particuliers des pays. On ne trouvera peut-être pas le modèle approprié tout simplement en examinant les régimes électoraux des autres sociétés, mais on pourra y trouver de très bons exemples qui pourront nous inspirer.

Ensuite, si ce Comité ne veut pas étudier de solution de rechange, il approuvera le système existant qui a eu les effets suivants, et je cite au bas de la page 79:

«D'un certain côté, on peut dire que si les partis réussissent à surmonter les divisions régionales, ils le font à l'encontre du système électoral. Par ailleurs, si des partis ne réussissent pas, on peut dire que c'est parce que le système électoral a tellement faussé le système des partis qu'on ne saurait l'appeler un organe de nationalisation. Il est évident que non seulement le système électoral a donné un élan au régionalisme en termes de campagnes et de politique de parti, mais en rendant tous les partis plus régionaux au niveau des sièges qu'à celui de l'électorat, ce qui complique la tâche des partis qui veulent dépasser le régionalisme. A différentes époques, le système électoral a créé des obstacles empêchant les Conservateurs de se rendre compte de la place spéciale du Québec et du Canada français dans la politique canadienne et il a aidé les Libéraux dans cette tâche; il a empêché les tiers partis au pays de se rendre compte des besoins spéciaux et des particularismes d'esprit régional, autres que ceux qui figuraient dans le parti représenté au Parlement et il a souvent empêché le personnel parlementaire des principaux partis de s'harmoniser avec les sentiments des citoyens des Prairies. L'appui au système électoral pour les idiosyncrasies politiques de l'Alberta au cours d'au moins deux décennies a mal when it was most needed. In fact, the Alberta case merely illustrates the general proposition that the disintegrating effects of the electoral system are likely to be most pronounced where alienation from the larger political system is most profound. A particular orientation, therefore, has been imparted to Canadian politics which is not inherent in the very nature of the patterns of cleavage and consensus in the society, but results from their interplay with the electoral system.

[Text]

● 1135

These then are the consequences of the existing system. If you approve the existing system you approve a continuation of those kinds of consequences for the future.

Now, given what seems to me to be the seriousness of these consequences, the Committee has a responsibility to examine alternatives which will have less damaging consequences to this political community. I am suggesting, therefore, that in general the rules of the political game in which politicians pursue votes in order to gain seats have consequences and if we do not like the consequences we can change the rules; we can examine alternatives.

In conclusion I suggest that I am not—well, I do not suggest—I state that I am not advocating proportional representation at this time as such. I am simply suggesting that the existing electoral system has certain consequences which to me seem to be serious and they seem to be sufficiently serious. And if this Committee is seriously interested in the relationship of the electoral system to the capacity of their political parties to contribute to the integration of this country they might, and I suggest should, pay significant attention to alternative kinds of electoral systems which might better suit their purposes.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Professor Cairns. I wish to thank you for your substantial presentation on a very high level. And now the meeting is open for questions.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask Professor Cairns, in the light of his remarks, to comment on the fact that the Conservative Party in 1957 returned 206 out of 265 members to the House of Commons—208? I am sorry, 58. It took the two elections, 1957 and 1958, and 10 years later it now hold

[Interpretation]

servi l'intégration de cette communauté provinciale au sein du système politique national au moment où elle était le plus nécessaire. En fait le cas de l'Alberta illustre simplement l'idée générale, soit que les effets dissolvants du système électoral sont plus marqués très probablement là où il y a l'éloignement du système politique le plus prononcé. Une orientation particulière par conséquent a été donnée aux politiques canadiennes qui n'est pas inhérente à la nature même des séparations et du consensus de la société mais qui résulte des effets combinés du système électoral.»

Voilà donc les conséquences du système actuel. Si vous approuvez le système existant, vous en approuvez les conséquences et les suites.

Vu l'importance de ces conséquences, le Comité doit réexaminer des solutions de rechange qui auront des conséquences moins dommageables pour notre communauté politique. Par conséquent, je déclare de façon générale, que les règles du jeu politique par lequel les politiciens cherchent à obtenir des votes aux fins d'obtenir des sièges ont des conséquences et, si nous n'aimons pas les conséquences, nous pouvons changer les règles. Nous pouvons examiner des solutions de rechange.

Pour conclure, je tiens à souligner que je ne préconise pas présentement la représentation proportionnelle dans sa formule actuelle. Je dis tout simplement que le système électoral actuel a certaines incidences qui, à mon avis, semblent être suffisamment graves. Si le présent comité est vraiment intéressé, aux rapports entre le système électoral et les possibilités des partis politiques de contribuer à l'unité du pays, il pourrait et je dirais, il devrait consacrer une attention particulière à l'étude de systèmes électoraux différents qui pourraient être plus appropriés.

Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Cairns. Je désire vous remercier pour votre mémoire enrichissant et d'une haute tenue. C'est maintenant la période de question. Monsieur Jerome.

M. Jerome: Monsieur le président, pourrais-je demander au professeur Cairns, à la lumière des remarques qu'il a faites, s'il pourrait commenter le fait que le parti conservateur, en 1957, au Canada, a fait élire 206 membres sur les 265 à la Chambre des communes, 208, je me trompe, en 1958. Il a gagné some 80-odd? Or 74? In view of the fact that this is so current and so dramatic a swing-around in representation throughout the country, how can it possibly be maintained that the system under which we elect our members to the House of Commons at the present time promotes this regional difficulty that you are speaking of?

[Texte]

Professor Cairns: I am not sure that I follow your question. It seems to me first of all that one could argue that it is in part the electoral system which is responsible for the striking alteration in Conservative representation from 1958 to the present, because the change in the level of support for the Conservative Party at the level of the voter has undoubtedly been much less pronounced than the change in representation at the level of Parliament. So in that sense one might argue that the existing electoral system magnifies the swings in representation.

However, this was not your question. Quite frankly, I am not quite clear how your question impinges on my problem. My only suggestion is that if the electoral system makes it desirable, in terms of strategy, for a political party to view this country in sectional terms and to aim appeals at particular sectional communities, in which it may or may not be successful, and if the electoral system operates in such a way that throughout the history of the Conservative Party Quebec has been significantly underrepresented in the caucus of that Party, underrepresented in terms of the percentage of electoral support which that Party has received in Quebec, then that electoral system is making it difficult for the Conservative Party to do the kind of thinking which would result in appropriate and sensitive policies for that community.

Mr. Jerome: Do you feel that this situation exists respecting the federal House?

• 1140

Professor Cairns: That is what I am speaking of—the federal House.

Mr. Jerome: This is precisely my question. How can you say that any party is underrepresented or overrepresented in any region when such a dramatic swing-around can take place in the space of ten years in the representation throughout the country? The complexion of the House of Commons has just about completely reversed itself in a ten-year span.

21296—2

[Interprétation]

les deux élections de 1957 et 1958 et 10 ans plus tard, il compte quelque 80 ou 74 députés? Étant donné que ceci est tellement courant, et que ce changement tellement frappant au point de vue représentation, dans tout le pays, comment peut-on prétendre que le système par lequel nous élisons nos députés à la Chambre des communes, peut favoriser les divergences sur le plan régional dont vous parlez?

M. Cairns: Je ne sais pas si j'ai très bien compris votre question. Il me semble que premièrement on puisse avancer que c'est le système électoral qui est partiellement responsable des modifications frappantes dans la représentation conservatrice entre 1958 et maintenant, parce que le changement d'appui au parti conservateur, au niveau des élections a été sans aucun doute moins prononcé que le changement de la représentation au Parlement. Donc, il se peut en ce sens que le système électoral augmente les changements dans la représentation.

Cependant, ce n'était pas là notre point. Très franchement, je ne vois pas comment votre point contredit ce que j'ai dit. Je souligne que si le système électoral actuel, au point de vue stratégie, rend souhaitable pour un parti politique de diviser ce pays en régions et de s'orienter vers certaines régions qui lui sont plus ou moins favorables éventuellement, et si le système électoral fonctionne de telle façon que le parti conservateur du Québec soit largement sous-représenté au caucus de ce parti en fonction du pourcentage d'appui électoral que ce parti a reçu du Québec, alors ce système électoral ne favorise pas chez le parti conservateur une politique qui tiendrait compte raisonnablement des aspirations de cette collectivité.

M. Jerome: Pensez-vous que cette situation existe en ce qui concerne la Chambre des communes du Gouvernement fédéral?

M. Cairns: C'est ce que je veux dire d'ailleurs, je parle du gouvernement fédéral.

M. Jerome: Voici ma question: comment pouvez-vous dire qu'un parti quelconque n'est pas assez représenté ou a une trop grande représentation dans une région donnée quand un changement si frappant peut se produire en l'espace de dix ans dans la représentation au pays? La Chambre des communes a complètement changé en 10 ans.

[Text]

when it was most needed. In fact, the Alberta case merely illustrates the general proposition that the disintegrating effects of the electoral system are likely to be most pronounced where alienation from the larger political system is most profound. A particular orientation, therefore, has been imparted to Canadian politics which is not inherent in the very nature of the patterns of cleavage and consensus in the society, but results from their interplay with the electoral system.

• 1135

These then are the consequences of the existing system. If you approve the existing system you approve a continuation of those kinds of consequences for the future.

Now, given what seems to me to be the seriousness of these consequences, the Committee has a responsibility to examine alternatives which will have less damaging consequences to this political community. I am suggesting, therefore, that in general the rules of the political game in which politicians pursue votes in order to gain seats have consequences and if we do not like the consequences we can change the rules; we can examine alternatives.

In conclusion I suggest that I am not—well, I do not suggest—I state that I am not advocating proportional representation at this time as such. I am simply suggesting that the existing electoral system has certain consequences which to me seem to be serious and they seem to be sufficiently serious. And if this Committee is seriously interested in the relationship of the electoral system to the capacity of their political parties to contribute to the integration of this country they might, and I suggest should, pay significant attention to alternative kinds of electoral systems which might better suit their purposes.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Professor Cairns. I wish to thank you for your substantial presentation on a very high level. And now the meeting is open for questions.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask Professor Cairns, in the light of his remarks, to comment on the fact that the Conservative Party in 1957 returned 206 out of 265 members to the House of Commons—208? I am sorry, 58. It took the two elections, 1957 and 1958, and 10 years later it now hold servi l'intégration de cette communauté provinciale au sein du système politique national au moment où elle était le plus nécessaire. En fait le cas de l'Alberta illustre simplement l'idée générale, soit que les effets dissolvants du système électoral sont plus marqués très probablement là où il y a l'éloignement du système politique le plus prononcé. Une orientation particulière par conséquent a été donnée aux politiques canadiennes qui n'est pas inhérente à la nature même des séparations et du consensus de la société mais qui résulte des effets combinés du système électoral.

[Interpretation]

Voilà donc les conséquences du système actuel. Si vous approuvez le système existant, vous en approuvez les conséquences et les suites.

Vu l'importance de ces conséquences, le Comité doit réexaminer des solutions de rechange qui auront des conséquences moins dommageables pour notre communauté politique. Par conséquent, je déclare de façon générale, que les règles du jeu politique par lequel les politiciens cherchent à obtenir des votes aux fins d'obtenir des sièges ont des conséquences et, si nous n'aimons pas les conséquences, nous pouvons changer les règles. Nous pouvons examiner des solutions de rechange.

Pour conclure, je tiens à souligner que je ne préconise pas présentement la représentation proportionnelle dans sa formule actuelle. Je dis tout simplement que le système électoral actuel a certaines incidences qui, à mon avis, semblent être suffisamment graves. Si le présent comité est vraiment intéressé, aux rapports entre le système électoral et les possibilités des partis politiques de contribuer à l'unité du pays, il pourrait et je dirais, il devrait consacrer une attention particulière à l'étude de systèmes électoraux différents qui pourraient être plus appropriés.

Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Cairns. Je désire vous remercier pour votre mémoire enrichissant et d'une haute tenue. C'est maintenant la période de question. Monsieur Jerome.

Mr. Jerome: Monsieur le président, pourrais-je demander au professeur Cairns, à la lumière des remarques qu'il a faites, s'il pourrait commenter le fait que le parti conservateur, en 1957, au Canada, a fait élire 206 membres sur les 265 à la Chambre des communes, 208, je me trompe, en 1958. Il a gagné some 80-odd? Or 74? In view of the fact that this is so current and so dramatic a swing-around in representation throughout the country, how can it possibly be maintained that the system under which we elect our members to the House of Commons at the present time promotes this regional difficulty that you are speaking of?

[Texte]

Professor Cairns: I am not sure that I follow your question. It seems to me first of all that one could argue that it is in part the electoral system which is responsible for the striking alteration in Conservative representation from 1958 to the present, because the change in the level of support for the Conservative Party at the level of the voter has undoubtedly been much less pronounced than the change in representation at the level of Parliament. So in that sense one might argue that the existing electoral system magnifies the swings in representation.

However, this was not your question. Quite frankly, I am not quite clear how your question impinges on my problem. My only suggestion is that if the electoral system makes it desirable, in terms of strategy, for a political party to view this country in sectional terms and to aim appeals at particular sectional communities, in which it may or may not be successful, and if the electoral system operates in such a way that throughout the history of the Conservative Party Quebec has been significantly underrepresented in the caucus of that Party, underrepresented in terms of the percentage of electoral support which that Party has received in Quebec, then that electoral system is making it difficult for the Conservative Party to do the kind of thinking which would result in appropriate and sensitive policies for that community.

Mr. Jerome: Do you feel that this situation exists respecting the federal House?

• 1140

Professor Cairns: That is what I am speaking of—the federal House.

Mr. Jerome: This is precisely my question. How can you say that any party is underrepresented or overrepresented in any region when such a dramatic swing-around can take place in the space of ten years in the representation throughout the country? The complexion of the House of Commons has just about completely reversed itself in a ten-year span.

[Interprétation]

les deux élections de 1957 et 1958 et 10 ans plus tard, il compte quelque 80 ou 74 députés? Étant donné que ceci est tellement courant, et que ce changement tellement frappant au point de vue représentation, dans tout le pays, comment peut-on prétendre que le système par lequel nous élisons nos députés à la Chambre des communes, peut favoriser les divergences sur le plan régional dont vous parlez?

M. Cairns: Je ne sais pas si j'ai très bien compris votre question. Il me semble que premièrement on puisse avancer que c'est le système électoral qui est partiellement responsable des modifications frappantes dans la représentation conservatrice entre 1958 et maintenant, parce que le changement d'appui au parti conservateur, au niveau des élections a été sans aucun doute moins prononcé que le changement de la représentation au Parlement. Donc, il se peut en ce sens que le système électoral augmente les changements dans la représentation.

Cependant, ce n'était pas là notre point. Très franchement, je ne vois pas comment votre point contredit ce que j'ai dit. Je souligne que si le système électoral actuel, au point de vue stratégie, rend souhaitable pour un parti politique de diviser ce pays en régions et de s'orienter vers certaines régions qui lui sont plus ou moins favorables éventuellement, et si le système électoral fonctionne de telle façon que le parti conservateur du Québec soit largement sous-représenté au caucus de ce parti en fonction du pourcentage d'appui électoral que ce parti a reçu du Québec, alors ce système électoral ne favorise pas chez le parti conservateur une politique qui tiendrait compte raisonnablement des aspirations de cette collectivité.

M. Jerome: Pensez-vous que cette situation existe en ce qui concerne la Chambre des communes du Gouvernement fédéral?

M. Cairns: C'est ce que je veux dire d'ailleurs, je parle du gouvernement fédéral.

M. Jerome: Voici ma question: comment pouvez-vous dire qu'un parti quelconque n'est pas assez représenté ou a une trop grande représentation dans une région donnée quand un changement si frappant peut se produire en l'espace de dix ans dans la représentation au pays? La Chambre des communes a complètement changé en 10 ans.

[Text]

Professor Cairns: I agree. What I define as exaggeration of sectionalism or as discrimination is when you get significant discrepancies between the percentage of seats a party gets from a particular section and the percentage of votes a party gets from a particular section. And if a party is deprived of seats from a section, proportionate to its votes, then it seems to me that that damages the capacity of that party to be sensitive to the community from which it is underrepresented in those terms. Now each section, of course, has a stated proportion of seats in the House of Commons adjusted decennially according to the census, but what I am arguing about is the way in which the distribution of votes in each section gets transformed into a distribution of seats from each section.

Mr. Jerome: All right, but I notice that you are not proposing at this time any alternative really to what takes place now. One might just as easily say that the system under which we elect people at the present time, although it does not always reflect the popular vote, and by your figures sometimes dramatically does quite the opposite, at least gives the people who go to the polls the right to choose the person and the party by whom they will be represented. Now I would think a proportional system of representation would probably cost them that close control over electing their own member and surely that would be a much greater price to pay than the one which is presently paid—sometimes a discrepancy between the popular vote and the success of the individual candidate.

Professor Cairns: Well, if one wishes to discuss the merits of alternative kinds of electoral systems one has to bring in every consequence which one considers relevant—and people may differ on what they consider relevant. In the kind of society and political tradition we have, single member constituency systems have built up an assumption that the M.P. should be a spokesman for a particular constituency and it is quite clear that some kinds of proportional representation do not facilitate that kind of relationship between the constituency and its representative.

If you find that the most important consideration then maybe some kinds of proportional representation you will regard as unacceptable. But there are other kinds of proportional representation under what is known as the HARE system. But you must have multi-member constituencies; you cannot have proportional representation in

[Interpretation]

M. Cairns: Je suis d'accord. Ce que je décris comme une exagération du régionalisme, c'est quand il y a une différence importante entre le pourcentage de sièges obtenus par un parti dans une région donnée et le pourcentage des votes qu'un parti obtient dans cette même région. Si le parti n'obtient pas des sièges d'une région en proportion de ses votes, alors il me semble que ceci nuit aux possibilités qu'a ce parti de se montrer présent aux besoins de la collectivité qui n'est pas suffisamment représentée. Évidemment, chaque région a droit à une proportion fixe de députés à la Chambre et cette proportion est fixée à nouveau chaque dix ans à la suite du recensement. Mais ce que je veux montrer, c'est la façon dont la répartition des votes dans chaque région se transforme en une répartition des sièges pour chaque région.

M. Jerome: Très bien, mais je vois que vous ne proposez aucune alternative à ce stade. On pourrait aussi bien dire que le régime électoral actuel, bien qu'il ne reflète pas toujours le vote populaire, et, d'après vos chiffres, c'est malheureusement parfois le contraire, donne au moins aux électeurs le droit de choisir la personne et le parti qui les représenteront. Je pense que dans un système de représentation proportionnelle, l'électeur perdrait ce contrôle étroit sur l'élection de son représentant, ce qui, sûrement, serait un prix beaucoup plus élevé à payer que celui qu'il paye actuellement, à savoir la différence éventuelle entre le vote populaire et le succès d'un candidat en particulier.

M. Cairns: Si l'on veut discuter des mérites d'autres régimes électoraux, il faut tenir compte de tous les éléments qui ont une importance quelconque et là-dessus, les gens peuvent passablement différer d'opinion. Dans le genre de société et de tradition politique qui nous entourent, le système de circonscriptions à représentation unique s'appuie sur l'hypothèse que le député doit être le porte-parole d'une circonscription donnée. Or, il est bien évident que certains régimes de représentation proportionnelle justifient difficilement ce rapport entre la circonscription et son représentant.

Si vous considérez que c'est là l'élément le plus important, alors il y a certaines formes de représentation proportionnelle qui vous paraîtraient inacceptables. Il y a d'autres formes, cependant de représentation proportionnelle en vertu de ce que l'on connaît sous le nom de système Hare qui prévoit plusieurs représentants dans une même circonscription.

[Texte]

single member constituencies in which the electorate is still given the possibility of voting for individual candidates. What our system does, of course, is to place large numbers of people in this society in a system where they are bound to cast votes which everybody knows are meaningless but under no conceivable circumstances in the particular election in which they are casting the vote can those votes have an effect on the outcome. One might argue that this is an undesirable consequence. The socialist voter in the Maritimes, the Liberal voter in the Prairies in the period of Mr. Diefenbaker's control of the Prairies and partially continued at the present time, the Conservative voter in Quebec do not affect outcomes. Their votes do not get translated into seats.

Mr. Jerome: But you are basing that statement on the premise that the casting of a ballot in an election on this particular day loses its effectiveness if it does not elect or effect an election of a member, but surely you must agree that the advance by a party, gaining on the leader or the establishment, some show of success by a new party, have very significant effects each successive election as an indicator of their popularity with the public. So that the voter does not simply go to elect a member on that particular day.

Professor Cairns: No, no one in their right mind would argue that even votes which do not get translated into seats are totally irrelevant for that reason. I am simply suggesting that a political system gave the Liberals 5.6 to 1 Conservative from Quebec for a 40 year period whereas at the level of voters there was something like 1.9 Liberals to 1 Conservative and this is a consequence which you might seriously consider. The Conservative vote could go up a little, it could go down a little and it really would not matter much one way or the other.

•1145

Mr. Jerome: Would I understand a 1.9 to 1 ratio to mean that the Conservatives in the election in which you speak of got half as many votes as the Liberals?

Professor Cairns: Perhaps I should check the specific quote so we make sure we do not make a mistake. Speaking of the period from 1921 to 1965, and this is on page 62:

... the Liberals gained 752 members from Quebec, and the Conservatives only 135. The ratio of 5.6 Liberals to each Conservative in the House of Commons contrasts sharply with the 1.9 to 1 ratio of Liberals to Conservatives at the level of voters.

21296—21

[Interprétation]

Vous ne pouvez avoir de représentation proportionnelle dans les circonscriptions à représentation unique où l'électorat a encore la possibilité de voter pour des candidats individuels. Notre régime en fait, encourage un grand nombre de personnes dans notre société à voter d'une façon parfaitement futile et sans possibilité aucune d'influencer le choix final. On pourrait qualifier cette conséquence d'indésirable. L'électeur socialiste des Maritimes, le libéral des Prairies à l'époque du contrôle de M. Diefenbaker sur cette région, et même aujourd'hui encore, le conservateur du Québec, tous ces gens n'ont aucune influence sur le résultat final du vote. Leurs votes n'ont aucun rapport avec les élus.

Mr. Jerome: Vous fondez cette affirmation sur le fait que le vote perd sa valeur le jour de l'élection, s'il n'a aucune influence sur l'élection d'un député. Mais vous admettez certainement que l'avance d'un parti, la victoire sur un chef ou sur l'Establishment, le succès d'un nouveau parti peuvent avoir une incidence importante sur les élections suivantes, en tant qu'indicateurs de popularité dans le public. C'est ainsi que l'électeur ne doit pas penser uniquement à l'élection d'un représentant, ce jour-là.

M. Cairns: Personne n'oserait dire que des votes que n'a pas recueillis le député élu ne sont pas pertinents. Je dis simplement qu'un régime politique qui a donné aux libéraux 5.6 sièges par rapport à 1 pour les conservateurs pendant une période de 40 ans, alors qu'au niveau des électeurs il n'y avait en réalité que 1.9 vote qui allait aux libéraux par rapport à 1 vote pour les conservateurs, donne beaucoup à réfléchir. Le vote conservateur pourrait augmenter ou diminuer un peu et il n'y aurait rien de changé.

Mr. Jerome: Dois-je comprendre par ce rapport de 1.9 à 1 que les conservateurs ont obtenu la moitié des votes des libéraux?

M. Cairns: Je devrais peut-être vérifier les chiffres exacts pour être sûr de ne pas faire d'erreur. Je parle de la période allant de 1921 à 1965. A la page 62, on lit:

«Il y a eu 752 libéraux d'élus au Québec et 135 conservateurs seulement. Ce rapport de 5.6 libéraux pour 1 conservateur à la Chambre des communes contraste étrangement avec le rapport de 1.9 vote libéral pour 1 vote conservateur.»

[Text]

So for this period, 1921 to 1965, there were approximately 5.5 Liberals to each Conservative in the House of Commons from Quebec and there were approximately 2 Liberals to each Conservative at the level of the voter in Quebec. Now these seem to me to be important consequences. You can say that they are not important enough for me to do anything about it because I regard other virtues of our electoral system as more important, but I do not think you can say that those are trivial consequences. They deprived the second major party in the country for a period of 45 years from significant representation from one of the two main linguistic cultural communities in this country and if that did not seriously affect the capacity of that party to be sensitive to the requirements of that community then political parties are put together in ways other than I think they are.

Mr. Jerome: You are suggesting that this is simply a horse and cart relationship with never the two being interchanged. You are saying that the failure of the party to have any significant success contributes to their inability to understand and appreciate the problems of that area rather than saying that their inability to understand or appreciate the problems of the area contributes to their lack of success at the polls.

Professor Cairns: It is a circular relationship but that failure in terms of seats means an absence of spokesmen in the party to define future policy perhaps in order to get a better showing next time. All I am saying is that the electoral system seems to exaggerate the difficulty for the party and had the Conservative Party had the representation from Quebec that its level of voting support justified that party might not have come to be so broadly identified in the public mind on various occasions, much stimulated by Liberal propaganda in campaigns, as an anti-French Canadian party and that the temptation placed in front of the Liberals, to blast the Conservatives in Quebec, was the kind of strategy which this electoral system induces in party leaders, which I also think is an unfortunate consequence.

The Chairman: We may come back to you, Mr. Jerome, because I have a long list of members who have indicated their intention to ask questions.

Mr. Howe, would you proceed.

Mr. Howe: Professor Cairns, this has been a very interesting brief. You give recognition to the policies of the different parties and their effectiveness in an election campaign. I had not realized all this. We knew that there were

[Interpretation]

Pour cette période de 1921 à 1965, il y avait donc 5.5 libéraux pour un conservateur du Québec à la Chambre des communes, alors qu'au niveau des électeurs il n'y aurait dû y avoir que 2 libéraux pour 1 conservateur. A mon avis, ces conséquences sont très importantes. Vous pouvez dire qu'elles ne sont pas assez importantes pour négliger d'autres aspects avantageux de notre système électoral, mais je ne pense pas que vous puissiez les qualifier de triviales. Pendant 45 ans, l'un des deux principaux partis du pays a été privé de la juste représentation d'une des principales communautés linguistiques et culturelles du Canada. Si ceci n'a pas affecté la capacité de ce parti de tenir compte des besoins du peuple, alors les partis politiques ne sont pas ce que je croyais.

M. Jerome: Vous suggérez là une simple relation de cause à effet. Vous attribuez l'incapacité du parti à comprendre les besoins des gens au régime plutôt que son échec à cette incapacité de comprendre les gens.

M. Cairns: C'est un cercle vicieux, mais cet échec en termes de sièges signifie une absence de porte-paroles pour mieux définir la politique du parti et obtenir de meilleurs résultats par la suite. Tout ce que je dis, c'est que le régime électoral semble exagérer la difficulté pour le parti et que, si le parti conservateur avait obtenu une représentation proportionnelle du Québec, il n'aurait certainement pas été considéré, par l'opinion publique, stimulée par la propagande libérale, comme un parti anti-canadien-français. Cette tentation qu'avaient les libéraux de détruire de la sorte les conservateurs, était une stratégie permise par notre système électoral aux chefs de partis. Cet aspect représente aussi une conséquence malheureuse du régime à mon avis.

Le président: Nous reviendrons à vous, monsieur Jerome. J'ai toute une liste de députés qui voudraient prendre la parole. Monsieur Howe.

M. Howe: Professeur Cairns, voilà un mémoire extrêmement intéressant. Vous avez expliqué les politiques des partis et leurs incidences en rapport avec les campagnes électorales. Je ne m'étais pas rendu compte de tout discrepancies. I was just mentioning to Mr. Macquarrie the situation that developed in 1935 when Mr. Stevens organized his Reconstruction Party, got 25 per cent of the votes and only elected himself. This was something that we all could not understand. We are like Mr. Jerome, we cannot understand really why in 1962 we lost 92 seats. However, we may put it down to the effectiveness of the Liberal whispering campaigns that have always played such a part in all our elections.

[Texte]

• 1150

We have had this same theory presented to us in connection with a lot of different programs that have been brought into force in Canada. You mention that Sweden, Germany and Italy are using a proportional representative type of election campaign. Is there any country having the same geographical and climatic circumstances as Canada using the proportional system?

Professor Cairns: Well, one might answer that there are few countries anywhere which have the same climatic and geographical circumstances as Canada, so in that sense the answer is self-evident—no. There are northern countries which use it, and we are a northern country; there are countries which contain two significant cultural communities, Belgium, which uses it; there are countries with Parliamentary traditions which use it; Switzerland is another country with many ethnic communities, it is not a homogeneous society. There are large countries which use it. Germany uses it. I probably could not find an exact parallel but then I could not find an exact parallel to Canada anywhere.

Mr. Howe: This is what I mean; systems that do work in closely integrated countries like Germany and Belgium probably would not work in Canada because each party has to not only arrange a national policy but has to prepare sectional policies for election campaigns.

A policy that might be useful in the prairies would not be a policy that would be acceptable in the Maritimes, for example, having regard to the different regions.

Professor Cairns: I think it is a matter for further research to decide whether a different electoral system would be adaptable to the requirements of Canada, which are not the same as those of any of these other countries.

On the other hand, Canada is not the same as the country from which we initially took our existing electoral system. We just took it, I imagine, rather uncritically from the United cela. Nous savions qu'il y avait des différences. Je mentionnais justement à M. Macquarrie la situation qui s'est produite en 1935 lorsque M. Stevens a organisé son parti de la reconstruction, qu'il a obtenu 25 p. 100 des votes et qu'il n'a réussi à élire que lui-même. C'est une situation que nous ne pouvions pas comprendre et comme M. Jerome, nous ne comprenons pas pourquoi en 1962, nous avons perdu 92 sièges. C'est peut-être à cause de la propagande de rumeur qui a eu cours pendant les campagnes et qui a été si efficace.

[Interprétation]

Cette même théorie nous a été présentée en rapport avec de nombreux programmes en vigueur au Canada. Vous mentionnez qu'en Allemagne, en Suède et en Italie, on a un système de représentation proportionnelle. Est-ce qu'il y a un pays aux mêmes conditions climatiques et géographiques que le Canada qui possède un régime de représentation proportionnelle?

M. Cairns: On pourrait dire tout simplement qu'il y a peu de pays qui ont les mêmes conditions climatiques et géographiques que le Canada, donc en un sens, la réponse est non. Il y a les pays nordiques qui l'ont; nous sommes un pays nordique. Il y a les pays qui ont deux communautés culturelles importantes comme la Belgique qui ont ce système. Il y a des pays avec des traditions parlementaires. Il y a la Suisse qui est un autre pays composé de plusieurs communautés ethniques et qui n'est pas une société homogène. Il y a des grands pays qui l'ont, l'Allemagne en est un exemple, mais il n'y a pas un pays semblable au nôtre qui l'ait, ce serait impossible à trouver.

M. Howe: C'est cela que je veux dire. Des systèmes qui fonctionnent dans des pays bien intégrés comme l'Allemagne et la Belgique ne fonctionneraient probablement pas au Canada parce que non seulement chaque parti doit préparer sa politique nationale, mais encore ses politiques régionales en vue de ses campagnes électorales. Une politique qui serait acceptable dans les Prairies ne serait pas nécessairement appréciée dans les Maritimes par exemple.

M. Cairns: Je pense qu'il faut consacrer à cette question plus de recherches avant de décider si oui ou non un régime différent serait adaptable aux conditions canadiennes qui ne sont pas les mêmes que celles d'aucun de ces autres pays.

Par contre, le Canada n'est pas du tout similaire au pays d'où nous avons emprunté notre régime électoral actuel. Nous n'avons pas emprunté, sans trop nous poser de ques-

[Text]

Kingdom, which was part of the model from which our parliamentary tradition and the names of our parties flowed, and so on. So the fact that the system is appropriate in the United Kingdom does not mean it is appropriate to our circumstances.

Mr. Howe: I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. Professor Cairns, have you any information on how effective, or popular, the proportional system is in the countries that are using it? There are, no doubt, some objections to it?

Professor Cairns: One thing proportional representation often tends to do is to increase the voting turn-out because it gives the voter a feeling that his vote is, in fact, going to count in the determination of seats. This is not always true of voters under our situation.

All I can suggest is that a number of countries have had this system for long periods of time. They have become habituated to it. They apparently regard it as part of the natural order, in the same way that we regard our system as part of our natural order. But in some cases—West Germany, for example—it has created complicated kinds of party manoeuvrings which some public commentators have found somewhat unpalatable. But our system also creates certain kinds of party manoeuvrings—the appeal to a particular section, the attempt to blast a party as not being a friend of that section. This is also unpalatable.

Therefore, I would suggest you simply look at the alternatives and decide whether there is one which might be more useful than what we have now.

Mr. Howe: You mentioned that the turnout on voting day is better in some of these countries. This has always been a problem in Canada. We have always felt that there was a certain amount of indifference among a great number of the people on election day. Do you have any figures from any of these countries showing that they do have better turn-out on election days than we have?

Professor Cairns: I understand that when they introduced proportional representation in Switzerland there was a marked increase in the voter turn-out immediately following, and that the marked increase continued into the new period. One could easily look up these figures. I do not happen to have them at my finger tips.

[Interpretation]

tions, j'imagine, au Royaume-Uni et c'est de là que nous sont venues nos propres traditions parlementaires ainsi que les noms de nos partis. Ainsi, le fait que ce système soit approprié au Royaume-Uni ne signifie pas qu'il le soit pour notre pays.

M. Howe: J'ai une autre question, monsieur le président. Professeur Cairns, avez-vous des renseignements sur l'efficacité ou la popularité du système de représentation proportionnelle dans les pays qui l'utilisent? N'y a-t-il pas des objections à ce système?

M. Cairns: Un des effets du système de représentation proportionnelle est d'augmenter le nombre de personnes qui vont voter le jour des élections, parce que l'électeur a la sensation que son vote va réellement influencer la tournure des élections. Ceci n'est pas toujours le cas pour les électeurs de notre pays. Tout ce que je puis dire, c'est qu'un certain nombre de pays ont eu ce système pendant de longues périodes de temps. Ils y sont habitués et apparemment, on le considère comme partie intégrante de l'ordre naturel des choses de la même façon que nous considérons notre régime électoral. Dans certains cas, comme dans le cas de l'Allemagne de l'Ouest, ce système a amené des partis politiques à se comporter d'une façon que des commentateurs publics ont jugé d'assez mauvais goût. Par contre, notre système lui aussi a créé certains genres de manoeuvres politiques au sein des partis. Ces partis tentent de séduire une région donnée et, pour ce faire, essaient de détruire l'autre parti en l'accusant de ne pas se préoccuper de cette région. Ceci est aussi de très mauvais goût. Je vous suggère donc d'examiner les diverses possibilités et de décider si oui ou non, il y en a une qui pourrait s'avérer meilleure que celle qui est maintenant en vigueur dans notre pays.

M. Howe: Vous avez mentionné que dans certains de ces pays il y a un nombre plus considérable de gens qui vont voter le jour des élections. Ceci a toujours été un problème au Canada. Nous avons toujours cru à une certaine indifférence chez les gens le jour des élections. Avez-vous des données provenant d'un de ces pays et prouvant justement que les gens y sont plus intéressés à exercer leur droit de vote le jour des élections?

M. Cairns: Je crois que, lorsqu'on a introduit ce système de représentation proportionnelle en Suisse, ce phénomène s'est manifesté immédiatement et s'est d'ailleurs accru lors de l'élection suivante. Il serait très facile de prouver ces données. Je ne les ai pas avec moi dans le moment.

[Texte]

Mr. Howe: It would be interesting to see them, I think, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Mr. Richard?

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, I have been absent from a few meetings, and I was replaced for a while. How far can we go into this whole question of the electoral system in this Committee? It is a most interesting subject, on which I suppose we could have many meetings, but any first question to Mr. Cairns is this: Our system is based at the present time—and it has been accepted in the country for years—on having a certain number of seats distributed throughout the country according to a certain number of people in each riding. As long as you have that and as long as you vote by the party system I suppose you have to assume that the many people who vote for a party are voting for that party and that it is not right to say that they have an alternative.

• 1155

Surely we are not going to suggest that Canadian electors, who vote on election day for the Conservative party—and that party gets the majority in that riding, even if by one, as we have it now—should find that they are not going to be represented by that person because another system allots them somebody else? That is what happens under your system.

Suppose we had only two parties in this country and by a majority of one the electors voted in Ottawa East, for example—which they would not—for the Conservative party. Under your system, if the Liberals throughout the country got the majority of the votes and were allotted so many seats in Ontario, I would be one of them. I do not know how you can justify that.

The only way I can imagine your system would be to change it altogether and have a national vote, or a vote by provinces, whereby you would say that there were 500,000 Liberals; and that the proportion throughout the country was 20 per cent; therefore, there would be so many seats in Ontario for the Liberals and first the first 20 amongst the Liberals in Ontario would get the seats.

Surely at an election the people have the right to have an opinion. If the majority are for one party they should not find themselves with a representative of another party.

[Interprétation]

M. Howe: Ce pourrait être en effet très intéressant de les examiner, monsieur le président. Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Monsieur Richard.

M. Richard: Monsieur le président, j'ai été absent pendant quelques séances et j'ai été remplacé pendant une autre période. Jusqu'à quel point allons-nous étudier au comité cette question du régime électoral? C'est un sujet extrêmement intéressant sur le-quel, je suppose, nous pourrions consacrer plusieurs séances. Ma première question s'adresse à M. Cairns: Notre système actuel est fondé sur la distribution d'un certain nombre de sièges à travers le pays proportionnellement à un certain nombre de gens dans chaque circonscription. Ce système a été accepté pendant des années. Aussi longtemps que ce système est en vigueur et que l'on vote pour un parti, je suppose que les gens qui votent pour un parti donné le font intentionnellement et qu'il n'est pas exact de dire qu'ils ont un choix.

Nous n'allons sûrement pas suggérer que l'électeur canadien qui vote le jour des élections, pour le parti conservateur—en admettant que ce parti obtienne la majorité dans cette circonscription, si minime soit-elle—doive penser qu'il n'est pas bien représenté parce qu'un autre système électoral aurait donné la priorité à quelqu'un d'autre. C'est ce qui arrive en vertu de notre régime.

Supposons qu'il n'y ait que deux partis au pays et que, par une majorité d'un vote le parti conservateur soit élu dans la circonscription d'Ottawa-Est par exemple, ce qui est impossible! En vertu de votre système, si les libéraux obtenaient la majorité à travers le pays et qu'on allouait un certain nombre de sièges en Ontario, j'obtiendrais un de ces sièges. Je ne sais pas comment vous pouvez justifier cela.

La seule façon, à mon avis, de faire fonctionner votre système, serait d'avoir un vote national ou un vote par province; dans ce cas, vous pourriez dire qu'il y a 500,000 libéraux au pays, ce qui fait une proportion d'environ 20 p. 100. Il y aurait alors un certain nombre de sièges en Ontario qui iraient aux libéraux et les 20 premiers libéraux d'Ontario obtiendraient ces sièges. Je suis persuadé que les gens ont le droit de donner leur opinion lors d'une élection. Si la majorité d'une circonscription favorise un parti donné, elle ne devrait pas se retrouver avec un représentant de l'autre parti.

[Text]

Professor Cairns: I am afraid I do not catch the pertinency of your remarks.

First of all, I accept that it is meaningful to state in certain circumstances that a Conservative Member of Parliament from riding "X" represents all the people in that riding. I am not denying that Members of Parliament are spokesmen for interests other than those who voted for them at the time of an election, but one could visualize an outcome of an election in Canada, with 260-odd seats, in which there were, let us for the sake of argument, two parties and the Liberals got 51 per cent of the votes and the Conservatives got 49 per cent in each riding; and, therefore, 51 per cent and 49 per cent in the country as a whole. Then every member of the House of Commons would be Liberal and there would be no Conservatives. From your perspective there is, I suppose, nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Richard: Well—

Professor Cairns: From my perspective it is at least anomalous, and one might consider that a kind of electoral system that produced that sort of outcome would have to be seriously examined. That consequence has never arisen, but lesser versions of it do frequently occur.

One can devise proportional electoral systems in which the voter does vote for individual candidates. There is no proportional representation system, except possibly Israel, to my knowledge, in which the constituency is the whole state. It is always smaller than that. Usually the assumption is that as long as your constituency contains up to five members you can get a high degree of proportionality—much more than we have under the present system.

If you are suggesting that fundamental changes would have to be made to introduce this different kind of system, I can only agree. It would be a major change. And one would only make a major change because one thought the existing system was having major, undesirable consequences.

Mr. Richard: It would also lead to a multiplicity of parties in the House.

Professor Cairns: The literature is debatable on whether or not proportional representation contributes to a multiplicity of parties. The usual statement is that if there is a multiplicity of parties it stabilizes them.

However, we must also note that we have not had a two-party system in this country since 1921, and the assumption that we should

[Interpretation]

M. Cairns: Je ne crois pas saisir très bien toute la subtilité de vos remarques.

Tout d'abord, j'accepte le fait qu'il soit important, dans certaines circonstances, de dire qu'un député conservateur de la circonscription «X» représente tous les gens de cette circonscription. Je ne refuse pas non plus le fait que les députés puissent être les porte-parole d'autres gens que ceux qui ont voté pour eux à l'époque des élections, mais j'essaie d'imaginer la situation où, au Canada, deux partis se disputeraient les quelque 260 sièges, où les libéraux obtiendraient 51 p. 100 des votes et les conservateurs 49 p. 100 des votes dans chaque circonscription. Par conséquent, il y aurait dans le pays tout entier une proportion de 51 p. 100 par rapport à 49 p. 100 des votes en faveur des libéraux. Tous les membres de la Chambre des communes seraient alors libéraux et il n'y aurait aucun conservateur. Je suppose que, d'après vous, cette situation serait tout à fait équitable.

M. Richard: Eh bien...

M. Cairns: D'après moi, il y aurait là une certaine anomalie et l'on pourrait croire que le régime qui permet une telle situation mérite d'être sérieusement étudié. Nous n'avons jamais vu de conséquences si graves, mais nous en voyons souvent des exemples mitigés.

On peut grouper le système de représentation proportionnelle dans lequel l'électeur vote pour des candidats individuels. Il n'y a pas à ma connaissance d'autres pays que l'Israël peut-être où, en vertu de ce système de représentation proportionnelle le pays tout entier ne forme qu'une seule circonscription. Habituellement, on se base sur un minimum de cinq députés par circonscription pour obtenir une bien meilleure représentation que celle que nous avons avec notre système actuel. Si vous croyez que des changements fondamentaux seraient nécessaires avant d'introduire cet autre régime, je ne peux qu'être d'accord. Ce serait en effet un immense changement. On effectue d'ailleurs un changement majeur qu'après avoir mesuré les désavantages de grande importance qui résultent du système en vigueur.

M. Richard: Ceci amènerait aussi une multiplicité de partis à la Chambre.

M. Cairns: L'influence d'un système de représentation proportionnelle sur la multiplicité des partis est tout à fait discutable. Selon l'argument habituel, lorsqu'il y a une multiplicité de partis, il y a stabilisation. Nous devons cependant tenir compte du fait que nous avons eu un système de deux partis dans ce pays depuis 1921 et de l'idée que nous preserve our existing electoral system in order to preserve a two-party system sounds somewhat hollow when we look at it, because we have had a history of third parties. And the kinds of third parties that this electoral system has stimulated have been sectional third parties.

[Texte]

● 1200

As the gentleman over here said, our electoral system did not do much good to Mr. Stevens, whose support was relatively nation-wide. The party to which it gave a significant impetus was Social Credit from Alberta. That third party got more seats than it was entitled to, if we assume that a party should get only the same proportion of seats that it gets votes.

Mr. Richard: I will put only one further question and make way for somebody else. Would not a fixed term for election for five years, even under the present system, allow much more freedom for the individual member to look at policy and everything else in a different light? Would not that solve some of the problems?

Professor Cairns: I do not see how that is particularly related to the problem of the distribution of seats from various sections within individual parties in the House of Commons. It might solve a different problem which may concern you, namely, the fact that party discipline makes it difficult for you to make up your mind on a number of issues. One version of this is the West German experiment where, if I understand the situation correctly, the only way in which the government can be overthrown by the lower House, the Bundestag, is if a majority in the lower House not only votes against the existing government but is able to identify the specific alternative government which will replace them. In other words, you cannot vote a government out until you have a group of men ready to assume the executive positions. However, I think your question is unrelated to the electoral system, unless I misinterpreted it.

Mr. Richard: I think it would allow any individual who is elected for a term of five years to be less bound by party discipline and to express his viewpoint on policy and to vote freely.

Professor Cairns: If you are saying that a system in which individual members have more freedom would be one in which the parties and party discipline was less important and therefore would be a system in which the present discriminatory distribution

[Interprétation]

devrions préserver notre régime électoral afin de maintenir notre système de deux partis. La chose semble quelque peu baroque, quand nous songeons à toute la série de troisièmes partis qui se sont formés. Ces troisièmes partis ont d'ailleurs été plus ou moins représentés dans notre régime électoral. Comme on l'a fait remarquer plus tôt, notre système n'a pas tellement aidé M. Stevens, qui avait pour tant un appui dans tout le pays. Le parti qui a profité du système a été le parti du Crédit social d'Alberta. Ce troisième parti a obtenu beaucoup plus de sièges qu'il n'aurait dû, si on assume le fait qu'un parti devrait obtenir le nombre de sièges proportionnels au nombre de votes qu'il obtient.

M. Richard: Je pose une dernière question avant de laisser la parole à quelqu'un d'autre. Est-ce qu'un mandat de cinq ans, même sous notre système actuel, donnerait au député le loisir de mieux examiner diverses lignes d'action? Est-ce que ceci résoudrait quelques-uns de nos problèmes?

M. Cairns: Je ne vois pas comment cela se rattache directement au problème de la distribution des sièges dans les sections des différents partis à la Chambre des communes. Cela pourrait régler un autre problème, le fait que la discipline du parti vous empêche de prendre vos propres décisions à l'égard de certaines questions. En Allemagne de l'Ouest, par exemple, la Chambre basse ou Bundestag ne peut renverser le gouvernement, que si la majorité des députés à la Chambre basse, non seulement vote contre le gouvernement mais si elle peut identifier le gouvernement qui le remplacera. Autrement dit, on ne peut renverser un gouvernement avant de trouver des gens qui sont prêts à assumer la succession. Je crois toutefois que votre question ne se rattache pas au système électoral, à moins que je ne l'aie mal interprétée.

M. Richard: Je pense que tout député élu pour cinq ans serait moins lié à la discipline du parti. Il pourrait mieux exprimer son point de vue à l'égard de la politique et il pourrait voter plus librement.

M. Cairns: Si vous dites qu'un régime qui donne plus de latitude aux députés, accorderait moins d'importance aux partis et à la discipline du parti, ce serait donc un régime en vertu duquel la distribution injuste actuelle des sièges des partis serait moins of seats between parties would be less important than it is when you have party discipline, I may be carrying the argument rather far but logically I might be prepared to argue that it might slightly attenuate that problem.

[Text]

Mr. Richard: I will allow somebody else to ask questions.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Richard. Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, from the time I first read this paper I found it to be a very cogent document. One aspect of the argumentation which profoundly impressed me was the reference to the relationship of the Conservative party in Quebec. This has been a profound problem for the Conservative party. They have always been able to have thousands and thousands of excellent Conservatives but we only meet them at party gatherings and, we can never get them into the legislature, as many of our national leaders have found. Because of the electoral system it is difficult to get people, and despite the fact there are many strong-thinking people in their province they cannot in fact win an election. This leads me to believe that this is an aspect that we should be concerned about.

I have two or three questions that I would like to ask Professor Cairns. In the qualitative measurement of virtues, if I may be a bit Presbyterian, where do you place the likely fact that on the proportional representation we would never, or almost never, have a majority government, as against the very clearly argued virtues which would come from proportional representation before they get into the legislature.

Professor Cairns: I suppose the question is not the virtues of majority government, since that is an inevitable consequence of our kind of parliamentary system. The question is whether your majority should be composed of one party or more than one party. It is quite clear that if we did have proportional representation and the voters continued to cast their preferences for the various parties in roughly the way they have historically done, the electoral system would not throw up one party majorities.

• 1205

I think one of the reasons our electoral system has been rather high in our esteem is because we have assumed that one party

[Interpretation]

